Cleaning up legislative action by the 1957 General Assembly before going abroad later this week, the Governor also approved the socalled "unsatisfied judgments" bill, and turned thumbs down on a proposal to legalize netting of menhaden in Maryland waters.

The unsatisfied judgments bill would establish a fund for paying accident claims against Maryland owners of uninsured cars and trucks.

Insured motorists would make an initial payment of $1 into the fund and motorists not insured would pay $8 annually. Insurance companies would contribute one-half of 1 per cent of their direct premiums for calendar 1958.

The Governor said he vetoed the controversial menhaden bill because the Attorney General had questioned its legality. The bill would have permitted taking the tiny fish in Chesapeake Bay and off the coast with big purse nets, some a quarter-mile long.

Menhaden are used in manufacture of oil and fertilizer.

265 Morgan grads; honorary degree to Marian Anderson

BALTIMORE

Marian Anderson, world-famous contralto, is one of four distinguished Americans who was honored at commencement exercises of Morgan State College, Monday, June 8, President Martin D. Jenkins, presiding.

Miss Anderson received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws together with: Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower, president of the Johns Hopkins University; George W. F. McMechen, attorney of Baltimore, first alumnus to receive the bachelor's degree from the college; and Lewis M. Stevens, attorney, president of the Board of Trustees of Lincoln University (Pa.).

Dr. Eisenhower, recently inaugurated as the eighth president of Hopkins, also delivered the commencement address to a total of 265 candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science.

They represent 13 states, the District of Columbia and two foreign countries, with 180 from Maryland and 128 from Baltimore.

The commencement exercises were held in the Hughes Memorial Stadium at 6 p.m.

Baccalaureate exercises were held Sunday, June 2, 6 p.m., in the Hughes Stadium, with the Rev. Frank Madison Reid, bishop of the AME Church, as speaker.

HONOR-LADEN as few have been in the history of music, Marian Anderson has become a legend to millions around the world as the possessor of a "voice" one hears once in a hundred years," and as a symbol of faith and democracy.

Winner of the $10,000 Bok Award out of which she established a scholarship fund for promising youngsters, the Spingarn Medal, several honorary doctorates of music and other honors, she has sung for royalty as well as the man in the street around the world and has been decorated from the Orient to the West.

She has performed some 1,450 concerts before more than 5,000,000 persons, but perhaps the most memorable of her appearances was made on Easter Sunday in 1939 when she sang before 75,000 at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Refused permission to sing in Constitution Hall by the Daughters of the American Revolution, in an action which led Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt to resign from the organization, Miss Anderson was invited by the United States Government to sing at the Lincoln Memorial.

THE CONCERT has been commemorated in a mural in the Department of the Interior Building in Washington, D.C.

Three years late, Miss Anderson made her first appearance in Constitution Hall, this time by the invitation of the DAR and for the benefit of the United China Relief Fund.

Miss Anderson made history again in 1954 when she became the first of her race ever to sing with the Metropolitan Opera.

Morgan State Facilities Now Worth $10 Million

BALTIMORE, Md. — Estimated value of the physical plant of Morgan State College now approaches the 10-million-dollar mark with completion this fall of a $380,000 military science building and other improvements costing $522,000.

The military science building, which was opened for use this semester, has been named Soldiers Armory, in honor of the more than 8,000 Negro officers and men who fought as Maryland volunteers in the Civil War. Designed by Albert I. Cassell, it is currently housing the ROTC department and classes in geography and reading.

Other improvements made to the campus within the past year are: enlargement of the Soper Library at a cost of $293,000; improvement of the heating plant at a total cost of $170,000; installation of exterior lighting, $22,000; completion of a dental clinic, $5,000, and installation of trees and shrubbery, $12,000. A parking [illegible] accommodating 57 cars, has [illegible] been installed at a cost of $20,000.

NEARLY $2,000,000 in improvements and additions is on tap for this year. A contract has just been let for the installation of sidewalks at a cost of $36,000, and already under contract is the renovation of reading rooms in the Soper Library, which is to cost $10,000. Bids are to be let this month for a student activities building which is to cost approximately $300,000, and bids will be taken late in January on an Auditorium-Fine Arts Building costing approximately $1,250,000.

The new improvements are a part of a long-range capital improvement program which has been continuing since Morgan became a state institution in 1939 to modernize, improve and enlarge the facilities of the institution. Morgan was bought by the State of Maryland in 1939 for $225,000.

Founders Day At Morris Brown

Failure Of Colleges To Meet Needs Of Students Hit By Troup

Word p. 1 Wed. 3-13-57

By SAMUEL L. ADAMS

Too many college graduates are moral degenerates and non-voters due to failures of educational institutions to meet the total needs of students.

So spoke Dr. C. V. Troup Tuesday as he delivered the 72nd Founder's Day address to a capacity audience at Morris Brown College.

Dr. Troup, president of Fort Valley State College and a graduate of Morris Brown, returned to his alma mater to sketch "some Problems and Imperatives of Higher Education." He shared the speaker's spotlight with his former colleague ,Bishop W. R. Wilkes, and Dr. George Hightower, National president of the institution's alumni association.

The educator, while listing three problems and four imperatives facing institutions of higher learning, scathed the warped sense of values prevalent among teachers and challenged students to strive for excellence.

Problems that colleges and universities must cope with, he said, include:

(1) Increasing enrollments, (2) rising educational standards, and (3) a need for more money with which to expand and finance rising cost.

Attendant to enrollment increase is the question of whether plant facilities and enrollment will be expanded or frozen, he asserted. The speaker quoted statistics that project an expected increase from 8 million to 12 million students in secondary School and a rise from the present 3 million to an expected 4½ million college students.

STRONGER FACULTY

Rising educational standards, he said, indicate a need for improving physical facilities and building a stronger faculty. The quality of graduates cannot be improved "as long as students must work under weak and uninspired teachers," he emphasized, adding: There is an opening at Fort Valley State for a teacher with a Ph.D. in Home Economics but the administration has been unable to find a qualified person.

Continuing, he said the "money" problems facing poor colleges like Morris Brown also plague Harvard University, the oldest and richest educational institution in America.

Dr. Troup catalogued four imperatives that institutions of higher learning must meet:

FOUR IMPERATIVES

(1) They must meet "the total needs of the students." While continuing to place emphasis on their intellectual development, there must be increased concern, he said for the students physical and spiritual needs. A surprising number of college graduates and teachers are not registered voters, have warped sense of values, and have not developed habits of cleanliness and good citizenship, he pointed out.

(2) Institutions of higher learning must consider both the cultural and the vocational training needs. "No longer can we go for culture for culture's sake," he said.

(3) "We must help students develop the culture of excellence. Too many collegians are content to do just enough to get by."

(4) Colleges and universities must keep abreast of changing times. This involves technological as well as sociological changes, he said. Among these changes are the struggles of peoples and minorities to gain for themselves freedom and self respect. In preparing to meet inevitable change, Dr. Troup said educational institutions must (1) make self evaluations or (2) employ a group of experts to make such critical analyses.

ON PROGRAM

Wed. 3-13-57

Other program participants included: Thomas McPherson, junior, who brought greetings on behalf of the student body; Rev. T. R. Bussey, Macon, who uttered the prayer; and Rev. J. C. Williams, Athens, who read the Scripture. Dr. John H. Lewis, president, presided. Music was furnished by the College choir under the direction of Johnson Hubert.

$100,000 PLEDGED

Dr. R. A. Billings, treasurer of the alumni association announced that some $100,000 had been pledged to the college fund; and Charles Moore, business manager, reported that college organizations had raised $10,602.51. Highest contributors among these groups were: the Pre-Service Teachers' Club, Mrs. Ann Cochran, faculty leader — $2,750; and the Art Club, Mrs. Ruth Hall Hodges, faculty leader — $1,101.70.

Morris Brown College In Founders' Day Exercise

Daily World

Morris Brown College, famed AME institution, passed another successful milestone in the celebration of its 72nd founders day exercise on Tuesday. Fri. 3-15-57

From every corner of the state and from neighboring states alumni and friends came to do honor to the well known Institution which has immortalized "self help" and stood for over half a century as a challenge for the faith and principles for which the racial group, irrespective of denominations, has sought in common throughout the land. Atlanta, Ga.

Morris Brown College, because of the uniqueness of her origin and the persistency of her remaining independent has long been a pride of friends to the race everywhere. P. 4

While her beginning was modest, as most Negro institutions taking root back in the early days when our people were limited in liberal educational resource, Morris Brown has grown with other institutions in securing the facilities and intellectual manpower sufficient to extend accredited rating to those who would be scrutinizing in their search of academic freedom.

Bringing to this college center Dr. Cornelius V. Troup, president of Fort Valley State College and an Alumnus of Morris Brown, was indeed another service. Dr. Troup well indicated a trend toward better teaching facilities. He labored in his impression that many of our educators do not themselves vote; the question was raised here as to how on earth can the "un-inspired teachers" to which he referred extend to those of their students the principles of first-class citizenship?

Another unique feature was the fact that all three, Bishop William Reid Wilkes, the Chancellor, President John H. Lewis, and Dr. Troup all are graduates of the college.

Beside the spiritual fervor generated in the massive effort, the faculty, students and alumni alone piled up $10,602.51.

Congratulations to this fine "self help effort" and those characters who insist still in the faith of their illustrious founders.

Dr. Whiting Resigns Deanship At M'Brown, Goes To Morgan

Honored P. Atlanta, Ga. 1-4-61

Dr. Albert N. Whiting will resign his post as dean at Morris Brown College, effective Sept. 1 to take a top position at Morgan State College in Baltimore, Md., it was disclosed yesterday by the College President, Dr. John H. Lewis. Sun. 5-19-57

After receiving the resignation, Dr. Lewis said, "Dr. Whiting has done an exceptional job at the college. I certainly regret losing a man of his statue. He will be a tremendous loss to the college, the university center and to Atlanta."

The president said he was confident that at his new position Dr. Whiting would "reflect the same diligence and exceptional qualities which he demonstrated here."

Culminating four-year tenure at Morris Brown, Dr. Whiting will work with exceptional students at his new post. Before coming to Morris Brown, he was assistant professor of Sociology at Atlanta University from 1948 to 1953. Tells Morris Brown Group Negroes Must Pool Nickels

World Sat. 5-4-57 P. 8

Birm. Ala.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA — (SNS) Mrs. A. G. Gaston, director of the Booker T. Washington Business College at Birmingham, Alabama, in a message at Morris Brown College last Friday morning, told her audiences that Negroes must pool their nickels dimes, choose the right leadership to produce better business and better jobs for our people and the job of a secretary should be one dedicated to service rather than to being important.

She was the guest speaker for Secretarial Science Day at Morris Brown, which was sponsored by the department of Secretarial Science at the College. Mrs. Gaston was presented to the packed chapel audience by Mrs. Oretha B. Wallr, Chairman of the department of Secretarial Science; A. L. Jessie an instructor in the department made the announcements; Geraldine Harmon, a sophomore led devotions; and Margaret Phillips, a senior and major in the department made the presentations. Several high schools in Atlanta and Fulton County were represented by teachers and Students.

Mrs. Gaston fortified her speech quite well by drawing upon the studies made by leading authorities in the field as well as from observations made by Big Business, plus her own successful career in Business. She went on to point out to the students the virtues that make one a good secretary. She warned that no person should enter the field who is not willing to work hard and put in long hours. She said that a secretary must be a diplomat and an executive.

The speaker criticized the attitude of secretaries who drift from one job to another seeking an ideal position but suggested that one should make a determined effort to make good on the job at hand A secretary, opined, must be a keeper of secrets, learn to spell and

IMPORTANCE OF PERSONALITY

The Birmingham Business woman admonished her listeners that if it is not enough to be intelligent and technically trained, but that punctuate, and know as much as possible about history, science, geography, and other fields. "Businesses have been destroyed over night, she said, due to careless secretaries who failed to guard their secrets." the personality must be developed At this point, she warned against secretaries who are stiff and impolite. She stressed the importance of intiative, and willingness to get along with people. Pointing to the fact that our habits cause us to succeed or fail she said that studies show that 85 per cent of people who are fired from jobs had personality difficulties rather than a lack of training and ability.

In summation the speaker told the Morris Brown students that good health, good nature ,and accuracy would be the determing factors as to how far they would go on the job.

Beautiful corsages were presented to Mrs. Gaston and Mrs. Waller. Louise Randall, a senior and major in Secretarial Science was given the award for being chosen "Secretary of the Year."

Following the chapel program was a dictation and transcription contest between Ewrard Cody of Clark College and Bernice Kimbrough of Morris Brown College.

PANEL DISCUSSION

The program was concluded with a panel discussion from the theme: "Better Secretaries Make Better Business" with Dr. Julia F. Jackson serving as coordinator.

Mrs. Gaston discussed Human relations for the Secretary; Miss Nettie Bennett of the Citizens Trust Company led a discussion on Her Administrative Responsibilities; making Progress on the Job was discussed by Mrs. Johnnie Clarke, secretary to the President of Morris Brown; J. T. Ratliff, instructor of Business at Morris Brown discussed the Importance of Business Law; Mr. C. E. Lovelace concluded the discussion by pointing up Good Grooming and the Latest Fashions; and A. L. Jessie summarized the discussion. A question and answer period followed.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP — Miss Mamie Walker receives congratulations from President John H. Lewis of Morris Brown College. Miss Walker, a June graduate, has been awarded a $3,600 scholarship to study Personnel and Guidance at Syracuse University. She will also serve as head resident in one of the dormitories at Syracuse. Miss Walker, who won many awards during her Morris Brown career, is currently in Central America, participating in a work-study project under direction of the American Friends Service Committee.

MORRIS BROWN GRAD IN MEXICAN WELFARE WORK — Miss Mamie Walker, a 1957 graduate of Morris Brown College, Atlanta, examines some of the work of her art class of Mexican boys and girls in San Simon Atzitzintla, Mexico. Miss Walker enters University of Syracuse Graduate School in September. Her work in Mexico was with an American Friends Service Committee work camp.

Morris Brown Grad Shines In Mexican Welfare Work

Herald P. 1 Atlanta, Ga.

San Simon Atzitzintla, Mexico, is current address for Mamie Walker of Cleveland, Ohio, for Mamie is serving as volunteer with eighteen other boys and girls with an American Friends Service Committee work camp in this tiny Mexican village located in the foothills of the snow-capped volcano Ixtlaccihuatl.

Mamie's day begins at the early hour of 6:30 with breakfast. Before the projects of the day begin, the household chores of dishwashing and cleaning, handled on a cooperative basis must be taken care of. Once a week Mamie takes a turn at cooking. Being cook for the day means going shopping.

Mamie said, "Although my Spanish vocabulary is limited, I manage to get along. Of course, the pointing system helped."

Wed. 9-4-57

In the morning Mamie and the other girls work with the children either assisting the teacher in the classroom or supervising recreation periods. Arts and crafts classes are held in the afternoon.

LIBRARY HOUR POPULAR

"We also have a library hour," said Mamie, "which is very popular. Many of the children have never seen a book except those used in their classrooms and to be able to bring a book home with them is a pleasure beyond their fondest dreams. We also have a story-telling hours and despite our limited Spanish ,everyone enjoys it."

"I think our group is very fortunate to be here in San Simon," Mamie added. "The purpose of our group is primarily to promote international good will and understanding and the people here are very cooperative. The second day we were here, we were guests for dinner at the home of the president of the village."

A very important phase of the work camp program is house visitation when the boys and girls pay neighborly calls on the villagers. Topic cover most everything with the group stressing points of heathful rural living and sanitation in the hope of getting the villagers to better understand the need for such measures.

In September Mamie will enter the University of Syracuse Graduate School where she has been awarded a nassistan'ship. She will specialize in student personnel work. Mamie received her Bachelor of Arts degree this June from the Morris Brown College in Atlanta, Georgia. While a student there she was president of the Intercollegiate Personnel Council, Program Planner of the Human Relations Club, Advisor to the Freshman and Sophomore women and Secretary to the Dean of Student Personnel. She is the daughter of Mrs. Roosevelt Durrah, 16306 Clearview, Cleveland.

MORRISTOWN, Tenn. — For the second time in four years Mrs. Miller W. Boyd is acting president of Morristown College, Methodist-related junior college here.

Following the sudden death of her husband, Dr. Millie W. Boyd, who was president of the college eight years, Mrs. Boyd was named acting president. She served until the election of the late Dr. H. L. Dickason, who assumed office in September, 1953.

Dr. Dickason died unexpectedly on April 6th. Mrs. Boyd has again been elected president by the trustees of the college. During the late President Dickason's time as head of the college, Mrs. Boyd had served as his administrative assistant.

Most of Acting President Boyd's life has been spent on the Morristown College campus. Her late husband served a quarter of a century at the college as teacher, dean and finally president.

In addition to its two years of college training, the institution provides facilities for the Morristown city colored high school.

Norfolk, Va.

DURHAM, N. C. — Announcement of a $57,500 grant to North Carolina College from the National Science Foundation was made here last week by NCC President Alfonso Elder, and Dr. Joseph H. Taylor, director of the Summer School.

The grant will be used to support a "Summer Institute for High School Teachers of Science and Mathematics." Dr. W. H. Robinson, professor of physics, will direct the project. Money for 50 teachers is available.

Sat. 1-5-57

STARTING next June 10, the institute will continue through July 20. Interested teachers should address inquiries to Dr. Robinson.

The fifty scholarships are available in the fields of chemistry, biology, and mathematics. Each scholarship carries a $75 weekly stipend plus $15 for each dependent up to four.

IN ADDITION, a travel allowance equal to four cents per mile from the participant's home to the institution will be given. A maximum of $80 prevails in this category.

Tuition and fees will be covered by the grant.

A visiting staff of four outstanding authorities in each field will supplement the work of these NCC professors: Dr. Thomas E. Malone, biology; Dr. E. L. Totten, chemistry; and Dr. Marjorie L. Browne, mathematics.

NCC is one of 95 U.S. Colleges and universities participating in the grant.

WITH THE assistance we will get from the nationally recognized visiting authorities, we will be able to offer a program of the highest quality."

More than 4,500 United States teachers of science and mathematics will benefit from such grants during the coming summer.

The national program is being sponsored in an effort to provide:

"Opportunities for the science teacher to attend courses in the subject matter of science and mathematics especially designed for him and conducted by faculty members noted for competence in their fields and for skill in presentation.

"These programs will also increase the teacher's capacity to motivate students to consider careers in science, mathematics, and engineering," according to a NSF statement.

Appropriations Told

Higher Tuition Causes Negro College Crisis

Tuition raises caused by decisions of the 1955 Legislature have brought on near-crisis situations at several Negro colleges, the Joint Appropriations Committee heard yesterday.

It was the second day of hearings for State-owned institutions of higher education before the money committee.

Before hearing from Negro college heads, the committee saw graphic examples of results obtained at a unique State educational institution—the School for the Deaf at Morganton.

Youngsters ranging from five-year-old tots to 17-year-old teenagers, all deaf, demonstrated their powers of mind and tongue to legislators, most of whom were drying eyes and blowing noses at the end of the demonstration.

Charges Prohibitive.

Negro college presidents from Durham, Elizabeth City, and Fayetteville told the committee their institutions faced crisis conditions because prohibitive student charges made it impossible for students of lower income families to attend the schools.

All three asked for increases above recommended budget figures, mostly for teachers salaries and for library personnel.

Dr. S. D. Williams, president of Elizabeth City State Teachers College, said budget recommendations would "cripple our work and reduce us to the status of a second-rate institution."

He asked $120,408 in additional funds for the 1957-59 biennium, mostly for salaries and library personnel.

Dr. Rudolph Jones, President of Fayetteville Teachers College asked for $23,332 in additional appropriations, mostly for library personel and a music-band teacher.

Dr. A. Elder of North Carolina College in Durham asked for $750,000 from the proposed revolving fund for a girls' dormitory and $346,000 for a student union building.

The School for the Deaf, represented by its director, Ben Hoffmeyer and by ten remarkable students, asked $64,539 above budget recommendations for operating expenses, $265,920 in permanent improvement funds for construction of a dormitory and repair of bathroom facilities.

Williams and Elder, in prepared briefs, said increased tuition charges had caused drops in enrollment at their institutions, and urged the legislators to reconsider recommended cuts in instructional personnel at the two colleges.

The budget recommends a cut of five faculty members out of 30 at the Elizabeth City college, and ten of 113 at North Carolina College.

Williams and Jones said their schools faced loss of accreditation if budget recommendations for a cut in library personnel were approved by the Legislature.

The youngsters from the deaf school were the star performers for the afternoon. Little Anne Potter of Southport and Lewis Suggs of Creedmoor, both five year-olds, joined their older schoolmates at the institution in putting on demonstrations with their teachers of the training they had received.

COLLEGES FACING SALARY PROBLEM

Legislative Group Told of Out-of-State Salary Lures For Professors

Times 3-14-57

Competition with the Yankee dollar for North Carolina professors was cited by four college presidents yesterday as they asked the Joint Appropriations Committee for extra funds for their institutions.

Presidents of State-operated colleges in both ends of the State told the lawmakers of a growing problem in fighting out-of-state salary lures offered their faculty members.

President William Plemmons of Appalachian State Teachers College at Boone said his school lost 13 per cent of its faculty last year to positions with salaries "20 to 67½ per cent higher than we could pay."

Losses At ECC.

Dr. John D. Messick of East Carolina College at Greenville said his institution lost faculty members to "Michigan, Ohio, Nevada, New Mexico, Florida, and Maryland," among others, in the past year.

Dr. Warmoth T. Gibbs of the Agricultural and Technical College in Greensboro said many of the college's engineering graduates were getting higher starting salaries than the professors who taught them.

Dr. W. E. Bird of West Carolina College echoed his colleagues. "It is impossible to compete," he said of the battle for faculty members.

The four presidents, and President Walter J. Gale of Pembroke State College, asked the Appropriations Committee for nearly $700,000 in operating funds above budget recommendations, and for nearly $900,000 in capital improvement funds above recommendations.

Most of the funds asked by the colleges would go for extra personnel, and to pay larger stipends to present faculty members.

Dramatic emphasis to the presidents' views on the battle for faculty members was put by E. E. Rawl of Greenville, member of the ECC trustee board, who sent Messick from the room to plead with the legislators for a raise in Messick's salary from $11,000 to $15,000.

News & Observer

Rawls said the ECC president had been offered blank check salary lures from "industry and other institutions who recognize him as a top man."

Specifically, the presidents asked

Times 3-14-57

At ECC—$170,276 in 1957-58 and $266,916 in 1958-59 above recommendations, mostly for salaries and wages $152,000 above recommendations for permanent improvements, mostly for several minor items.

At WCC—$10,570 for the first year of the biennium and $17,420 the second, mostly for library books and salaries. $98,625 for an administration building, and $500,000 from the revolving fund for a boy's dormitory.

At A&T—$83,800 each year of the biennium, mostly for salaries and to meet accreditation needs in the library. $126,223 for equipment in the engineering building.

At Appalachian—Plemmons asked for $24,500 to equip a dormitory, suggested his institution would ask funds for a cafeteria and renovations at the next Assembly.

In his statement, he suggested pay increases of eight or ten per cent "will not in the long run enable us to compete for the kind of teachers we feel future teachers are entitled to."

At Pembroke—$21,250 for each year of the biennium for additional professors and a raise for President Gale.

Debate Integration At A&T

GREENSBORO, N. C. —(INS) — A North Carolina Negro college is debating whether to allow race mixing in its school.

Three white students, one from North Carolina and two from New York, have applied for admission to the Agricultural and Technical college for Negroes in Greensboro for the summer session.

Rodney Jaye Miller, 22, of Greensboro currently attending the North Carolina State college at Raleigh, said he would like to study at A& T because it is "convenient to home and less expensive."

Edward Holodny, 21, from New York City, is a World War Two refugee from Russia and intends to study engineering at the Negro college. Richard Jerome Weiser, 24, from Hamburg, N. Y., would study horticulture.

The trustees referred the applications to the college admissions committee and indicated that they would approve any decision the committee might make.

Negroes to Room at State

Wed. 1-30-57

Raleigh, N.C.

Two Negro students at North Carolina State College have applied for dormitory rooms at the college and have been admitted to Watauga Hall, one of the institution's regular dormitories, college authorities announced yesterday.

The students — Irwin Richard Holmes Jr., 1403 South Alston Avenue, Durham, and Walter Van-Buren Holmes, 124 Masondale Avenue, Durham—share the same room in the dormitory. They are both freshmen in the college's School of Engineering.

Both entered State College at the beginning of the fall semester last September but did not apply for a dormitory room until the spring semester which opens this week.

College authorities said no additional Negro students have been admitted to the institution for the new semester. Six Negroes studied in the college's undergraduate schools during the fall semester, and there were no Negroes enrolled in the Graduate School during the semester.

State College registered its first Negro graduate students in September, 1953. The first undergraduates were admitted last summer when Edward Carson and Manuel Houston Crockett Jr., both of Raleigh, enrolled as freshmen in electrical engineering.

These are not the first Negroes to live on-campus at a University of North Carolina unit. The Greensboro Woman's College admitted two girls to its dormitories last fall.

A.&T. Qualifications Too High, White Student Says

Norfolk, Va.

Special to Journal and Guide

GREENSBORO, N. C.—"The qualifications are too high," so a white student who has been attending state-supported North Carolina State college at Raleigh, will not try to enter state-supported A. and T. college here.

Instead of going into the "colored" college, the student will hie away to another all-white school for the summer classes he wishes to pursue.

RODNEY JAYE Miller, 22-year-old State college freshman from Greensboro, had announced that he would seek to enter A. and T. college during the summer. If he had been accepted, he would have been the first white student at the local "colored" college.

He gave as his reasons for wanting to enter A. and T the closeness of the school to his residence and the "economy" he would be able to realize.

THE REQUEST was given wide play in the daily press and the home of the would-be student was deluged with 'phone calls. Miller's wife has since told the press that "this integration thing" is not the cause of her husband's decision not to enter A. and T., but said that he has since learned that he "just couldn't meet the high qualification standards of A. and T."

Mrs. Miller said her husband will now attend Guilford college, some 10 miles west of here.

NCC faculty receives raise; Dr. Barksdale named dean

ERNEST B. JOHNSON, Winston-Salem businessman, and Dr. J. W. Black of Rocky Mount, the other two Negroes serving with Dr Hubbard, were named to the legislative and by-laws committee, respectively.

The board also approved the appointment of Dr. Richard Kenneth Barksdale as full dean of the graduate school. A professor of English at NCC since 1949, Dr. Barksdale previously served as assistant to Dean W. W. Pierson, retired dean of the University of North Carolina Graduate School, who was acting dean at NCC.

A trustee spokesman said raises amounting to 11 per cent were available to the teaching personnel and all would get "across-the-board raises of 9 per cent."

"Two per cent will be used as increases for those whose salaries are low for the services they are rendering," the spokesman said.

PLANNING for the new dormitory for senior and graduate women means raising the cost of housing at the college, the trustees said. They instructed the building committee to "execute the project."

The new dean of the NCC Graduate School, Dr. Barksdale, is a native of Winchester, Mass.

He received his A. B. at Bowdoin College where he won Phi Beta Kappa honors.

He holds two master's degrees, one from Syracuse University, and another from Harvard University where he received the Ph. D. in English in 1951.

Dr. Barksdale is married to the former Miss Olga A. Marcelle. They have two children, Maxine, 11, and Richard Kenneth Jr., 6.

College Gets Over $50,000 For Institute

DURHAM — North Carolina College has received a second grant of more than $50,000 to sponsor a special Summer Institute for High School Teachers of Science and Mathematics.

p. 20

In announcing receipt of the grant from the National Science Foundation, NCC President Alfonso Elder said the institute would again be directed by Dr. W. H. Robinson, professor of physics, "who did such an outstanding job with the 1957 institute."

DR. ROBINSON, who will attend a special briefing session in Washington in December, said he expected money to be available for more than 50 high school teachers of science and mathematics.

Individual grants may average some $450 or more for six weeks with recipients receiving expenses of $75 weekly and also getting travel, tuition, and other fees.

The institute is expected to start around June 9, 1958. Interested persons should contact Dr. Robinson at NCC.

Dr. W. Milan Davis, president of Okolona college in Okolona, Miss., spent Tuesday night here, en route from his home to Ames, Iowa, where he was to be a banquet speaker Wednesday night at the Iowa State college.

Dr. Davis, a graduate of Iowa State, was the principal speaker at the annual banquet of Alpha Kappa Delta, national honor society in sociology. He also was to be initiated into the society.

Okolona college, of which Dr. Davis has been president since 1943 is supported by the Episcopal church. Under Dr. Davis' leadership it has grown from an institution with seven buildings and an annual budget of $16,000 to a campus with 17 buildings and an annual budget of $130,000. It has 350 students, 125 enrolled in the two-year college and the others in the four year high school department.

DR. W. MILAN DAVIS

En route to Iowa, Dr. Davis stopped off in Kansas City to visit Mr. and Mrs. Nat F. Johnson, 3249 Victor, whose son Allen G. Carter, was graduated from Okolona in 1955 with honors. Young Carter is now in the Air Force, stationed in Alaska.

Dr. Davis, a native of Okolona, was recently described in an article in the Clarksdale (Miss.) Press Register as "a big man not only in structure but in mind, soul and personality."

Last June, he received the Distinguished Alumnus award from Iowa State college, the second Negro to be so honored. The first to receive the award was the late George Washington Carver.

Dr. Davis is a graduate of the Coachoma county agricultural high school and of the Alcorn A. and M. college at Alcorn Miss. From Iowa State he recieved his master's degree in sociology and agricultural economics.

He went to Okolona in 1933, serving as dean and registrar for 10 years before his election as president.

During the three-year period, 1940 to 1943, Dr. Davis was one of eight Negroes in the South chosen by the General Education Board to spend a semester at Fisk university and at Tuskegee institute studying social dynamics in the South. At Tuskegee he worked closely with Dr. Carver.

In September, 1955, Dr. Davis spoke as a representative of the American Negro at the general conference of the Episcopal church held in Honolulu.

MEMPHIS — The Tennessee Baptist Missionary and Education Convention, in probably the largest single gift to an educational institution by any Negro group, has transferred assets valued at a million dollars to Owen college in Memphis.

P. 20

At the same time the Baptist convention, headed by Dr. S. A. Owen of Memphis, who is also first vicepresident of the National Baptist Convention, Inc.:

(1) Amended the charter to change the name of the two-year institution from S. A. Owen Junior college to Owen college.

(2) Amended the charter to give academic control of the college to a board of trustees and to open membership on the board of trustees to persons other than members of the convention.

However, the Tennesse B. M. & E. Convention, which allocates approximatly 95 per cent of its income to the Baptist Educational Fund will increase its support of the college as the sole beneficiary of the fund.

With Levi Watkins, as first president, the convention opened the college in September, 1954 with a staff and a pilot group of students. Meanwhile, Dr. Owen, who also is chairman of the Owen college board of trustees, announced a $75,000 special financial effort for with the first $25,000 drive to end this June.

The history-making actions taken by the convention gave the college financial status as an educational institution currently without endowment.

All these significant steps were taken when educational surveys indicated the young institution can hope for early accreditation, with first target date being December, 1958.

A two-year college has to turn out three graduating classes before it can be regionally accredited and officials indicated this time element and a library improvement are the principal hold-ups.

President Watkins said:

"In my opinion the convention, through its action and its speed moved the major obstacles to accreditation. It is the opinion of our faculty that we will have little difficulty meeting the technical ing true, we anticipate only a favorable report when the evaluating committee of our accrecint agency comes to Owen."

The Tennessee B. M. & E. Con- 1946 for $375,000 from the Literary Society of St. Catherine of Siena. They took possession in July, 1953, and in October, 1953 paid off the total indebtedness which was not due until 1959.

Reconditioning and improvements started when the college was first purchased and by the time of the history-making transaction this March, outside appraisors valued the land at $192,200, the buildings at $727.500 and other fixed assets at $70,525. President Watkins reports that current total assets, including inventories, are well over a million dollars.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—The Tennessee Missionary and Educational Convention has voted to change the name of S. A. Owen Junior College here to Owen College. The college was opened in 1954 and named for Dr. S. A. Owen, local minister, chairman of the college board of trustees and first vice president of the National Baptist Convention, Inc., U.S.A.

The state convention also voted to give academic control of the college to a board of trustees and to open membership on the board to persons other than convention members.

The state convention also relinquished control of campus facilities. Levi Watkins will serve as president of Owen College. Mr. Watkins announced the launching of a $75,000 financial campaign for the institution and said the state convention has agreed to increase its financial support to the college.

Primary aim of the school now is to receive accreditation by December, 1958.

DR. E. CLAYTON CALHOUN

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Rev. Dr. Eugene Clayton Calhoun will be formally inaugurated as the eighth president of Paine college, Monday, April 29, in the Randall A. Carter gymnasium.

Bishop John Branscomb, resident bishop of the Cuba and Florida conferences of the Methodist church and president of the board of trustees of Paine college, will preside.

Last June, Rev. Calhoun resigned the pastorate of Riverside Methodist church, Miami, Fla. to return to his native Georgia to assume the duties of his new post. He thus continues an unbroken succession of dedicated Christian leadership at Paine college.

One of Paine college's most renowned alumni will deliver the inaugural address.

He is Dr. Channing Tobias, noted Negro leader and an alumnus of Paine college.

Born in Augusta, Ga., on Feb. 1, 1882, Dr. Tobias received his education in the public schools of Augusta. He was graduated with the bachelor of arts degree from Paine college in 1902, and with the doctor of divinity degree from Drew Theological Seminary in 1905.

Chicago, Ill.

He holds numerous honorary degrees from the leading colleges and universities of the U. S.

The two-day inauguration program will begin with a vesper sermon by Bishop Luther Stewart, noted churchman and loyal supporter of the college.

A student at Paine, 1912-1913, Bishop Stewart has through 42 years, supported Paine college.

While a student at Florida A. & M. college, 1913-1917, Bishop Stewart was pastor of the First CME church, Pensacola, Fla. He has been a pastor in both the Kentucky and Alabama Conferences of the CME church.

He was later appointed presiding elder of the Hopkinsville district in Kentucky. From 1938 to 1942 he was editor of the "Christian Index", the official publication of the CME church. In May 1942 he was elected 22nd bishop of the CME church.

Thomas L. Holley of Prairie View To Retire After 47 Years' Service

Call Fri. 4-26-57 P. 1

By CURTIS A. WOOD

Kansas City, Mo.

PRAIRIE VIEW, Texas. — Thomas L. Holley, well known and well loved by friends of Prairie View A. and M. college everywhere will go into retirement on April 30 after 47 years of teaching and supervisory work.

Known equally as well for his genial personality and sense of humor as for his great contribution to industrial education in Texas, Mr. Holley has been a perennial toastmaster at social functions and commands any gathering with his excellent wit.

Along more serious lines, he was the first Negro teacher trainer in industrial education in the state, starting back in 1922. He has seen the fruits of his work grow from meager beginnings to many credited industrial arts and vocational trade programs in high schools throughout Texas.

Mr. Holley first came to Prairie View in 1906 as a student from San Antonio. He majored in industrial education and after four years, in 1910, was added to the staff as assistant director of the Mechanical department and teacher of grade and industry courses.

Studied In Kansas

In 1912 he resigned to continue his education. He studied architecture at Kansas A. and M. college in 1912-'14, attended Stout institute, Menominee, Wis., Dunwoody institute, Minneapolis, and Bradley Polytechnic institute, Peoria, Ill., and later returned to Prairie View for bachelor degrees in Industrial Education (1930) and in Education (1931).

His graduate degree in trade and industrial education was received in 1947 from Colorado State college after several summers of study.

Returning to Prairie View in 1917, Mr. Holley had gained in practical experience through carpentry jobs in Kansas City, Mo., and in San Antonio where he worked under his father, Thomas L. Holley Sr., a contractor.

He also served as teacher of woodwork, cement work, forging and plumbing at Wheatley high in San Antonio. His stay at the college was for the summer months only, as it was also in 1920. In San Antonio he continued to serve as carpentry helper to his father and helped build the vocational department at the high school. He also served as YMCA secretary and principal of the public evening school.

In 1934 Mr. Holley was appointed state supervisor of Adult Education among Negroes in Texas. During the war years, he served as supervisor of War Production Training and in 1945 was named to the permanent position of Teacher Trainer of Trade and Industrial Education at Prairie View. He served in this position until he reached the modified retirement age in 1955. His major job since that time, in addition to teaching, has been to prepare a younger man for the big job ahead in Industrial Education.

He is a member of the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity and is active in social and community life.

Scheduled for April 30, his retirement will take from the scene a great builder, and devout enthusiast in the present and future role of vocational education in Texas. More than that, Mr. Holley will be missed on the campus at Prairie View for his warm, friendly and helpful disposition. He was a friend of the students, a friend of the faculty, and of the administration.

Unusually active for his age, Mr. Holley plans to enjoy plenty good fishing and life with his family in the home he hepled design and build himself in San Antonio. Chances are that he will also be seen often driving across the state, keeping the old contacts, toastmastering a banquet, or putting in a plug for vocational education and the improvement of training opportunities for Texas youth.

PRINCETON REPORT ASKS INTEGRATION

Times

A Negro Section Is Out of Harmony With Community's Character, It Is Held

P. 76 L 14e(1)

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., July 13—The presidents of Princeton University and Princeton Theological Seminary praised this week the work of a civic committee that has declared that "the residential containment of Negro citizens" was incompatible with the international character of the Princeton community.

Dr. Robert F. Goheen, who was inducted as president of the university on July 1, declared: "I feel strongly with the Mayor's Advisory Committee on Housing, on which several members of the university administration and faculty served, that it is impossible to justify the residential containment of any minority group."

Prin. 7-14-57

The committee was formed last October by P. MacKay Sturgess, Mayor of Princeton Borough. Its purpose was to study the future housing needs of an area of Princeton bounded by John Street on the west and Witherspoon Street on the east. A large part of Princeton's Negro population of about 1,500 is concentrated in this nine-block area.

Dr. Goheen contended that Princeton, in which education and research are the only major industries, should constantly seek to stand as an exemplar of the American ideals of democracy and equity.

Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, held that "no one should be prevented from locating on a given piece of ground on the basis of race, culture or religion." He cautioned, however: "You don't solve the problem merely by enabling the physical contiguity of citizens of different origins. The real task is to create the right moral attitude, to create a communal spirit by establishing meetings in common."

The report noted the "almost insuperable difficulties Negroes face in securing alternate housing in the Princeton area."

"Princeton will grow as a civilized community only as all sections of it are open without distinction to all citizens—as well as to visitors from abroad—who have the financial resources to secure or rent property," the report said. "In view of the international character of the university, the Institute for Advanced Study, and the Princeton Theological Seminary, it is peculiarly important that the Princeton community set an example of equality of opportunity in all aspects of its social and economic life."

George R. Griffing, president of the Matthews Construction Company, was chairman of the twenty-three-man committee of citizens from the different zones of Princeton Borough. It included five Negroes.

A number of citizens have formed an informal association known as the Princeton Housing Group. Its purpose is to serve as intermediary between Negro families seeking homes and white owners who have houses for sale.

A spokesman for the group explained: "Negroes who work in Princeton, sometimes in highly responsible positions, must either find a home in the 'Negro section,' which is already overcrowded, or live elsewhere, often in Trenton or New Brunswick." He cited instances in which lifelong Negro residents have been forced to leave this community to better their housing situation.

'Community Voice' of Daytona Beach objects to segregated junior college

Afro American Sat. 2-16-57 P. 17

Baltimore, Md.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Some 50 colored citizens last week unanimously voted opposition to the Volusia County Board of Education's proposal to build a segregated community junior college in this area.

The announcement was made following the organization of the "Community Voice," a group which members hope to become "a public forum to voice the opinions of the entire community."

14 E (1)

In a letter to Supt. John Smilley, the body "favored" the building of a junior college "for all boys and girls, but oppose a segregated college contrary to the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court."

MEETING at Mt. Bethel Baptist Church, the charter members elected temporary officers.

Miss Bettye Henderson, president of the local chapter of the National Council of Negro Women, was named temporary president. Other temporary officers are:

The Rev. Richard Randall, Robert Wright and Morris Small, vice presidents; Mrs. Peggy Westly, recording secretary; Mrs. Elzora Hunt, financial secretary; C. B. Curinton, treasurer; and Mrs. Rosemary Brown, publicity.

MEMBERS OF Community Voice showed no sympathy for Florida's policy of operating the school system under segregation.

The Rev. E. C. Tillman declared "I don't want us to have any more second - class treatment or any more second hand books that we must use over and over again."

Another minister, the Rev. Roger Fair said, "I'd rather not have a community junior college at all then have one second-rate and segregated.

IT WAS ALSO pointed out at the meeting that the newly organized group is the organization that will "make" the NAACP in Florida, noting that the association gets little or no support here.

Howard Roberts warned members to "avoid dependence on any few people, as in the past, so that people will not get the impression there are only one or two of us who can think and reason."

Atlanta, Ga.

CHICAGO — (ANP) — A businessman who became a college president and the mayor of America's second largest city shared the spotlight at a dinner sponsored by Roosevelt University last week and agreed that American higher education needs more citizen support.

Wilson E. Compton PPresident of the Council for Financial Aid to Education, and former president of Washington State College and Mayor Richard J. Daley, of Chicago, were the featured speakers at an "Opportunities Unlimited" dinner given by the Board of Trustees of Roosevelt University for 1,000 of the city's business and civic leaders.

Purpose of the dinner was to announce a 1957 fund-raising goal of $1,825,000 part of an overall plan to raise 16 million dollars to meet the future educational needs of the community served by Roosevelt University.

Compton then told his audience that the number of men and women wanting a college education would probably double in the next twenyt years.

"Education is everybody's business The public generally should share in its support. The share undertaken by business concerns must be largely increased."

Mayor Daley's speech pinpointed the problem from Chicago's point of view. He quoted statistics indicating that by 1977, the Chicago area would contain 59 percent of the state of Illinois' young people of college age — half a million to be exact. He said:

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss. (ANP) — The Rev. Earnest A. Smith, pastor for the past several years of St. Paul Methodist Church, San Antonio, Tex., is the new president of Rust College here. He succeeds Dr. L. M. McCoy, who retired. Rust is a Methodist-related college.

The Ninety-First Commencement Anniversary Of Rust College

Advocate P. 8

Holly Springs, Miss. — Rust College Commencement Exercises terminated Wednesday, June 5, 1957. The address was delivered by Dr. A. Merritt Dietterich, Executive Secretary, "The Interboard Commission, Methodist Church, Des Moines, Iowa. Dr. Diotterich subject was 'The Inside Story," which delt with inner feelings, attitudes, appreciation, motivations, understandings and values.

Dr. Dietterich received his A. B. Degree in 1922 from Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., his S. T. B. Degree in 1926 from Boston University School of Theology, and his D. D. Degree in 1956 from Simpson College, Indianola, Iowa.

Platform guests present for the commencement address: Reverend E. A. Smith, the new elected President of Rust College, Mrs. Grace Sharpe, sister of Mrs. F. N. Eaton, and a strong supporter of the school, Bishop A. P. Shaw of Los Angeles, California, who delivered the College Annual Sermon and the Founders Day Address, Mr. E. E. Rankins, Jr., the new elected President of Mississippi Industrial College, Mrs. Emma Elzy, member of the Rust College Trustee Board, Mrs. Lillian Rogers Johnson, member of the Board of Trustees, Dean W. Carter, Dean of Mississippi Industrial College, Mr. E. A. Bishop, Principal of Easom High School, Corinth, Mississippi, and assistant to the Dean of Rust College, (summer sessions) Reverend S. L. Sweeney, Superintendent of the Holly Springs District, and Reverend I. L. Rucker, Pastor of Asbury Methodist Church, Holly Springs, Mississippi.

This was one of the largest graduating classes in the history of the school. There were 13 Candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts; Robert Berry, Flora Marthalean Bush, John Campbell, Charles Louis Covington, Eddie Doby Hawkins, Rosa Trainer Kennard, Cody Miller Lee, Claudel Miller, Ruth Ioda Palmer, Laura Trotter Reeves, Robert Chall Rogers, and James Andrew Tucker.

There were 14 Candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Science in Secondary Education, they were: Preston Alsup, Lequicy Ola Mae Bryant, Mable Smith Carlisle, Merlin Dean Conoway, Vallie G. Fields, Charles Lindsay Grant, Ida Robinson Henley, John Elias Johnson, Dimple Henderson Lester, Mattie Bell Logan, Rosie Lillie McGhee, Evelyn Fondell Thomas, Clifton Reive Whitley and Dan Ella Williams.

New President For Rust College

Advocate P. 4

The trustees of Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss., have recently announced the election of the Rev. Earnest Andrew Smith to the presidency of that institution.

President Designate Smith will be the ninth head of this 90-year-old Methodist college for Negroes in the state of Mississippi. He is to succeed Dr. L. M. McCoy, who has completed a career of honor and distinction of 34 years as president of Rust College.

This institution came into being as a part of the tangible expression of the philosophy of Christian education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the fundamentals of which were a converted heart and a trained mind. Rust is typical of those schools and colleges that were established by the church as it endeavored to extend its arm of Christian education to the freedom of the South who were emancipated from slavery. This program, embracing both religious and secular training, met a most crucial situation in which many needs were involved during an era when most of the Southern states provided little or no educational facilities for Negroes.

The trustees of the college have exercised careful skill and profound wisdom in the selection of one to continue the high tradition that has been created by the former presidents of Rust. Mr. Smith possesses the necessary intellectual equipment and spiritual fortification for the task that will be his in this new role. He brings to this office a wealth of academic preparedness and administrative experience. His educational achievements include degrees from Rust College, Oberlin Graduate School of Theology, and post graduate studies at Hartford Seminary Foundation. In the field of the pastoral ministry, he has served churches in Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas. He comes to Rust from the pastorate of St. Paul Methodist Church, San Antonio, Tex., a post he has occupied since 1951.

The career of this churchman has been substantially augmented by the help and inspiration that have been contributed by his good wife, the former Miss Milverta A. Gooden, during the 18 years of their marriage.

We predict for Rust College an expanding future under the guidance of its new president. The Methodist Church will be greatly concerned about this college, along with its other institutions of higher learning, during the present quadrennium when the church is seeking to strengthen the local churches and educational institutions of the connection.

Trying To Force Integration

Daily News P. 8

Jackson Miss.

Thurs. 7-4-57

A seven-page order has been issued by the postoffice department designating Rust College, a second-rate Negro institution at Holly Springs, as the point of relocation for the Memphis postal area "in event of enemy attack."

While the order may be rather meaningless because of the remote possibility of enemy attack, it shows what kind of thinking is going on in Washington. Nearly one-half the postal employes in the Memphis area are white Mississippians, and the order can be interpreted to mean as an opening wedge for integration.

It is anticipated there will be a large expenditure of Federal funds at Rust College under the guise of "civil defense," a project on which multiplied millions are being wasted.

Furthermore, the elaborate Civil Defense plans involve, apparently, various types of "alerts," drills, preparation, and othe activities which will cause postal employees to have to perform service at Rust College from time to time, even if there is never an enemy attack. Quite naturally all Mississippi postal employees resent being loaded up and trucked to Rust College to work, especially in view of the fact that there are in this section of Mississippi several white colleges which have far more adequate facilities and are much more advantageously located.

Dr. McCoy, Negro Educator, Retires From Post

Sun. 7-14-57

Special to The Commercial Appeal

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., July 13.—Dr. L. M. McCoy, one of the South's leading Negro educators, retired this month after serving more than three decades as president of Rust College here.

Memphis Press

When Dr. McCoy first came to the Negro institution in 1924, there were only 28 students enrolled in the college. This spring, the accredited school graduated 114 students. The campus enrollment this year is 350 students.

After the college's administration building burned in 1940, Dr. McCoy obtained funds for a $100,000 replacement with his national "Buy a Brick" campaign. The new building was named for him.

The son of pre-Civil War slaves, Dr. McCoy worked his way through Rust College. He held jobs as a sawmill worker and janitor.

After graduation, he taught at several schools, served as a professor at Rust and was dean of Morgan College in Baltimore before returning here to head his alma mater.

The college maintains extension centers throughout the state, and Dr. McCoy's soil conservation work has brought him national recognition.

The educator plans to live in Chicago with a son.

Savannah State Holds Press Meet

SAVANNAH, Ga. — With Dr William K. Payne, president of Savannah State college as honorary chairman, Savannah State sponsored its annual press institute for college, secondary and elementary editors and advisors from Georgia, Florida, South and North Carolina, Alabama and other southeastern states.

Some of the region's greatest journalist participated in the press institute, which includes workshops in yearbook production, newspaper and magazines, and preparation of news stories. The institute features clinics for both mimeographed and printed publications as well as news for radio and television.

At the opening session in Meldrim auditorium, Dec. 5, Alvah H. Chapman, jr., president and publisher of Savannah Morning News and evening press, delivered an address on the "responsibility of the press."

Following Chapman's address the Pittsburgh Courier's "Caravan" was featured in a panel "preparing school news for the press." This "Caravan" was composed of some of the Pittsburgh Courier's most outstanding writers, namely, Gladys Johnson, Detroit editor for the Pittsburgh Courier; Evelyn Cunningham, New York editor; Jimmy Johnson, Courier photographer and Jake Gaither, circulation manager for the Courier.

At the General Assembly and public meeting at noon, Thursday, Dec. 5, the principal address was delivered by Dr. Bradford D. Ansley, public relations director, Emory university, Atlanta, Ga., and past president of the American Colleges Public Relations Association.

Dr. Ansley, also a former southeastern regional director of the American Public Relations Association, spoke on "the role of school publicity in a democratic society."

Workshops were held Thursday afternoon and Friday morning Dec 5 and 6.

Resource persons and consultants were: Joseph Lambright editor, Savannah Morning News; Frank Rossiter, associate editor Savannah Morning Star; William Gordon, city editor, Atlanta Daily World, and a former Neiman fellow; Marion Jackson, national director of sports publicity for Scott news syndicate and sports editor, Atlanta Daily World; E. L. Drumgold, branch manager for Delmar Publishing Company of Charlotte, North Carolina; Charles W. Greenlea, Atlanta, representing Hewett Publishing Company; Charles Moreland, Atlanta, representing Herb Jones Publishers; Lawrence C. Bryant, Vidalia, representing American Yearbook Co.; Mrs. Helen Morgan, Foote and Davies Printers, lithographers and engravers. Atlanta and numerous others.

The Southeastern Press Institute is affiliated with the Columbia University's scholastic press assocaition, representing 1,000 school publications. and has been endorsed by Georgia Interscholastic Press Association.

The Atlanta Daily World offers trophies to schools and colleges whose publications are tops in competition among participants in the Southeastern Press Institute.

The Daily World also awarded trophies in each of several areas: (1) "Best elementary news story;" (2) "Best edited elementary school mimeographed publication;' (3) "Best edited high school duplicated organ;" (4) "Most colorful high school yearbook;" (5) "Best edited high school printed newspaper;" (6) "Most colorful college yearbook;' (7) "Best edited college newspaper;" (8) "Best written college newsstory;" (9) "Best all-around junior high school organ."

Wilton C. Scott, director of public relations at Savannah State college and consultant for five years for Columbia University Scholastic Press Association, is director of the institute.

Mrs. Luetta Upshur, student publication advisor, Savannah State. is co-director.

SELMA UNIVERSITY

History Of Selma University Is Related By Dr. James Owens

World Birm, Ala. Wed. 2-13-57 P. 1

BY JAMES H. OWENS

(Dr. James H. Owens is president of Selma University. He is the fifteenth president of this famous Baptist-promoted institution which is located in the heart of the Alabama Black Belt. The Alabama Baptist State Convention, chief sponsor of the school, recently approved a fund-raising plan outlined by him which is designed to produce $627,500 in capital funds.) —Editor.

14e(1)

Selma University was founded in 1878 by the Alabama Colored Baptist State Convention. It was known in this initial stage as the Alabama Baptist Normal and Theological School.

In 1877 the State Convention purchased the Fair Ground, in Selma, which consisted of 36 acres of land and some exposition buildings. Here the institution was born and has remained ever since.

In 1881 the institution was incorporated by an act of the legislature under the name of Alabama Baptist Normal and Theological School. In 1885 there was a change of name from the Alabama Baptist Normal and Theological School to Selma University. Ten years later 1895, we witness another change in name, this time it is from Selma University to the Alabama Baptist Colored University. On May 14, 1908 we have the final change of name by an amendment to the charter, which changed it from Alabama Baptist Colored University back to Selma University. In this same amendment the institution was empowered to confer degrees and grant diplomas, and in 1884 the institution had its graduating class of eleven from the College Preparatory Department.

During these early days of development the young university found itself hard pressed financially and has accumulated an indebtedness which it could not easily rid itself of, thus it found it expedient to sell six acres of the above mentioned land which it had purchased to liquidate this obligation.

In 1880 the American Baptist Home Mission Society adopted the institution and for half a century contributed substantially to its support. In the meantime the women of the state organized the Women's Baptist State Convention in 1886 and became the leading exponents in advancing the cause of the institution.

In 1899, under the leadership of Miss Susie A. Stone, this convention assumed the initiative in the erection of a girl's dormitory, which was named in honor of Miss Stone.

The next major effort in the was of construction was the erection of a chapel. This task was undertaken in 1903 and completed in 1904. This building was named Dinkins Memorial Chapel in honor of the fifth President of the university who spearheaded this movement, but passed away before his plans materialized.

By 1910 the Women's Baptist State Convention was ready and assumed the task of placing another dormitory on the campus for girls. This time the undertaking was led by Miss Susie C. V. Foster President of the Convention and for whom the building was named. Recently this building was completely renovated and is now the main dormitory for girls.

On February 23, 1921, the Dinkins Memorial Chapel was completely destroyed by fire. However, no time was lost in erecting a new Dinkins Memorial Chapel and academic building. This structure was partly occupied as early as December 20, 1921. This building is now the hub of academic activities on the campus.

During the intervening years the university has acquired some valuable property on Lapsely St. on the opposite side from the institution. On this property are four houses, one of which currently serves as the home of the President.

In 1930, under the supervision of Dr. George Rice Hovey of the American Baptist Mission Society, Selma University began its program of extension work in religion off the campus, which continues today in several sections of the state. This work is now jointly carried on by the institution and the Southern Baptist Convention.

The boys dormitory is possibly the most interesting structure from an historical point of view. It was built in 1930 from materials taken from the Vickers Home and the Old Arcade Hotel here in Selma. The legend has it that the Vickers Home was Alabama's first mansion when the estate capital was at Cahaba. Thus this dormitory contains much that was in the first mansion and the front is a replica of this old historic building.

The most recent building on the campus is the Henrietta Gibbs Memorial Dining Hall. This modern structure was erected and furnished in 1953 at a cost of $44,000.00, by the Women's Baptist State Convention, under the leadership of Mrs. Henrietta Gibbs, for whom this edifice is named.

The plant and property holdings of the university are currently valued at more than one-half million dollars.

Baptists Approve Drive To Raise $625,500 For Selma

World Birm, Ala. Sat. 2-2-57 P. 1

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

SELMA, Ala. (SNS) — A fund-raising plan blueprinted to produce $626,500 in capital funds for 83-year-old Selma University was approved here Jan. 30 by the Alabama Baptist State Convention at its adjourned session.

Outlined by S. U. President James H. Owens, the capital funds plans won swift, enthusiatic, unanimous support at the spirited meeting. Proposed developments which would be financed by the funds-collection drive cover eight areas.

They included a library building, $100,000; library equipment and books, $30,000; gymnasium, $80,000; science building, $100,000; equipment for science departments, $40,000; two dormitories (one for men and one for women) $200,000; furnishings for the two dormitories $20,000 and repairs and renovations in Dinkins Hall, $25,000.

The adjourned session sidetracked recommendations made by the State Publishing Board which would have retired the Rev. W. H Smith as editor of The Baptist Leader, organ of the convention. The Rev. Smith, a source of dissatisfaction with certain convention powers has been ill, but reportedly is on the comeback. The board recommended that he be replaced by the Rev. L. L. Carter of Anniston.

Several SPB members championed the recommendation vigorously and found support in Dr. U. J. Robinson, convention president. Forces supporting the Rev. Smith pointed to his long service, his physical condition, and asserting that he was entitled to try to carry on if he so desired.

B. W. Coates, pastor, Tabernacle Baptist Church Birmingham, was named chairman of the important Transportation Commission with the Rev. J. L. Ware also of Birmingham, as secretary. The Rev. Ware is recording secretary of the convention and pastor of Trinity Baptist Church. The committee develops plans and travel service for the Alabama delegates who will attend the National Baptist Convention in Louisville, Ky., next September.

A report of the special committee on State Mission Board was adopted after heated debate the Rev. C. A. Lett of Mobile was elected secretary of the convention's headquarters after prolonged debates.

Leading the attack on the headquarters project, the Rev. E. W Williams, pastor of First Baptist Church charged that the convention had never created the office of executive secretary had not authorized permanent headquarters and that delegates were in the dark on the conduct of their business. Against this argument, Convention President Robinson said that the position under discussion was that of secretary of headquarters, the delegates were free to determine where to locate headquarters and that the annual report accounted for the conduct of the office.

An undertone of challenge flowed through the discussion.

Dr. Robinson discussed "The Secret of Faith" in his opening remarks in which he made a plea for unity built around him as their titular leader. "Any leader is helpless if the people he seeks to lead don't follow," he declared.

Recognizing that Alabama represented the most powerful state delegation at the National Baptist Convention, he suggested that they stick together and recognize him as their chosen leader.

Education For Integration

The Alabama Baptist State Convention, chief supporter of Selma University, recently approved plans for a $627,500 campaign for capital funds for the school.) Selma, Ala.

COUNTER EDUCATION

Education for integration must, in a large measure, be counter education or re-education since education of the wrong variety has been the order of the day in this country for almost two centuries.

Under these circumstances, I am fully aware that the task of developing a feeling of common purpose mutual respect and esteem for individuals of a racially different type who have been persecuted, mobbed, cheated, disfranchised, outraged, tortured and subjected to all sorts of humiliating experiences for no other purpose than to make them feel that they are inferior is an exceedingly difficult task under the present current practices in education.

What we are striving to achieve now in the realm of education in America should have been the task of democratic education, both lower and higher aspects, at the very outset of the founding of our school systems. Be that as it may, we are now faced with the problem of undoing what has been done for generations. In those early decades, isolationalism and deep seated prejudice became so entrenched in the national life of this country that it is only natural that our system of education should reflect these concepts.

We cannot legislate against prejudice, but we can educate for its eradication.

READY BUT AFRAID

It will be for some like extracting a rotten molar with deep roots; the process will be very painful at times, but the patient will be greatful for having gotten rid of the source of the pain and discomfort. Many good thinking Americans are ready and willing to rid themselves of this obnoxious situation, but are afraid of public opinion. They fear what others might think of them if they declare themselves. In this situation the calamity howlers have found an excellent opportunity to attempt to give universality to what they think, or at least to what they would have us believe they feel about the situation, by declaring that if integration is attempted there will be blue murder, casualties and police action in general to force upon all parties alike the motheaten customs of disintegrating nineteenth century social order that began making its exit at the turn of the century.

World Pg.

A good case in point is the entering of Negroes in the graduate schools of southern universities. The howlers assured us that tragedy would follow any such attempt on the part of Negroes to defy the sacred traditions of the South. Again the majority expressed itself as being ready and willing to accept the change by exhibiting the kind of behavior that would be expected of an intelligent human being.

THOSE WHO YELL

Those who yell loudly, as for example certain minorities in Tennessee, Alabama and other southern states, are, we believe, suffering from a fairly good case of paranoia. A paranoic's world is made up of people to whom he ascribes certain motives and viewpoints which do not really exist. This was brought out in Mississippi when Negroes began voting some few years ago. There was an editorial in one of the leading newspapers of the state warning Negroes as to what would happen if they attempted to vote. They voted and without bloodshed.

Another example of this paranoic behavior occurred in Washington, D. C. some time back, when for the first time, a certain theatre opened its doors to Negroes. The paranoics were on hand to see what would happen; they were all set for a big session of "I told you so." Police officers were around and ready for action, in case the boys were right. But these race baiters were seriously disappointed. There was not the slightest ripple on the surface; just a waiting line of white and Negro patrons taking turns at purchasing a ticket for a pleasant evening's entertainment. As is clearly evident, our major problem is, and has been, primarily with a highly vocal, non-reflective, shallow thinking, rabble-rousing minority which takes upon itself the responsibility of telling the rest of society how to conduct its affairs.

Norfolk, Va.

RALEIGH, N. C. — Shaw University through its extension department will offer one or more courses for in-service teachers, and will continue also night classes for in-service ministers and other interested persons the first semester this year.

Dr. Nelson H. Harris, director of the department of education, says the courses for teachers will be offered in Room 4 in the Science Hall beginning Sept. 24 at 5 p.m.

Sat. 9-28-57

THE COURSES for in-service teachers will enable them to qualify for certificate renewal, help to change certificates from high school to Primary A or Grammar Grade A, help fulfill requirements for the A. B. or B. S. degree, and in addition, help teachers remove dificiencies which such schools as Columbia University may require of many seeking to qualify for the master's degree.

Dr. Grady D. Davis, dean of the School, of Religion, says courses for ministers will include "The Meaning and Message of the Book of Revelation" and "English Fundamentals" to be taught by the Rev. James D. Roberts of Shaw's school of religion.

REGISTRATION will be on Tuesday, Sept. 24, in Science Hall, Room 2, at 7:30 p.m. The course meets each Tuesday from 7:30 to 9:00 p.m. and is open to all interested persons.

No pre-requisites are required, however, the course will give credit toward the Shaw University Certificate of Award from the department of religious promotion.

Faculty, Students Of Shorter College Raise $3,187.72

Courier Recorder Nashville, Tenn. Nashville Tenn. Feb. 1957

Shorter College, a church related college under the auspices of the A. M. E. Church, located in North Little Rock, Arkansas, this week celebrated its 71st Anniversary. Bishop E. L. Hickman, the Presiding Bishop of the 13th Episcopal District of the A. M. E. Church, ably and eloquently delivered the Anniversary Sermon challenging the constituency to move forward in perpetuating the great traditions of African Methodism. Dr. Howard D. Gregg, President of Daniel Payne College, Birmingham, Alabama, brilliantly and persuasively gave the Anniversary Address challenging the constituency to face realistically the high standards and pressing demands of this new day.

One of the great highlights of the Anniversary Celebration was the announcement by Bishop Sherman L. Greene, Chairman of the institution's Governing Board and President of its Alumni Association, that the sum of $62,000 has been pledged toward a proposed new building replacing Tyree Hall, the institution's oldest but dilapidated building that has recently been torn down.

Dr. Theophilus D. Alexander, President of the College, the faculty and students presented their Annual Founder's Day Project in the sum of $3,187.72, the initial payment on their pledge of $10,000 over the next three years toward the proposed new building. Mrs. Amos J. White victoriously served as Chairman of the Founder's Day Committee. Miss Vera Mae Ashford, a freshman from Searcy, Arkansas, reported $203, the highest sum raised among the students, and captured the honor of being named "Miss Shorter College of 1957." Miss Norma Jean Young, a sophomore from Helena, Ark., reported $109.10, and on the basis of being the ranking contestant of the sophomore class, the class reporting the highest average was named "The Founder's Day Queen." Miss Janet Wade and Mrs. Georgia Sutton, students from El Dorado, Arkansas, and Monticello, Arkansas, respectively, also reported more than a hundred dollars each. Mrs. Vera W. Muldrew, Registrar of the College, reported the sum of $170.00, the highest sum reported among the faculty not including the president of the institution.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATE COLLEGE

Tension Still Rules S. C. State Campus

Afro american Sat 2-16-57 P. 3

Baltimore, M.D.

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

ORANGEBURG, S.C.—Nearly one year after it flared up last March tension between the student body and the administration at S.C. State College remains.

The AFRO, in several off-the-record talks with students on the campus this week, was told:

1. Students still resent President Benner C. Turner who, with trustees, expelled diminutive Fred H. Moore, president of the student body, last April in what students termed "doublecrossing persecution."

"EVERY TIME HIS (Turner's) name is mentioned in chapel, we start scraping our feet on the floor, coughing and making so much noise you can't hear what the speaker is saying," one woman student said. Another told of the president [illegible] hoped at public appear[illegible]

"[illegible] (Turner) doesn't come to chapel often now," another student said. "We don't see much of him."

2. Students charge that, in an effort to clean out sentiment in favor of integration on the campus, the administration has elevated some faculty members as reward for roles played during the long period of unrest, strikes and effigy hangings on the campus last spring.

STUDENTS READILY give names of these persons, disliked almost as much as the administration and all-white trustee board.

3. Asked about prospects of a return to normal, student spokesmen said it will take perhaps 10 years or more before the 1955 student protests and demonstrations, the explusions of more than 15 students and firings of a half dozen or more faculty members will be forgotten on the campus.

One student said: "At least until the next three classes are graduated, there will be little appreciation among us for the administration. We'll even remember what we've had forced on us the rest of our lives.

"I don't think these things will help South Carolina State in the future," he declared.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATERS still undergo mild kidding from other sympathetic college students about the state.

At a recent basketball game between State and Claflin College, on the latter's campus—across the fence — some enterprising students, presumedly not of the S.C. State College body, paraded before the visitors with placards.

One of the placards read "Welcome From Behind the Iron Curtain."

Meanwhile, the visitor to State College campus is impressed with a continuing building of facilities.

NOW IN USE is a new, modern building housing the school of education and other courses. A new men's dormitory went into use shortly before the last school term ended. Several other buildings are contemplated at the college.

Campus trouble last spring developed after students sought to join in a then citywide boycott of local firms which were working economic pressures against NAACP members and some 57 signers of an integration petition.

Students worked their own version of a boycott on the campus but failed in an effort to force the administration to drop campus business with WCC firms.

7 students expelled in new uprising at S.C. State College

Afro American Baltimore, Md

Sat 5-25-57

By JOHN H. McCRAY

ORANGEBURG, S.C. — Students at South Carolina State College, whose protests and demonstrations a year ago resulted in approximately 8 student explusions and several firings from the faculty, were up in arms again this week.

A spokesman for the student body told the AFRO that the campus "has been seething the last two weeks" over the expulsions of seven students, including a coed, and conversely because two coeds caught "on a party" with two faculty men weren't expelled.

The student leader told the AFRO:

Two weeks ago six male students were accused of swiping an examination from the offices of L. C. Roache, a faculty member.

They were brought before the Discipline Committee, of which Mr. Roache is a member, tried and recommended for expulsion to President Benner C. Turner. The sextet was sent home.

ABOUT THE same time, the student spokesman said, the college's dean of women "caught" a senior coed in Columbia (42 miles away) shopping with an Orangeburg woman, a public school teacher.

Evidently the coed had left the campus without permissions. She too was brought before the discipline committee and expelled.

Two other coeds, who also apparently left the campus without permission, and who were also "caught" in Columbia, were neither brought before the discipline committee nor expelled, the AFRO was told.

The two young women, the student spokesman said, from Columbia and Florence respectively, were surprised by a dormitory matron while "on a drinking party" with two male faculty members in Columbia.

One of the men is a member of the Discipline Committee, the student leader said.

"WE THINK the reason these two girls weren't also given disciplinary action," he said "is that the matron ran into them accidentally while on a similar party with an ROTC officer.

"If she'd turned them in they would have told on her and the men; and they didn't want that to happen. You see, they can bring any of us before the Discipline Committee, but we can't bring members of the faculty before the committee," he said.

He said both women are members of the same sorority, were candidates for a campus queen honor and also, honor students.

Afro American

THE STUDENT leader said, also:

1460

"We students are planning to have something done about this. It's not the first time — even this year — that women students have been taken off the campus by men on the faculty.

Sat. 5-25-57

"They are never reported for discipline. It seems that so long as they leave with, or to meet, some professor it's all right and the president never hears about it."

Turning to another incident which he said had also riled students, the spokesman asked:

"Why didn't the dean report the wild drinking party that was given in the rear of the garage of the ROTC building?

"Students know about it; they know who was there and most of the things that happened."

"We want those girls who were caught drinking in Columbia, we want those two faculty men who took them there, and also the matron who discovered them — all expelled or fired," he said.

WITH LESS than two weeks left in the current school year, it appeared doubtful that the issue can be resolved before school closes.

Last year, State College students wound up the term in a general furor, which developed out of student support of an economic boycott and counter-boycott in the community.

During the dispute, students struck twice, hanged the president, the Governor and several others in effigy.

For roles in this activity, 8 students were expelled, 7 of them after the college closed the term.

THE OTHER, student body president Fred H. Moore, was expelled with less than month remaining in his senior year. He graduates this month from Allen University in Columbia.

Several members of the faculty were also fired at the end of the last school term for roles, or suspected sympathies in the dispute.

The resulting public censure of the college's administration resulted in a substantially reduced 1956-57 freshman class and the additional loss gy transfers of a number of other students enrolled last year.

Special to Journal and Guide

ORANGEBURG, S. C. —Obscured by the battle smoke of the intense integration fight in the South is a dramatic behind the-scenes story of the role of the Negro college.

For many reasons, known and understood by Negroes in all regions, Negro students in the middle and deep South will still continue to enroll in Negro colleges for years to come.

DR. FRED PATTERSON, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund and former president of Tuskegee Institute, explains this situation by declaring that, "Because of the prolonged neglect suffered by Negro students, there will be several generations of people who will have to be dealt with specially and sympathetically."

Without fanfare or publicity southern colleges, private and state supported, are wedded to the task of upgrading the calibre of instruction and scholastic achievement. From Virginia to Florida college administrators are feverishly strengthening the quality of their offerings.

Precariously perched at the apex of this movement to prepare the Negro student for inter-group living are the presidents of these colleges. Without admitting it directly, they will nod in agreement that their real challenge is to prepare the unintegratable to make the adjustment which will be required by the U. S. Supreme Court's decision.

One of the southern colleges which is making a giant step toward preparing Negro students for a multi-cultural life, is South Carolina State College.

DR. HOWARD JORDAN, youthful dean of the School of Education, said, "We can no longer get by with producing college graduates. We must now produce college graduates and scientists who can produce."

He pointed out, however, that according to the last census figures, one out of every three Negroes in the state is classed as a functional illiterate (less than four years of schooling). The median schooling for whites and Negroes in South Carolina is only six years.

For much of the rural South the average daily attendance is from three to four months. Many students start after Christmas and quit after March, depending upon the weather. It takes a top notch, almost super teacher to see to it that these students get the maximum teaching for the times a rural child spends in school.

UNWITTINGLY PERHAPS; and as a result of sparks of pressures loosed by a growing militancy among southern Negroes, white educators and politicians became increasingly responsive to the physical needs of Negro college plants immediately following the war.

At South Carolina State College the metamorphosis was launched by Harvard-trained Dr. B. C. Turner, president. He took the helm at the beginning of the decade and began to coordinate existing facilities and to initiate additional programs to prepare the institution for "Full, first class status."

At the outset, President Turner's problems were at least two-fold. On the one-hand, he had to arrange for adequate physical facilities to house the kind of program that accreditation agencies were demanding. And not too dissimilar from this challenge, he had, on the other hand, to develop ways and means of

Building Program Is Well Under Way

Dr. Turner takes time out from a busy day's schedule to look over the progress being made on a proposed $10 million building program now underway at the college. In the last six years, buildings totaling $4 million have already been completed. One of such buildings is the ultra-modern academic building in the background.

Foster Research At S. C. State

Dr. Benner C. Turner, (seated) president of South Carolina State College, and Dr. Howard Jordan, youthful dean of the college's School of Education, beam with pride over a research project completed at the school. The project was made possible by a $5,000 fund established by the present administration. During Dr. Turner's administration, top teachers' pay has been increased from $4,000 in 1950 to $7,200 in 1956. Ph.D.'s on the faculty have increased from four to 15, and nine others are candidates for the doctoral degree.

procuring a highly trained faculty who could implement a program of the highest quality.

SYMPATHETIC legislators and highly placed friends cognizant of the magnitude of President Turner's problem, helped him sell hard-boiled legislators on the necessity of expanding aid to SCS.

Some say more than sympathy and interest in the Negro's welfare motivated South Carolina powers who began to pour money into SCS. Be that as it may, the record shows the renaissance at South Carolina State College actually began with the inauguration of Dr. B. C. Turner as president in 1950.

The little known story of Turner's achievements in the six years of his administration is a story of solid success. Especially is this true when viewed against the deep seated antagonisms traditional with the region and the state.

The achievements are many and significant, but perhaps the two which jut out from among the others like the proverbial sore thumb must come in the realm of salaries and plant expansion. The top instructional salary when Turner took office was $4,000. In a little over five years he has doubled instructional salaries to $7,200.

THE INCREASE from four Ph.D.'s in 1950 to 15 in 1956, is due largely to a program which Turner initiated of paying full salaries to instructors studying for the doctorate.

To encourage research and to stimulate teachers to make some significant contribution to education, a $5,000 fund has been established by the administration to be administered solely by a faculty committee.

Perhaps equally as important as the improved quality of the educational staff is the complete renovation of the instructional program .The present administration has organized a School of Education, a Department of Music, which offers a major in music education. Since 1950 a minor in German and French has been developed.

In an effort to upgrade the students, a student personnel and guidance center was developed. Here all college-wide testing and state-wide entrance examinations are conducted. This service is responsible for freshmen placement tests, sophomore examinations and coordinates the counselling and guidance program.

SELF DIRECTION AMONG the students is encouraged and assisted by an office of student activities. Under the director, the office coordinates all student activities, curricular and extra-curricular.

For the first time in the history of the school, scholarships were provided for band and choir members and a budget was provided YMCA and YWCA activities. Students have been placed on 15 major committees of the college and in addition, councils for men and women have been established. The student council gets an annual budget from the college. Students who experience financial difficulties during the school year and can establish need are eligible to borrow from a student loan fund which is capitalized at 5$,000.

Without saying it, Dr. Turner gives the unmistakable feeling that the battle that his race is in for first class citizenship will not be won by words. He has expressed the belief that there will always be a place in the future for institutions, educational and financial, serving a definite need.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATE College's permanent improvement program involving some 30 projects and costing more than $10,000,000 is nearly half completed. Since 1950, the college has made available for active use a student center, agriculture building, dormitory for men, dairy plant, food conservation center, faculty housing project (two dormitories for men and women, 14 cottages and two apartment buildings with four apartments each), infirmary, stadium, and academic building. In progress now are a women's dormitory and a power plant. These improvements have been made available at a cost of $4,000,000.

Projects which Dr. Turner has told the legislature are urgently needed will cost an estimated additional $6,000,000.

Problems Of Untrained Worker Analyzed Here

Daily Herald Thurs. 10-18-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

BY WILLIAM GORDON

Many problems of the untrained worker were traced to the home, the school and business executives here Wednesday during the weekly Hungry Club Forum at the Butler Street YMCA.

Mrs. Ossie W. Mitchell, Southern Regional Director of the Iota Phi Lambda Sorority blamed the methods of teaching as far back as the elementary schools for the inability for youngsters to meet the standards of secretarial requirements and competent employees.

NO DIFFERENCE

The assistant director of the Booker T. Washington Business College, Birmingham, Alabama said there is "no difference between the small and large business." She said the problem of untrained secretaries is universal.

She praised the work of the Sorority and added:

"As a group of women interested in the improvement in business, growth and advancement ....."

She compared the present-day type of management in business with that of years ago.

NEW LOOK

"The old business is getting a new face in order to meet the "New Look", that is part and parcel of the modern-day business. We can't operate today's business with yesterday's methods," she stated.

Mrs. Mitchell said one goes into business to serve the public and that "one cannot fool the public for long"

"It takes two things to manage a business: some education and common sense," she added.

KEEN COMPETITION

"One cannot meet the very keen competition without the know-how of business. Education for business does not mean very much unless common sense is used.

"Business is like an automobile, it will not run by itself, except down hill."

"Happy employees make a successful business. The secret of success in any business is service."

The sorority official pointed to a recent survey which showed business failures. The survey revealed that 97.8 of the failures were directly related to identifiable human weaknesses of the individuals who owned the business. She said incompetence accounted for 50.3 per cent of the bankruptcies.

Mrs. Mitchell told the group, youngsters must get some inspiration at home and learn to follow the line of least resistance. She said, guidance was one of the big problems of today.

Conference On Education Begins Work

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C.
Wed. 4-24-57

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 23 (P)—Delegates from 15 states and the District of Columbia, including two governors, today opened the Southern Regional Conference on Education Beyond the High School.

Among the 300 educators and civic leaders attending the three-day meeting were Govs. Raymond Gary of Oklahoma and Cecil Underwood of West Virginia.

Sponsored by the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School, the conference had as its aim increasing public awareness of educational problems and planning state educational conferences.

It will submit recommendations to the President's Committee for state, regional and Federal action.

States represented at the conference included Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia.

Dr. Anderson To Head Southern School Board

Constitution Atlanta Ga.
Fri. 5-31-57 P. 6

Dr. Robert C. Anderson has been appointed director of the Southern Regional Education Board, succeeding Dr. John E. Ivey Jr., who recently was named executive vice president of New York University.

Dr. Anderson has served as a member of the board's staff since 1953. The announcement was made by Gov. Collins of Florida, chairman of the SREB.

Dr. Anderson

The Southern Regional Education Board was established through legislative action of the Southern states in 1949 to aid the states in pooling their higher education resources. Its headquarters are in Atlanta.

Dr. Anderson, 35, joined the SREB staff as executive associate. In 1955, he became associate director for administration and was made acting director in 1956 while Dr. Ivey was on a study tour abroad.

A native of Birmingham, he received his undergraduate education at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn. He took his master's degree at the University of North Carolina and a Ph.D at New York University, where he served as assistant to the dean of the School of Education in 1948-50.

In 1950, Dr. Anderson became director of the Graduate School at Memphis State College.

He has served as a member of the governing board of the Cooperative Bureau for Teachers, director of the Southern Regional Project in Educational Television, a member of the Board of Consultants to the DeKalb County school system and director of the Southern Regional Conference on Education Beyond the High School.

Ivey Receives Award From Regional Board

Marvin Lists Accomplishments Of SREB

1,000 BEING HELPED

Memphis

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA, Sept. 22.—In pooling specialized facilities for advanced education, 16 states already have educated 1,000 students through the Southern Regional Education Board and have another 1,000 in the process of education.

Mon. 9-23-57

This achievement for the SREB was pointed out Saturday by Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin in an address for groundbreaking exercises for a $250,000 headquarters for the inter-state agency. The structure, to be completed by June, will be financed by the regents of the Georgia University System, which will be reimbursed by the SREB over 25 years.

Started In 1949

The regents will then still hold title to the building but the SREB will occupy it rent-free.

Governor Griffin noted that his own state had been a party to the Southern Regional Education Compact since its origin in 1949. He explained that the program enables one state to use schools of another for the education of students for which it itself does not have facilities.

The Governor said that, for example:

"Georgia has been able to purchase 15 places per year from Meharry Medical College in Nashville and three places for veterinary students at Tuskegee Institute at a great savings to the state.

"On the other side of the coin, Georgia has received support for its school of veterinary medicine at the University of Georgia from other states that have no veterinary medical schools, and Emory University, a private institution in Atlanta, has received support from states without medical schools."

Education Swap

Meharry and Tuskegee are Negro institutions and Georgia and Emory are, of course, all-white strictly segregated Georgia schools. Georgia thus has obtained veterinary training for Negro students in another state and afforded the same training for white students from other states at the University of Georgia.

SREB spokesmen, however, have emphasized that the agency's purpose is to spread the benefits of higher education to all students through efficient pooling of facilities.

Governor Griffin noted that other fields in which the SREB has been of assistance are mental health training and research, nuclear energy, forestry, city planning, nursing training and research and educational training. He said the new University of Georgia science center and Georgia's advisory commission nuclear energy, which is pushing plans for a nuclear reactor at Georgia Tech, grew from ideas originating at SREB sessions.

Gov. Collins Wants No Part In 'Do-Nothing' State Rights

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala
Fri. 8-30-57

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Aug. 29 (AP)—Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida said tonight he wants no part of the slogan of states' rights "if it is used as an excuse for doing nothing."

8-3-A

And he takes this stand, he said, despite his "devotion to the rights of states to perform those governmental functions properly within their jurisdiction."

Collins made his remarks in a speech prepared for delivery at the opening session of the legislative work conference on Southern Regional education, sponsored by the Southern Regional Education Board, of which he is chairman.

The board is composed of the governors of 16 Southern states, and five persons appointed by each governor. Its purpose is to help states develop higher education programs to meet the South's social and economic needs, and to help colleges and universities develop high quality educational programs.

Collins, who spoke after Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia had welcomed the delegates, said public services should be undertaken by the level of government closest to home which can do the job the best. This naturally means the federal government should do certain jobs, the state government should perform others, and the local governments still others."

"This does not mean, however, that various levels of government should not undertake joint responsibilities. Nor does it mean that state governments should be arrayed against the federal government."

Collins said the necessity that the Southern states pool their resources and work together "is most urgent because we in the South are more dependent upon public education than are the other regions of the nation. We don't have the enormous private educational endowments of other areas."

The Southern states, he said, have indicated their willingness to carry out their responsibilities "in the challenging new fields of technological change" by taking the regional cooperation concept and applying it recently to educational television and nuclear development.

Solution to Mental Ills Lies In Prevention, Says Bloomberg

Journal + Constitution Sun. 2-3-57

Atlanta, Ga.

The ultimate solution to the problem of mental illness lies in preventing its occurrence, believes the new director of the Southern Regional Education Board's program in mental health training and research.

P. 10-C

Dr. Wilfred Bloomberg, who recently assumed his duties on the board here, recognizes the need for more facilities and trained personnel for mentally ill patients. But he staunchly asserts that "prevention is worth a pound of cure."

Dr. William Hurder Dr. Wilfred Bloomberg

Dr. Bloomberg came to Atlanta from Boston, where he was chief of the psychiatry and neurology service at the Veterans Administration Hospital there. A graduate of Harvard medical school, Dr. Bloomberg received his graduate training at the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Boston Psychopathic Hospital. He also did graduate work at the University of Halle hospital in Germany.

IN HIS OPINION, everyone can improve the level of his mental health. He defined mental health as "the ability to reach one's potentialities in satisfactory relations with others, in gratification in doing one's job, in enjoying one's leisure and in satisfying family relations."

On the other hand, he said, mental illness is a state in which one is emotionally upset to the extent that ordinary activities are hampered to some degree.

He listed the following among needed preventive measures:

1. Elderly persons should be made to feel useful and wanted.

2. Adolescents should have sufficient recreational facilities to enable them to "let off steam" in a constructive way.

3. Court officials should become more aware of the part emotional factors can play in crime and domestic upsets.

4. Children should be brought up in an atmosphere of security, affection and love, because children reared in such surroundings are more likely to become secure who are not.

DR. BLOOMBERG emphasized that no one is immune to mental illness.

"Mental illness is the result of two factors," he said. "One's vulnerability and the stress exerted at a given time."

It is difficult to predict when stress will triumph, thus causing a breakdown. But acute mental illness has its symptoms. There are many, but generally, they constitute deviations from a person's normal behavior.

"Recognizing these symptoms is important, because help can be sought and, in many cases, a breakdown can be avoided," he said.

Sometimes this help consists of "just a little reassurance," Dr. Bloomberg said. Or perhaps the troubled person needs to seek advice from a trained and objective counselor.

THE BOARD'S PROGRAM, to be directed by Dr. Bloomberg, will deal with training personnel to work in the mental illness field and with research in the treatment and prevention of mental illness.

The program was organized upon the recommendation of the Southern Governors' Conference in 1954. The conference made its recommendation following a report on a study of mental health programs in 16 Southern states.

Dr. Bloomberg, his assistant, Dr. William Hurder, former head of the State Colony and Training School at Pineville, La., and others on the staff will work with the Southern Regional Council on Mental Health Training and Research.

SOUTHERNER GETS NO. 2 POST AT N.Y.U.

Times 4-7-57

New York

Dr. Ivey, Leader of Regional Education Board, Named Executive Vice President

Times 4-7-57

New York University has appointed Dr. John E. Ivey Jr., director of the Southern Regional Education Board, as its executive vice president, effective June 1.

Dr. Ivey will assume the position vacated in October when Dr. Carroll V. Newsom was elevated to the presidency of N. Y. U. The exectuive vice president will be second in line of authority and will be in general charge of the educational program.

Dr. Ivey has been in his present post since the Southern Regional Education Board was organized in 1949. He had become an instructor at the University of North Carolina in 1941 and was promoted to Professor of History in 1948.

He received one of two Eisenhower Exchange Fellowships in 1956 for six months of study abroad.

Dr. Ivey is a member of the American Society for Public Administration, the American Sociological Society and the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences.

Board Set up By Governors

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, April 6— The Southern Regional Education Board was established by the Gover,nors of sixteen southern and border states. It serves as a coordinating and administrative agency to strengthen the region's higher education facilities.

Under Dr. Ivy's direction the board has received about $5,500,000 in private grants to support study programs concerning graduate training methods throughout the country. With a system of interstate contracts, the board has promoted widespread student exchange and eliminated much unnecessary duplication of facilities.

A spokesman for the board pointed out today that the coordinating agency worked with the Legislatures of sixteen states and the directors of sixty-five colleges and universities. He added that "the board is an integral part of the region's long-range educational growth plans and a successor to Dr. Ivy will be chosen with that in mind."

The Ivey League

Time p. 88

It would have cost Louisiana State University $5,000,000 to build the school of veterinary medicine it so badly wanted, and L.S.U. had only $500,000 for the project. What could it do? The answer was easy: L.S.U. put its problem to an organization called the Southern Regional Education Board, arranged to send its future vets to campuses in other states. Had the problem come up only a few years before, L.S.U. would still be stumped.

Founded in 1948 by the Southern governors, the S.R.E.B. has been a major boon to higher education in Dixie. But the man most responsible for its success is its soft-spoken, diplomatic Director John Eli Ivey Jr. When the governors found him, Sociologist Ivey was only 28—the youngest full professor at the University of North Carolina. His mission with the S.R.E.B.: to fill the gaps in Southern higher education by getting states and campuses to share each other's facilities.

Cooperate, Coordinate. Sixteen states are now members of the S.R.E.B., and 65 colleges and universities have joined the Ivey league to cooperate in 30 different fields. Each year the board arranges to send hundreds of students whose home states do not have schools of medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine or social work to states that do. By such exchanges, says Ivey, the board not only relieves hard-pressed campuses of the necessity of adding facilities that would be duplicated elsewhere; it strengthens the graduate schools already in existence. For instance, Nashville's Meharry Medical College, a medical and dental school for Negroes, was in financial straits when the S.R.E.B. came along. Now, with about 60% of its students coming from outside the state, it is in business to stay.

By coordinating their work in other fields, the South's colleges and universities no longer have to spread themselves thin trying to cover the whole academic waterfront. In 1951 the South had no real graduate-nursing program. The University of North Carolina had a school for public-health nursing, but there was still no place to train psychiatric nurses, administrators, teachers and supervisors. Through the board's work, six campuses in six states now have nursing schools, each of which concentrates on one specialty.

False Notion. Though North Carolina-born Dr. Ivey has kept his board out of the integration controversy, he has sold educators and politicians alike on the idea that "there is nothing more isolationist than our colleges, and there is no greater barrier to sound development than the generally accepted notion of institutional sovereignty." The board's biggest job ahead: a survey of the South to see what will be needed to meet the coming onrush of students.

Unfortunately, John Ivey will not be around to see the survey through. This week New York University announced that it had snatched him for its No. 2 job, the executive vice-presidency. To the 16 governors who head the S.R.E.B. membership, it was a blow—which was probably the surest measure of Ivey's success. Said Florida's Governor Le Roy Collins somewhat ruefully: "He is one of the top young men in the nation. He has preached the sound doctrine that the South should use the manpower and brains of the South to improve the South, that we should stop the flow of our best-trained men and women to the North. And now I hope he hasn't deserted us entirely."

Educators Will Take Part In Meeting Today

Daily Herald
Tues. 4-23-57
Atlanta, Ga.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A number of Georgia educational, legislative and lay leaders will be prominently involved in the Southwide conference on post-high school education to open here today for three days.

From the Southern Regional Education Board, Dr. John E. Ivey, its director, will preside over the opening general session. Dr. Robert C. Anderson, SREB associate director, was chosen as conference director by the sponsoring President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School.

Other Georgia educators will include Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University who will have direct responsibilities in the conduct of the conference. And also Dr. C. V. Troup, president of Fort Valley State College who will be one of fourteen members of the president's committee from Georgia, to represent the region-at-large.

$810,000 CLASSROOM BUILDING FOR SOUTHERN U. PLANNED

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 7 — Southern University began its new year with the final completion of plans for a new $810,000 classroom building, which is part of a three- and one-half million dollar capital outlay to be initiated with in the next few days.

According to Dr. E. C. Harrison Coordinator of Instruction at Southern, the new classroom building will embrace some 60,000 square feet, housing 26 classrooms, offices for the College Dean, Registrar, 40 faculty members, the Audio Visual Aids Center and an allocation of over 8,000 square feet to Special Education and the Improvement Services.

This new building of modern design, which will be erected West of the Music Building, is in keeping with the already modern buildings that grace the campus, which overlooks the Mississippi River.

Other buildings on the drawing board are: 13,000 capacity stadium, Nursery School, Library addition and general campus improvements.

These structures are over and above an additional 4½ million dollar project which Southern will initiate as a result of an authorization of the State Board of Education for the institution to secure a loan to erect special facilities.

The loan will be used to build three dormitories for women three dormitories for men, a 30 unit family apartment building and a student union building.

Southern has some 4,178 resident students enrolled for the 1956-57 academic school year. University officials do not expect a decided increase for the second semester, which begins January 28.

ATTY. JAMES A. BURNES of Meridian, Miss., a member of the class of 1886 at Southern university, Baton Rouge, La., was a special guest of the university when Southern observed its 43rd annual Founders' day. The attorney gave a tape-recorded sketch of the University following its charter in 1880.

The Cameron Fund, now totaling almost a thousand dollars, has become a four year plan for constant contribution. Each girl is now assured of an education at Southern university. The tab will be taken by the faculty and student body.

Over and above financial contributions, several classes of which the Mouton girl is a member took on the task of clothing five children of the Mouton family. The ages of these children range from 9 months to 12 years.

Storm Victims 'Adopted' By Student Body

BATON ROUGE, La.—Three coeds at Southern university, whose families were victims of Hurricane Audrey, have been adopted by other members of the student body.

The three girls are Barbara LeBlanc, sophomore; Janette LeBlanc, freshman, and Geneva Mouton, special student. The girls are cousins.

Their families, who lived on joining properties, lost every thing but the wind swept land they have owned for generations. However, no lives were lost in the immediate families of the girls.

Miss Mouton lost nine members of her family, which included her father, two sisters, her brother's wife and three children and two nephews. Her mother and a brother are on the critical list.

14 Teachers Promoted

Salaries Take Big Jump at Southern Univ.

By B. J. COLE

BATON ROUGE, La.—Dr. F. G. Clark, president of Southern University, in announcing the promotion of some fourteen faculty members, stated that, "Southern is applying its total budget increase of some $267,000 for the 1957-58 session, plus an additional $270,000 slashed from operations, to increase salaries and welfare for faculty and staff."

Those receiving promotions in rank to professors were: Dr. Leon R. Roddy, biologist; Dr. E. E. Thorpe, historian; Dr. Theresa R. Love, director of the communications; Dr. Lena B. Morton; Dr. R. L. Owens, education; and, Dr. J. H. Jefferson, chemistry.

Dr. Morgan Brown, sociology, was promoted to associate professor.

Promotions to assistant professor went to Miss Dorothy J. Adams, laboratory school; W. D. Washington, English; LaJune McDonald, English; James S. Galloway, history; T. H. Goodin, English; John Ewell, mathematics, and Leslie Dawson, extended services.

THE ACTION put the salaries of teachers and staff at Southern as high as the budget permitted. An official stated that "No teacher at Southern will receive less than teachers of equal rank on the State Public School salary scale."

To do this, the operations budget, which includes major repairs, supplies, equipment and travel, was slashed some $270,000.

The half-million dollar adjusted increase will also help streamline the faculty and staff welfare program. Under a new policy of the State Board of Education, the University is presently negotiating a contract for group life and hospital insurance of which Southern will pay half of the premium. Added benefits to be included in the insurance embrace all eligible dependents of the insured.

Dr. Clark pointed out that "Southern will continue to put first the maintaining of an excellent faculty and staff in spite of the problem of competition with other colleges, industry and public school systems for qualified teachers."

SOUTHEASTERN BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

COLOR BAR FALLS AT WAKE FOREST SEMINARY

Daily World Sun. 6-9-57

Atlanta Ga.

CHICAGO—(ANP)— Southeastern Baptist Theological seminary, one of the South's best known schools, will let down its color bar to permit admittance of Negro students beginning in 1958, trustees of the school decided at a meeting here last week.

P 7

A resolution calling for the integration move was adopted by the 24 trustees at the Conrad Hilton hotel without a single dissenting vote. The trustees were here to attend the annual meeting of the Southern Baptist convention.

The resolution, as adopted, contained a provision, however. It stipulated that the seminary operate completely on its own property when Negro students are admitted. this was included because the seminary presently is holding chapel services in the Wake Forest Baptist Church, which it does not own. However, a chapel building on the campus is being renovated and readied for the beginning of the 1958-59 college year.

Acceptance of Negro students will bring the seminary in line with three other Southern Baptist institutions which already have flung their doors open to Negroes. They are Southern Baptist Theological seminary in Louisville, Ky., Southwestern Baptist Theological seminary in Fort Worth, Tex., and Golden Gate seminary in Los Angeles.

Southeastern seminary moved to Wake Forest in 1953 and took over the Wake Forest college campus in 1956. The latter institution moved to Winston-Salem.

FIRST WOMAN to be graduated from 260-year-old St. John's College in Annapolis is Miss Joan Elizabeth Cole, 22, of Baltimore. She is shown above with her academic procession partner and classmate, Harvey Wynn of Cleveland, Ohio, who was the highest ranking student. The graduation exercises on Sunday saw nine other seniors receive degrees.

Baltimorean Is First To Finish St. John's

Afro-American Sat. 6-29-57 P. 6

Baltimore, Md.

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

ANNAPOLIS — Joan Elizabeth Cole, 22, 307 E. 23rd St., who ranked third in the graduating class at Dunbar High School in 1953, was graduated from St. John's College in Annapolis on Sunday.

She was the first woman of her race to be graduated from the famed 260-year-old college.

St. John's has graduated three other students, all male, since it became an integrated college in 1948.

Martin Dyer, also a Dunbar honor graduate, finished in 1952. He is now a University of Maryland Law School student.

Everett Wilson, Salisbury, and Leon Simms, Annapolis, graduated in 1956. Mr. Wilson will enter the University of Pennsylvania to study medicine in September.

MISS COLE was one of a class of 11 students who received the bachelor of arts degree Sunday. She was also one of three Baltimoreans in the class.

She entered in 1953, the first year St. John's admitted women as students and stayed in the dormitory throughout her four years.

An hour before the graduation exercises, Miss Cole told this reporter:

"It has been a great experience for me and for my schoolmates as well. Many of them —especially those from the South—told me that ours has been an experience for which they are grateful.

"They expressed a change in attitudes," she revealed.

AS WE WALKED along the paths between ivy - covered buildings of the venerable college, it became obvious that Miss Cole had endeared herself to the small student body which comes from all parts of the United States and several foreign countries.

Our conversation was often interrupted with an exchange of pleasant greetings and congratulations from other students. Both men and women "scholars," as they are called there, as well as the tutors (professors) and persons from the community, extended her best wishes, expressed sorrow at parting.

Many times, the scholars recalled with Miss Cole the dance of Saturday night before saying: "Didn't we have a good time?"

Continuing to tell how she felt, Miss Cole said:

"I am sure now that I would not have been happy at any other school anywhere else. Every day has been wonderful and I will miss being here."

MISS COLE is the daughter of Mrs. Marjorie Brown Cole and Walter Franklin Cole. She is the oldest of nine children.

Her mother is employed at the Social Security Agency, while her father has been in the maintenance department of the Crown Cork and Seal Company for ten years.

Her sister, Nina, 21, finished Morgan State College on June 3. Barbara, 20, now Mrs. Joseph Haskins, has a seven-week-old daughter.

Walter, 18, is a sophomore at Morgan while Wayne, 16, is a senior at Poly. Warren, 15, is in the ninth grade at Dunbar High where Joan, Nina, Barbara and Walter were graduated.

Wendell, 12, is in the eighth grade at Clifton Park Junior High School while Gary, 10, is in the fifth grade at the Benjamin Banneker Elementary School No. 113.

Marsha, 9, the youngest of the family, is in the fourth grade at Banneker.

ST. JOHNS was founded as King William's School in the colonial days of our country.

Once a staid and strict college with a classical curriculum, it holds rank along with England's historic Oxford University, Harvard, Yale, the University of Paris and other world famed institutions of higher learning.

Today, St. John's is known world-wide for its Great Books Curriculum which was originated in 1937 by Springfellow Barr, L. Scott Buchanan and other great men in the educational world who are professors there.

Students are instructed by tutors in small classes of from eight to 15 students. Their method of learning is on the seminar basis while the greater part of their formal knowledge is gained through reading Homer, Plato, Aristole, Dante, Aquinas, Rousseau and others of classical literature.

JOAN STATED that her selection of the school was based on knowledge of the college gained while she was a junior at Dunbar.

"In the spring of 1950 I attended an open-house which St. John's accorded high school students.

"This visit brought about my first interest in the school. As I learned more about it, I realized that I did not wish to specialize in any one subject, therefore I knew this was the college for me."

Continuing, Miss Cole said:

"At the beginning of my second year, I won the full State Scholarship which paid room and board and tuition for four years."

"I applied for a scholarship so that I might be able to attend.

"I received the Deiches Scholarship Fund as well as the Delta Sigma Theta Sorori-Scholarship, the State Scholarship, and the National Negro Scholarship.

May Reopen Storer College

Star p.13 Pittsburgh Pa. Sat 4-27-57

HARPER'S FERRY, W. Va.—Storer College closed two years ago for lack of funds, may be reopened in the near future if an appeal for $200,000 in outright gifts is answered.

If the money is forthcoming it will be used to finance the 90-year-old buildings and grounds on the site of John Brown's fort. The drive is being conducted by the Storer College campaign fund with headquarters in Washington, D. C.

Storer College Opening Sought

Post & Times Herald p.15 Washington D.C. 4-28-57

By Milton Viorst
Staff Reporter

On the Harpers Ferry bluff that scans the Shenandoah's swirling juncture with the Potomac, Storer College seems again to be stirring, after two years of silence.

Since 1867 it had stood on that bluff above the gorge dedicated to higher education for young Negroes. When the Class of 1955 marched from the campus for the last time Storer closed its doors.

Ironically, it was the victim of the Supreme Court's school integration decision of 1954. When West Virginia agreed to accept Negroes into its all-white colleges, the State government withdrew Storer's $20,000 annual subsidy.

Though $20,000 is not much to run a college, even a small one, Storer's only other income was the return on a $100,000 endowment. Though the college was debt - free, there was no way to make ends meet.

Now a group of Storer's alumni and friends has undertaken a drive to reopon the school by September, 1958. Leading the campaign is the Rev. William H. Jernagin, pastor of the Mt. Carmel Baptist Church.

As a starter, $100,000 is needed, Rev. Jernagin says, to renovate the voiceless classrooms and dormitories that once accommodated a student body of 150 young men and women. There are still eight major, usable buildings on Storer's six-acre campus.

Among them is the engine house where the militant band led by John Brown, the fiery abolitionist, retreated in 1859 after the famous raid on the Harpers Ferry Arsenal.

Waiting to be swept clean and recommissioned is a science building, put up just 10 years ago with Federal funds, equipped with laboratories for, biology, physics, and chemistry.

Sagging but sturdy is the Curtis Memorial Church, built in 1892, which is Storer's chapel and monument to its Baptist origins.

It was the Baptists of New England who founded the college, immediately after the Civil War, to give the newly liberated slaves a start on education. The Rev. N. C. Brackett of the Freedmen's Bureau was its first president. His daughter still participates actively in Storer affairs while her husband, former Commissioner of Patents Thomas E. Robertson, is a member of the Board of Trustees.

The Baptist churches and the Federal Government, through the Freedmen's Bureau, saw Storer through its early years with large contributions of money. For the past several decades, it has been an independent, nonsectarian, secular, liberal arts college.

The present fund - raising campaign is focused on Storer alumni organizations in Washington, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Norfolk, Richmond, Harpers Ferry, and Charleston, W. Va. The goal for Washington, which has almost 200 Storer graduates, is $50,000.

According to Rev. Jernagin, however, the $100,000 for the buildings is only the beginning.

George W. Fleming, chairman of the city's drive, feels that if alumni can bring the $100,000 goal over the top, business and industry can be persuaded to give a hand.

By specializing in commercial and technical training, Storer can meet the greatest need of the Negro community and, at the same time, attract financial help from the large corporations which are short of skilled personnel, Fleming says.

Less ambitious leaders in the drive would limit the initial phase of Storer's restoration to a junior college. With a total of $200,000 these leaders say they could establish a liberal arts school for students to whom two years of college is enough, as well as for those who want to go on.

All contributions are being held in escrow at the Industrial Bank of Washington, Fleming said, so that they can be returned to their donors if the drive fails.

"But we feel pretty strongly about this and very confident," he declared. "In these days when there aren't enough facilities to go around, to keep Storer closed is a tragedy."

SOUTHEASTERN TALLADEGANS PRESENT CHECK TO PRESIDENT GRAY — Mrs. Roselyn M. Ware, of Birmingham, presents a check for $330 to President Arthur D. Gray of Talladega College as a contribution to the scholarship fund by the members of the alumni in this region. C. R. Hamilton, recently elected regional vice-president of the alumni association, looks on approvingly.

This was the climax feature of the three-day meet held in Pfeiffer Hall of Clark College. Talladega Alumni of Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and Tennessee assembled for a week of fellowship and discussion on "The Plight of The Private College in Light of Present Economic and Social Trends". Dr. James P. Brawley of Clark College led the discussion. Dr. Herman H. Long, of Nashville acted as moderator for the panel. Dean A. A. McPheeters and Dr. Gray contributed their experiences and views on the subject. Talladega College is a member of the UNCF and its alumni and friends pledge strong support of the fund.

This first Southeastern Regional meeting is the fourth to be established. The Fox Lake, Indiana Regional was the first followed by the Eastern, held at Vassar College Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and the Gulf Coast, at Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach. These Regionals are held each year to keep alive the interest in Alma Mater and rekindle fellowship among Talladegans and Friends. The attendance at all these meetings reportedly is growing.

The Atlanta Talladega Club was host for this meeting and all members extended themselves to entertain the visitors and to show to them the highlights of the great city.

Talladega President Lauds Record Of George Crawford

TALLADEGA, Ala., Oct. 20 — President Arthur D. Gray was guest speaker today at a testimonial luncheon given by the mayor and citizens of New Haven, Conn., in honor of the 80th birthday of Attorney George W. Crawford. The luncheon was held at the Taft Hotel.

Attorney Crawford is a graduate of Talladega College in the class of 1900. He served for 49 years as an active member of the Trustee Board of the College. He is currently serving as corporation counsel for the city of New Haven.

The testimonial purse will be given to Talladega College. Excerpts from Dr. Gray's address follow: "Throughout the 91 years of its life Talladega College has been engaged in the task of training literate, humane persons—willing and capable of assuming enlightened personal responsibility in citizenship. Nowhere has this historic objective met with fuller realization than in the life of Attorney George W. Crawford. For over 60 of the 80 years he has been intimately associated with the college—as student, alumnus and trustee. His record of service on the trustee board covers a span of 49 years plus four additional years as trustee emeritus.

Significantly, his service has not just been in length of years but in quality of participation. Our plant expansion, endowment extension and academic growth have all been aided through his enlightened leadership.

This testimonial is given not only in honor him for his inumerable contributions to society but to reaffirm our faith and belief in the indispensability of men of good will in the solution of the problems which confront us at home and abroad.

PROFESSOR GIVES RECITAL

The Department of Music of Talladega College will present Thomas J. Flagg, pianist, in a recital Sunday, Oct. 27, at 7:30 p.m. in De Forrest Chapel.

Flagg has won the acclaim of music critics in Detroit and Washington. A graduate of Howard University and the Julliard School, she is on the staff of the Department of Music at Talladega College. The public is invited.

FOUNDER'S DAY NOV. 3

Talladega College will observe Founder's Day Nov. 3 with a service that includes an address by President Luther H. Foster of Tuskegee Institute and a historical narration presented by senior class president Richard English as narrator and College Choir. The program is to be held in DeForest Chapel at 2 p.m.

Talladega Leaders Discuss Role Of Schools, Colleges

Advertiser Mon. 3-4-57 Montgomery Ala.

TALLADEGA, March 3—About 20 high school principals of the Talladega area together with faculty representatives from some of the schools met with Talladega College faculty March 2 on the college campus.

"Bridging the Gap between High Schools and Colleges" was the theme promoted by principals in their effort to articulate high school and college programs.

Two panels—a group of high school seniors and a group of college freshmen selected from the schools represented shared in the Saturday morning discussion.

ATTEND "Y" CONFERENCES

Carolyn Tolbert, sophomore from Charleston, S. C. attended the Alabama-Georgia Student YWCA Area meeting. This meeting was held at Spelman College, Atlanta. Miss Tolbert is president of the YWCA at Talladega.

Representing Talladega at the annual Southern Area Council of the YMCA held in Atlanta Feb. 22-24 were Wilbur Williams, St. Petersburg, Fla., president of the local "Y," Leonard Smith, South Bend, Ind., and Dr. John R. Bross, chapter adviser. Dr. Bross was elected adviser to the executive committee of the Southern Area Council for 1957-58.

The purpose of the interracial conference was to plan "Y" policies for the encoming year; and through means of workshops, hearing groups, etc., criteria were set up for accredited campus chapters which is now essential for member-shop, and discussions were had concerning the contemporary problems of Human and Race Relations.

AKA SPEAKER

Miss Holloway, a Junior at Talladega College, has an important role in the current Little Theatre production, Among Ourselves, which appears during March in Indianapolis, Chicago and Detroit.

A professionally smooth cast of actors from the Talladega College Little Theatre is taking an interracial drama to stages in Indianapolis (March 8), Chicago (March 10), and Detroit (March 13).

The two act play, Among Ourselves, was written by Joanna Roos, actress cast in the new Tennessee Williams play and is set in a northern town, in the present time.

Talladega, Fisk Co-operate In New Educational Program

Globe and Independent Nashville, Tenn.

Talladega College, one of the 23 participating colleges in the Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program, will participate in a program which will award more than $200,000 in scholarship aid to high school students.

Awards will be allocated on the basis of scores made on the Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination, to be given in 162 high schools Feb. 23 and March 8.

Talladega College will be responsible for administering this scholarship examination to hgh school students at Tuscaloosa, Gadsden, Birmingham, Bessmer, Fairfield, Huntsville, Athens, Decatur, Sheffield, and Talladega, Alabama.

The examination program was organized six years ago to help eliminate some of the duplication of examinations for evaluation of high school seniors. The participating colleges use the test results as one of the criteria for determining their scholarship awards, and several of them require all candidates for admission to take the examination.

Three of the colleges, Fisk, Morehouse and Talladega, have an early entrants program, and students in the 10th and 11th grades are permitted to take the examination for entrance to these three institutions. All of the cooperating colleges are members of the United Negro College Fund and are accredited by their regional associations.

The Cooperative Intercollegiate Examination Program maintains a liason office at Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee.

Talladega Has Fund Of $250,000 To Give Deserving Students

Globe Independent Nashville, Tenn. Jan. 4-5-57

Talladega College has started a new program of scholarship aid for students. This year more than one hundred fifty thousand dollars ($150.000.00), will be distributed for the purpose of helping deserving students get a college education. Much of this money will go to high school seniors, many of whom will receive full tuition scholarships for four years of college work (value $1.360).

The college recognizes the growing need for college trained men and women. It also recognizes that the groups which it serves are in general lacking in financial resources. In order to develop some of the academic potentials which lie in these groups, the college is making these awards available. In granting the scholarships, great consideration will be given to character and academic achievement.

TENNESSEE EVENING LAW SCHOOL

Institution Holding Classes In Colored Y. M. C. A. Building

Globe Fri. 7-5-57 P.1

Nashville, Tenn.

Law School Has Interracial Faculty And Strong Course Of Study; Does Not Discriminate Regarding Race Of Its Students; Sets Sept. 17 As Opening Date For 1957-'58 School Year; Is Latest Venture Sponsored By Dr. H. A. Boyd And Friends

The most recent decison of Publisher Henry Allen Boyd to sponsor a project of primary need for his race in particular and the public in general, quite a number of which he has, in his lifetime been a sponsor, is the "Tennessee Evening Law School."

The law school is located in the colored YMCA Building and has an interacial Board of Trustees.

Last week Mose J. Davie, the business manager of the law school furnished the Globe a copy of the school's catalogue for next year with some other interesting data.

Mr. Davie is one of the best known and most popular leaders of the "younger generation," and has paid the price to qualify himself for effective leadership, thus setting a good example for his contemporaries

He went back to school after finishing his army career in World War II, graduated with the bachelor degree and later acquired the Master's degree. He is an alumnus of Tennessee A&I State University. It pleased Dr. Boyd and the other trustees of the Tennessee Evening Law School to assign Mr. Davie to the duties of business manager of the new law school. They seem to be enthusiastic over the efficient way he has handled the law school's affairs.

The following are some facts about the law school:

History of the School

The Tennessee Evening Law School is a non-profit educational institution, organized and incorporated under the laws of the state of Tennessee, and empowered to award the degree of Bachelor of Law (LL.B) upon successful completion of the four year course provided. The school is operated and managed by the Board of Trustees, presently composed of the following members:

Dr. Henry Allen Boyd, President
Neill S. Brown
Z. Alexander Looby
W. D. Hawkins, Jr. Sec.-Treas
Donald L. Washburn
Reverend J. T. Patton
Richard N. Satterfield

Course of Study

In order to acquire the degree of Bachelor of Science in law from this school it is required that a four year course of study must be completed. Classes are held each Tuesday and Thursday evening from 6:30 p.m., to 9:30 p.m. Students are required to attend classes two evenings each week. The course of study complies with the rules of the Supreme Court and the Board of Law Examiners of the state of Tennessee.

Applicants must have completed successfully three years of approved college credit at the time of enrollment. Applicants will be given credit for subjects completed at other Law Schools provided a transcript is furnished. All applicants must furnish a transcript of previous college credit or law credit within thirty (30) days after they are accepted for enrollment. Special students in limited numbers may be admitted upon approval of Dean. Classes will begin September 17, 1957 and will continue through June 18, 1958 with the following Holidays:

Thanksgiving: Thursday, November 28, 1957

Christmas: Thursday, December 26, 1957 through Tuesday, December 31, 1957

Summer Vacation, June 19, 1958 through September 15, 1958

Tuition and Fees

Tuition will be $250.00 per school year, payable at the time of registration or $25.00 at the time of registration and $25.00 on the first Tuesday in each of the succeeding nine months. The books will cost approximately $50.00 per year new, and they may be purchased at cost from the school or by the students at any place they desire. A fee of $5.00 will be charged to cover the expense of a Diploma upon graduation. For a special examinations, a fee of $5.00 will be charged. No charges will be made other than these specified.

This institution has and maintains a policy for the refund of the unused portion of tuition, fees, and other charges in the event the veteran fails to enter the course or withdraws or is discontinued therefrom at any time prior to completion therefore for any reason, and such polivy also provides that the amount charged to the veteran for tuition, fees and other charges for a portion of the course shall not exceed the approximtae prorata portion of the total charge for tuition, fees and other charges that the length of the completed portion of the course bears to its total length.

Library And Class Rooms

The school library of essential legal works will be available for students to use at all reasonable hours. It is located in Room 116, at 341 Fourth Avenue, North. Classrooms are located in Rooms 115 and 116.

Text Books

All textbooks will be purchased by the individual student. A supply will be made available by the school upon an order from the student. These books must be paid for in advance before order will be mailed to the publishing company. All other supplies, such as pencils, note books, paper etc., will be furnished by each student.

Enrollment Blanks

Applicants who desire blanks for enrollment should communicate with Mose J. Davie, Business Manager, 1304 Villa Place, Nashville, Tenn., Telephone BRoadway 7-5209 or office, ALphine 6-3239.

For Further information See

Neill S. Brown, Third National Bank Building, telephone ALphine 4-9391.

Rules and Regulations

The policy of the school is to comply with the rules and regulations of the State Department of Education as to leave, absence, class cuts, make-up work, tardiness and interruptions for unsatisfactory attendance. Students absent two (2) nights in a calendar month will be interrupted. In other words, a student is allowed only one absence a calendar month. Authorized absences occur when a student is prevented from attending because of personal sickness, sickness in his immediate family, death in the family, or on accident. Such absences must be reported to the Dean in writing or they will not be excused.

A student may not re-enroll for a period of thirty days for any other reason.

If a student is interrupted twice in a six-month period, he cannot re-enter for a period of sixty days if either of the interruptions was caused by one unauthorized absence He can be re-entered after second interruption if the student and one other person will certify that second interruption was caused by sickness or death in the immediate family, provided he can be integrated into a class, in a training status comparable to the training status at the time his training was interrupted.

Students interrupted for unsatisfactory progress cannot be re-entered in the same course.

Students interrupted for misconduct cannot be re-entered for a period of at least 45 days. If a student is interrupted two times for this reason such student cannot re-enter in the school.

The school has a tardiness policy, and a student will be charged one hour absence for each hour or fractional part of an hour tardy. The actual time the student is in school must be shown on school records.

A student interrupted three (3) time sin a nine-months period of enrollment cannot be re-enrolled in the school if any interruption was not authorized, and only when two of the interruptions are certified by the veteran and some other person that interruption was caused by sickness or death in the immediate family.

No leave is granted. No class cuts are authorized.

With reference to make-up work, the school's only policy is that students must pass the examinations before being given credit.

Examinations And Grades

At the conclusion of each subject, the instructor will give a written examination. The following system of grades is in use:

90 to 100 A
80 to 89 B
70 to 79 C (passing)
60 to 69 D (Condition)
Under 60 Failure

Students failing any subject must take the subject again, if in the opinion of the instructor this should be done.

Students conditioned in three or more subjects will be dismissed and those dismissed are not re-entered.

Progress records are maintained by the school and a record of progress is furnished each student at the end of each school year and when full course is completed and sooner when requested by student in writing.

Conduct of Students

This school operates on the honor system, and any conduct contrary to the honor system will be grounds for expulsion by the faculty committee, which shall be composed of the Dean and the active faculty.

I certify that the contents of this Catalogue are correct in content and policy.

NASHVILLE — With two new dormitories opening September 1, and all others completely renovated and redecorated—including an innerespring mattress for each bed—Tennessee State university is rady to campus house all students.

14e(1)

The announcements was made last week by the university's progressive president, Dr. W. S. Davis, whose dream to house all students on the campus has become a reality.

This is the first time in the history of the school that all students seeking admission will have campus housing available to them.

MILLION DOLLARS

The new dormitories—one for girls and one for boys—were designed by McKissack & McKissack, architects. They are the modern conventional type fire proof structures, built of brick and cut Indiana limestone.

More than a million dollars was spent on the structures alone. Comparable furniture and furnishings will add distinctive qualities of functional beauty, while capturing for the students living in these dormitories a homelike atmosphere.

The youngest of the Land-Grant colleges and universities, Tennessee State continues to gain national and international recognition in may facets of its work. Its present building program is a part of an overall design of expansion to give greater service.

THIS IS HOW Tennessee A&I State university's 2 new million dollar dormitories will look when Sept. 1 rolls around and the students begin trickling back to school. Shown at top is the new dormitory for boys. Below is the one for girls. With the completion of these two quarters, the college will be able to house all of its students on the campus for the first time in its history. Beautiful landscaping will add to the allure of the place. The buildings were designed by McKissack and McKissack, architects.

DIRECTS CONCERT BAND

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Paul Meacham, senior music major at Tennessee State, scored last week when he directed the university's 65-piece concert band during its annual presentation in "The Flying Dutchman Overture," by Wagner.

A native of Tuscaloosa, Ala., Mr. Meacham has been student director of Tennessee State's marching and concert bands for the past two years.

ASSISTANT — W. Duke Cox II, Tennessee State University's assistant professor of speech and drama, has begun work in the Berea (Ky.) College outdoor theatre last week as a technical assistant.

Salute to Tenn. State

Courier 1957

EARLY LAST FALL, President Walter S. Davis of Tennessee A. and I. State University in Nashville, sat at his big dining room table enjoying a choice cut of fish and talking about the future of the school.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

"This should be our year," he said. He was on the subject of football at that moment. "We've got everything a team should have, including depth. I don't see how anyone can stop us."

Sat 4-27-57

No one did. Tennessee State went on to win two football titles in 1956. They were champions of the Midwest Athletic Association and grabbed the national title after toppling mighty Florida A. and M. in the Orange Blossom Classic.

Apparently, Tennessee had depth in basketball and track, too, because just a few weeks ago the Tennesseans won the Women's Amateur Athletic Union Track and Field championship and copped the National Intercollegiate Athletic title in basketball.

The entire personnel of Tennessee State deserves a noble salute.

Athletics is a big factor at the university, but by no means the major one. Stress is being placed on higher educational standards and new buildings. Just this week, Dr. Davis announced that two new, ultra-modern dormitories will be ready next September, one for boys and the other for girls. "We'll be able to house all of our out-of-town students next fall," he said.

The aggressive president is now dreaming up an amphi-theatre for the campus. State's agriculture and engineering facilities are among the best in the country. Its library and health buildings are imposing structures. And, with all of this, Dr. Davis still is making plans for a bigger campus.

Tenn. State Awards 24 Master's Degrees

NASHVILLE — Analyzing the role key 3-D leadership must play in today's world, Dr. Harold R. W. Benjamin of Peabody College here delivered the commencement address at Tennessee State University.

The baccalaureate speaker, Dr. W. O. Carrington, pastor of First AME Zion Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., had already warned the graduating classes of "the high cost of low living." He pointed out in his discussion of courageous religion that "while good living—high living—is a costly thing, low living is costlier."

"If the modern world moves into a global Golden Age instead of falling to destruction," said Dr. Benjamin, "it will be because a key leadership has arisen throughout the world." Key leadership, he continued, must be one whose members are no longer willing to play merely the ordinary roles of ordinary times. These members will construct new roles for themselves . . . look for extraordinary jobs to be done, and . . . will carry out those jobs in extraordinary fashion.

The 3-D leadership role—one of breadth, length and height—which Dr. Benjamin charged the graduating classes to play is "not a safe one," he said, "but a role of broad, far-reaching, high meaning that carries with it the potential of crucial service to all the people of this country and all the people of the world. For these peoples everywhere are on the move. . . . If you and I would serve as their outriders, we must mount and move forward."

As a part of its 25th reunion activities, the Class of 1932 presented to President W. S. Davis a sterling tea service for the new women's dormitory to open September 1. George W. Brooks, president of the class in 1932 and now principal of Burt High School, Clarksville, Tenn., made the presentation.

The university awarded 262 degrees—24 master's and 238 bachelors.

SPEAKER AND THE PRESIDENT—In the line of march at Tennessee State University's 45th annual commencement last week were Dr. Harold R. W. Benjamin of Peabody College for Teachers, guest speaker, and President W. S. Davis.

Tennessee State Adds Five Doctors; Enrollment Up

Courier Section Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat 7-6-57

NASHVILLE—Five doctors have been added to the summer school faculty at Tennessee State University, Dr. A. V. Boswell, vice president, said as he announced an increased summer enrollment.

With its largest first session enrollment in the institution's history, Tennessee State has strengthened its summer faculty. Coming to the school of education faculty are Dr. Charles U. DeBerry of Elizabethtown, N. C., education administration; Dr. A. Anderson Dumas, Washington, D. C., education; Dr. Frank A. Tolliver, Asheville, N. C., education administration; Dr. Charles Rochelle, Evansville, Ind., education, and Dr. S. O. Roberts, Nashville, psychology.

TENNESSEE FIRST—When Mrs. Anna Briggs Gilbreath received her master's degree in industrial education at Tennessee State University, June 3, she became the first woman in the history of the school to earn such a degree. With her following the commencement exercises are, left to right: Ruby Briggs, a sister; T. U. Briggs, her father; Dr. James A. Parsons, chairman of the School of Engineering's interim committee, and S. E. Gilbreath, her husband.

FOR TEA TIME—When the new million-dollar dormitories open at Tennessee State University in September, this sterling tea service being presented at commencement to President W. S. Davis (right) will enhance the gracious living students will enjoy in the women's dorm. A gift from the class of '32 celebrating its 25th anniversary, the presentation was made by the class president, Tennessee Education Congress' executive secretary George W. Brooks of Clarksville.

Brainy Belle—Anita Louise Roberts, all of 19 years old, is the only female in Tennessee State University's School of Engineering. The lass chose the vocation during her high school days in Chattanooga, Tenn. She is majoring in metalurgical engineering.

Career Conference Speaker Holds "Progress Is Will Of God," In Admonition To Large Audience Of Students; Who Say 1957 Meeting Was "Best Yet" Of Series Held

By MABEL B. CROOKS

14 e 0

"Change is inevitable; progress is the will of God . . . . I challenge you to be ready," Dr. John W. Davis told a capacity audience last week at Tennessee State University.

Cooperatively sponsored with the National Urban League and its locals, this was the university's sixth in a series of career conferences designed to assist students in developing the necessary personal, technical, and professional skills essential for careers in commerce and industry, Government and the professions, and to help them gain a clearer understanding of labor relations in these careers. The Urban League has been a prime factor in each of these conferences, William V. Harper, the university's coordinator of industrial relations is the director.

"This was the best yet," said seniors, many of whom had been involved in three of the career conferences. "Charting the Course" was the general theme. Freshmen and sophomores had three class group sessions built around decisions for career and choosing a vocation respectively; while the junior-senion group went into three discussion periods of specific specialized fields. There were also individual conferences where job interviews were held.

The venerable Dr. Davis, talent study director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, New York City, was one of the galaxy of speakers along with 131 consultants from large and small firms, Government, and the professions who participated in the three-day meet. As closing session speaker, he gave the significance of the conference, picturing for students the 42,000 job categories from which they may choose and prepare to enter. "But, you have got to have a skill that you can sell," he said.

In re-emphasizing the importance of education, training and their attributes which must be possessed in order to maintain a place in the world today and tomorrow, he pointed out that regardless of what we hear, and what many people think, integration is coming. . . . . America is not going backward . . . In all of this confusion and strife the question is whether or not we are going to lose this democracy . . . . America is not going to lose . . . . she is going forward. . . . You must prepare for the change which will envolve in the new world."

"Your most prized possessions are your God-given abilities," Chicago's C. Rodger Wilson, supervisor, service office, Illinois State Employment Services and national president, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, keynote speaker told the conference. "Improved by training, orientated by social refinement, and motivated by the necessity for material well-being, abilities of a kind and a quality find a universal market. I admonish you to chart your courses studiously and well," he continued.

Said A. Maceo Walker, president, Universal life Insurance Company, Memphis, Tenn., who was speaker for the faculty-consultant dinner session, "we are looking for men who are willing to pay the price in study and solid work experience . . . . In any progress, we must be willing to pay the price . . . the Student Beating Probed At A. And I. University

Atlanta, Ga.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.— (INS)—The President of A & I State College said Wednesday an Executive Committee was investigating a student beating, which touched off a mass demonstration of more than 300 students in the Institution.

Dr. W. D. Davis said he was convinced the matter was "settled," and "neither this guard nor any other guard, will ever beat up one of our students again."

Campus guard Riley Walton, admitted striking Charles McKinney, because, he said, McKinney refused to allow him to escort a coed to the dorm where he intended to report her for violating campus regulations.

"I'm sorry I had to hit him," he said after being accused of striking the senior, "But there wasn't anything else I could do."

The students marched to the auditorium in protest today, where they were told by the faculty that the matter was being brought before the president by a grievance committee.

6 of State colleges in Tennessee called on to drop bars

14e(1)

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Desegregation of six of Tennessee's state operated colleges next September was approved Thursday by the State Board of Education.

Courier

The only state - financed institution of higher learning not affected by the action was the University of Tennessee, which is controlled by a separate board.

Baltimore

Acting under the authority granted by the 1957 legislature, the State Board of Education Thursday empowered each college under its control to establish minimum requirements for admitting new students. The "selective devises" shall be used to limit enrollment to the capacity of the institutions and "shall apply equally to all prospective students."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Segregation in six Tennessee state colleges was put to an end by the state board of education. It becomes effective next fall.

14e(1)

The board unanimously adopted a resolution, which although failing to mention integration or segregation, now makes it mandatory for the colleges to accept all on an equal academic level.

The schools affected are Memphis State, Austin Peay, East Tennessee, Tennessee A & I university, Middle Tennessee State and Tennessee Tech.

The clause that nails down the certainty of de-segregation in 1958 reads in part:

"The state board of education shall authorize the admission of all qualified applicants who meet the entrance requirements of the respective colleges and universities."

Another clause which gives the colleges the right to limit their enrollment because of overcrowding and other reasonable circumstances," qualifies that all chosing devices "shall apply equally to all prospective students.

The board had submitted a plan for gradual integration last year but it was only recently rejected by federal courts. It would have provided for year by year admission of Negroes in each class level.

Howard Warf, chairman of the committee that drew up the resolution, said he thought it was a "good" resolution — "the best we could do under the circumstances."

The Board's action came following a report made by committees named to study integration and admission requirements.

There was no discussion at Friday's meeting of the committee report, submitted by chairman, J. Howard Warf. The plan submitted was reported decided upon in the Board's earlier meeting, held behind closed doors.

Tennessee Plans Integration for 6 Colleges in '58

Consolidation, Atlanta, Ga
11-9-57 - p. 1

Ventured used

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 8 (AP)—The State Board of Education in effect ended segregation in the six colleges under its control today, effective next fall.

The Board's action came after committees named to study integration and admission requirements presented a single report. The resolution, adopted unanimously, said in part:

"The State Board of Education shall authorize the admission of all qualified applicants who meet the entrance requirements of the respective colleges and universities, effective at the beginning of the fall term, 1958."

NO DISCUSSION

There was no discussion, at today's open meeting, of the committee report, submitted by J. Howard Warf of Hohenwald, committee chairman. The plan obviously had been decided upon in the Board's earlier informal, closed door meetings.

The resolution said that when any college becomes overcrowded, or reaches its financial limit, it may set up special tests and screening programs to limit the number of students accepted.

Those tests would apply to all applicants alike, and would have to be approved by the Board.

NO DIRECT MENTION

There was no direct mention of segregation or integration in the resolution.

The resolution said the program of tests would be aimed at keeping out applicants unable to do college level work, to make room for those who can.

The Board also adopted a set of minimum entrance requirements submitted by the Presidents Council, composed of the heads of the colleges under the Board's jurisdiction.

Those requirements are essentially the same as those now in effect.

U. OF T. UNAFFECTED

Today's action does not affect the University of Tennessee, which operates under its own board of trustees and is independent of the Board of Education.

A previous plan for gradual integration at Memphis State University has been rejected by the federal courts. It provided for year-by-year admission of Negroes in each class, starting at the graduate level.

Two state colleges, Austin Peay at Clarksville and East Tennessee State at Johnson City, already have had Negro graduate students.

In addition to Memphis State, Austin Peay and East Tennessee, the Board has jurisdiction over Tennessee A and I State University at Nashville, Middle Tennessee State at Murfreesboro and Tennessee Tech at Cookeville.

Dr. DAVIS RELAXES ON HIS CATTLE RANCH — Dr. W. S. Davis, president, Tennessee A & I State university, finds the many activities of his recently acquired cattle ranch excellent for keeping physically and mentally fit for his job as university president. He spends such spare time as a university president can squeeze into a very busy schedule doing farm chores in addition to hunting and fishing. His farm and adjacent TVA waters afford excellent hunting and fishing. In the above picture, Dr. Davis relaxes on the gate of his 240-acre cattle ranch and points to his herd of pure bred Hereford cattle. He will expand his herd to 100 breeding cows. The 240-acres include 100 acres of pasture, 75 acres of forestry, and 65 additional acres that can be used for grain or for feeding and protecting wildlife. The ranch was named "Riverview Acres" in keeping with its location on the Cumberland River section of the TVA. The ranch also overlooks the Cheatham Dam and electric plant. The giant lake can be seen in the background. Dr. Davis was born and reared on a Mississippi plantation which he and his family still own and operate. He holds the Ph. D. in agriculture from Cornell University, and feels, "the acquisition of my new cattle ranch was the coming true of a dream of long standing."

Not long ago Texas College, the CME school at Tyler, Texas, celebrated its 62nd anniversary. While the historical picture which was unfolded was truly pride-inspiring, the keynote of the anniversary seemed to rest upon looking "forward to a bright tomorrow". Dr D R Glass himself, who has guided the institution during its last most successful quarter of a century, indicated that he was looking forward to building a scholarship and loan fund, to help worthy boys and girls become good American citizens.

We should never lose sight of the glorious work of these pioneer institutions. Nor should we ever imagine that their greatest service has been in the past. On the foundation of the past, their greatest opportunities lie ahead in the future.

CINCINNATI, Ohio—Mrs. Mabel L. Smith, retired teacher, was invited to Texas College in Tyler, Tex., to receive the Alumni Achievement Award for being a civic, educational and religious leader. Mrs. Smith was the first high school graduate of Texas College, when her uncle, D. C. Potts, was president.

P.17

There was a week of celebration honoring Dr. Potts. Many of the old students were in attendance, among them Rev. Mr. Fowler, chaplain; Prof. M. B. Davis, Jacksonville; John Hunter, Dallas; William Pentecost, oil magnate of Lilgour; Stanton Reid of Chicago and Mrs. Pearl Robinette of Tyler.

DR. D. R. GLASS, present president, received an award of 25 years of administration. Mrs. Smith gave the chief address in the chapel after a week of celebration for honored alumni.

Mrs. Smith was overwhelmed not only with Texas hospitality but with the many messages, corsages, baskets of flowers and telegrams from Cincinnati and Covington friends.

DURING THE three weeks in hospitable Texas, Mrs. Smith was entertained handsomely by Dr. and Mrs. Frank Williams, Mrs. Ted Hunter and Mrs. Talliferro of Tyler, guest of Principal Jones of the Jacksonville High School, the Pentecosts of Kilgour, entertained by Dr. and Mrs M. Edwards of Hawkins, Tex.

For four days, she was and dined in Dallas as the guest of the Clinton Hyneses, also in Fort Worth where her hostesses were Mrs. Ruth White Lewis and others. Mrs. Velma Thomas hostessed a gorgeous Mardi Gras party in her honor. Other hostesses there were Mrs. U. S. Hammond and Mrs. Velma Thomas. Dr. and Mrs. Williams drove her to Longview, Tex., for the Medical Association, where she was the guest of Dr. and Mrs. D. R. Glass.

TSU Student Shot By Campus Watchman

Informer Sat. 3-30-57

Houston, Texas

HOUSTON -- Ralph A Jackson, a senior Texas Southern University student, was shot in the hand by John A White, a campus night-watchman, Friday night at approximately 12:15. The shooting occurred on the campus in the Student Union area.

Mr Jackson, whose home is in San Angelo, said that Mr White shot him as he raised his hand to ward off a blow.

The watchman, on the other hand, stated that the shot was fired as Mr Jackson advanced toward him after threatening to take his gun. He said he pulled the gun thinking he could frighten the student into going to talk to Mrs King, the supervisor of the women's dormitory. The watchman accused Mr Jackson of peping through a window in the women's dormitory.

Mr Jackson, at the Houston Negro Hospital, told The Informer, that he was stopped on the campus by Mr White as he was returning home from work. He alleges that the watchman pulled a gun and told him that he could be taken dead or alive.

"He waved the gun in front of me and when I threw up my left hand to protect my head from the lick, he shot me in the hand," Mr Jackson stated.

The watchman, who claims that Mr Jackson used abusive language, said that when the student was taken to the women's dormitory office after being injured, he (Mr White) was again cursed and called a fool in the presence of Mrs Rhodes who was on duty in the dormitory.

University officials told The Informer Monday an investigation is still going on and no definite action has been taken.

Report on 82-Nation Survey Suggests Government Aid In a World Campaign

Thurs. 3-7-57

New York

By WAYNE PHILLIPS

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., March 6—Justice Philip Halpern outlined here today United Nations plans to combat discrimination in education.

Justice Halpern, an associate justice of the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court, is the United States expert on the United Nations Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

The subcommission has been meeting here for three weeks, and plans to end its work this week. It is an arm of the Commission on Human Rights of the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

This week it completed work on a report on discrimination in education in eighty-two countries and sent the report, with suggestions for action, to the Commission on Human Rights. It called for an international campaign to combat discrimination in education arising from race, religion, nationality and sex.

Government Measures Urged

It recommended that national and local governments be asked to support the campaign with all legislative, administrative and financial steps, including efforts "to combat propaganda which constitutes an incitement to discrimination."

To finance the international campaign, it called for the use of "as high a proportion as possible" of the funds available to the Economic and Social Council and the funds intended to promote the economic development of underdeveloped countries.

Justice Halpern praised the report, which was prepared by Charles D. Ammoun of Lebanon. The justice called it "a step forward in international studies" because it established "the right to make statements critical of governments."

In preparing the report Mr. Ammoun was not authorized to take testimony or oral statements from persons other than representatives of recognized non-governmental bodies, Justice Halpern went on. But from these organizations Mr. Ammoun had a wealth of information critical of government policies, the justice added.

New York State Law Cited

One purpose of the report is to provide an exchange of information on successful techniques in eliminating discrimination in education, the justice explained. The New York State Education Practices Act is regarded as a model in this regard, he said.

He quoted a statement by Theron A. Johnson, administrator of that act, that during the nine years it had been in effect the quota system had been completely eliminated from higher education.

Mr. Ammoun "presented fairly" the situation in the United States, and particularly the South, regarding racial discrimination in education, Justice Halpern said. The report contrasted the United States, which it said was moving away from such discrimination, with South Africa, where it was said to be rigidly maintained.

The subcommission also has under way studies of discrimination based on religion and political beliefs, and is supporting a study by the International Labor Organization of discrimination in employment. The study in the field of religion stems from a proposal Justice Halpern made to the subcommission in 1955.

Even Professors Are Materialists

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

James H. Newman, interim president of the University of Alabama, repeated last week the prediction of a critical loss of faculty members because of low salaries.

Mon. 7-8-57

Alabama colleges, he said, are unable to compete with any Southern state — not to mention small eastern colleges which are paying professors $13,000 a year — with the possible exception of Mississippi.

P. 4-A

There are now 30 vacancies at the University and more expected, Newman said. The problem is a simple one: salaries in Alabama colleges are too low to hold some of the more competent professors. Some will stick around for a while, hoping next year will be better, but in the end even the academic mind succumbs to the love of gold.

Most of those who have already joined the exodus will make $2,000 a year more. Many of those who grudgingly remain watch graduating seniors recruited at starting salaries higher than a professor's. The damage will accumulate over the years to come, with resulting damage to state colleges and universities. The report of the legislative Subcommittee on Financing Education, confirming the "deteriorating faculty salary situation," stated the alternatives:

> In the absence of increased appropriations for current operations, the institutions of higher education face the following alternatives: (a) They may continue current admissions policies with continued enrollment increases, resulting in a watered-down education for the student. (b) They may increase fees, thereby providing more money for faculty salaries and other current operating costs. (c) They may limit enrollments by pursuing a policy of restrictive admissions or selective retentions.

At this time, of course, Alabama could hardly meet the $13,000 offered by small eastern schools like Swarthmore or Williams College. But that wouldn't be necessary. Newman said:

"We could keep most of our professors if we could offer them only a part of the increase they can get other places."

Many of them would like to remain in Alabama, but — even allowing for some understandable overstatement — increasing numbers of them are likely to look to greener pastures. As a result, said Newman: "We face the destruction of a laboriously and costly established system."

That in itself would be tragic. But the consequences of this weakening of our colleges and universities would go far beyond the city limits of Tuscaloosa, Auburn and the other college towns.

The state is moving into a period of growth and industrialization which is all but unlimited. But only the colleges can turn out the engineers, scientists and other trained men and women needed.

As the demands of more, better trained graduates go up, the supply will be going in the opposite direction — unless the threatened faculty exodus is checked.

ALABAMA UNIVERSITY PICKS NEW PRESIDENT

Commercial Appeal

Dr. Rose Of Transylvania Is Named By Trustees

Fri. 9-6-57 Memphis, Tenn.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 5. — (UP) — Dr. Frank A. Rose, president of Transylvania College at Lexington, Ky., was elected president of the University of Alabama Thursday.

The university board of trustees made the announcement at a special meeting Thursday. The appointment is effective immediately.

P. 12

Dr. Rose will succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael who became president of the university in September, 1953, and resigned effective Jan. 1. Dr. James Newman has been acting president since Dr. Carmichael left.

The board also announced that Dr. Newman was elected executive vice president of the university and said it came at the recommendation of the new president.

Dr. Rose, who was born in Meridian, Miss., is a graduate of Transylvania and is an ordained minister of the Christian Church. He was pastor of the First Christian Church at Danville, Ky., from 1947-1951, leaving to become president of Transylvania. He was professor of religion and philosophy at the college prior to that.

Dr. Rose Asks Help To Make U Of A Great

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Sept. 19— Dr. Frank A. Rose, newly elected president of the University of Alabama, tonight pleaded before a packed audience here for their support of a program to make the institution he is to head "great enough to meet the challenges of the Western World."

P. 1

This was the first appearance of the 36-year-old educator at the Capstone since his selection as its new president on Sept. 5.

He spoke before the Tuscaloosa chapter of the Alabama Alumni Assn., faculty and students.

He told the crowd that "we have not faced up to our responsibilities to see that every Alabama boy and girl who desires an education gets it at their state university."

To remedy this, Dr. Rose proposed a broad new program to "take the story of the University to every hamlet in this commonwealth."

He said "we are caught in a mental and intellectual dilemma and we have not been able to dig out way out of it."

Dr. Rose then outlined a three-pronged program to make the university, in his words, "truly great."

To do so, he established a set of "priorities" he said must be accomplished in order of importance: "academic freedom, excellence and leadership."

The speech tonight climaxed the first day of a two-day visit here by Rose and his wife. Both were luncheons by faculty and friends.

Later this afternoon, he and Mrs. Rose visited the president's mansion to make final plans for moving here before assuming duties as president on Jan. 1, 1958.

Dr. Rose will remain on the campus through tomorrow. He has scheduled several conferences with faculty and student leaders before returning to his home at Transylvania College in Kentucky where he is currently serving as the youngest president in its history.

Dr. Frank Rose Chosen Ala. University President

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 9-6-57 P. 12

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 5 (AP)—Dr. Frank A. Rose, president of Transylvania College at Lexington, Ky., since 1951, was elected president of the University of Alabama today.

The appointment, announced by the university board of trustees at a special meeting, is effective as soon as Rose can wind up his affairs at Transylvania.

The 27-year-old Rose will succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael, who became president of the university in September, 1953 and resigned effective Jan. 1 of this year. Dean James Newman has been acting president since Carmichael left.

The announcement was made by Hill Ferguson of Birmingham, vice chairman of the board of trustees. Gov. James E. Folsom, who is ex-officio chairman, was absent from the closed door meeting.

Board of members also announced the election of Newman as executive vice president of the university. They said it came at the recommendation of Rose.

The new president is a native of Meridian, Miss., and a graduate of Transylvania. An ordained minister of the Christian church, he was minister of the First Christian Church at Danville, Ky., from 1947 to 1951, leaving to become president of Transylvania.

Prior to that time, he was professor of religion and philosophy at the college where he graduated and later became president.

How Univ. of Ark. Accepted Negro Student Is Told

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 1-25-57

The University of Arkansas' treatment of Silas Hunt, its first law-school Negro student, in 1948, is a heartwarming recollection in today's segregation controversy. It is described by Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, in the February Reader's Digest.

p. 11

Dr. Johnson saw Hunt, miserable and alone, on a train bound for Fayetteville, Ark. Dr. Johnson didn't know Hunt, but Hunt recognized Johnson when the educator sat with him and asked, "What's wrong, son?"

Plenty was wrong. Hunt explained that he was entering the University of Arkansas as the law school's first Negro student. "They're going to cut me dead," he said. "Those students are going to refrigerate me."

Dr. Johnson had to admit that this "could well happen." He left the train before Fayetteville, but learned later what had occurred.

At the University station Hunt saw 30-odd white students on the platform. As he stepped down, they pressed toward him. A lanky white boy addressed him: "Is your name Hunt?"

His forehead wet with perspiration, Hunt answered, "Yes."

The white boy put out his hand. "Welcome to the University of Arkansas," he said. "Step over here and meet some of your friends."

The welcome had been arranged the night before. The students knew what the Negro would expect, and had determined to see that Hunt had as normal a life at Arkansas as he would at any law school in the nation. As a first move, they met his train.

The boy who had first addressed Hunt said, "These fellows here are not all your friends. There are many more." And there were.

U. of Maryland To Raise Sights

Mon. 3-18-57 P. 13-a

Washington, D.C.

The University of Maryland, striving to lift academic standards, will keep the door open to all students but raise its scholastic hurdles.

Dr. Wilson H. Elkins, University president, said that Maryland will continue to admit all those "who seem to be qualified." But he said the school is going to set up new standards of performance that the student will be required to meet if he expects to stay.

"The standards of performance required of students to remain in the University have been too low," he said.

At present a student may remain in school if he passes half of his subjects. This means he "may stay for eight or more years in good standing," Dr. Elkins said.

A state university, unlike private schools, cannot limit the kind and number of students it takes, Dr. Elkins said.

A university committee has prepared proposals for higher standards of performance. These proposals probably will be submitted at the April 11 meeting of the Board of Regents.

If they are accepted, they will go into effect in September. Dr. Elkins explained that the aim is to appraise the work of each students at regular periods. Averages will be taken for each term and cumulative averages will be studied in order to estimate student performance from year to year.

Students who get into difficulty will be given a probationary term. Freshmen may given two such terms.

Disintegration Of Faculty Disturbing At University

Wed. 7-17-57

Note: This is the third and last in a series by Jay Milner, managing editor of the Greenville Delta Democrat - Times, about salaries and academic freedom at the University of Mississippi. Milner, who prepared the series with the research and interview aid of graduate student George McNeill of Laurel, made them available to other Associated Press members.

OXFORD, Miss. — "To see our faculty and our program disintegrate under our eyes. . . . means we invite the grand hand of mediocrity to strangle slowly all the university has so long stuggled to attain."

These are the disturbed words of University of Mississippi Chancellor J. D. Williams in a letter to the school's trustees accompanying the proposed budget for 1957-58. The budget provides for faculty salary increases averaging $100.

But even if the salary hike is approved it would be small comfort to most university professors. A full professor here receives an average of $1,200 a year less than his professional equal at 69 other state universities. And he may have to teach two more months in the year to get that close to the average annual income of his colleagues in other states.

The faculty disintegration Chancellor Williams spoke of is undoubtedly represented by the 31 resignations he has gotten in the past 12 months. All those leaving this summer are going to other states where they will receive salary increases ranging from one-third to 50 per cent.

LACK RESEARCH FUNDS

The lack of research funds is another cause of the snowballing discontent among faculty members here. One professor remarked with a not-so-humorous grin that the history department doesn't even get enough money to buy the new books coming out about the War Between the States.

A full professor with a Ph. D. said he has a friend with only an M. S. degree who teaches history nine months a year at a Wisconsin junior high school for $6,400 plus $50 for each student practice teacher he supervises. The Old Miss Ph. D. has been here 10 years and his annual salary for 12 months work is less than $6,000.

A young graduate student here recently had the rather embarrassing job of telling his faculty advisor that he was offered a starting salary of $4,800 a year to teach at a Louisiana college. His advisor, a Ph. D. who has been here several years, makes $4,800.

Chancellor Williams' proposed budget for the coming school year includes a 33 per cent increase in student tution and fees. Most of this money, it can be assumed, will be used for the small salary increase requested. Student leaders on the campus last spring unanimously approved the tuition hike.

But even with the $100 a year salary raise, this is the way the average Old Miss salaries will stack up with those at the 69 other state-supported universities:

SALARY MEDIANS

The salary medians at other institutions are: instructors $4,159; assistant professors $5,162; associate professors $6,158; professors $7,736. These are for the 1956-57 school year and can be expected to be higher for 1957-58.

At Ole Miss, salary medians with the anticipated raise would be: instructors $3,600; assistant professors $4,500; associate professors $5,000; professors $6,600.

In an effort to halt disintegration of his faculty, Chancellor Williams will ask for a 20 per cent increase in his salary budget for the 1958-59 session. But many aren't waiting around to see if the trustees approve the raise and if the Legislature in turn provides the necessary funds.

"I'm damn tired of promises," one professor who resigned this summer declared.

UNC Religious Group:

White, Negro Scholarships Proposed

CHAPEL HILL, March 6—A proposal to award scholarships to white and Negro high school graduates in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area is currently being discussed by a University of North Carolina student religious group.

The group is the Campus Christian Council, made up of representatives from Protestant student groups in this area.

A spokesman for the Council said today a final vote on the proposal may come during the next two weeks.

The scholarships, it is understood, would be granted to both white and Negroes who want to attend the University at Chapel Hill. Other provisions are not yet known. The proposal is still in its early stages of development, the spokesman said.

Ten student groups within the Council are now studying the proposal separately and are expected to report later to the full Council.

A similar proposal was brought up recently before the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association. It would have provided scholarships, financed by the Chapel Hill Interracial Fellowship, in connection with local white and Negro churches.

Nothing was done about that proposal, however.

Negro undergraduates first entered the University in the fall of 1955. UNC officials fought the change in policy through Federal Courts, but failed.

Carolyn Ingram To University N. C. This Fall

GREENSBORO, N. C. — Miss Carolyn Ingram ,of Durham, 1957 graduate of Bennett College will begin the study of psychiatric social work at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in the fall, leading to the master's degree.

The daughter of Mrs. B Ingram Williamson, Miss Ingram is a graduate of Durham's Hillside High School, where she was president of the Student Council. At Bennett, where she consistently made the honor roll, she was secretary of the Student Senate, a member of the Senior Marshal Board and the Senior Theatre Guild. She was also winner of the David D. Jones Leadership Award for having exhibited the most outstanding qualities of leadership in the activities of the David D. Jones Student Union during the past school year.

It is believed that Miss Ingram will be the first woman of her race to be accepted for graduate work at Chapel Hill in the history of the university.

Fire Sweeps Through 'Lab' At VS College

Journal + Guide Sat. 3-16-57 Norfolk, Va.

PETERSBURG, Va. — A fire of undetermined origin broke out on the second floor of the biology laboratory in Colson Science Hall Virginia State college last Monday but prompt action by the members of the Ettrick Fire Department restricted the major damage of the fire to one room and an adjoining hall. Smoke and water damaged other rooms in the building.

The fire was discovered by students as they walked across the campus for the evening meal. Eight fire trucks and about forty firemen answered the alarm, and shortly thereafter the fire was brought under control.

OFFICIALS OF THE college indicated that the damage to the equipment in the laboratory was great. The greatest damage was done to 3 microscopes, biological models and slides, and the laboratory equipment within the room. The laboratory itself was protected by the concrete construction of the bukldingg. No one was in the laboratory at the time that the fire was discovered.

College officials immediately began an investigation as to the cause of the fire and the total extent of the damage.

Va. State Dedicates Tidewater

Defender P. 7 Chicago, Ill. Sat. 6-8-57

NORFOLK, Va. — (ANP)—Tidewater Hall of Norfolk Division of Virginia State college was described as a fine symbol of interracial cooperation at dedicatory exercises for the $2,500,000 building last week.

The dedicatory address was delivered by Dr. Lyman B. Brooks, director of the division, who stressed the importance of more technically trained personnel in the United States. "The note is being repeatedly sounded by leaders of government and education," Dr. Brooks told the audience of about 500, "that the U. S. must improve the quantity and perhaps the quality for scientific and technical personnel or face . . . disaster."

Speaking for the founders of the college, Dr. G. W. C. Brown, supervisor of the Evening College, and the only continuing administrative official throughout its history, said the founding and development of the college was due to the "vision, faith and courage" of the founders and supporters.

Dr. P. B. Young, publisher of the Journal and Guide and chairman of the Advisory of the college, commended local members of the Virginia General Assembly, three city mayors, the city council, members of the school board and others for their cooperation in plans to develop the college.

Va. State Marking 75th Anniversary

Afro-Magazine Section Sat. 5-25-57

Baltimore Md.

PETERSBURG, Va.—Virginia State College here, one of the oldest state supported institutions of higher education among colored people, is marking this year the 75th anniversary of its founding.

Situated just north of this city in Chesterfield County, State's main campus of 200 acres accommodates more than 20 modern classrooms, laboratory and dormitory buildings.

Designed in Colonial Williamsburg architecture, the buildings are all modern brick, with modern interiors and furnishings. A 400-acre tract serves as a farm and training laboratory for the agriculture students of the college. It adjoins the campus.

THE TOTAL college plant, including the Norfolk division campus and buildings, is conservatively valued at $12,500,000.

Virginia State's biennial appropriation by the Virginia General Assembly for its operation, including the Norfolk division, for the 1957-59 school years is approximately $10 million dollars.

Included in that appropriation is the sum of $3 million for new construction at the Petersburg and Norfolk institutions.

THE COLLEGE'S current enrollment, including its division at Norfolk, a summer school program, correspondence and extension courses, totals more than 5,400 students.

A few of these students are located in distant countries around the world, as the college provides United States armed forces correspondence courses.

However, less than 12 per cent of the college's annual enrollment is made up of out-of-state students.

THE INSTITUTION is now headed by a campus baby, Robert Prentiss Daniel, who was born at Ettricks—site of the college—Nov. 2, 1902, the son of Charles James and Carrie Daniel. He married the former Miss Blanche Taylor in 1929.

Dr Daniel holds the A.B. from Virginia Union, A.M. and Ph.D. from Columbia and a string of honorary degrees. He has had a long and varied career in the field of education since his graduation from Union in 1924.

AMONG THE executive posts he has held are those of professor of education and director of extension division, director of its division of education and psychology, Virginia Union;

Visitation professor of education, graduate division, Hampton Institute, president of Shaw University from 1936 to 1949, coming to State the same year, where his father had served as secretary for 28 years.

PETERSBURG, Va. — The appointment of Dr. John McNeile Hunter as dean of Virginia State College was announced this week by President Robert P. Daniel.

He succeeds Dr. J. H. Johnston who retired as dean but will continue his responsibilities as vice president and professor of history.

Dr. Hunter has served as acting dean of the college on two previous occasions when Dean J. H. Johnston was away for advanced study during the academic years 1931-32 and 1934-35.

HE CAME to the faculty from a position as teacher of physics at Prairie View State College, Texas.

Joining this faculty in 1925, he became head of the physics department in 1927 and chairman of the science-mathematics unit, 1930-40.

In 1939 when the State Board of Education authorized courses for the master's degree to be given at Virginia State College, Dr. Hunter was appointed as director of the division of graduate studies.

DR. JOHN M. HUNTER

Va. State Advised To Send Budget To Governor

Journal + Guide p.3

Norfolk, Va.

RICHMOND —Virginia State College at Petersburg and Virginia State School at Newport News were among four institutions authorized last week by the State Board of Education to present their capital outlay and operating budgets to Governor Thomas B. Stanley and the Council on Higher Education. The budget requests of the institutions were reviewed last week by the board.

The capital outlay and operating requests for Virginia State College were not disclosed. Dr. Robert P. Daniel is president of the college.

Sat. 6-3-57

DR. W. M. Whitehead, superintendent of the Virginia State School for Colored Deaf and Blind Children, was told to present his two-year budget to the Governor. Superintendent Whitehead is requesting $856,549 for operating costs, and $1,104,782 for capital outlays. The current appropriation for the Newport News school is $675,406 for operations and $532,788 for capital outlays.

Members of the board made it clear that their action did not constitute approval or endorsement of the budget requests. They explained that they were "merely recognizing the needs of the institutions." The requests may be reviewed further by board committees.

THE CAPITAL outlay and operating budgets for Virginia State College include the needs of the institution in Petersburg and Norfolk Division at Norfolk where Tidewater Hall, the first unit of the building program there, was dedicated on Sunday, May 12. This building cost over $2,000,000.

A part of the budget requests of the institutions include money to increase the salaries of faculty members. Governor Stanley has indicated he would approve salary increases for faculties of all state colleges, but with the provision that the institutions absorb the cost.

An increase in the tuition of some colleges to provide money for salary increase for the faculty would have a damaging effect on enrollment.

NEW DEAN — The appointment of Dr. John McNeill Hunter as dean of Virginia State College was announced by President Robert P. Daniel. He succeeds Dr. J. H. Johnston who retires as dean but will continue his responsibilities as vice president and professor of history.

Negro History Stressed At Va. Seminary

p. 3

LYNCHBURG, Va. —Negro history is a "must" at Virginia Theological Seminary and College. A two-year course is offered under the social science department. It is a social science supplement, and is required of every student. The course covers prehistoric Negro history, ancient Negro history, medieval Negro history and modern Negro history.

Norfolk, Va.

Negro life and history are stressed at the college with the idea of not only acquainting the students with the history of the Negro, but dispelling any false conceptions students may have, acquired by their environment or by the propaganda of certain books.

Sat. 11-16-57

BACK IN 1931 when a course was suggested for the institution, students were hesitant about enrolling in the class because they feared they couldn't get credit for the work. Dr. Carter G. Woodson was contacted and he suggested that a study be made to determine to what extent courses in Negro history and Negro art were available in colleges and universities in the country. That study disclosed that a large number of white colleges and universities and a good number of Negro institutions of higher learning as well as a few secondary schools were offering courses in Negro history and art.

Negro history is popular at Virginia Theological Seminary and College. The interest dates back to the days when founders and early supporters of the college deplored the lack of information on Negro Baptists in books written in those days on the denomination. Every president of the college including Dr. M. C. Allen, current president, has stressed the importance of Negro history

Virginia Union University to observe Founders' Day Feb. 15

Baltimore, Md.

RICHMOND, Va. (ANP) — Virginia Union University, one of the outstanding small institutions of higher learning in the South, will observe Founder's Day here Friday, Feb. 15.

An institution with its roots back to Richmond Theological School for Freedom in 1865 and Wayland Seminary at Washington in 1865, this school became Virginia Union University with the merger of these two older schools in 1899.

P. 16

President Samuel D. Proctor, is anxious to get the address and occupation of every graduate and former student of Virginia Union by Feb. 15 or as soon thereafter as possible. Unionites should write him inclosing all important information.

IT IS ESTIMATED that about 5,000 students have graduated from Virginia Union. At one time there were nine college president among its alumni. At least seven Unionites are now heading institutions of higher learning.

The late Dr. Charles S. Johnson, former president of Fisk University, was a graduate of Virginia Union. He was one of the leading sociologists in America. Some Virginia Union graduates who held important positions are:

Drs. Abram L. Harris, professor of economics at the University of Chicago; Charles H. Thompson, head of graduate school at Howard; J. E. Henderson, president of Baptist General Association of Virginia.

Other outstanding alumni include:

DR. PROCTOR, president, and Dr. Thomas H. Henderson dean, Virginia Union; Dr. G. W. C. Brown, evening college supervisor, Norfolk Division, Virginia State College; Dr. Lyman B. Brooks, director of the division;

Drs. Robert P. Daniel, president, Virginia State College; J. A. Bacoats, president of Benedict College; W. E. Henry, Maryland State College preident; W. R. Strassner, Shaw University president; J. L. Holloman president, Baptist Seminary Washington.

Virginia Union which has been operating on a $600,000 annual budget should have $1,000,000 annually to meet operating and expansion neds. It has been poor in money, but rich in cultural heritage.

It is one of the finest poor institutions of higher learning in America.

RICHMOND, Va. — Virginia Union University has received the second and final installment of a $146,500 grant from the Ford Foundation, Dr. Samuel D. Proctor, University president, announced this week.

Norfolk, Va.

In July, 1956, the university received $70,000 from the Ford Foundation. Last month it received $76,500.

Dr. Proctor said income from the money will be used to increase teachers' salaries at the university, which are still from $500 to $1000 below the national median in each rank.

THE PRINCIPAL is invested and becomes available after ten years for whatever service the university may choose.

Dr. Proctor explained that the grant "goes far beyond the dollars indicated because it has stimulated many other corporate gifts for private colleges."

He added, "no doubt the United Negro College Fund has benefited greatly by the pace set for philanthrophy by the Ford Foundation."

The Mattaponi Baptist Association of Virginia and two related bodies donated $1,387.30 to Virginia Union University.

Richmond, Va. — The American Baptist Home Mission society will observe its 125th anniversary with an academic convocation at Virginia Union university November 12 and 13, Dr. Samuel D. Proctor, president of Virginia Union, announced this week.

The convocation will emphasize the advancement of higher education among Negroes since 1865. The theme of the convocation is "An Educated People Moves Freedom Forward."

Ten college presidents are among the top ranking educators to appear on the program.

hese include Dr. Benjamin E Mays, Morehouse college; Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, Hampton institute; Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, Howard university; Dr. William R. Strassner, Shaw university; Dr. J. A. Bacoats, Benedict college; Dr. Albert E. Manley, Spelman college; Dr. Royal W. Bryear, Florida Normal and Industrial college; Dr. Eleanor Anderson, president of The Mather school; Dr. M. K. Curry Jr., Bishop college and Dr. S D. Proctor, Virginia Union universiey.

Other leading educators to speak at the convocation are Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, president, American Baptist Home Mission society; Dr. Frederick P. Patterson, president United Negro College Fund Inc.; Dr. W. Montague Cobb, head department of anatomy, Howard university; Dean Howard Thurman of Marsh chapel, Boston university; Dr. Thomas H. Henderson, dean of the college of Virginia Union; William J. Trent, executve director, United Negro College Fund Inc., and the Rev. C. S. McCall, president, Baptist General Association of Va.

It is significant that Virginia Union was selected as site of the academic convocation as Union is the result of the fusion in 1899 of two educational institutions established by the American Baptist Home Mission Society to give a Christian education to freemen.

Virginia Union and other similar institutions in the shout have produced the vast majority of the top Negro leaders.

The convocation will include seminars on the problems facing private colleges today. The progress made by private Negro colleges since the mid-19th century will be discussed and an effort will be made to chart the future course of these institutions.

Planting, Care of Grasses, Pine Trees Give Students Experience

125 Acres at Voorhees Set for Soil Bank Project

Courier Sat. 2-2-57 Pittsburgh, Pa.

DENMARK, S. C. — John F. Potts, president of Voorhees School and Junior College, revealed that 68 acres of the school's farm land has been placed in the conservation reserve of the soil bank. Of this amount 25 acres have been devoted to pine trees and the remaining acreage will be planted in a cover-crop of approved grasses.

In addition to planting 25,000 pine seedlings on a 25-acre tract by a professional forrester, 5,000 more pine seedlings were planted in the Voorhees forest to replace trees that had to be removed because of a forest fire which occurred a year ago. These 5,000 trees were planted by students in the agriculture classes in order to give them an opportunity to participate in a conservation practice. The school already had 200 acres in forest land with a total farm acreage of 125 acres.

The conservation program will not only make the school land more valuable and help beautify the campus with grass areas, but it will give the students valuable experience in a worthwhile project. With the exception of a small tract which will be limited to gardening, the entire 125 acres will be placed in the soil bank during 1957.

WAKE FOREST SEMINARY

Wake Forest Seminary To Admit Negroes

CHICAGO. — (ANP — Southeastern Baptist Theological seminary, one of the South's best known schools, will let down its color bar to permit admittance of Negro students beginning in 1958, trustees of the school decided at a meeting here last week.

A resolution calling for the integration move was adopted by the 24 trustees at the Conrad Hilton hotel without a single dissenting vote. The trustees were here to attend the annual meeting of the Southern Baptist convention.

The resolution. as adopted. contained a provision, however. It stipulated that the seminary operate completely on its own property when Negro students are admitted. This was included because the seminary presently is holding chapel services in the Wake Forest Baptist church, which it does not own. However, a chapel building on the campus is being renovated and readied for the beginning of the 1958-'59 college year.

Acceptance of Negro students will bring the seminary in line with three other Southern Baptist institutions which already have flung their doors open to Negroes. They are Southern Baptist Theological seminary in Louisville, Ky., Southwestern Baptist Theological seminary in Fort Worth, Texas and Golden Gate seminary in Los Angeles.

Southeastern seminary moved to Wake Forest in 1953 and took over the Wake Forest college campus in 1956. The latter institution moved to Winston-Salem.

DR. REMBERT STOKES
New Wilberforce prexy

Dr. Stokes Afro-American president of Force

Baltimore, Md. Sat. 6-22-57

WILBERFORCE, O. — Three significant developments climaxed by an optimistic progress report were the highlights of the annual trustee board meeting in the 101st year of church supported Wilberforce University.

Elected as the 16th president of the Ohio educational institution was Dr. Rembert E. Stokes, a native of Dayton, Ohio, who had served for six years as dean of the university's Payne Theological Seminary.

Dr. Stokes had been acting head of the school since the death of President Charles L. Hill in December. He holds a doctor's degree from Boston University.

THE SECOND significant development was the adoption of a resolution by the board to accept the $112,347 appropriated by the State of Ohio in a sundry claims bill.

The state grant was in compensation for what has been termed a "moral claim" which originated when the state school and church supported Wilberforce University separated in 1947.

In the third instance the school received a statement from Bishop S. L. Greene, chairman of the General Board of the AME Church, that the church would take immediate steps to eliminate the remaining indebtedness.

IT WAS revealed through the report of the secretary - business manager, George H. Valentine, that the indebtedness had been reduced from $99,534 at the close of the last school year to the present $47,258.

The annual report of President Stokes showed considerable progress made in the past year toward satisfying school needs.

The report noted that the library contained 56,777 titles; of which 1,019 were catalogued this year. Also stressed was the half - million Capital Expansions Drive launched in the month of May.

Referring to the counsel of a special visitors committee in the matter of aiding in development of the best possible quality of education at Wilberforce University, Dr. Stokes observed that "there is a new and growing appreciation for the role of the small, privately controlled college in America."

He further emphasized that a recent survey has shown that 62 and 3.10 per cent of the leading business executives, and a large percentage of leading scientists were trained in small, privately controlled colleges.

Dr. Stokes noted that many educators "hoped to keep the small college small."

Wilberforce Receives $500 Industry Grant

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — As one of the fifty-three colleges sharing in the Union Carbide and Carbon corporation gift of $26,500, Wilberforce university will receive a January contribution of $500. The donation is being made to all member colleges of the Council for the Advancement of Small Colleges.

Wilberforce U. Receives CASC Contribution

WILBERFORCE, OHIO

As one of the fifty-three colleges sharing in the Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation gift of $26,500, Wilberforce University will receive a January gift of $500. The gift is being made to all member colleges of the Council for the Advancement of Small Colleges and according to K. D. Hurley, president and A. T. Hill, executive-secretary, comes as a token of approval and encouragement for joint and individual efforts to meet more effectively the emergency demands on higher education.

Wilberforce University is a charter member of CASC which was established in the spring of 1956 as a service organization to help its members collectively in ways beyond their means individually. Rapid progress is now being made to utilize full facilities of member colleges and to fully develop their resources in confronting the forthcoming college enrollment emergency.

Encouraging reports are forthcoming from administrative officials of CASC. The fifty-three member colleges represent a total enrollment of more than 25,000 students. Their total capital investment is about 65 million dollars. Council officials report that it is very possible that many of these colleges can double or even triple their enrollment which would offer considerable relief to the country at large.

Ages of the member colleges range from five to 129 years. Wilberforce University is one of the oldest of the group having observed its one-hundredth anniversary February 24, 1956.

Definite standards for membership have been set up by the organization. "Application is open to four-year, private, non-profit colleges of arts and sciences whose credits are approved by one or more of the following: state department of education state university, at least three institutions at the graduate or undergraduate level which are members of regional accrediting associations. An additional qualification for membership is a commitment to a program of self-development consistent with membership criteria in the various regional associations. Dues for the first year are $400."

Clearly reflecting the high educational aims of the member colleges is the three-year action program adopted for "advancing quality education" in three areas namely: improvement of teaching methods, revitalizing curricula in terms of student needs and developing procedures of sound management in business and other non-academic affairs Research is now in progress under an executive-secretary with headquarters in Washington, regarding the present status and future needs of member colleges.

Wilberforce U. to Observe 101st Founders' Day 2-25

WILBERFORCE, OHIO

Wilberforce University will observe the first year of the second century since its founding on Feb. 25th it was announced by school officials today. In December a humanities conference completed a series of significant events which extended throughout the past year.

Dr. Paul Weaver, president of Lake Erie College, Plainsville, Ohio, will deliver the principle Founders' Day convocation address at 10:30 a.m. on Monday, February 25th. Also highlighting the Founders' Day activities will be a ground-breaking ceremony in connection with the erection of a new gymnasium. Construction on the gymnasium is expected to follow immediately, under the sponsorship of the Wilberforce University Foundation and the Founders' Day Committee.

In addition to students, faculty and committee, guests, church dignitaries, ministerial and lay members along with alumni in Ohio are expected to attend the occasion. Wilberforce University was founded four years before the Civil War in 1856.

Other program activities planned in connection with Founders' Day will include a Miss Founders' Day of 1957 contest and a Mock Faculty sponsored by the students. Among the rare features to be presented is a special basketball game between old timers and the Wilberforce University regular aggregation. Other presentations are a special Founders' Day sermon on Sunday, February 24, a Founders' Day banquet, musical, and play entitled "Hedda Gabler."

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — Dr. Rembrandt Stokes, acting president, was pictured by some as a "savior" for Wilberforce University during recent Founders Day exercises on the University's 101 anniversary.

Dr. Stokes, a young man, sincerely dedicated to the tough, heartbreaking and imperative task of preserving Wilberforce, has a deep affection for his alma mater that can be seen in his eyes.

On his face is a look of determination. He will not be easily stopped. He is a man of high character and modesty, a man of God.

THE FOUNDERS DAY services were not held in the large Jones Auditorium as usual, but in the Chapel of the Living Saviour (chapel of Payne Theological Seminary). This is no time for flippancy. It is a time for soul searching.

As the services opened, Mrs. Stokes, in a blue and white suit, slips quietly into her seat, accompanied by Mrs. E. C. Hatcher and daughter, Miss Ruby Crawford, and Mrs. M. Butler.

Seated on the rostrum were Bishops E. C. Hatcher and Frederick Jordan, listening to the convocation address by Dr. Paul Weaver, president of Lake Erie College.

MRS. GERTRUDE T. HOLLAND, chairman of the Founders Day committee, bows her head as the Rev. H. M. McLin, Edward Wyner, attorney, and the Rev. Charles LaRew Jr., receive honorary degrees.

At the close of the convocation, students, faculty and friends gravely walk out of the chapel, on past the old Payne Seminary that knew such greats as:

Dean and Mrs. George F. Woodson, Bishop and Mrs. B. F. Lee, Bishop Joshua H. Jones and "Miss Gussie," and Dr. and Mrs. Tom Jackson.

I thought of my own grandparents, the Tom Perkinses, and Miss Hallie Q. Brown, William Anderson and "Miss Katie," who ran the grocery store; "Antie Reed" of the Reed House who never turned a hungry student away;

Charles Smith and "Miss Nellie," Edward Clarke and "Miss Dovey," the Hunnicuts, the Jack Turners, the Rev. James Maxwells, Col. Charles Noel Young and aunt Ada who was the Omega mother for so many years; Mrs. Pearl Chaplain and Dr. Steward, Mrs. Ama Coleman and Mr. Stewart of the little red school house, Shorter Smith, C. H. Johnson, Bruce H. Greene, "Ma" Warrick;

"DOC" HARRY LACKYE, Sully James, the Talbert family, the Charles T. Roundtrees, the Willie Rogers, Mrs. Ella Thompson and Mrs. Dolly Lindsay and the school's oldest living graduate, Mrs. Sadie Hamilton, now in Pittsburgh, an alumna to be proud of.

On across the road to the field where the gymnasium ground breaking takes place, the congregation groups around James W. Shocknessy, chairman of the Turnpike Commission, as he turns first ground.

Present were:

MRS. REVERDY C. RANSOM, whose bishop husband was waiting at home with a heart full of happiness over this occasion; Mrs. D. Ormande Walker, whose late bishop - husband had also dreamed of this project;

Mrs. Charles L. Hill, who knew that her husband so recently gone from us, would have been thrilled to see his work taken over by such capable hands, and Miss Yvonne Walker, assistant to the president, smiling faintly.

Somehow, I had an idea that Bishop Daniel A. Payne was smiling back.

Wilberforce founded in 1856 is the oldest teaching institution in the world operated and controlled by men of African descent.

P. 8

E. David Brown

She is (has been from the beginning, must ever be) the Christian university where men and women are taught the faith, fear, knowledge, wisdom of the Lord God.

Dare Christian men ever become weak-kneed and spineless enough to surrender to the state the authority to teach Christianity to their children? God forbid.

Will the great Roman Catholic Church ever surrender to the state the authority to teach Catholicism and God to the children of her communion? Heaven knows that the correct answer is No, Never.

Neither should African Methodism ever do so. Therefore, the terms are perpetual upon which we BUILD a bigger and better WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY.

In the core of her priceless legacy, mother Wilberforce would bequeath to each one of her students (the graduates and the undergraduates) the very SPIRIT, intrepid, indomitable, eternal of her great heroes:

(1) Daniel Alexander Payne; (2) Joshua Hosea Jones; (3) Dougal Ormonde Beaconsfield Walker; (4) Reverdy Cassius Ransom; (5) Eugene Clifford Hatcher.

The Alumni Association

THE WRITER is an alumnus. He was graduated at Wilberforce University in the class of 1931 with the B. S. degree together with 96 classmates.

In those days there were more than 1,000 students on the campus, and 100, more or less, Professors, Associates, Assistants, teachers, officers, and employees on the Wilberforce payroll.

Prior to coming to Wilberforce, the writer had been graduated at MORRIS BROWN COLLEGE in the class of 1929 with the B. A. degree. He might have gone directly into a GRADUATE SCHOOL; but instead, he chose to come on to WILBERFORCE to spend one full year on the campus getting acquainted with new people and, above all, enjoying the "sweet" Christian fellowship.

Later on his graduate work was done at the University of Pittsburgh and at the Pennsylvania State University.

More than 1,000 of us belong to the Alumni Association. Let each one pledge to give $1,000. If so, we shall raise ONE MILLION for WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY.

He further emphasized that a recent survey has shown that 62 and 3-10 per cent of the leading business executives, and a large percentage of leading scientists were trained in small, privately controlled colleges. Dr. Stokes noted that many educators "hoped to keep the small college small."

The need to keep alive all of the operating colleges in America today was pointed up very definitely in President Stokes' report. It was observed that by 1970 college enrollments are expected to double. In Ohio the tidal wave of students is expected to show enrollments in privately controlled institutions as high as 77 per cent over the 1955 levels.

Facilities of existing institutions must be expanded, and it has been suggested that new colleges be organized. In this setting, concluded the report, Wilberforce university represents a deserving institution worth strengthening to assure higher Christian education for the growing number of American youth.

Frontiers Club Gives To Bishop Allen Fund

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (ANP) — The scholarship fund being established at Wilberforce university in memory of the late Bishop A. J. Allen of Cleveland, Ohio continues to grow.

Most recent contribution was made this week by the Pittsburgh chapter of the Frontiers of America, a national service club, which sponsored a benefit tea for this purpose. The fund, which now totals more than $1,000 was begun by the bishop himself some months prior to his death and has been added to by his family and friends who knew of his great interest in Wilberforce university.

Bishop Allen was chairman of the board of trustees at Wilberforce during a critical eight-year period from 1948-1956, and gave liberally of his time and money to deserving students. He had recently expressed his intention to formalize this interest by establishing a scholarship fund to aid worthy young people of limited financial resources.

As a start toward this objective, he opened a scholarship fund savings account at the Quincy Savings and Lon company in Cleveland and deposited $175 of his own funds.

After his death in November of 1956, the Bishop A. J. Allen Memorial Scholarship fund was formally established. Depository for the fund which is continuing to receive contributions is the Quincy Savings and Loan Company, 8309 Quincy Ave., Cleveland 4, Ohio. Its deposits are federally insured up to $10,000. It is expected that the first award from the fund will be made during the school year of 1957-'58.

MARSHALL — Wiley College observed its eighty-fourth anniversary March 26 through 31 as a tribut to the founders of the institution and as a rededication to the purposes of the school.

Activities for the week included two chapel programs one sponsored by the local Wiley alumni and the other one was given by the student body, two one act plays by the Log Cabin Players, the Founlers' Day dance, and the annual Founders' Day dinner. Attorney Hattie Ruth Briscoe, class of 1937, San Antonio, was the main speaker.

The formal observance was held in the college chapel with Professor Melvin B. Tolson (a member of the Wiley College faculty for many years) as the main speaker. Professor Tolson, Mayor of Langston City, Oklahoma, Professor of Creative Literature, Langston University, captivated the audience with his reminisces of the Wiley yesteryear, and a challenge to perpetuate the name, and purposes, and the spirit of Wiley in the future.

WILLIAMS COLLEGE
DISCRIMINATION

Survey Bares Race Barrier Among Frats

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 5-16-57

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., May 15 (AP)—A Williams College student committee's report, made public yesterday said problems of racial and religious discrimination are present in varying degrees at all fraternity colleges, in all areas of the country. P. 2-

In a study of racial and religious discrimination in fraternities at Williams the report said: "Few colleges can show the diligence and sincerity with which the undergraduate members, including fraternity leaders, have pursued the elimination of these problems; that few colleges can show the progress apparent at Williams toward the elimination of these problems."

David C. Phillips of Hartford, Conn., headed the five-man committee which he said is composed of fraternity men who approached the problem in a moderate and objective manner. The group held confidential interviews and studied college rushing records of the past six years.

The 48-page report said two unwritten agreements exist to the exclusion of Jewish students—but one is not abided by in practice at this time—and at least three agreements exist with nationals that exclude Negroes.

On the other hand, Catholics have full and equal opportunity for membership in Williams fraternities, and Orientals do not present the national implications definitely involved in the Negro situation.

Questions Needing Answers

14e(1) Discrimination

THE COLLEGE of William and Mary, after evading the issue by one pretext or another, finally turned down the application of AMOS LEROY WILLIS for admission as a chemical engineering student at its Norfolk Division. Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va.

We discussed this case at some length, editorially, in our Sept. 21st issue. In view of the specific turn-down given this honor graduate of Norfolk's Booker T. Washington High School, some additional questions arise which demand answers. P. 8-

First, this able young student qualified earlier for the cooperative training offered by the federal government through the Norfolk Naval Shipyard and Norfolk William and Mary. The combined training by the college and a federal agency, primarily financed by federal and state taxes—paid by all—strikes us as a commendable and necessary project. Sat. 10-12-57

The Russians' launching of the first earth satellite on the past weekend dramatically underlines the imperative need for more and better trained scientists in all fields. Every reliable source of data deplores the increasing shortage of suitably trained men and women in this country, and the comparable advantage in this respect our chief enemy enjoys in the Cold War.

Shouldn't the federal government have a concern in this adverse action by the College of William and Mary? There undoubtedly is a contract existing between the government, or its Navy agency, and the college.

Don't all federal contracts now embody a no-discrimination clause, policed by the Government Contract Compliance Committee headed by Vice-President NIXON? Is the denial of admission to this Norfolk applicant, and to several others a short time earlier, a violation of that contract?

Why is it that the parent college and the Norfolk Division of William and Mary consistently deny admission to Negro applicants on the undergraduate level?

Does it have a special status not enjoyed by Virginia Military Institute, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the Medical College of Virginia, the Richmond Polytechnic Institute, and the University of Virginia? All of them have admitted Negroes. They too are tax-supported state institutions.

They are Willie Mitchell and Cecil Harold. Arthur Riddle received the DDS degree from Howard University Dental School. All three were listed as outstanding students.

These three Prairie View Science graduates follow a very fine pattern established over the years by their predecessors. Only last year, two others, Edward Guinn and Frank Bryant, received University of Texas Medical degrees with commendable records to their credit. Eevery year they graduate with advanced degrees from Howard University, Meharry Medical School and major universities throughut the country. A total of twenty-one PV-ites are reported doing satisfactory work in ten medical and dental schools. Ten are at the University of Texas, and one each at Southern California, Stanford, Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, Land of the Lake, Meharry Cincinnati and Howard.

Globe Pa.

The records of service of earlier graduates stand high for younger students to see. Two are on the teaching staff in medical and dental schools. Dr. Romona Vaughn graduated with the highest honors at Meharry and is now interned in the field of Psychiatry. Two, Sherman Wilson and Leon Woods, have moved into U. S. Civil Service as Biochemists and a 1956 graduate, Booker Hogan, is employed as a well-paid chemist in California.

The list of practicing physicians and dentists is too lengthy to include, but a visit to any Texas city will reveal their identities and their records in community service. This list could be excelled only by one accounting for the hundreds of science teachers in pubic schools and colleges over the state. They too are making outstanding contributions and several have recently been acclaimed for service to the field of Science Teaching.

The youngest of all— the 1957 graduates in science—two are already enrolled for summer work in biology and chemistry at Southern Methodist and Stanford. The department here is waiting for word of others as this tradition of successful accmplishment continues in a very healthy cycle.

Fairfax Supervisors Support Board Seeking Area College

Post + Times Herald Thurs. 3-21-57

Washington D.C.

Fairfax County supervisors, meeting yesterday, concurred in the creation of a regional Control Board designed to establish a two-year university in northern Virginia. P.4-B

Arlington, Alexandria and Falls Church previously backed creation of such a Board after continued delays over the establishment of a branch of the University of Virginia in northern Virginia.

Del. Harrison Mann, who sparked formation of the new Control Board, said northern Virginia is now able to accept a branch of the University of Virginia or to invite another educational facility to locate in the area.

Selection of a site has stalled creation of the University of Virginia branch, with local officials supporting a site near Springfield and University officials backing a Herndon area site. Members appointed to the new Control Board by Falls Church, Alexandria and Arlington favor the Springfield site.

Mann said yesterday he understands a special committee of the University of Virginia Board of Visitors will shortly set up a meeting with northern Virginia legislators to discuss financing a branch of the University in this area.

In other business, the Supervisors agreed to protest after hearing reports that the State Water Control Board had lifted an embargo on the overloaded sewage disposal plant in the town of Fairfax.

Residents of Mantua and Langhorne Acres said the town plant is polluting Occotink creek and adversely affecting community health and property values.

The SWCB last October prohibited additional sewer tapins at the plant. However, it then approved 130 more connections last month.

The Supervisors were not informed of this move despite an agreement with the SWCB on mutual cooperation.

The Board also:

- Adopted a formal resolution authorizing sale of $2.9 million in sewer bonds April 10.
- Heard an estimate from County Executive C. C. Massey that a proposed 3 per cent business license tax on utilities would bring the County $475,000 annually.

Negro Family Granted Quarters at University

Fri. 6-28-57 P.2-B

Washington D.C.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, June 27 (AP).—University of Virginia officials confirmed today a 30-year-old Negro graduate student has been assigned quarters at Copeley Hill, the school's housing development for married students.

The student, James L. Williams, is the first Negro assigned to the development since it was opened in 1946. Williams, an aeronautical research engineer at Langley Air Force Base, moved into a trailer at the development Tuesday with his wife and 7-month-old son.

University Housing Director Donald M. MacKay said it was not known Williams was a Negro when he applied for housing during summer school. He said the housing office does not require the listing of race on its application forms.

MacKay said the assignment probably would have been made even if it had been known the student was a Negro.

Williams is in his second summer session at the University, where he is working on his master's degree in aeronautical engineering. He is employed by the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics at Langley. Williams' records show he is a graduate of the University of Michigan and comes from Philadelphia.

University President Colgate W. Darden Jr. said the school does not "have a determined position" on the question of providing quarters for Negro married students. He said the question "would probably have to go to the board of visitors."

fits paid during May was up 35.3 per cent over April and 64.9 per cent over May a year ago. The 78,698 benefit checks paid out last month were 30.7 per cent over the April total and 29.3 per cent more than in May, 1956.

New claims, representing new spells of unemployment, dropped during May to a weekly average of 2758, down 41.3 per cent from April but still 40.1 per cent above May, 1956.

Ordered Sales Upheld

ANNAPOLIS, June 27 (AP).—The Court of Appeals ruled yesterday that an equity court can declare a person mentally incompetent and decree the sale of his property.

The high court interpreted a 1929 law, amended in 1943, as giving an equity court judge power to act without a jury in such cases and it upheld the constitutionality of the statute.

The appellate court got the case when attorneys for title companies apealed a ruling by Judge William R. Horney in Queen Anne's County. He ruled the 1943 act violated an individual's constitutional rights.

The title company attorneys, alarmed at Judge Horney's decision, told the high court that his ruling, if allowed to stand, would throw in doubt the titles to a great number of parcels of real estate throughout the state.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (NNPA)—The White Citizens Council said Friday it plans to protest the assignment of a colored graduate student to quarters on Copeley Hill, the University of Virginia's housing development for married students. P.18

George Cason, president of the white hate group, said he would protest through university channels and to his Congressman and Senators.

Under a U.S. Supreme Court decision, colored students can be treated no differently than white student in a state-supported university or college.

University authorities disclosed Thursday that James L. Williams, an aeronautical research engineer at Langley Air Force Base, moved into a trailer unit on Copeley Hill on June 25 with his wife and seven-month old son.

Williams, 30, is using the trailer on a sublease basis, a standard arrangement between summer school students and those who are here for the winter session.

THIS IS Williams' second summer session at the university where he is working on a master's degree in areonautical enginering. He is employed at Langley by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, a government aviation research organization.

Donald Thompson, mayor of Copeley, said the Copeley council adopted a resolution Friday to draft a letter asking the university police force to provide protection for the Williams family. The council will also ask the family to stay in the housing project.

Williams said a man, who identified himself as a member of the White Citizens Council, came to his trailer Thursday night, said they had no business there and suggested that they leave.

LOUIS HICKS of Albemarle County and a member of the White Citizens Council, Friday said he was the man who had called on Williams to tell him "he was not supposed to be there with those white people and didn't he think he ought to move away."

Williams' neighbors appeared to be sorry that the presence of his family has attracted public notice.

The university housing office said it did not know Williams was colored when he was assigned to Copeley Hill but the assignment would probably have been made anyway since he qualified under the priority system used.

COLORED STUDENTS are assigned to dormitory rooms at the University of Virginia, though not with white roommates.

Williams, 30, is originally from Philadelphia and has lived in Virginia since 1951. He holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Michigan.

Survey Finds Bias In U. S. Colleges

Daily World Sun. 5-26-57

Atlanta Ga.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass. — (ANP)—A Williams College undergraduate group stated this week that it had found problems of racial and religious discrimination were present in varying degrees in fraternity colleges in all parts of the country.

P. 5

The group itself stated it held confidential interviews and studied college rushing records of the past six years.

14e(1)

The report stated in part:

"Few colleges can show the diligence and sincerity with which the undergraduate members, including fraternity leaders, have pursued the elimination of these problems of discrimination; few colleges can show the progress apparent at Williams toward the elimination of these problems."

UNWRITTEN AGREEMENTS

The committee found that two unwritten agreements existed to bar Jewish students—but that one as not abided by in practice at this time, and at least "three agreements exist with national fraternities which exclude Negroes."

The report added that Catholics had full and equal opportunity for membership in Williams College fraternities, and "Orientals do not present the national implications definitely involved in the Negro rituation."

The Williams College board of trustees was urged by the committee to require abrogation of all "such agreements" as a prerequisite for staying on the campus. Committee members expressed the opinion that in such a way all the Williams College fraternities would have "real self-determination of members."

Williams College was the scene of national fraternity controversy two years ago when one of its fraternities decided to admit a Negro member. The fraternity was threatened by its national body with expulsion. Immediately the Williams College faculty advised the exclusion from the campus of all fraternities having racial barriers affecting membership.

Ga. State Integration Suit Stays

A federal judge here Wednesday turned down a motion by the new president of Georgia State College of Business Administration and two members of the Board of Regents to have a segregation complaint against them dropped.

The denial of the latest motions in the suit, brought by four Negroes seeking admission to Georgia State, was signed by U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan.

The Negroes charge the school's president, other school officials and the Board of Regents with discriminating against them in denying their applications for admission.

Since the suit was brought, Dr. Noah Langdale has succeed Dr. George M. Sparks as Georgia State president, and Allen Woodall and James D. Gould have succeeded two members of the Board of Regents.

The court ordered their names substituted in the action for the names of their predecessors.

Woodall, Gould and Langdale filed a motion to have the complaint against them dropped.

In June, Judge Sloan turned down a motion by the other defendants to have the charges against them dropped.

The three new defendants said they were filing their motion on the same grounds the other defendants did and on the grounds that they were not in office during the times that the Negroes' applications were under consideration by the other defendants.

Judge Sloan, in denying their motion, pointed out that Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide that, when an official leaves office, his sucessor takes his place as a defendant in a court action.

The suit was brought by Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, Myra Elliot Dinsmore and Russell T. Roberts. They are represented by E. E. Moore Jr., an Atlanta attorney, and Thurgood Marshall of New York, chief counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

GIRARD COLLEGE

Girard College Lists Citizens As Trustees

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 10-5-57

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 4 (AP)—Thirteen private citizens were appointed trustees of Girard College here today in the latest move in the dispute over admission of Negroes to the private school for orphan boys.

Orprans Court announced the appointment of 13 businessmen and educators, including one woman, to replace the Board of City Trusts, a city agency, in administering the 109-year-old school set up by 19th century merchant-shipper Stephen Girard.

Naming of the board completed action taken by the court Sept. 11 when it refused to admit two Negro boys to the school and instead directed that the school be removed from control of the city. These were the alternatives left to it by a directive from the Supreme Court.

DISMISSES PETITIONS

In other actions today, the court dismissed three petitions by the city, the state and attorneys for the Negro boys asking that the Orphans Court modify or vacate its Sept. 11 ruling. City Solicitor David Berger said the city would appeal today's action.

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled last April that, since the school was administered by a governmental agency, it would be a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to discriminate against Negroes in enrollment. At that time the high court directed the lower court to act in a manner "not inconsistent" with its opinion.

At the heart of the dispute was the provision in Girard's will stipulating that the school be set up for "poor, white, male orphans." Attorneys for the two Negro boys made a test case against this provision, with the backing of the city and the state. Thus the legal battle found the city arrayed against itself, since the Board of City Trusts was a defendant.

Orphans Court maintained that the wishes of a testator must not be set aside and refused to strike out the "white" clause. The state Supreme Court supported this position and the appeal was taken to the U. S. Spreme Court.

CARRIES MORE WEIGHT

In last month's decision to remove the school from city control, the Orphans Court held that Girard's stipulation that students be white carried more weight than the proviso that the city administer his estate.

The Orphans Court today also ruled as premature a state petition claiming the Girard estate, now estimated at 100 million dollars. The commonwealth's claim was based on a provision in the will which requires the city to admisister the estate. The state contends that changing the trustees from city to private hands violates the terms of the Girard will.

Colleges Wonder How Far The Girard Decision Goes

Sunday Star Washington, D.C.
Sun 6-2-57

By PHIL YEAGER and JOHN STARK

The so-called "Girard College Case," in which the Supreme Court outlawed racial discrimination in a private school, promises to take its place among the more controversial decisions of recent times.

Not only have the school's trustees, the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts, petitioned the Court to reconsider its decision, but other schools and colleges all over the country are wondering just how to take the whole thing.

A good example is little Haverford College, a 125-year-old Quaker school a few miles "down the pike" from Girard in Philadelphia.

Haverford has been wrestling with the problem of whether or not to accept a grant of Defense Department funds for research in organic chemistry. However, Haverford "discriminates." It discriminates on the basis of sex and, to a degree, religion. So the question is—

If Haverford accepts Federal money for research, does the Government—on the theory of a demonstrable public interest similar to that which brought Girard under court scrutiny—have the power to stop any discrimination in favor of male Quaker students?

On a practical plane the question may be far-fetched. So far as legal rationale is concerned, it may not be.

Educators Are Puzzled

Ever since the United States Supreme Court on April 29 upset the holding of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court regarding Girard College's traditional policy of restricting its enrollment to "poor white male orphans," educators have been mulling over the possible long-range meaning of the decision for privately endowed schools.

Girard College was established in 1848 in accordance with the will of Stephen Girard, who left $2 million to be administered by the city of Philadelphia for the education of "as many poor white male orphans . . . as the income shall be adequate to maintain."

After 106 years of conformance with these requirements, the college was challenged in 1954 by two Negro boys who met all the entrance qualifications except that of race. They claimed the school policy violated the 14th Amendment of the Constitution. This idea was rejected by the Orphan's Court of Philadelphia and the State Supreme Court, which said the argument did not apply to private schools.

The United States Supreme Court, however, in a brief per curiam order, ruled:

"The Board which operates Girard College is an agency of the State of Pennsylvania. Therefore, even though the Board was acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit (the two boys) to the college because they were Negroes was discrimination by the State. Such discrimination is forbidden by the Fourteenth Amendment."

No other reasoning, beyond a simple citation to the court's original anti-segregation ruling, was given.

Where Do They Stand

Where does this leave Haverford and other privately endowed schools which have, or may have, some kind of formal association with a Government agency?

They aren't sure.

Until the Girard decision, such institutions felt themselves beyond the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment. Now they are wondering if the principle relied upon in the Girard case cannot be applied in many types of cases besides the relatively few where some Government unit may be acting as trustee for an otherwise privately run institution.

Some educators, particularly those in the South, have expressed this belief. Dr. A. R. Meadows, Alabama State superintendent of education, has suggested that the Girard ruling might easily be made to apply to private educational institutions subject in any way to a State agency or receiving State grants—a proposition which, if valid, would hold equally true in the case of Federal aid.

Pennsylvania itself presents many instances in which private schools receive State grants. Between them the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Pittsburgh and Temple University come in for something like $20 million a year in State funds. While this is a contractual arrangement under which the schools agree to provide instruction for State students, it is mainly a legal "gimmick" since Pennsylvania students pay the same tuition as anyone else.

The fact that these schools, and others like them coast to coast, may not now be violating any current concepts of "discrimination" is beside the theoretical point. They might, under the Girard rationale, someday find themselves subject to any Fourteenth Amendment requirements which may become applicable to State institutions. So goes the argument. The same argument, of course, would apply to private schools at any level of education.

Ivy League Affected?

Such well-known private schools as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Notre Dame, California Institute of Technology, Case Institute of Cleveland and others are further examples of schools outside the deep South which practice some degree of "discrimination" based on either sex or religion, and which are apt to have formal relationships with government from time to time.

Are their scholastic and administrative policies subject to the Fourteenth Amendment?

What about the kind of situation existing in Maryland, which grants State money for students to attend private colleges? Or New York State, which gives money to private universities for housing and dormitory construction? Or California, which makes appropriations for basic research to be done by private institutions?

It should be emphasized that the kind of discrimination prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment in cases involving public or quasi-public institutions is only that which runs counter to public policy. Where education is concerned it has thus far generally been limited to discrimination based on race or color.

On the other hand, once the legal pattern has been molded there is no guarantee that other kinds of discrimination may not be banned in the future—such as that based on religion, sex, age or residence. (State schools like the Universities of Virginia and North Carolina, which "discriminate" against women at the undergraduate level by employing a kind of separate-but-equal educational system, may be brooding about this possibility.)

In any event, the Girard decision is thought by many to herald the enforcement of antidiscrimination principles, actual or potential, in almost any case where there is a "public interest" tie-in. If it can be done, as in the Girard case, when the school's only governmental connection is through a city board of directors acting as trustees in the administration of an individual's will, then it can be done where the State or Federal government is granting money to the discriminating private school—at least, so some people think.

Others believe it might even be applied in cases where a government agency enters into a contract with a private school to do a certain job, although this seems less likely.

A Further Extension

There is another important facet to the Girard ruling.

Could it be extended to private institutions or services other than educational ones? Could it, for example, be extended to cases where the State licenses an essential service such as those provided by doctors, lawyers, pharmacists, architects, engineers restaurateurs, and so on?

Maybe this sounds pretty remote.

However, in a California lawsuit decided just a few weeks ago a Negro brought a suit against a Los Angeles dentist who had refused to treat him because of his race. The plaintiff had argued that the dentist, as a publicly licensed practitioner of an essential service, was prohibited by constitutional principles from refusing to accept him as a patient.

While the California court ruled for the dentist, it did so at least partly in deference to the traditional reluctance of the courts to interfere with the doctor-patient relationship.

The point is, the question has been raised and has actually gone to court. The argument has been made. In future cases of the kind, the apparent "public interest" doctrine of the Girard case might be advanced in efforts to strengthen that argument.

GIRARD BIAS ORDER DELAYED BY BOARD

New York
Sat 6-22-57

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, June 21—The Board of City Trusts voted unanimously today to defer action on admitting Negro pupils to Girard College until the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided the issue.

The board solicitor, Joseph P. Gaffney, reminded the members that the United States Supreme Court, in reversing the state Supreme Court on April 29, had sent the case back to the Pennsylvania tribunal.

The United States court ruled that the board's refusal to admit two Negroes to the school founded of Stephen Girard for "poor white male orphans" was in effect racial discrimination by the state in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

In a letter read at the monthly meeting, Mayor Richardson Dilworth, who is in Europe, urged the board to drop its fight against admitting Negroes to Girard College.

"I cannot believe," Mr. Dilworth wrote, "that a responsible group, charged with a public duty, such as the directors of the Board of City Trusts, can seriously contemplate an attempt to evade the clear purpose and intent of the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

"I believe that if the directors now move promptly to comply with the ruling of the Supreme Court, the entire matter can be worked out in such a way that within a few years the scars of the fight will have vanished entirely, and Girard College will continue to have a student body and graduates of whom it can be extremely proud."

Court Act Bars Negroes From Orphans College

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 5 (UP)—Negroes will still be barred from the Girard College for orphaned boys as a result of action taken by the Orphans Court.

The court appointed 13 new trustees to replace the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts in administering the Girard estate, which governs the college.

The court also rejected three petitions asking reconsideration of a previous order removing the city trustees.

GIRARD COLLEGE is a 109-year-old boarding school supported by the 100-million-dollar estate of Stephen Girard. His will setting up the school stipulated that only "poor, white male orphans" be admitted.

THE WILL was contested and the U.S. Supreme Court held that to deny Negroes admission to the school because of race would be practicing discrimination by a state agency, the City Board of Trusts, and in violation of the 14th Amendment.

When the case went back to Orphans Court, which earlier had denied admission to two Negro boys, the court removed the estate from the control of the board of trusts.

City solicitors announced they will fight the latest ruling.

Court to review will with bequests for 'white only'

ATLANTIC CITY — The New Jersey State Superior Court said last week that it would review the $300,000 will of Mrs. Laura E. W. Tyler in view of the Girard College case decision by the U.S. Supreme Court.

In the Girard case the court held that the Philadelphia City Board of Trusts, a public agency, could not administer a trust restricted by racially discriminatory provisions.

Mrs. Tyler's will, also administered by the Board of Trusts, set up funds for the aid of "needy, white, American-born" dependents of inmates of Eastern State Penitentiary, and care of "white, American - born children under 14 with an intelligence quotient of 75 or over."

Girard College court fight centers around new trustees

By RUTH JENKINS

PHILADELPHIA

A battery of five attorneys arguing on behalf of integrating the student body at Girard College made an impressive presentation Thursday before the State Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

The U.S. Supreme Court said last April that the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts which administered Girard College is a state agency.

And no public agency can maintain the college only for "white male orphans" as stipulated by Stephen Girard's will.

SUCH OPERATION, said the U.S. Supreme Court, is racial discrimination which violates the constitutional rights of the two colored youngsters who otherwise qualify to attend the college.

But rather than order admission of these youngsters, the Orphans Court removed the city board of trustees and substituted a set of private individuals as trustees.

The High Court ruling would not apply to a private board.

Appearing before the State Supreme Court on Thursday, lawyers argued whether the Orphans Court had a rght to replace the board of trustees and what effect such a change would have.

At the conclusion of the four-hour hearing, the State Supreme Court granted the attorneys ten days in which to file new briefs on behalf of the boys seeking admittance to the college.

Attorneys who argued in favor of lowering the racial bars were:

Atty-General Thomas D. McBride for the state of Pennsylvania; City Solicitor David Berger and the former city solicitor, Abraham L. Freedman on behalf of the city;

William T. Coleman Jr. and Raymond Pace Alexander, on behalf of the student applicants, William A. Faust and Robert Felder.

Young Felder and his mother were among the 350 standing-room-only attendants at the hearing.

ARGUING in defense of the newly appointed private board of trustees was Arthur Littleton, former chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association.

Mr. Littleton opened his statement by declaring "This is not an argument for racial discrimination in public schools. In such case, I would not be here."

It was, he maintained, only a defense of the right to protect the provisions of Stephen Girard's will.

Attorneys for the state and city argued these points:

The Orphan's Court action in removing the board of trustees is illegal because it was taken without a hearing or notice to the principals, thus violating the "due process" clause of the constitutional.

The action was taken only to maintain discrimination at the college, another violation of the Constitution.

Under city control, the estate has prospered from $2,000,000 to $100,000,000 and therefore the board was removed without just cause.

That loss of the college trusteeship would result also in a city loss of $100,000 worth of other Girard trust benefits which have nothing to do with the school itself.

That city administration of the college has become too involved with other city contracts, project developments and legislation over a period of more than 100 years for the board to be removed summarily and arbitrarily.

THAT THE Orphan's Court acknowledge the satisfactory service of the old trustee board by renaming six of these persons to the new board. By requiring them to resign in order to serve in the new capacity as private trustees, the Court is violating their Constitutional rights.

Mr. Coleman held that from the moment the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the administrative board had no right to maintain discrimination at the college, his clients were entitled to admission without further ado.

And that subsequent action by the Orphans Court to circumvent this directive is un-Constitutional.

Mr. Alexander pointed out that Stephen Girard understandably inserted the racial restriction in his will in keeping with the way of life before the Civil War.

But social, moral and legal changes since then raised the citizenship status of the colored citizen. And if Girard were living today, he would make a will in accordance with today's situation.

That Girard was outspoken and specific in other phases of his will where he intended that no adjustments should be made "not ever." But he made no such stipulation regarding student qualifications.

Summarily, the attorneys argued that the will indicates that to Girard himself, the matter of city operation of the college was more important than the racial restriction.

And that today, from the standpoint of city benefits, the matter of city trusteeship of the college is more important than the racial restriction.

Particularly, they emphasized, during these crucial times, it is the moral obligation of government agencies to encourage educational opportunities rather than restrict them on the basis of race.

On the other side, Mr. Littleton maintained that the U.S. Supreme Court ruled only that the "board of trustees" was a public agency; and not the college itself.

So, he said, the Orphans Court had the "right, the power and the duty" to change the board from public to private in order to conduct the college in accordance with Girard's wishes.

Girard College Case Goes To U. S. Supreme Court

Inquirer Philadelphia, Pa. p. 11
Wed. 2-13-57

A joint appeal by the City of Philadelphia, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and counsel for two Negro boys was filed with the U. S. Supreme Court in Washington yesterday asking the court to rule against racial discrimination at Girard College.

The appeal was taken from a decision of the Philadelphia Orphans' Court and the Pennsylvania Supreme Court which upheld the clause in Stephen Girard's will restricting enrollment in the college to "poor white male orphan children."

The U. S. Supreme Court was specifically asked to rule that limitation on the enrollment was a violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. This amendment provides that no State may deny to any person the equal protection and due process of law.

The appeal said that although the source of the funds for Girard College was private, the institution was in "public control"—administered by the City Board of Trusts—and should come under the provisions of the 14th Amendment.

Signing the appeal for the State were Attorney General Thomas D. McBride and Deputy Attorney General Lois G. Forer. The city, which spearheaded the legal action initially, was represented by former City Solicitor Abraham L. Freedman, Assistant City Solicitor David E. Pinsky and Freedman's successor, David Berger. Berger appointed Freedman as special counsel in the test.

Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander and William G. Coleman, Jr., are attorneys for the two Negro boys seeking admittance to Girard College. The boys are William Ashe Foust and Robert Felder.

Asked if there was any significance in the fact that the appeal was taken on Lincoln's birthday, Berger said, "All things being equal in the matter, we decided it was most appropriate to file it this day."

The next step in the long litigation will be for the City Board of Trusts to file an answer to the appeal. The case will then be listed for argument.

Girard Trustees Fight Bias Appeal to U. S.

Inquirer
Wed. 3-13-57

The U. S. Supreme Court was asked yesterday by the Board of City Trusts to dismiss an appeal by Pennsylvania, Philadelphia and counsel for two Negro boys seeking to desegregate Girard College.

The boys were denied admission to the institution because a stipulation in the will of Stephen Girard provided that only "poor, white male orphans" were eligible to become students.

The effort to break that provision to open the institution to all regardless of creed or color was turned down by the State Supreme Court last Nov. 12 when the court voted 5 to 1 against breaking the Girard will. Later the court turned down a joint petition for argument.

Philadelphia, Pa.

The two local governments and counsel for the boys in their joint appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court contended the State court decision violated the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

The Board of City Trusts, a city agency, administers the funds by which Girard College is maintained and operated. Its appeal opposing the action of the State and city to desegregate the school was filed by Joseph P. Gaffney and Owen B. Rhoads, counsel for the board.

The brief declared that the contest of the will "stripped of misleading statements and arguments, is not a case of racial discrimination but one involving the basic concepts of the law of charitable trusts."

The board's counsel said the only difference between the school and any other charitable trust is that the administration of the private funds endowing Girard College has been entrusted to

Supreme Court Rules Out Segregation At College Founded By Girard Bequest

Advertiser Tues. 4-30-57 p. 10

Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, April 29 (AP)—The Supreme Court today ruled out racial segregation in Philadelphia's Girard College, which for 109 years has admitted only "poor white male orphans" as specified in the will of its founder.

In a unanimous, unsigned decision, the court held that the board of directors of City Trust of Philadelphia, which administers the school, is an agency of the State of Pennsylvania.

Therefore, even though the board was acting as a trustee, the court said its refusal to admit two boys to the school "because they were Negroes was discrimination by the state." "Such discrimination is forbidden by the 14th Amendment," it added.

The court cited its 1954 decision holding racial segregation in public schools to be unconstitutional.

French-born Stephen Girard, who amassed a vast fortune as a miner, merchant and banker, left most of his estate to Philadelphia for various municipal purposes when he died in 1831 at the age of 80.

A major bequest was two million dollars to establish Girard College. The will named the City of Philadelphia as trustee to set up and operate a school for "poor white male orphans."

The college opened in 1848 and until 1869 was under the direct charge of the City Council and its various committees. Because of dissatisfaction with the manner in which it was managed, the State Legislature in 1869 transferred direction of the school to the board of directors of City Trust, which includes city officials.

The case in which the court acted today began in February 1954, when William Ash Foust and Robert Felder applied for admission to the school. The board of directors at City Trust adopted a resolution rejecting their applications as contrary to Girard's will.

The board and all other parties involved in the litigation conceded the two boys had all qualifications for admission, save race.

The boys petitioned Orphans' Court in Philadelphia to order the board to admit them. They alleged the board's action violated the 14th Amendment, which guarantees all citizens equal protection of the law.

Orphans' Court ruled the city could exclude Negroes without violating the 14th Amendment. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court, in November, 1956, with one judge dissenting, affirmed the ruling of the Orphans' Court.

The two Negro boys then asked the Supreme Court to overturn the state court decision. They were supported by Atty. Gen. Thomas D. McBride of Pennsylvania and Mayor Richardson Dilworth of Philadelphia, among others.

Girard's estate of two million dollars had grown to 98 million by 1955, with an annual income of $2,211,000.

The school is located in the heart of Philadelphia in what is now substantially a Negro area. It maintains about 1,130 boys annually.

The Supreme Court did not go into the question of whether Girard is a public or private school. It merely held that the board which operates it is an agency of the state and as such cannot discriminate on racial grounds.

Still Hoping to Keep Out Negroes

Courier Sat. 5-11-57 Pittsburgh, Pa.

Girard College May Oppose High Court

P. 3

PHILADELPHIA — As many Philadelphians hailed the latest ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court which orders Girard College to admit Negroes, the college's governing board, the Board of City Trusts, mapped plans to continue to keep Girard all-white.

• Convinced that the austere court erred, the board now has two attorneys preparing to appeal the ruling in order to deny the admittance of Negro orphans.

Editor's note: The money of black men may have been part of the financial basis of Girard College. As one of the financial "advisers" to the Haitian liberator Toussaint L'Overture, Girard, who arrived in Philadelphia in 1777, reportedly fled with the bulk of Haiti's treasury when L'Overture was driven into exile.

Shortly after the ruling which ended a three-year battle, the board voted 12-1 to appeal the case and uphold the will of the late Mr. Girard that the college be limited to "poor, white, male orphans." Mayor Richardson Dilworth, the lone dissenter on the board, claimed an appeal would worsen already difficult problems in the city.

The Supreme Court ruled that the board was a state agency and therefore, under the 14th Amendment, had to admit Negroes to the institution.

• Atty. Raymond Pace Alexander, this city's only Negro Councilman, who led the fight against Girard's segregation, said the board's action was an "idle gesture."

He said it was a pity that the city was put into "the same position as the Deep Southern states which refuse to take the Supreme Court ruling."

PERHAPS TYPICAL of the rejoicing of the ruling which was similar to that greeting the Supreme Court's school integration ruling in May, 1954, were the remarks of Rev. Hiawatha Coleman, pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist Church, 50th and Woodland Ave.

The clergyman said: "The decision is one of the finest things that ever happened. I had often wondered why we have fought the South so hard when such institutions as Girard College and its pointedly race-biased will was allowed to operate right under our noses. It was one of the best decisions ever handed down by the Supreme Court."

RAYMOND P. ALEXANDER, the attorney who fought the case to the Supreme Court, was jubilant over this victory and was prepared for it.

He said Tuesday that at least a dozen boys will apply for admission to the school within a month. They are now being processed.

The initial group will include Robert Fe[illegible]er, one of the two youths who saw the case through to the Supreme Court.

The other youngster, William Foust, does not qualify because he is over the 10-year age limit, and his mother was remarried recently. Only fatherless youngsters are eligible.

MR. ALEXANDER urged all churches, regardless of denomination, to co-operate in recommending eligible boys. Applications are welcomed from individuals too.

Any family interested should write to Mr. Alexander at Room 404, City Hall or to the Fellowship Commission, 260 S. 15th St., Maurice Fagan, executive director.

12 orphans for Girard

The one word "denied" was stamped Monday on the petition of the Philadelphia Board of the City Trust which had appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court to reconsider its directive opening Girard College to colored youths.

By this action the High Court upheld its April 29 ruling that the college is operated by a state agency which cannot discriminate.

In accordance with the will of Stephen Girard, whose money founded the school, the board of trust, acting as trustee, had limited the college student body to "poor, white male orphans."

Girard Decision May Hit 3 Other Trusts Run by City

Inquirer Philadelphia Pa. Sun. 5-5-57

By SAUL SCHRAGA

The U. S. Supreme Court's shattering blow against color discrimination at Girard College has cast doubt upon the legality of barriers imbedded in three other trusts administered by the Board of Directors of City Trusts.

The status of these funds, among the 92 controlled by the board, may require judicial clarification in view of the Supreme Court's dictum that the agency, being an arm of the State government, violated the 14th amendment of the Constitution by refusing to enroll Negro students at Girard College.

The will of Stephen Girard, Colonial merchant prince who left millions to establish the college, specified that only "poor, male white orphan children" were to be admitted.

The three funds upon which attention now is focused are:

The Stephen Girard Fuel Fund, set up, like the Girard College bequest, under the will of Girard. It created a fund of $10,000 to provide fuel for "poor white housekeepers and roomkeepers of good character" living in the old city.

The Thomas D. Grover Fund, established in 1849 by a philanthropic wharf builder. Now totaling about $240,000, the fund provides, among other things, fuel for "white widows of respectable character."

The Inez Walsh Fulton Scholarship Fund of $23,000, created in 1945, to pay for a scholarship at Jefferson Medical College "for a Protestant graduate of Girard College."

Reversing a ruling by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, the Federal tribunal held that so long as a governmental body administers the Girard estate, Negro applicants must be considered, despite the will's stipulation that students must be white.

HEARING ASKED

The unanimous decision of the U. S. Supreme Court is being appealed by the Board of Directors of City Trusts, which has directed its counsel, Joseph P. Gaffney, to file a request for oral hearing.

Lawyers believe that the high court's ruling does not automatically invalidate the conditions of the other trusts specifying a particular race or religion. They think, however, that with the Girard College precedent, it would be comparatively simple to knock out the biased provisions.

Meanwhile, veterans of the Philadelphia Charter Commission, who wrote the present city charter in 1949 and 1950, recalled yesterday one decision which cost the city three years of litigation in its battle to open the doors of 109-year-old Girard College to Negroes.

FREEDMAN OVERRULED

One of the drafting committee which drew up the charter was Abraham L. Freedman, who became City Solicitor when the Home Rule Charter went into effect in January, 1952. Freedman sought to include the Board of City Trusts under the charter but was overruled by a majority of the commission.

Had the board been under the charter, Freedman as solicitor would only have had to write a formal opinion declaring that the board must admit Negro as well as white orphans to the school.

Instead, the board was left independent, and when the city sought to change the "whites only" policy, the board's counsel appeared in court as the city's opponent.

ATTACK IN COURTS

The issue was first tackled by the city's Commission on Human Relations in 1953. Freedman was unable to persuade the board to join in asking the Orphans Court to drop the word "white" from the will, and the decision was made to attack it in court.

To have a cause, it was decided to have young Negro orphans apply for admission, and Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander, whose wife, Sadie, was a member of the Human Relations Commission, made formal application on behalf of six youngsters.

The applications were refused on the ground that the will would not permit their entrance into the school and the long process of litigation began in the summer of 1954.

STATE INTERVENED

The city and Alexander lost the first round before Orphans Court Judge Robert V. Bolger. Then, at Judge Bolger's suggestion, the State intervened, and Deputy Attorney General Lois Forer was assigned to the case. She recommended intervention on the city's side.

Later as the case went before the full Orphans' Court and the State Supreme Court, others joined. City administrations changed in 1956, and David Berger became City Solicitor as Freedman resigned. But Berger acceded to Freedman's request to be allowed to continue as unpaid counsel.

William T. Coleman, a Negro and a member of Mayor Richardson Dilworth's former law firm, joined Alexander as counsel for the applicants now down to two boys for technical reasons, and Coleman brought in a friend, Louis Pollack, Yale law professor.

They lost in the State Supreme Court, 5-to-1, with Justice Michael A. Musmanno vigorously dissenting. In March, the appeal went to the Nation's highest court on Constitutional grounds. Last Monday, without even having heard argument, the Federal tribunal announced its unanimous decision.

High Court Rules Girard Must Admit Negro Students

Tulsa Okla. P. 6
Thurs. 5-9-57

By Alice A. Dunigan

WASHINGTON, (ANP) — As long as Girard college is operated by the city of Philadelphia or the state of Pennsylvania it must admit Negro students regardless of provisions left in Stephen Girard's will. This was the ruling of the United States Supreme Court, Monday, in a suit brought against the Board of Directors of the Girard Trust Fund by the city and state in which the school is located.

The case originated in Philadelphia on March 1, 1954, when Girard college denied the admission of two Negro youths solely because of their race.

The denial was in accord with a will left by Stephen Girard who died December 28, 1831, leaving a will which provided that $2,000,000 of his estate be used to establish and operate a school for boys in Philadelphia. The "college" was to admit "as many poor white male orphans, between the ages of six and ten years, as the said income shall be adequate to maintain."

The will named the City of Philadelphia as the trustee. The provisions of the will were carried out by the State and the city and the college was opened in 1848. Since 1869, by virtue of an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature the trust has been administered and the college operated by the Board of Directors of City Trusts of the City of Philadelphia.

After young Foust and Felder were denied admission to the college in February 1954, they petitioned the Orphan's Court of Philadelphia County for an order directing the board to admit them, alleging that their exclusion because race violated the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

The State of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia joined in the suit also contending that the Board's action violated the 14th Amendment.

The Orphan's court rejected the constitutional contention and refused to order the applicants' admission. This ruling was later affirmed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

In reversing the State Supreme Court Ruling, the United States Supreme Court pointed out that "even though the Board was acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit Foust and Felder to the college because they were Negroes was discrimination by the State. Such discrimination is forbidden by the fourteenth Amendment."

A Philadelphia College To Nullify The Supreme Court

Advertiser P. 4-A
Montgomery Ala.
Wed. 5-22-57

In The Girard College case, as we recently commented, the U.S. Supreme Court indicated how far it was prepared to go to detect "state action" and thus make private institutions subject to the 14th Amendment rulings. This was a warning against "private school" action by Southern legislatures.

Girard College in Philadelphia was privately endowed under an ancient will to admit only "poor white male orphans." Negroes challenged the barrier, but the Pennsylvania Supreme Court said that the will meant what it said about "poor white male orphans" and that was that. Traditionally, a state court's ruling on the intent of a will is final.

But the U.S. Supreme Court decided that since the trustee of the college was the Board of City Trusts and the Board was created by an 1869 act of the legislature, the Board is an agency of the state. Hence the required state action making Girard College subject to the 14th Amendment rulings that the states may not discriminate against individuals on the basis of race, religion or color.

However, this was not the end of it. In an oddly Southern tack, Girard College seems to be determined to remain white. The Philadelphia Bulletin's story on the effort, headed "Plan Studied To Keep Girard A White School," said the Board of City Trusts will be removed as administrator of the Girard will, the Board will agree to offer no resistance to the move, and a private group "including some members of the present board," will be set up to administer the will as a "private, nongovernmental unit."

At bottom of course is a determination, in spite of the Supreme Court, to carry out Girard's will. This plan will naturally be denounced as a "shocking" attempt to evade the Supreme Court ruling.

There are obvious parallels between the plight of the Girard trustees and the predicament of Southern legislatures attempting to carry out the will of the people.

In the Girard case the answer seems relatively simple: a little legal abracadabra and a state agency becomes a private agency. In the case of Southern schools, though the situation is similar, the problems are infinitely more difficult—a public school does not become private simply by calling it that.

Girard Alumni To Fight Ruling

Inquirer P. 18
Wed. 5-8-57
Philadelphia Pa.

Members of the Girard College Alumni Association resolved unanimously last night to fight the Spreme Court decision which opened the college to properly qualified Negroes notwithstanding the specific provisions of Stephen Girard's will.

The alumni board of governors organized a committee "for the defense of the will of Stephen Girard," pointing out that in so doing it was "fighting to uphold the basic right of every American to dispose of his property as his own conscience dictates."

To finance that effort, Girard College alumni pledged the association's resources and "such resources of its members and others as they shall make available" to the committee.

Also at the meeting the alumni association's president, Harry G. Schad, of the Class of 1920, resigned because of his appointment to the Board of City Trusts, which administers Girard's will. Elected as his successor was Edward W. Oescher, of the Class of 1907.

Supreme Court Rules in Girard Case

Daily Tribune P. 8-R

BY PHILIP DODD
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washingon, April 29—The United States Supreme court ruled unanimously today that the exclusion of Negroes from privately owned Girard school in Philadelphia in unconstitutional.

In an unsigned order, the court said the board which operates the 109-year old institution for young boys is an agency of the state of Pennsylvania and the exclusion of Negroes from it is "discrimination by the state."

The order cited the court's May 17, 1954, opinion which outlawed racial segregation in public schools. Two Negro youths, William Ashe Foust and Robert Felder, had been denied admission to Girard in February, 1954, and then started suit in the state courts.

Founded in 1848

Girard "college" as it is legally known, was founded in 1848 under the terms of a will by Stephen Girard creating the school for "poor white male orphans." The Pennsylvania Supreme court said the terms were "crystal clear and refused to order Foust and Felder admitted.

But the high court today reversed the Pennsylvania judgment and sent the case back for "further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

In another major case, the Supreme court held 6 to 2 that aliens who have been ordered deported may not be compelled to answer questions about communist activities.

Case Involves Chicagoan

The decision, by Justice Frankfurter, was in a case involving George I. Witkovich, a pressman for the Slovenian-English newspaper Prosveta in Chicago, whom the government wants to deport to Yugoslavia.

Witkovich had been indicted under the 1952 immigration and nationality act which makes it a crime for an individual under a deportation order to fail to give the attorney general information about his habits. He had refused to answer questions about communism.

Frankfurter said in his opinion questions directed to aliens under deportation orders must be confined to those concerning the individual's availability for deportation.

Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Douglas, Harlan, and Brennan joined Frankfurter in the majority opinion. Justices Burton and Clark dissented and Justice Whittaker did not participate in the decision.

Other Actions of Court

In other actions, the court:

1. Ruled that welfare fund payments must be included in the federal wage protection accorded laborers on government construction projects. The case involved the Carter Construction company which went broke on two air force construction jobs in California.

Under the 1935 Miller act, firms with federal contracts of more than $2,000 must make bonds guaranteeing payment for labor and material. Carter made such a bond but failed to pay 7½ cents an hour per worker into a union health and welfare fund under a collective bargaining contract.

Refuse Irvin Hearing

2. Refused a hearing to Leslie Irvin, known in Indiana as the "mad dog killer," who is under a death sentence for killing six persons in the Evansville area.

3. Denied a hearing to Louis B. Saperstein, Newark, N. J., insurance broker, convicted of contempt in 1954 for refusing to identify wiretapped conversations—admissible as evidence in New York where he was tried.

4. Agreed to hear arguments in a dispute over a proposed parody of the film "Gaslight" on Jack Benny's television program. Two lower courts have barred the showing at the request of Loew's Inc., producers of "Gaslight."

Can your boy go to Girard College?

Do you have a boy who qualifies to attend Girard College?

Sat. 5-18-57

Although it is called a college, the institution is a free boarding school for fatherless boys under 18. Students are admitted twice yearly, in February and in September.

To be eligible for admission, a boy must be between 6 and 10 years of age. His father must be dead and his mother or guardian financially unable to give him education.

HE MUST be physically sound, show promise of good scholastic performance and be able to fit into group social life. Although Pennsylvania-born boys are given preference, boys born elsewhere are also accepted.

Students may remain at the college until they are graduated, reach their 18th birthday, are dismissed or are withdrawn.

Girard College offers complete maintenance and education through elementary and high school. The school assumes all costs of a student's care with the exception of his vacations at home.

Boys who have reached the 5th grade may visit their homes, if nearby, on Sunday. Weekend visits are permitted to boys whose homes are within five hours travel distance.

The majority of the students return home for 13 weeks of vacation yearly — at Christmas, at Easter and during the summer.

Ordinarily, visiting at the college is limited to two 'Mothers' Days during the school year. But mothers and other interested persons are encouraged to visit at any time for consultation on special problems or situations.

BOYS UP to the age of 12 live in groups of 25 to 30 under the care of experienced women. Each group has its own dining room, play room and sleeping quarters.

Older boys live in dormitories under housemasters. Members of the senior class occupy their own building.

The college has a double curriculum offering an academic course leading to college entrance, supplemented by either trade or business training.

Graduates are fitted for positions as office workers, draftsmen, wood workers, pattern makers, machinists, electricians, printers, auto mechanics, sheet metal workers or foundry workers. A large number of graduates attend leading colleges and universities.

Chapel services, with scripture reading and prayer, are carried on daily.

Nonsectarian Sunday services are conducted. Students ask a blessing before each meal and each boy is encouraged to pursue the religion desired by his family.

Thirteen acres of the campus are devoted to recreation purposes. Two indoor swimming pools are in use daily. A large recreation hall serves games, sports, instrumental music and a military batallion.

Girard teams meet the teams of leading Philadelphia public and independent schools in soccer, swimming, track, basketball, baseball and fencing.

MUSIC opportunities include instruction on an instrument, and participation in the choir, glee club and band.

Classes in art and clubs for handcrafts, model airplane building, photography and other hobbies are available. Scouting also is encouraged.

The college maintains a job placement service which annually is responsible for the placement of several hundred former Girard students.

The institution boasts a handsome 42-acre campus at Girard and Corinthian Aves. in North Philadelphia.

In accordance with Stephen Girard's will, it is surrounded by a 16-foot stone wall, eight feet of which are underground.

FIGHT IS PLEDGED BY GIRARD ALUMNI

They Criticize Court Ruling Letting Negroes in College —Citizens' Rights Cited

Sun. 5-12-57

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11—The Girard College Alumni Association has pledged its resources to fight the United States Supreme Court ruling that opened the way for Negro boys to enter the century-old school.

Edward W. Oescher, newly elected president of the Alumni Board of Governors, reported that the board had organized a committee "for the defense of the will of Stephen Girard." He added that the association was doing more than merely defending one man's will.

"It is a fight," he said, "to uphold the basic rights of every American to dispose of his property as his own conscience dictates."

In his will Mr. Girard left more than $5,000,000 for the erection and maintenance of a school for "poor white male orphans." The Supreme Court ruled that since the Board of City Trusts, a public body, administered the school, race restriction amounted to racial discrimination and was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

The alumni say that discrimination is not involved and that the court opinion "breaks" Mr. Girard's will. The association's stand supports the decision of the Board of City Trusts to ask the Supreme Court for an oral hearing of arguments in the case.

The alumni board also passed a resolution declaring itself "unalterably opposed to any relaxation of the full and complete performance of the terms of the will." To finance the effort, the board pledged the resources of the alumni association, augmented by "such resources of its members and others as they shall make available."

Girard College occupies forty-two acres enclosed within a high stone wall on the outskirts of the mid-city area. Now in the midst of a densely populated residential neighborhood, with a high percentage of Negroes, it was "out in the country" when Mr. Girard purchased the site in 1831.

The school was opened in 1848. It has a courent enrollment of 1,051 fatherless boys, ranging in age from 6 to 18. Maintenance costs more than $2,000,000 annually or about $1,900 a pupil.

A delaying tactic

(An Editorial)

It was George F. Norton, retired assistant treasurer of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who led the fight in the Board of City Trusts to ask the Supreme Court for a recommendation of its Girard College case ruling.

Baltimore Md.

Disappointingly, ten other members of the board went along with him.

The only dissenting vote was cast, as was to be expected, by Mayor Richardson Dilworth, an ex-officio member of the board.

Sat. 5-18-57

MR. NORTON, IN persuading the board to seek a re-hearing let loose with an outburst of racism which would have done credit to Mississippi's James O. Eastland.

p. 12

"Some of my best friends are N- - - rs. But we wouldn't be doing them a favor by breaking down one of the finest institutions in Pennsylvania."

This is an amazing statement, coming as it does from a member of an official board of the City of Brotherly Love.

Does Dr. Morton actually believe the admission of colored male orphans to Girard would "break down" that 126-year-old institution?

And do the ten other members of the Board of City Trusts actually share this bigoted view?

If so, their thinking is not one whit different from that of Virginia's Byrd, Georgia's Talmadge or South Carolina's Thurmond.

Further, in voting to petition for a re-hearing, the board, four of whose members are lawyers, know full well that this is purely a delaying tactic; that the Supreme Court is as likely to reverse itself as the Susquehanna is of running back up into the mountains.

Delay, evasion and defiance on this issue are not too surprising in the less civilized communities, but it comes as a rude shock to decent Philadelphians to find a responsible agency of their enlightened city resorting to identical tactics.

Girard—Banker, Ship Owner and Farmer

STEPHEN GIRARD, an immigrant who made good, led a lonely and self-centered life, despite the fact that he was the leading Philadelphian of his day, which spanned the 18th and 19th centuries.

The origin of his interest in education for orphans is easily seen in the fact that he himself was left an orphan by the death of his mother when he was 12, and in his own scanty education.

Son of Pierre Girard, a burgess of Bordeaux, France, and a seafaring man who became captain of his town's port, Stephen left home at the age of 14 to follow the sea. At 23, he was a ship's captain, with experience in many parts of the world.

He first saw Philadelphia in May, 1777, when he anchored in the Delaware, and liked it so much he came ashore and rented a store to go into business. He had to flee the city at times during the Revolution, but always returned to his store on Water st.

As his business interests prospered, Girard became more closely identified with Philadelphia, to which he gave more devotion than most native sons. During the yellow fever epidemics of 1793 and 1797-98, he gave money and contributed his own efforts to the sick and dying, and won the plaudits of his fellow-citizens for it.

He was elected a member of the city council in 1802, and at the same time was engaged in the field of banking, an activity which was to spread his fame over international boundaries and build his fortune. When the charter of the first Bank of the United States expired, he took over the building, named it the Bank of Stephen Girard, and developed it into one of the country's great financial houses.

Shortly after Girard arrived in Philadelphia, he married Mary Lum, daughter of a shipbuilder, and settled with her in Mount Holly, N. J. Their happiness was shattered when the wife's mind broke, and she died in Pennsylvania Hospital in 1815, leaving behind a lonely man, childless.

Toward the end of his days he bought a farm in South Philadelphia, and although it was a strange activity for him, he brought to it the same practical mind that had given him success in trade and finance.

To this farm, in Passyunk, he kept going whenever he sought surcease from the pressures of business.

"At my age," he wrote a friend, "the sole amusement which I enjoy, is to be in the country constantly busy, in attending to the work of the farm generally, and also to my fruit trees, several of which, say about 300, I have imported from France, and I hope will be useful to our country."

At his death in 1831, Girard had three ships plying his old West Indies and European sea lanes, and had another building.

His will left $140,000 to relatives and charities; $300,000 to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for internal improvement; $500,000 to the City of Philadelphia; and the residue, more than $6,000,000, as a trust for educating "poor, white orphan boys."

The relatives, who got the smallest part of the estate, engaged the famous Daniel Webster in an effort to break the will, but were unable to do so.

STEPHEN GIRARD

Supreme Court Ruling In Girard College Case

Inquirer Tues. 4-30-57
Philadelphia Pa. P.3

Following is the United States Supreme Court opinion in the Girard College case:

Pennsylvania vs. Board of City Trusts of Philadelphia.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is reversed. The cause is remanded for further proceedings.

The motion to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction is granted. 28 U.S.C. No. 2517 (2). Treating the papers as a petition for writ of certiorari. 28 U.S.C. No. 2103, the petition is granted. 28 U.S.C. 1257 (3).

Stephen Girard in a will probated in 1831 left a fund in trust for the erection, maintenance and operation of a "college."

'WHITE MALE ORPHANS'

The will provided that the college was to admit "as many poor, white male orphans between the ages of 6 and 10 years as the said income should be adequate to maintain."

The will named as trustees the City of Philadelphia.

The provisions of the will were carried out by the State and the city and the college was opened in 1848. Since 1869, by virtue of an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature, the trust has been administered and the college operated by the "Board of Directors of City Trusts of the City of Philadelphia." Pa. Laws of 1869, No. 176. P.S. Pa. Annotated 1957. Title 53 No. 1365.

ADMISSION REFUSED

In February, 1954, the petitioners, Foust and Felder, applied for admission to the college. They met all the qualifications except that they were Negroes. For this reason the board refused to admit them.

They petitioned to the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia county for an order directing the board to admit them, alleging that their exclusion because of race violated the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

The State of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia joined in the suit, also contending that the board's action violated the 14th Amendment. The Orphans' Court rejected the Constitutional contention and refused to order the applicants' admission. 4 D. & C. 2d, 671 (Orphans' Court of Philadelphia.)

AGENCY OF STATE

This was affirmed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court 386 Pa. 548. The board which operated Girard College is an agency of the State of Pennsylvania.

Therefore, even though the board was acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit Foust and Felder to the college because they were Negroes was discrimination by the State. Such discrimination is forbidden by the 14th Amendment: Brown V. Board of Education. 347 U. S. 483. Accordingly, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Ruling Backs Admission of Two Students

Opinion Climaxes Four-Year Battle To End Racial Ban

The United States Supreme Court yesterday opened the doors of Girard College to Negro students for the first time in the 109-year history of the school.

Climaxing a four-year battle to erase the word "white" from the qualifications for admission listed in Stephen Girard's will, the Nation's highest tribunal held that the color bar violated the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

STATE DISCRIMINATION

The court held that the Board of Lirectors of the City Trusts, which administers Girard's estate, was an "agency of the State of Pennsylvania," and therefore discrimination by the board constituted discrimination by the State.

The high court's unanimous ruling was a direct reversal of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court which on last Nov. 12 rejected the argument that Girard College was publicly administered.

The case was sent back to the State Supreme Court "for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

LOOPHOLE POSSIBLE

Legal observers believed this meant the State court was to issue a new order telling the Board of City Trusts to admit 9-year-old William Ashe Foust, of 5337 Market st., and 8-year-old Robert Felder, of 2619 N. 29th st., both Negroes, whose applications were refused three years ago.

There was a possibly tiny loophole discernible in the ruling. This was the U. S. Supreme Court's finding that the banning of Negro students was illegal because it was done by public officials administering the school.

In some quarters there was a suggestion that by reorganizing, and setting up a private board of directors with no "public" connection, the school could continue to bar Negro students.

BERGER HITS IDEA

But City Solicitor David Berger threw cold water on any such idea. He said it would "do violence to the will" of Girard to "even suggest that a trustee other than the City of Philadelphia" should administer the estate.

Inquirer

Berger, who declared he was "elated" by the decision, said "we will wait for a mandate to come down," and then, if necessary, petition the State Supreme Court to issue an order directing the admission of Foust and Felder.

Joseph P. Gaffney, solicitor for the Board of City Trusts, said determination of what was to be done about admission of Negroes to Girard College was the responsibility of a state court—either the Pennsylvania Supreme Court or the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia.

The Justices of the U. S. Supreme Court, he said, did not order what was to be done.

RARE DECISION

"They didn't decide that these boys (Foust and Felder) are to be admitted," he explained. "They say it is up to another court to determine what is to be done under this particular opinion."

He emphasized a state court must rule so that the board "knows how to act." He suggested whatever state court assumed jurisdiction could "indicate a procedure" prior to the next meeting of the Board of City Trusts on May 17.

The decision, a rare type in that it reversed a State Supreme Court without hearing argument, was a victory for the city, the State,

14th Amendment Cited by Court

Inquirer p.3
Tues. 4-30-57
Philadelphia Pa.

The first two sections of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, on which the Supreme Court's decision in the Girard College case was based, follow:

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Girard Will Aimed High

STEPHEN GIRARD's will, dated Feb. 16, 1830, states in part:

"And whereas I have been for a long time impressed with the importance of educating the poor . . .

"And I am particularly desirous to provide for such a number of poor male white orphan children, as can be trained in one institution, a better education as well as a more comfortable maintenance than they usually receive from the application of public funds . . .

"Now, I do give devise and bequeath all the residue and remainder of my real and personal estate of every sort and kind and wheresoever situate (the real estate in Pennsylvania charged as aforesaid) unto The Mayor, Aldermen and citizens of Philadelphia their successors and assigns in trust to and for the several uses intents and purposes hereinafter mentioned and declared of and concerning the same . . .

which joined in the case, and three lawyers who fought it through.

One of these was Abraham L. Freedman, who was City Solicitor when the initial attempt to force the Girard College doors open to Negroes was made, and who, after he was succeeded in office by Berger, continued as voluntary counsel because of his interest in the matter.

"It's a tremendous victory," Freedman said yesterday. "This is a decision of extraordinary importance. I am naturally gratified."

ALEXANDER IN FIGHT

The other two lawyers are Negroes. One is Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander, who touches off the fight with a demand for admission of Negro pupils in July, 1954, and who put a resolution through Council supporting his stand.

The other is William T. Coleman, a member of the firm of Dilworth, Paxon, Kalish and Green and former law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, who joined Alexander as counsel for the two Negro boys who were chosen as test cases, out of an original group of six for whom admission was sought.

Alexander was jubilant over the Supreme Court's ruling but cautioned it did not mean there would be a flood of applications by Negro boys.

DILWORTH PLEASED

"We will seek the admission of a limited number of boys who can prove their worth," he said.

Mayor Richardson Dilworth, happy over the decision, said Girard, in drawing his will, had intended to benefit the city in which he lived.

"The effect of the court's decision will, I am confident, do just that," the Mayor said, "in that it affirms the view of an enlightened society that educational opportunities should be provided without discrimination by reason of race, creed or color."

Dr. E. Newbold Cooper, president of Girard College, would not comment on the court decision, which he had not seen, but said he was prepared to admit Negro boys to the school if the Board of City Trusts directed him to do so.

The college now has about 50 vacancies, he said, which if filled would bring the total enrollment to 1100 students.

CITES '54 DECISION

In holding that the ban against Negroes was discrimination by a State, forbidden by the 14th Amendment, the high court cited its own 1954 decision in the public school segregation case.

The clause in the Girard will affected by yesterday's decision was the one that provided that a candidate for admission to Girard College must be a "male white orphan, between the ages of 6 and 10," and of limited means.

In the lower courts, the attempt to change it ran into the intense regard for the sanctity of a will to its last word. The Freedman-Alexander-Coleman group pointed out that the will had already been changed in two respects—one when the Board of City Trusts was permitted to dispose of real estate against the express wishes of the testator, and again when an orphan was interpreted to be a boy with only one parent dead.

HEARD BY BOLGER

Judge Robert V. Bolger, who heard testimony in Orphans' Court, ruled on July 29, 1955, that the will could not be changed and that the color ban must remain. He was upheld on November 22, 1955, by the Orphans' Court en banc.

An appeal was taken to the State Supreme Court, and on last Nov. 12 that court backed the lower court, by a 5-to-1 margin. Horace Stern, then Chief Justice, wrote the majority opinion, which declared that "a man's prejudices are a part of his liberty" and that the school could go on barring Negroes, since it was not a public institution.

MUSMANNO DISSENTS

The sole dissenter was Justice Michael A. Musmanno, who, in a blistering dissent, took issue with his colleagues on virtually every point and poo-poohed the thought that to eliminate racial discrimination would be an attack on the sanctity of wills.

At the hearings before Judge Bolger, sociologists and educators were brought in by the city and its allies to prove that it was not only legally wrong to bar colored boys from the school, but that the white students suffered from this ban.

They were deprived, these witnesses said, of the opportunity to mingle with persons different in appearance from themselves, and so went forth from school lacking a preparation for life available in public schools.

ON 42-ACRE TRACT

Alexander launched his attack in July, 1953, after it came to his attention that Girard College was seeking students from as far away as the western United States to complete its roster for the fall term.

There were plenty of eligible students right outside the high stone walls of the college which occupies a 42-acre tract in North Philadelphia, running north from Girard ave.

He pointed out that the institution benefitted from tax exemption to the extent of about $700,000 a year.

ENROLLMENT CUT

Declining revenues from the big estate have resulted in cutting down the number of orphans at the college, despite a new-found source of income through Social Security payments to orphaned children.

Girard, who wrote his will in 1830 with a codicil the next year establishing the present site, provided for the education and maintenance of the wards of his estate.

He left the bulk of his estate, roughly $6,000,000, for the school, and described to the last stone the manner in which he wanted it built.

One provision, barring clergymen from the school, became the chief grounds upon which the great orator, Daniel Webster, sought to break the will in 1844. After a three-day speech, Webster lost the attempt, ending a will contest that is, even today, cited in cases concerning charitable bequests.

Girard requested that the city councilmen of Philadelphia administer his will, but as the city continued to grow and the trust with it, the State Legislature created the Board of City Trusts, which administers all money left in the city's care, the Girard Estate being the largest.

Since Girard's death, the estate, which includes coal mines and central city properties, has increased in value to nearly $100,000,000.

TWO LOUISIANA LAWS RULED UNCONSTITUTIONAL BY TWO FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT JUDGES

2 Segregation Laws Upset In Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, April 16 (AP)—Two Louisiana laws designed to bar Negroes from state colleges were ruled unconstitutional today by two federal district court judges.

One 1956 law required all college applicants to submit certificates of eligibility and moral character. The other law made it illegal for a school official to advocate integration. This had the effect of preventing the officials from signing certificates for Negroes.

Federal Judges Herbert W. Christenberry and J. Skelly Wright said the laws were "a transparent device" to bypass the 14th Amendment.

Their joint opinion was handed down after argument on three cases were heard in Baton Rouge.

The cases were filed against McNeese State College, Southwestern Louisiana Institute and Southeastern Louisiana College by 12 Negro students. On Jan. 28, the judges granted temporary restraining orders allowing the students to stay in the schools.

Another suit, filed against the board of supervisors of Louisiana State University, was consolidated by the judges in their opinion.

NEGRO STUDENTS WIN COURT PLEA

Enrollment in McNeese, SLI, SLC Ordered

Two judges in federal district court Monday signed temporary restraining orders which have the effect of requiring the registration for the second semester of the 1956-'57 session of 12 Negro students at McNeese State college, Southwestern Louisiana Institute and Southeastern Louisiana college.

One order signed by Judge J. Skelly Wright enjoins the state board of education, state Supt. of Education Shelby M. Jackson, Wayne N. Cusic, president of McNeese, and Inez S. Moses, registrar at McNeese, from refusing to register six Negro students presently enrolled at McNeese "and other Negroes similarly situated."

The other order, signed by Judge Herbert W. Christenberry, pertains to the registration of two Negroes now enrolled at Southeastern and four now enrolled at Southwestern and other Negroes similarly situated.

On Separate Petitions

The restraining orders were signed on separate petitions filed in court Monday, one on behalf of the McNeese students and the other on behalf of those enrolled at Southwestern and Southeastern.

Petitioners claimed that they were being denied the right to register under Louisiana Revised Statutes 17:2131-2135 which provided that "no person shall be registered at any publicly financed institution of higher learning of the state of Louisiana without first filing with it a certificate addressed to it attesting to his eligibility and good moral character, signed by the superintendent of education of the parish, county or municipality in which the applicant graduated from high school and by the principal of the high school from which the applicant graduated."

Petitioners also claimed that the Revised Statutes provide that it is a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment to register a person who does not possess these certificates and that "a permanent teacher shall not be removed from office except for, inter allia, performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races" in any of the state's institutions of higher learning.

'Deny Equal Protection'

The petitioners alleged that the statutes "deny plaintiffs equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution."

Each petition recited that the students who were parties to the suit had been unable to obtain the necessary certificates from the school superintendents in the parishes where they had graduated from high school and those who had graduated from parochial schools had been able to obtain certificates from the principals of the schools from which they had graduated.

The state board of education on Oct. 31, 1956, according to the petitions, had adopted a resolution requiring that: "The presidents and administrative officers of the colleges be advised that it is the opinion of the board that they should secure such certificates from all students beginning with the opening of the second semester of the 1956-57 session."

Four Steps Sought

Plaintiffs prayed for (1) a temporary restraining order and judgment that RS 17:2131-2135 inclusive and RS 17:443 and the order of the state board of education are violative of the 14th amendment; (2) a temporary restraining order and judgment enjoining defendants from refusing plaintiffs registration; (3) convening of a statutory three-judge court to hear whether preliminary and permanent injunctions should be issued, and (4) holding of a hearing on whether a preliminary and permanent injunction should be issued.

Each of the temporary restraining orders signed by the two judges remains in effect until Feb. 6, 1957, "or until said hearing on said application for interlocutory injunction, whichever is sooner."

Students involved in the McNeese petition are Jack Bailey, James J. Morgan Jr., La Salle C. Williams, Herbert Michael Daniels, Miney Ann DeClouette and Serena Thibodaux. The other suit was filed on behalf of Alma Lark and Mildred Meyers Crawford, students at Southeastern, and Francis Rachal, Joyce J. Johnson, Verdie C. St. Julian and Teletha Aldridge, students at Southwestern.

Louisiana Seeks New Trial In School Opening

BATON ROUGE, LA.,—(INS)—Louisiana Attorney General Jack Gremillion Thursday asked Federal District Court in Baton Rouge to grant a new trial in the suit of several Negroes seeking permanent attendance at Louisiana State University and several other State colleges.

The Federal Court in New Orleans recently granted a permanent injunction against the school restraining them from denying admission to students who are unable to present "eligibility certificates" from preparatory schools.

HELD UNCONSITITUTIONAL

The New Orleans court held that this requirement was unconstitutional along with one permitting the dismissal of school officials who "aided" integration by granting such certificates to Negroes.

Gremillion contended in Thursday's action that the court was "in error" in that it ruled on a constitutional question with only two judges sitting, whereas three are required to make such a ruling.

The Attorney General said that the court also erred in not taking under consideration a new State Constitutional amendment, adopted last fall, which requires consent of the state for any suit against state educational institutions.

La. school J. C. laws invalidated

NEW ORLEANS — Continued attendance of colored students at Louisiana State University and other publicly financed institutions of higher learning in the state has been assured by a federal court decision invalidating two recently enacted Louisiana laws designed to bar such students.

One of the two laws, both passed last year, requires each student to present a "certificate of eligibility and good moral character" signed by his high school principal and superintendent.

The other provides for the discharge of any teacher, principal or superintendent for "advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the State of Lousiana."

IN A DECISION handed down on April 15, United States District Judges Herbert Christenberry and Skelly Wright declared the laws to be unconstitutional because their "obvious intent . . . was to discriminate against colored citizens and thus to circumvent the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

Immediately involved in the litigation were Louisiana State University, Southeastern Louisiana, Southwestern Louisiana and McNeese colleges. The students in whose behalf the suit was filed are Miss Arnease Ludley, Jack Bailey and Miss Alma Lark. They were represented by NAACP attorneys A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans and Robert L. Carter of New York.

THE LITIGATION, Judges Christenberry and Wright declare in their joint decision, "concerns another attempt by the Louisiana Legislature to preserve, by law, segregation in the educational institutions of the state.

This attempt, while more subtle than its predecessor, nevertheless fails because the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution 'nullifies sophisticated as well as simple-minded modes of discrimination.'"

Previously, on March 1, the federal court had declared unconstitutional a pupil assignment law designed to maintain segregation in the public elementary and secondary schools of Louisiana.

Louisiana Asks Retrial Of Integratoin Suits

BATON ROUGE, La., April 25 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion today filed motions for new trials and hearings after two federal judges ruled unconstitutinal two state laws designed to ban Negroes at white state college.

In effect, the attorney general argued the federal courts had erred in not having a three-judge court convened to consider any state constitutional matter.

Also, Gremillion contended the two federal judges had failed to give proper consideration to a Louisiana constitutional amendment, approved by the people last Nov. 6, which bars such integration lawsuits until legislative consent has been obtained.

Act 613 of 1956, Gremillion said, specifically calls for legislative consent before state educational agencies can be sued.

On April 16, U.S. District Court Judges Herbert Christnberry and J. Skelly Wright in New Orleans, in a joint ruling, held that Acts 15 and 249 of the 1956 Legislature were a "transparent device" to continue segregated schools.

Twelve Negro students at Southwestern Louisana Institute, Lafayette; Southeastern Louisiana College, Hammond and McNeese State College, Lake Charles, had filed suits attacking the state laws. The suits with another filed against Louisiana State University board of supervisors.

Act 15 required all applicants for state colleges to preesnt certificates of eligibility and moral character from their school principals and superingendents.

Act 249 made it illegal for school officials to advocate integration, putting them under threat of dismissal if they signed certificates for Negroes to enter white state colleges.

In Gremillion's new motion, he argued the federal judges had no right to judge constitutionality and legality of Lousiana laws unless a three-judge court convened.

The court neglected to consider Act 613," Gremillion continued, "which specifically prohibits suit being brought against the Louisiana State Board of Education and Shelby M. Jackson superintendent, without first petitioning the legislature for consent to bring the suit."

Federal Court Voids Louisiana School Bias Laws

New Orleans—Continued attendance of Negro students at Louisiana University and other publicly financed institutions of higher learning in the state has been assured by a federal court decision invalidating two recently enacted Louisiana laws designed to bar Negro students.

One of the two laws, both passed last year, requires each student to present a "certificate of eligibility and good moral character" signed by his high school principal or superintendent. The other provides for the discharge of any teacher, principal or superintendent for "advocating or in any manner performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning of the State of Louisiana."

Unconstitutional

In a decision handed down of April 15, United States District Judges Herbert Christenberry and Skelly Wright declared the laws to be unconstitutional because their "obvious intent was to discriminate against Negro citizens and thus to circumvent the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

Immediately involved in the litigation were Louisiana State University, Southeastern Louisiana, Southwestern Louisiana and McNeese colleges. The Negro students in whose behalf the suit was filed are Miss Arnease Ludley, Jack Bailey and Miss Alma Lark. They were represented by NAACP attorneys A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans and Robert L. Carter of New York.

More Subtle

Previously, on March 1, the federal court had declared unconstitutional a pupil assignment law designed to maintain segregation in the public elementary and secondary schools of Louisiana.

LSU Negro Students Gain Certificates Out of State

Step Through Loophole in Segregation Law

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 23 (AP)—Several Louisiana State university Negro students have stepped through a loophole in a segregation law and obtained "acceptable" eligibility certificates, the LSU registrar said Wednesday.

Thurs. 1-24-57

Registrar Albert L. Clary Jr. said "three or four" Negro students had obtained the certificates. All were Louisiana residents who graduated from out of state high schools.

A federal court order which directs that LSU register Negroes already in school without regard to whether they have certificates required by the new state law probably will remain in effect through next week's registration for the spring term.

New Orleans, La.

No date has been set for a hearing on a request for a three-judge court to hear the case and probably won't be heard until next week.

P. 1

The 1956 law requiring certificates of "eligibility or good moral character" signed by local school officials was enacted in a segregation bid to drive Negro students from white colleges.

A companion measure, permitting firing of school teachers or officials who perform any act "toward bringing about integration of the races within the public school system," makes it possible to fire any Louisiana official signing a certificate for a Negro to enter a white college.

Both laws are under attack in a suit filed last week in United States district court at New Orleans, contending they violate the equal protection clause of the federal constitution.

The court restraining order directs LSU to admit a 23-year-old sociology student, Arnease Ludley, "and all others similarly situated."

Negroes have attended the LSU graduate school since 1950 under a federal court order which applies only to Louisiana residents.

times picayune

The attorney general ruled last summer the eligibility certificates should be required only from new students.

But Sen. W. M. Rainach, legislative segregation leader, and other segregation leaders insisted the law applied to all students whether they previously had been registered or not.

And Rainach had predicted extending the requirement to old students would force Negroes from LSU and other state colleges. Negroes have attended Southwestern Louisiana institute, McNeese State college and Southeastern Louisiana college as undergraduates under federal court order.

Thurs. 1-24-57

After meeting with the legislative segregation group, the LSU board of supervisors and the state board of education ruled every student in any state-supported college must have on file a certificate by the start of the spring term.

However, Clary said, "three or four Negro graduate students have presented acceptable certificates. They are residents of Louisiana—they are the only ones we have to accept under the court order—but attended high school outside the state."

He said he thought one certificate came from Tennessee, another from California. Reports were other certificates came from Mississippi and North Carolina.

But Clary added, "the only acceptable certificates we have received are from Negroes already enrolled. As far as I know, no new Negroes have applied for admission."

Negro registration totaled 124 in the 1955 fall term. This dropped to 62 last fall as the new law went into effect and no new Negro students were enrolled.

LSU Instructed To Admit Negro Graduate Students

Advertiser Sat. 1-19-57 P.8-a

Montgomery, Ala.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 17 (AP)—A federal judge yesterday directed Louisiana State University to permit Negro graduate students to register without requiring eligibility certificates.

The certificates were required under a 1956 law designed to drive Negroes from LSU and other state colleges.

U.S. District Judge Herbert Christenberry issued the order restraining LSU from denying registration to Arnease Ludley, 23-year-old sociology graduate student, "and all others similarly situated."

Miss Ludley, a graduate of Grambling College, Negro state supported college in north Louisiana, is scheduled to complete work for her master's degree next August.

Attorney A. P. Tureaud said the suit attacked Acts 15 and 250 of 1956. Act 15 requried the certificates of "eligibility or good moral character" signed by high school principal and parish or county school superintendents. Act 250 charged the Teacher Tenure Act to permit firing of teachers who perform "any act toward bringing about the integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning.

Tureaud contended these laws "are a violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution."

Sen. W. M. Rainach, legislative segregation leader, predicted after the laws were signed by Gov. Earl Long they would work together to drive Negroes from white state colleges, since any teacher signing a certificate for a Negro to attend a white college would be advocating integration and be fired.

Negroes attend LSU in graduate school and several state colleges as undergraduates. Future court actions are expected to be directed at McNeese State College and Southwestern Louisiana Institute

LSU President Troy Middleton said "our attorney tells us we must comply with the legislative acts until they are declared unconstitutional.

"When we receive the court order, we'll check with our attorneys and decide what steps to take. We plan to abide by the law."

LSU first admitted Negro graduate students under federal court order in 1950. During summer sessions, close to 300 Negro students, mostly teachers, have attended at the Baton Rouge campus.

Middleton said in the term that ends next week, "we have about six full time students and 50 or more part time students."

RETROACTIVE REQUIREMENT

The LSU board of supervisors first applied the certificate only to new students. After the fall term began, the legislative "watch dog" committee on segregation headed by Rainach met with the board and the board decided to require certificates also from students already registered.

The numbers of Negroes attending white colleges dropped sharply during the fall term. Rainach predicted they would be eliminated by next term.

Informed of the court action, Rainach said, "I'd have to read the injunction before I want to comment."

Court Orders Louisiana College To Admit Negroes

Daily World Thurs. 1-24-57

Atlanta, Ga.

BY O. C. W. TAYLOR

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) — Louisiana State University last week was ordered by a federal court judge here to permit Negro graduate students to register in the institution without being forced to secure eligibility certificates.

The action came as a result of U. S. District judge Herbert Christenberry who issued an order restraining LSU from denying admission to Miss Arnease Ludley, a 23 year-old sociology graduate students "and all others similarly situated."

The provision forcing students to obtain eligibility certificates came under a 1956 law devised to keep Negroes out of LSU and other state colleges.

Miss Ludley, a graduate of Grambling college, is scheduled to complete work for her master's degree next August.

Atty. A. P. Tureaud said the court action attacked Act 15 of 1956, requiring the certificates of "eligibility or good moral character" signed by high school principals and parish or county school heads.

Tureaud said the suit also attacked Act 250 of 1956, which changes the teacher tenure act to permit firing of teachers who perform "any act toward bringing about the integration of the races within the public school system or public institution of higher learning.

Tureaud contended these laws "are a violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution."

Gremillion to Fight for State Law

7 mi. 1-25-57

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 24 (AP)—Louisiana's Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion said Thursday he would defend state laws designed to drive Negroes from white state colleges.

Announcing a defense conference next Tuesday, Gremillion said:

"We are going to defend constitutionality of this law—act 15 of 1956—we thing it is constitutional because it applies to everybody, whites, colored, yellows, greens and reds."

The court order has directed Louisiana State university to register Negro graduate students without eligibility certificates, as required under a 1956 law.

Hits Second Law

The suit also attacks constitutionality of a second 1956 segregation law which, in effect, permits firing of any school official who signs a certificate of "eligibility or moral character" for a Negro to enter a white college.

Gremillion set a meeting next Tuesday with attorneys for LSU, attorneys of the joint legislative committee on segregation which drafted the laws and "any attorney who wants to volunteer his services."

At the same time attorney A. P. Tureaud obtained the temporary restraining order from United States district Judge Herbert Christenberry in New Orleans last week, he asked that a three-judge court hear the case.

Not Date Set

So far, no date has been set for that hearing.

The federal order prevent LSU from denying registration to Arnease Ludley, 23-year-old sociology graduate student "and all others similarly situated." It applies only to students already attending LSU and probably will remain in affect until after registration for the spring term next week.

Several LSU Negro students have bypassed the segregation law and obtained the certificates. All are Louisiana residents who graduated from out-of-state high schools.

Negroes have attended LSU under federal court order since 1950. The order applies only to Louisiana residents.

LSU has taken the position it must comply with legislative acts until they are declared unconstitutional, but also must obey the federal courts.

Court voids race ban in La. colleges

Afro-American Sat. 2-2-57

Baltimore, Md.

NEW ORLEANS, La. — A federal judge last week ordered Louisiana State University to abandon its requirement for "eligibility certificates" before permitting enrollment of colored students.

The certificates, required under a 1956 act of the State Legislature, were designed to force colored students out of LSU and other previously white state colleges.

THE CERTIFICATE requirement acted as a double-doored barrier to the enrollment of colored students in such state institutions of higher education.

Act 15 of the Legislatures required that the certificates of "eligibility or good moral character" be signed by the applicants' high school principal and county or parish school superintendent.

Act 250 changed the state's Teacher Tenure Act to permit firing of teachers who perform "any act toward bringing about the integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning."

When the two laws were enacted and signed, jubilant pro-segregationists declared that they would operate together to clear white schools of colored students.

Any teacher signing an eligibility certificate for a colored student to attend a white college would be advocating integration and fired, they said...

Miss Arnease Ludley, a 23-year-old graduate sociology student, challenged the new laws in a suit filed through Attorney A. P. Tureaud who contended that they are "a violation of the equal protection clause of the constitution."

D.S. District Judge Herbert Christenberry ruled Thursday, restraining LSU from denying registration to Miss Ludley and "all others similarly situated."

LOUISIANA State University first admitted colored graduate students in 1950, under court order. Since, mostly during summer sessions, some 300 have attended classes at the Baton Rouge campus.

Since enactment of the laws under attack in Miss Ludley's suit, the number of colored students attending white colleges in the state dropped sharply.

It had been freely predicted that there would be none by next term. LSU President Troy Middleton declined to comment upon what action is contemplated by the university.

Students Get Injunction Against Louisiana School Which Would Eject Them

Bystander Des Moines, Iowa
Thurs. 2-14-57

Baton Rouge, La.—Negro students attending mixed casses in four Louisiana state colleges were granted temporary restraining orders by the federal court last week forbidding school officials from enforcing a state statute and school board regulation which would exclude them from further attending the tax-supported institutions.

The restraining orders were issued by the U. S. District Court for Eastern Louisiana in three separate complaints filed in behalf of 13 Negro students and brought against the Louisiana State Board of Education and the officials of Louisiana State University, McNeese State College, Southeastern College and Southwestern Louisiana Institute.

The injunctions were issued without notice against the college officials pending hearings on the complaints.

Must File

The actions sought temporary restraining orders and preliminary and permanent injunctions to restrain the eforcement of the recently enacted state statute which provides that no person shall be registered at any publicly financed institution of higher learning without filing a certificate of "eigibility" and "good moral character." The certificate must be signed by the Superintendent of Education of the Parish, county or municipality in which the student graduated from high school and by the principal of the high school from which he graduated. To register a student who does not possess these certificates is a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The state statute also provides that a permanent teacher in the State can be removed from office for "performing any act toward bringing about integration of the races in any public institution of higher learning of the State of Louisiana."

Last October the State Board of Education adopted a resolution which stated that "the presidents and administrative officers of the colleges be advised that it is the opinion of the board that they should secure such certificates from all students beginning with the opening of the second semester of the 1956-57 session."

Refused Certification

NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund attorneys for the Negro students advised the court that the students who graduated from segregated public high schools applied to the principals of the schools for the necessary certificates, but were advised that signing of the certificates would result in the loss of their jobs. When the students applied to the Superintendents of Education in their communities, they were refused certification because no certificates had been received from the high school principals.

Students who graduated from Catholic high schools, however, were given certificates of eligibility, but school superintendents refused to sign them.

Notified by Officials

All the students were notified by college officials that it would be impossibe for them to register for the second semester if they did not file the certificates on or about February 1.

The complaints allege that Louisiana state laws deny Negro students "equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution" because, as a prerequisite to attending state colleges, they require Negroes to secure certificates of eligibility from public officials who, if they furnished them for Negroes, are subject to dismissal. Public officials may, however, sign certificates for white students without such penalties, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys said.

"The plaintiffs have already established their qualifications for admission and continuation in the public-supported institutions as students," the complaints state. The requirement that they furnish a certificate of eligibility is contrary to the due process clause of the 14th Amendment.

Passed Laws

The Louisiana state legislature recently passed laws which call for (1) the excusive use of separate school facilities by white and Negro children; (2) white teachers shall teach only white chidren; (3) suspend compulsory school attendance laws in racially integrated schools; (4) empoyers must furnish separate facilities for white and Negro employees; (5) prohibit interracial social and athletic activities; (6) the provisions for separate parks and recreational facilities for members of the Negro and white races, and (7) the provision for separate accommodations for white and colored passengers in intrastate travel.

In pleading for the restraining orders, the attorneys for the students pointed out that the students have no plain, adeqquate or complete remedy to redress these wrongs other than by the suits for injunctons.

"Any other remedy would be attended by such uncertainties and delays as to deny substantive relief, would involve a multiplicity of suits and cause further irreparabe injury, damage and inconvenience to plaintiffs and those similarly situated."

Suits Call For

The three suits call for:

a. A temporary restraining order and judgment enjoining college officials from refusing the students' registration and registration of all other Negro students for the forthcoming semester and thereafter.

b. An immediate statutory three-judge court be convened to hear whether preliminary and permanent injunctions should be issued.

c. Hearings be held on whether preliminary and permanent injunctions should be issued enjoining the college officials and their agents from refusing Negro students' registration and registration of all other Negroes similarly situated for the forthcoming semester at the four colleges, and for whatever other relief the Court may "deem proper in the circumstances."

Attorneys filing for the students are Thurgood Marshall, Robert L. Carter, and Jack Greenberg, all of New York, and A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans, La.

The restraining orders were issued last week by the U. S. District Court for Eastern Louisiana in three separate complaints filed in behalf of 13 Negro students and brought against the Louisiana State Board of Education and the officials of Louisiana College and Southwestern Louisiana Institute.

U.S. Judges Delay Louisiana Ruling

Commercial Appeal
Feb. 9, 1957
Memphis, Tenn.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 8. — (AP)—Louisiana asked dismissal Friday of suits striking at two laws designed to force out Negroes attending white colleges.

But United States District Judges Herbert Christenberry and J. Skelly Wright delayed a ruling, giving both sides 10 days to file briefs and 10 days more for answering the new pleas.

They continued for 10 days an order directing Louisiana State University, McNeese State College, Southwestern Louisiana Institute and Southeastern Louisiana College to admit Negroes without certificates required by a law under attack.

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion sought dismissal of the suits for a number of technical reasons, once citing a 1956 constitutional amendment withdrawing permission for individuals to sue the state.

He also said a three-judge Federal court must determine constitutionality of the state law. A request for a three-judge court was rejected.

The attorney general argued, "the sole question before the court is the constitutionality of Act 15 of 1956."

Act 15 provides students at all state supported colleges must present "certificates of eligibility or good moral character" signed by high school principals and parish school superintendents.

Judges See Through Subtle Move To Bar Negro Students

Weekly New Orleans, La. p. 1
Sat. 4-20-57

The so-called certificates of eligibility scheme which Louisiana lawmakers have been using to keep Negro students out of four tax supported colleges is unconstitutional.

A temporary injuction has been issued by U. S. District Judges J. Skelly Wright and Herbert Christenberry against the four schools forcing them to open their doors to all qualified students regardless of their race, creed or color.

That means that Negro students must be admitted to La. State University, McNeese State College, Southeastern La. College and Southwestern La. Institute.

Brunt of the judical order was aimed at Louisiana officials who have forced the state acts of last season requiring such certificates.

State attorney general Jack Gremillion immediately gave notice that he will appeal the case, but was shy about commenting on the opinion handed down by the court until he has seen the order.

The officials at the four schools affected have been ordered not to refuse an applicant for the purpose of pursuing a course of study even though an applicant might fail to present his certificate of eligibility.

The court indicated that the certificate of eligibility was an act passed by the Louisiana Legislature for the purpose of keeping the four colleges white.

The opinion of the court said in part, "Not a single principal of a public school or superintendent of a public school system has signed a certificate for a Negro to go to a white school" and that the device is more than just merely a certificate of good character for admission to a state insitution of higher learning.

"Addressing a certificate of good character for a Negro to a particular institution for example, jeopardizes the job of the principal or the superintendent addressing the certificate.

"If for example, a Negro graduate of a parochial school were successful in obtaining the signature of the principal of his school, such principal would not be subject to the state's tenure law, the signature of the parish superintendent of education would be unavailable because his position would be jeopardized by his signing.

The scheme of dividing discriminatory legislation into two separate acts, one apparently innocuous, was used by the 1954 Louisiana Legislature and was condemned in Bush vs. Orleans Parish School Board. Davis vs. Schnell. There a statue, apparently valid on its face, became unconstitutional when applied in tandem with discriminatory legislation. Even considered alone and without reference to Act 249, Act 15 would still be unconstitutional for the reason that the obvious intent of the legislature in passing the Act was to discriminate against Negro citizens and thus to circumvent the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment."

Twelve Negro students had filed suits.

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion said at Baton Rouge that he could not comment on the ruling until he had read it.

"But we certainly are going to ask for a rehearing or make an appeal," he added.

NEW ORLEANS, La. — Two laws designed to bar Negroes from state colleges were ruled unconstitutional Tuesday, by two federal district court judges.

Sat. 4-20-57

Federal Judges Herbert W. Christenberry and J. Shelly Wright said that laws were "a transparent device" to bypass the 14th Amendment. The joint opinion was issued after argument on three cases were heard in Baton Rouge.

A 1956 law required all college applicants to submit certificates of eligibility and moral character. Another prevented a school official to advocate integration. This had the effect of preventing officials from signing certificates for Negroes.

The cases were instituted against McNeese State College, Southwestern Louisiana Institute and Southeastern Louisiana College by 12 Negro Students.

The Judges granted a temporary restraining order on Jan. 28 which permited the students to remain in school.

Another suit was filed against the board of supervisors of Louisiana State University, which shared the judges opinion.

All suits were filed by A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans, former attorney for the Louisiana NAACP.

Appeals Court Denies Attempt At Delay Of School Integration

Advertiser P.1 Montgomery Ala.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 14 (AP)—The U.S. Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, today ruled against another attempt to delay complete desegregation of a school.

Jan 15-57

The court, by a 2-1 decision, reversed a decision by U.S. District Judge Marion Boyd of Memphis, Tenn., in which he had refused to enjoin the Tennessee Board of Education and officials of Memphis State College from refusing admission to five Negro students.

In his dcision on Nov. 22, 1955, Judge Boyd approved a plan under which the board of education said it planned to achieve total desegregation in five years.

SIMILAR EDICT GIVEN

The decision was somewhat similar to one given by the appeals court in a Hillsboro, Ohio, elementary school case in which desegregation was ordered although the school board said it wanted to delay the action until new buildings could be completed.

In the Memphis case, school officials said they could not handle more than 1,000 students in a freshman class and said they planned to desegregate gradually over a five-year period.

School officials at Memphis declined to comment on the decision but State Atty. Gen. George F. McCanless said at Nashville that "undoubtedly" the case would be taken to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The appeals court majority opinion, written by Judges Charles Simons of Detroit and Florence Allen of Cleveland, said the board of education has the right to limit admissions "but the board is not authorized to establish a limitation based on race or color."

Gradual Negro Admittance Plan Is Illegal, Says Majority Opinion

Jan. 1-15-57

The Federal Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati yesterday reversed a district court ruling calling for racial desegregation of Memphis State College over a five-year period.

Memphis Press

In overruling Judge Marion S. Boyd by a 2 to 1 vote, and returning the case for further action, the court said the five-year wait seemed to be a "non-compliance with the declaration of the United States Supreme Court."

Review Is Expected

State Atty. Gen. George F. McCanless, who expressed disappointment at the decision, added: "I thought the plan was sound and I think Judge Boyd's opinion was sound. I feel sure we will seek a review of the decision before the Supreme Court."

Judge Boyd ruled Tennessee school segregation laws were unconstitutional about 15 months ago and ordered admission of five Negroes under a gradual integration plan.

Suggested by the state Board of Education, the plan called for the admission of properly qualified graduate students in February of 1956, seniors in September of 1956, juniors at the beginning of the next school year and sophomores and freshmen on successive years.

Several Negro students sought admission to Memphis State later but failed qualifying examinations, according to college officials.

Opinion Is Cited

Declaring the appeals court is aware the Supreme Court held school facilities and transportation could be considered in working out an orderly desegregation, the majority opinion said:

"But the court also declared this should be done with all deliberate speed. To deny entrance to these plaintiffs for five years and to place them at the bottom of the list regardless of their applications for entrance, seems to a majority of this court to be a non-compliance with the declaration of the Supreme Court."

Commercial

In a further attack on the plan, Judge Charles C. Simons of Detroit and Florence Allen of Cleveland said:

"The plan adopted postpones for five years admission of those qualified plaintiffs to the freshman class and expressly contemplates that white students who have registered later shall be admitted earlier. This is a clear discrimination of race.

"It is another form of discrimination that the plaintiffs may be contemplated to seek education elsewhere in order to secure a college education without being deferred for several years."

Defense Is Hit

The majority report also took issue with the defense of school officials that the college was not equipped to admit a freshman class in excess of 1,000 students.

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Shackelford Miller Jr. of Louisville, Ky., said he believed the plan proposed by the school board "is a good waith solution."

"The district judge expressly found," he added, "that the time is absolutely necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner. I am of the opinion there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the district judge and should be affirmed."

Judge Miller explained that "a gradual plan of desegregation offers greater possibility of the eventual complete acceptance of the situation by members of both races than would be an abrupt transition at present, and that time is necessary to carry out in an effective manner the ruling of the Supreme Court.

Stand Is Told

"Unless the district judge abused discretion in approving the plan proposed to meet the problems presented by such a faction background, we are not authorized to review the plan in order to substitute a different plan of our own.

"There are problems practical as well as financial that can hardly be determined. The district judgea— longtime resident of Memphis — and closely in touch with the local situation is much better situated to understand and analyze and evaluate the problems than we are."

The case was brought Elijah Noel of 1636 Carnes, Joseph McGhee of 851 South Lauderdale, Mardest Knowles of 1534 Ellison, Ruth Booker of 1647 Ash and Nellie Peoples of 828 Hamilton.

Negro atttorney H. T. Lockard, who represents the five, declined comment until "I have a chance to read the entire decision."

The action poses another test of the state's "massive resistance" scheme, its first line of defense aimed at preventing any integration of the races in Virginia's public schools.

ACCORDING TO the attorneys, copies of the motion have been mailed to the Supreme Court of the state and copies placed in the hands of Fairfax County Sheriff John Taylor for service on Fairfax officials.

Mrs. DeFebio's sons, Micky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were dismissed from school last month because she refused to sign placement applications for them. She said she did not wish to be a party to a scheme to flout the school desegregation ruling.

The two pupils were ousted from school under regulations of the new state pupil placement board which provide that no new students may remain in school unless placement applications are filled out within 15 days after parents receive them.

Women Applied Too Late — Seven Whites Fail To Pass Exams

Jan. 6-1-57

By REESE WELLS

Memphis State College yesterday refused to admit two Negro women for undergraduate study because they applied too late.

Maxine Smith, 27, of 1096 South Lauderdale and Miriam Sugarmon, 22, of 790 Walker (rear) previously were refused admission for graduate study because they could not qualify.

Chairman Upheld

The committee on entrance and credits also turned down seven white applicants for graduate work who failed to qualify in an examination Saturday. Six white applicants who passed the examination were admitted.

Following its meeting in the office of J. Millard Smith, college president, the committee issued this statement:

"The committee . . . went on record in upholding the action of the chairman in refusing admission to Maxine Smith and Miriam Sugarmon for graduate or undergraduate work for the summer session on the basis that they were not eligible for graduate school and that they did not apply for undergraduate work on or before May 24. The committee directed that further inquiry be referred to President Smith."

No Comment

Mr. Smith had no comment.

R. P. Clark, registrar and committee chairman, advised the women previously they could not qualify for graduate study and they had filed too late for undergraduate work. He referred their applications to the accrediting committee after they insisted.

Although the Negroes visited the college yesterday morning, they were not present when the committee met. They called on Dr. Bascom Story, graduate school director, but he was out of his office at the time.

Mr. Clark said the Negro applicants and 13 white applicants would be informed of the committee's action by mail.

Maxie Smith was rejected for graduate study in foreign languages because there are no graduate courses in that field. Miriam Sugarmon was ruled ineligible for graduate study in English because she did not have enough courses on the undergraduate level.

They lowered their sights to regular college study last week after having been turned down for the advanced courses.

Other Negroes have applied to enter MSC but none of their applications ever reached the committee.

Five who sought admission in 1954 were turned down for lack of credentials and later sued in Federal District Court to end segregation at the college.

Negroes were ordered admitted under a gradual desegregation plan. The plan proposed by the state was ruled unconstitutional last January. An appeal for a review was refused recently by the United States Supreme Court.

Another five Negroes applied for graduate study last year but could not pass the entrance examination.

A Thread Of Consistency

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

In November, 1955, Federal District Judge Marion Boyd of Memphis, Tennessee, rejected a petition on the part of five Negroes that he order their immediate admission to Memphis State University. He approved, however, the state's desegregation program, which called for admission of Negroes to state colleges — properly qualified graduate students in 1956, seniors in 1956, sophomores in 1957, and freshmen in 1958. The petitioning students had sought to enter as freshmen.

The Federal Court of Appeals at Cincinnati later reversed the lower court's findings, and sent the case back to Judge Boyd for action. This week the Supreme Court refused to review the appeals court decision.

One member of the appeals court dissented, Judge Shackelford Miller, Jr., holding that Tennessee's "stairstep" schedule constituted compliance in good faith with the Supreme Court's original decision and its implementing decrees. And at first glance the high tribunal's recent ruling does seem inconsistent with its somewhat tacit approval of the North Carolina local assignment plan as moving with "deliberate speed."

Two explanations are possible, however. First, the Memphis case involves students of college age; the North Carolina plan, the grade schools. Second, Tennessee's plea rested on the overcrowded condition of the Memphis institution. The appeals court observed that this condition might be improved by a bar on out-of-state students, but not by a bar on race. The North Carolina plan prescribes that local school boards must base their pupil assignments on broader grounds than race alone.

There would seem to be present in the Memphis University ruling that thread of consistency which must continue to guide the Supreme Court in weighing many appeals arising from many circumstances.

DENY MEMPHIS INTEGRATION DELAY APPEAL

Supreme Court OK's Circuit Ruling

BY PHILIP DODD

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, May 20 — The United States Supreme court today denied the Tennessee board of education a review of a lower court decision requiring immediate admission of Negroes to the Memphis State college.

The Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati had held 2 to 1 that the board's plan for gradual admission of Negroes to the Memphis institution was not in accord with the Supreme court's decision that public school integration must be accomplished with "deliberate speed."

Reverses District Court

In today's unsigned order, the high court upheld the Cincinnati decision, which had reversed a District court decision approving a Tennessee gradual integration plan which would have meant five years would have to elapse before Negroes could be admitted as freshmen.

The Tennessee plan would have applied to five other state colleges—Middle Tennessee State college at Murfreesboro, East Tennessee State college at Johnson City, Austin Peay State college at Clarksville, Tennessee Polytechnic Institute at Cookeville, and Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State university at Nashville.

No Written Opinions

No written opinions were handed down by the Supreme court today, altho there was a backlog of 57 cases which have been argued in the term which began last October and in which opinions probably will be rendered. The court usually quits for the year the first week in June.

Most of today's brief session was devoted to the admission of 60 women attorneys to practice before the court—the largest number of females admitted in one day in the court's history, according to veteran court attendants.

Of the group, 35 were from Massachusetts and they were introduced by Sen. Saltonstall [R., Mass.]. Twenty-five women attorneys from New York were introduced by Judge William B. Groat Jr., of Queens county.

First All-Female Group

"You are the first all-women delegation we've had—the pilgrimages are improving," Chief Justice Warren told the Massachusetts group, the first to be introduced.

In other actions today, the court granted a hearing to Herman Beilan, a Philadelphia, Pa., school teacher who was fired in 1954 after refusing to answer questions about membership in a communist political association in 1944.

The Pennsylvania supreme court had upheld Beilan's dismissal on the grounds it was for "incompetency" under the state's public school code. The case governs proceedings against 25 other Philadelphia teachers.

The Supreme court also held today that the justice department lacks authority to ban communist activity by an alien who has been under a deportation order for six months. It affirmed a decision of a special three-judge District court in the case of Mrs. Antonia Sentner of St. Louis, Mo. Justices Burton and Clark dissented.

2 Negroes Rejected By Memphis College

MEMPHIS, May 30 (AP)—Registrar R. P. Clark said today Memphis College had rejected the applications of two Negro women who sought entrance to the college for graduate work.

One of the women, Clark said, was turned down because she wished to major in foreign languages, a course not offered by the graduate school. The other woman, Clark said, lacked sufficient undergraduate credits in her proposed major. Neither woman was identified.

State has no Negro students.

A proposed plan to admit Negroes at the graduate level, stepping down one class a year, last week was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court. The high court upheld the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals which called the so-called "stairstep plan" discriminatory.

Court Upsets College Ban On Negroes

CINCINNATI, Jan. 14 (AP) — The 6th District United States Circuit Court of Appeals today ruled against a 5-year plan to integrate the Memphis, Tenn., State College.

The court, in a 2-1 decision, held the school had a right to limit enrollment, but not on the basis of race or color.

Chief Judge Charles Simons and Judge Florence Allen reversed the ruling of Federal District Judge Marion S. Boyd, Memphis, who approved the plan in rejecting the plea of five Negroes for immediate admission to the school.

Judge Shackelford Miller Jr., who dissented in the Circuit Court opinion, said he believed the lower Court decision was made in good faith. He said time was needed to carry out the desegregation ruling of the United States Supreme Court.

Memphis College Rejects Negroes

MEMPHIS, May 30 (AP) — Registrar R. P. Clark said today Memphis College had rejected the applications of two Negro women who sought entrance to the college for graduate work.

One of the women, Clark said, was turned down because she wished to major in foreign languages, a course not offered by the graduate school. The other woman, Clark said, lacked sufficient undergraduate credits in her proposed major. Neither woman was identified.

A proposed plan to admit Negroes at the graduate level, stepping down one class a year, last week was rejected by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Two seek entry to Tennessee College

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Though the May 24 deadline for summer school applications has passed, two colored women, Miss Maxine Smith and Miss Mariam Sugarman, applied for entry to all white Memphis State College to do undergraduate study in foreign language.

Some late applicants have already been refused, registrar R. P. Clark said. However, the applications will be passed on to the entrance and credits committee, the registrar disclosed.

MEMPHIS COLLEGE DISCRIMINATION

Tennessee College Told To Enroll Negroes Now

Constitution Tues. 5-21-57 P1

Atlanta, Ga.

(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, May 20—The Supreme Court refused today to review a lower court ruling that Tennessee may not limit admissions to state-operated colleges on the basis of color or race.

The effect is to leave standing a decision of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that Negroes must be admitted without delay to Memphis State College. That decision nullified a Tennessee plan for gradual integration of teacher colleges and normal schools.

Five Negroes brought suit after they were denied enrollment in the Memphis college. They claimed that they were entitled to admission under the Supreme Court's ruling in 1954 that separation of pupils by races in public schools is unconstitutional.

Tennessee's code provides that white persons over 16 who have completed four years of high school and are residents of the state shall be admitted without tuition to teachers colleges and state normal schools. Non-residents are admitted on payment of tuition.

The five who applied for admission were residents of Memphis or vicinity and had finished high school.

After the Supreme Court's ruling in the school segregation cases, Tennessee adopted a plan for integration of its state-operated colleges. Under it, Negroes would have been admitted to graduate and senior classes in the 1956-57 school year; to junior classes in 1957-58, to sophomore classes in 1958-59 and as freshmen in 1959-60.

Constitution

Under this plan, the Negroes who brought suit could not have been admitted for five years.

In addition to the Memphis school, the plan would have applied to Middle Tennessee State College, Murfreesboro, East Tennessee State College, Johnson City, Austin Peay State College, Clarksville, Tennessee Polytechnic Institute, Cookesville, and the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University for Negroes at Nashville.

The state contended that faster integration of Memphis college would deprive it accreditation in the Southern Association of Colleges. A minimum expenditure of $300 per pupil is required for accreditation. Admission of eligible Negroes, the state asserted, would bring this expenditure below the minimum.

The Memphis college was "terrifically overcrowded," it was contended, and no room for the Negroes who might seek admission.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (ANP)—H. T. Lockard, counsel for five students who last week won the right to attend Memphis State College here, has stated that his clients only need a court order to be admitted to the school.

At the same time he did not indicate when he would ask for the judicial decree.

Lockard brought action against Memphis State College on the petition of five students who sought to enter the school.

The Supreme Court ruled in favor of the complainants when the state had asked the high court to review a ruling against it last January by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

High Court Orders Tennessee College To Integrate Now

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20—The Supreme Court refused today to review a lower court's ruling that Tennessee had no right to limit admissions to state-operated colleges on the basis of color or race.

New York

The effect is to leave standing a decision of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals that Negroes must be admitted without delay to Memphis State College. That decision nullified a Tennessee plan for gradual integration of teachers colleges and normal schools.

Five Negroes brought suit after they had been denied enrollment in the Memphis college. They contended that they were entitled to admission under the Supreme Court's ruling in 1954 that separation of pupils by races in public schools was unconstitutional.

Integration Plan Adopted

Tennessee's code provided that white persons over 16 years old who had completed four years of high school and were residents of the state should be admitted without tuition to teachers colleges and state normal schools. Nonresidents are admitted on payment of tuition.

The five who applied for admission were residents of Memphis or vicinity and had finished high school.

After the Supreme Court's ruling in the school segregation cases, Tennessee adopted a plan for integration of its state-operated colleges. Under it Negroes would have been admitted to graduate and senior classes in the 1956-57 school year; to junior classes in 1957-58, to sophomore classes in 1958-59 and as freshmen in 1959-60.

Under this plan, the Negroes who brought the suit could not have been admitted for five years.

The plan also would have applied to Middle Tennessee State College, Murfreesboro; East Tennessee State College, Johnson City; Austin Peay State College, Clarksville; Tennessee Polytechnic Institute, Cookeville, and the Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University for Negroes at Nashville.

The state contended that faster integration of Memphis State College would deprive it accreditation in the Southern Association of Colleges. A minimum expenditure of $300 a pupil is required for accreditation. Admission of eligible Negroes, the state asserted, would bring this expenditure below the minimum.

College Called Crowded

The Memphis college was terrifically overcrowded," the state asserted, and had no room for the Negroes who might seek admission.

A Federal District Judge at Memphis sustained the integration plan. The Court of Appeals reversed by a vote of 2-to-1.

Chief Judge Charles C. Simons and Judge Florence E. Allen ruled that the state could limit admissions but not on the basis of color. They suggested that one way to relieve congestion in the school would be to eliminate out-of-state admissions.

Judge Shackelford Miller Jr., dissenting, said that the state's integration plan constituted compliance in good faith with the Supreme Court's segregation decision and should be approved.

Nat Tipton, Advocate General of Tennessee, presented the state's appeal to the Supreme Court. Robert L. Carter was the attorney for the Negro pupils.

Memphis State Denied Delay On Integration

Supreme Court Review Of Decision Is Refused

Washington, May 20 (AP)—The Tennessee Board of Education today was denied a Supreme Court review of a decision requiring the immediate admission of Negroes to Memphis State College.

The decision was given by the United States Circuit Court in Cincinnati in a case filed by five Memphis Negroes.

The circuit court ruled, 2 to 1, that a board plan for gradual desegregation of the college was not in step with the Supreme Court's decision that public-school integration be accomplished with all deliberate speed.

The board plan called for immediate desegregation in graduate work and desegregation of other classes on the basis of one class a year.

'Clear Discrimination'

In ruling against the plan, the Circuit Court said the board could limit the number of admissions according to available physical facilities, but could not base the limitations on race or color.

Further, it said the plan put off for five years the admission of the five Negroes to the freshman class, while admitting white students who registered later than the Negroes. The Circuit Court called this "a clear discrimination."

It reversed the U. S. District Court in Memphis, which had found the plan fair and reasonable and had denied the Negroes an order for immediate admission.

'In Position To Judge'

Tennessee State officials, in appealing to the Supreme Court, said the District Court in Memphis was familiar with local conditions "and in position to judge of the proper spirit to be met in integration."

"The physical facilities of Memphis State College are already terrifically overcrowded," the appeal said. "Unrestricted admission at the present time would result, practically, in the destruction of the college as an institution of higher learning."

Overtaxation of physical facilities at the college, the appeal stated, would result in the school's being deprived of its accredited standing and membership in the Southern Association of Colleges.

Two Women Failed To Meet College Requirements For Graduate Study

ACTION DUE MONDAY

It Will Mark First Time Entrance Committee Has Taken Racial Case—Court Decision Echoes

By REESE WELLS

Two Negro women who failed to meet requirements for graduate study at Memphis State College will be the first of their race to be considered by the entrance and credits committee for undergraduate work.

R. P. Clark, registrar, said the committee which he heads will consider at 2 p.m. Monday the applications of Maxine Smith of 1096 South Lauderdale and Miriam Sugarman of 790 Walker (Rear).

The two women appeared at the college yesterday. They had been informed earlier this week that they were not eligible for graduate study.

Summer Deadline Passed

"They said they understood it was customary when a person is not eligible for graduate school to make up any deficiencies in their undergraduate work," Mr. Clark said.

"I took their request to take undergraduate work in foreign languages and said I would refer it to the entrance and credits committee."

However, Mr. Clark said he advised the women it was "useless" to seek committee approval since the deadline to apply for undergraduate study for the summer session was May 24. Several white students who failed to file their credentials before the deadline have been turned away.

Maxine Smith, a graduate of Spelman College in Atlanta, was turned down for graduate study in foreign languages because there are no courses in foreign languages in the graduate school.

Miriam Sugarman, who was graduated from Wesslesley College in Massachusetts, was ruled ineligible for graduate study in English because she did not have a sufficient number of courses on the undergraduate level.

Five Went To Court

Although Negroes have previously applied for admission to the college none of the applications has been brought before the entrance and credits committee.

Five who sought admission in 1954 were turned down for lack of credentials. Five Negroes sought admission to the graduate school last year but none passed the qualifying examinations.

The five sued in Federal District Court to end segregation at the college. Judge Marion S. Boyd ruled segregation laws unconstitutional and ordered them admitted under a gradual desegregation plan which the State Board of Education proposed to start at the graduate level.

The gradual desegregation plan was appealed to the Federal Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, which returned a ruling last January that it was unconstitutional. The state appealed for a review by the United States Supreme Court, which refused.

Two Seek Entrance To Memphis State

MEMPHIS—Two Negro women will have their applications for admission to Memphis State College considered by the institution's entrance and credits committee Monday. They are Miss Maxine Smith and Miss Miriam Sugarman.

Registrar R. P. Clark said Saturday they will not be admitted. He claims that applications filed by the two women came after the summer term's May 24 deadline. They had applied for admission as undergraduates after being informed they were not eligible for postgraduate work.

Miss Smith, a Spelman College graduate, had applied for postgraduate work in foreign languages. Memphis State told her it had no such course. Miss Sugerman, a Wellesley College graduate, was rejected on grounds she does not have enough college credits.

Supreme Court Upholds Decision Barring 'Gradual' Integration Plan

Tues. 5-21-57

International News Service

The Supreme Court upheld yesterday a lower court decision challenging a "gradual" integration plan of the Memphis (Tenn.) State College.

The brief order by the high court was the first affecting an integration "time table" since its historic desegregation decision three years ago.

The college adopted a five-year plan under which graduate students would be the first to be integrated. The freshman class would not be integrated until the 1959-1960 school year.

Refusal of the high court to review the case has the effect of upholding a 2 to 1 circuit court decision that the plan is too slow to meet the supreme court's mandate of "all deliberate speed."

[In Memphis, J. Mill[illegible] Smith, Memphis State pr[illegible]dent, declined immediate [illegible]ment on the Court's atcion Associated Press reported. [illegible] said he planned to confer wi[illegible] State Attorney General George E. McCanless and Quill E. Cope, State Commissioner of Education.]

The suit was brought by five Negro students who wanted to enter Memphis State College last year. The college turned them down, citing its five-year plan and declaring that its facilities would be inadequate if the school were opened to unrestricted admission immediately.

A District Court judge upheld Memphis State College and Tennessee, holding that the school was carrying out a gradual integration program in good faith and complying with the Supreme Court's "all deliberate speed" order.

However, the Sixth Circuit Appeals Court ruled that while physical facilities of the school would be inadequate if the undergraduate body were radically increased, "this circumstance is not a valid defense."

The board, it said, could limit the number of admissions, but not on the basis of race or color. The State of Tennessee appealed the ruling, which affects other state colleges, to the high court.

Memphis Racial Case Decision Is Reversed

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15 (AP).—The United States Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, yesterday reversed a decision by a Memphis (Tenn.) district judge in which he had refused to order, in effect, the admission of five Negroes to Memphis State College.

By a 2-1 decision, the court ordered the case sent back to District Judge Marion Boyd for further action.

The case was one in which Roth Booker, Nellie Peoples, Mardes Knowles Vanhook, Elijah Noel and Joseph McGhee, jr., sought an injunction to prevent the Tennessee State Board of Education and officials of the college from denying them admission to the school.

In his decision, given November 22, 1955, Judge Boyd denied the injunction request, but approved a plan proposed by the Board of Education under which there would be total desegregation at the school within five years.

Judges Charles C. Simons of Detroit and Florence Allen of Cleveland voted to reverse the decision, while Judge Shackleford Miller, jr., of Louisville, Ky., dissented.

In its defense in the case, the school officials declared the college was not equipped to admit a freshman class in excess of 1,000 students and proposed the five-year plan.

Judges Simons and Allen ruled that "in two respects" the five-year plan did not comply with a United States Supreme Court ruling banning school segregation. They declared that the record shows the physical facilities of the college would not be adequate if the undergraduate school was "radically increased," but they added:

"This circumstane is not a valid defense to the action. The board has the authority to establish a limit of admissions, but the board is not authorized to establish a limitation based on race or color."

Declaring the Appeals Court is aware that the Supreme Court held school facilities and transportation could be considered in working out an orderly desegregation, the majority opinion said:

"But the court also declared that this should be done with all deliberate speed. To deny entrance to these plaintiffs for five years, to place them at the bottom of the list regardless of the time of their application for entrance, seems to a majority of this court a non-compliance with the declaration of the Supreme Court."

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Miller said he believed the plan proposed by the school board for partial desegregation at once and gradual elimination of all segregation during the next five years "is a good faith solution."

"The district judge expressly found," he said, "that the time is absolutely necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner. I am of the opinion there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the district judge and should be affirmed.

Board Defers Opening Doors Of MSU, Others To Negroes

By JAMES EWING
From The Commercial Appeal Nashville Bureau

NASHVILLE, Aug. 9.—Negroes would be denied admission to Memphis State University and the four state colleges next month under a resolution adopted Friday by the State Board of Education.

The board authorized Education Commissioner Quill E. Cope, chairman, to appoint a three-member committee to recommend a program for admission of qualified students, regardless of race, to all institutions under its control.

J. M. Smith, president of Memphis State, said he interpreted the action to mean he is without authority to admit the 12 Negroes seeking admission there until the board has provided such a plan.

The resolution, adopted unanimously, called on the committee to report to the state board "with all deliberate speed so as not to delay unnecessarily the admission of qualified students."

May Wait Until November

J. Howard Warf, chairman of the committee submitting the plan, said there might be no action on the plan until the board holds its next regular meeting in November.

Dr. Cope said he will name the committee "within the next week or 10 days."

The board also directed presidents of the universities and colleges under its control (not the University of Tennessee which is under a separate board) to submit plans for entrance requirements at the November meeting.

The action was based on a proposal by the presidents, who said many of the state institutions are becoming so crowded it may be necessary at some future time to deny "students not qualified to do an acceptable quality of college work."

The 1957 Legislature enacted a law permitting the state board and the University of Tennessee to "prescribe rules and regulations and requirements for the admission of students to colleges and universities . . ." under their control.

Could Limit Numbers

While Dr. Cope and other education officials have insisted the purpose of the law is to prevent overcrowding, there has been speculation that it could be used to keep down the number of Negroes entering the colleges and universities.

The resolution dealing directly with desegregation said it is the intention of the state board to "comply with the law of the land as interpreted by the courts."

"At the same time," it declared, "the board desires to preserve and protect the system of public higher education which can and may be destroyed by psychological and sociological factors over which it has no control."

The board reviewed the lawsuit instigated by five Memphis Negroes and its own "good faith" adoption of a plan of gradual desegregation over a five-year period beginning with graduate students in 1955.

It pointed out the plaintiffs refused to accept their plan despite its acceptance by Federal District Judge Marion S. Boyd of Memphis.

Boyd Later Overruled

The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati overruled Judge Boyd and the United States Supreme Court refused to review the decision last May.

"Since that date inquiries concerning admission of Negro students have been directed to the president of Memphis State University and the chairman of the state board," the resolution said.

Since "no policy governing the admission of Negro students exists which has been approved by the State Board of Education," it was proposed that the study be made.

Mr. Smith said he took the resolution to mean "we are right back where we were when they started." He referred to the initial applications made by the five Negroes who were rejected because the state board at that time had provided no plan for their admission.

Other Colleges Affected

The state boards decision also involves Middle Tennessee State College at Murfreesboro, Austin Peay State College at Clarksville, East Tennessee State College at Johnson City and Tennessee Polytechnic Institute at Cookeville.

The board deferred action until November on proposals by the presidents for tuition increases beginning September, 1958, to finance higher salaries for professors and instructors.

The presidents proposed raising tuition fees from $40 to $55 a quarter and from $60 to $82.50 a semester. Out-of-state students would have their tuition fees raised from $75 to $110 a quarter and from $112.50 to $165 a semester.

Action was also deferred on a proposal to allow long-time leases of campus property to fraternities and sororities at Memphis State University and the other institutions of higher learning.

Tenn. Colleges Not To Accept Negroes In '57

Thurs. 8-15-57
Louisville Ky.

Nashville — Because a Federal Court of Appeals rejected a "stair-step" plan of integration in Tennessee colleges and universities, there will be no integration in the schools controlled by the State Board of Education this year.

The board, which controls Memphis State University and four colleges, Austin Peay, Middle Tennessee, Tennessee Tech, and East Tennessee, indicated that a committee would be formed to work on a new desegregation plan.

The University of Tennessee which has had Negroes in graduate schools for several years, is not under the jurisdiction of the Education Board.

The "stairstep" plan which called for freshmen to enter Memphis State this year, was approved by the Federal District Court but was overruled by the Court of Appeals.

Definite Steps Ordered By Board; Report Awaited

Daily World
Atlanta Ga.
Sun. 8-11-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (INS) — Tennessee's Board of Education had begun definite steps Saturday toward desegregation of the six colleges and universities under its jurisdiction.

Meeting in Nashville, the board ordered a committee studying a desegregation program to report back "with all deliberate speed so as not to delay unnecessarily the admission of qualified students."

The board's next meeting, however, is not until next November, insuring segregation at least through this fall. Fourteen Negro students have applied for enrollment this fall in Memphis State University.

REPORT AWAITED

The board deferred action on setting up specific entrance requirements until the committee reports back. But it declared that an admission program for students "regardless of race" would be in keeping with decisions made by the court of appeals and the supreme court.

Tenn. Colleges

The educators had their five-year "gradual" desegregation plan tossed out in May by the Court of Appeals, after it had been approved by Memphis Federal Judge Marion Boyd. The Supreme Court refused to review the decision.

At the same time Friday, the Nashville City School Board granted an instruction committee more time to study segregationists pleas to drop first-grade integration plans. The special committee is studying a 5,000-signature petition submitted by the parents school preference committee. The preference group, in contacting parents of both races, asked how many desire to send their children to schools exclusively of their own race.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., Jan. 14.—(Special)—In this usually quiet university community the other night a southern newspaper publisher took advantage of a white Citizens Council invitation to tell Alabamians that they had best prepare to accept the inevitable—integration at least in the University of Alabama.

Since last February when the Autherine Lucy incident broke wide across the nation, Buford Boone has been a prime target of the white Citizens' Council in the state. They have charged that he favors integration. Mr. Boone has patiently endured such assertions and his paper has continued steadfastly to report and comment on racial developments with what many feel is above average wisdom and superior courage.

Mr. Boone's Tuscaloosa News, in the midst of the rioting which followed Miss Lucy's entry into the university, published an editorial condemnation of the community for having failed to keep order and seeming to surrender to the rioters in a hopeless fashion. Among newspapermen in Alabama generally, the consensus was that Mr. Boone had directed his paper with a degree of courage which was highly unusual. The plain fact was that Mr. Boone, right under the noses of the councilmen and brawling rioters, was saying more, and saying it more strongly, than were other papers—though all papers were reasonably prompt in condemning the violence.

After the council had invited him to speak Mr. Boone appeared before the unit's members at the county court house Jan. 4 in Tuscaloosa and said: Advocate

"Sooner or later, and I have no idea how soon or how late it will be, another Negro student will appear on the university campus. Under such circumstances are whites again going to attempt to take the law into their own hands?"

Though it was a basic question, what seemed even more important was Mr. Boone's flat assertions in support of the United States Supreme Court decision:

"Nothing in it (the decision) is inconsistent with my conception of democracy. Even though a background of southern living and southern tradition tells me it will be strange to see colored faces at the University of Alabama, I believe we should prepare ourselves to accept this development, since it has been ordered as rightful and just by our courts."

Mr. Boone, who is a university graduate, and whose son is now an undergraduate there, said the decision of the Supreme Court "had to come and was morally right."

"Can't Get Away With It"

He went on to say that "this United States is one country. We in the South are outnumbered. We don't like what the Supreme Court has said, but we have been ignoring the rest of the country, and we can't do that and get away with it.

"They're going to do like you and I would if one of our communities told us it meant to violate the law as much as it pleased. We'd control them lawfully. So will the rest of the country use the full force of the law on us, if we drive them to it."

Mr. Boone emphasized the need for compromise, as between the races, on the issues resulting from the court decision. But he made this emphasis clear in accepting the weight of the ruling: "for whites the contribution," he said, "must be in a willingness to give up some of their traditions and customs so as to share more equally the blessings of education.

"For the Negro, the contribution must be acceptance of less speed than could be demanded legally in implementation of newly established rights. Meanwhile, time and attention can be directed by our Negro groups and institutions toward a greater understanding of the responsibilities of first-class citizenship. For there is much responsibility along with privilege."

In making such a bold utterance, Mr. Boone is certain to win additional criticism. But his record, especially over the past year, is such as to indicate that he will continue, with his paper, to stand firm. Thus far he has marked himself as one of the most courageous southern newspapermen in connection with the racial issues.

ALABAMA: Newsweek

New Decision

Mar. 1-23-57

The long legal battle between the University of Alabama and Autherine Lucy Foster finally ended last week—and on a court decision over a matter only remotely related to Mrs. Foster's original attempt to become the first Negro student at the university.

Mrs. Foster's original admittance to the university had touched off a series of riots that led to her being expelled "for her own safety." She was readmitted under an enjoining order issued by Federal Judge Hobart Grooms—and was immediately expelled again by the board of trustees because her suit for readmittance had charged them with "conspiring" with the rioting mob (NEWSWEEK, March 12, 1956). The trustees also asserted that Mrs. Foster had made "false, impertinent, and scandalous" charges about them.

Last week, Judge Grooms upheld the trustees. Vacating the enjoining order, he ruled that Mrs. Foster's charges against the trustees had been "baseless and without foundation in fact."

While the Supreme Court forbids racial discrimination, said Judge Grooms, "it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race. If I correctly read the Supreme Court decisions construing the equal protection provision . . . that provision does not warp the color line—it erases it."

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A quiet execution marked the demise of the Autherine Lucy case in Federal Court here when District Judge Hobart Grooms ruled that the University of Alabama was NOT in contempt of court when it "permanently" expelled Autherine Lucy Foster from classes last March. p. 3

Judge Grooms ruled that the school was within its rights in expelling its first and only Negro student, Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster.

• The controversial Lucy case reached court when Miss Lucy filed charges against University of Alabama officials.

It was on the basis of these so-called "false" charges that Miss Lucy was ousted from the campus. Perhaps an inkling of what was to happen was given by Miss Lucy when she addressed an audience at the Trinity Presbyterian Church in Montclair, N.J., last June.

AT THAT TIME, she said, "We made a mistake in filing charges that the University of Alabama officials conspired to prevent me from entering the school last fall by promoting mob violence. The charges were made in emotionally intensified circumstances.

• "It was a mistake we made and, as a result, I'm not a student at Alabama now. However, I feel the trustees did not do all they could to prevent incidents."

• The fine hand of the White Citizens Council was seen in the case. After Miss Lucy was banned from University of Alabama classes, one spokesman said the Council had "proper, strategic plans to meet the order for her readmittance."

When she appeared for registration last February, she was processed in the record time of 23 minutes in a procedure that usually takes three hours.

DURING THOSE hectic days as a student at the Tuscaloosa school, Miss Lucy was pelted with rotten fruit and eggs, firecrackers, mud balls and rocks.

Her first day on the campus occasioned the burning of four Klan-type crosses, the exploding of firecrackers and a defiant parade of race-haters through the town of Tuscaloosa with the processional being paced along with the "rebel" yells of participants.

• Although Section 489, Title 2, of the Alabama code specifies that University of Alabama students are eligible for the "full benefit of the university fund," Miss Lucy had been denied dining and rooming facilities and had been forced to commute between Birmingham and Tuscaloosa in order to attend classes.

The rioters shouted such "poetry" as "Kill her! Hang her! Hey, hey, ho, where'd that n——r go?" The words echoed throughout the world as a hollow mockery of this country's protestations of democracy and equal rights for all persons.

Judge Upholds University In Expelling Negro Coed

Ruling Holds Plot Charge As Baseless

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP) —A federal judge today ruled that University of Alabama trustees were justified in expelling Autherine Lucy Foster, the school's first Negro student.

U. S. Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms held that the woman's charges that university authorities conspired in rioting which drove her from the campus at Tuscaloosa are "baseless and without foundation in fact."

He dismissed contempt proceedings brought against the Board of Trustees by Mrs. Foster's attorneys and ordered her taxed with court costs.

'HIGHLY PLEASED'

Hill Ferguson, Birmingham, chairman pro-tem of the board, said in a statement, "I am highly pleased with the decision of the court."

Attorney Arthur D. Shores, who represented Mrs. Foster, said he would study the decision before announcing whether the case will be appealed.

The ruling by Grooms, the judge who ordered the university to drop its racial barriers, was the sharpest rebuff suffered in Mrs. Foster's 4½-year court battle for admission to the university.

It does not close the school to other qualified Negro applicants, however.

The university fought Grooms' July 1, 1955, ruling to the U. S. Supreme Court, and after losing there permitted Mrs. Foster to enroll last Feb. 1.

She was suspended for safety reasons when a mob drove her from the campus Feb. 6. Another order from Grooms Feb. 29 required the school to readmit her March 5, but she was expelled a few hours later.

"While the equal protection provision forbids racial discrimination," said Grooms in a written decision, "it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race. If I correctly read the Supreme Court decisions construing the equal protection provisions, and especially the more recent decisions, that provision does not warp the color line—it erases it."

"The evidence offered upon this hearing," said Grooms, "establishes the fact that the charges and statements above referred to are baseless and without foundation in fact.

"The members of the board of trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic lif of this state, and these charge and statements are of a seriou nature. They reflect not only upo the individuals but upon the un versity as well. Under all the ev dence the board was justified expelling Autherine Lucy."

Earlier in the decision Groon cited the long list of allegatio made by Mrs Foster against ur versity officials The allegatio were dropped Feb. 29.

Contrasting with the crowd whites and Negroes who soug seats at earlier hearings on th case, only a small number of spe tators was present.

Among these was R. E. Cham liss, at one time alleged by Mr Foster to have conspired wi university authorities in the rio ing. Court upholds expulsion—

UA doors remain shut to ex-coed

BY PAUL HOGAN, News staff writer

An apparent end was reached in the long Autherine Lucy Foster case when a federal judge Friday ruled University of Alabama officials justified in expelling her.

The Negro woman's attorney, Arthur D. Shores, has the right to appeal Judge H. Hobart Grooms' decision to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals within 30 days.

However, Shores would not say Friday whether he would appeal, saying he would have to study the decree and talk to his client before plotting further moves.

Sat. 1-19-57

GROOMS' ORDER said, "Under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling" Mrs. Foster.

The first Negro ever to attend classes at Alabama, she has since married a minister and is living in Tyler, Tex.

Shores had asked for contempt action against the trustees, which was denied yesterday.

He charged that they did not comply with a ruling handed down by Judge Grooms on Feb. 29, when he ordered a suspension over her lifted.

The trustees admittedly met hours after that decision was made, and passed a resolution "expelling" her.

SHE HAD BEEN suspended for her own safety and to preserve order on the campus after several demonstrations in Tuscaloosa.

A white student, Leonard Wilson was expelled for his statements after the demonstrations.

The board's unanimously-passed resolution which expelled Mrs. Foster claimed she had made unfounded charges against the trustees.

AS A DEFENSE in Friday's hearing here, lawyers for the trustees showed a television film taken at a press conference Feb. 9, 1956, at which Constance Motley, New York NAACP attorney, read the charges from a proposed complaint that was later filed in court.

The charges were later dropped when the action was amended by Thurgood Marshall, another NAACP attorney.

In Judge Grooms' decree, he noted that the complainant avered "that her suspension is a cunning strategem for denying her right to attend and pursue courses of study at the University of Alabama.

"That defendants . . . conspired to deny the injunction of this court, have in fact done other certain overt acts in defiance of the said order, and have done acts so near to this court as to obstruct the administration of justice by this court . . .

The averments continued: "Defendants . . . have intentionally permitted the said acts of the unidentified persons in order to assimilate an air of riot and disorder and rebellion on the campus against the plaintiff in order that same may be used as a subterfuge for refusing to permit her to pursue courses of study at the University."

JUDGE GROOMS stated that "the members of the Board of Trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of this state, and these charges and statements are of a serious nature. They reflect not only upon the individual but upon the University as well."

Called to testify Friday by Andrew Thomas, attorney for the trustees, were Newscaster Davenport Smith of WBRC, Irving Beiman, business editor of the Birmingham News, and Leroy Holt, photographer for WABT.

The three described the press conference that depicted in the National Broadcasting Co. film that was shown to the court.

Hill Ferguson, chairman pro-tem of the trustees, and Bill Cadell, a member of the board also testified, along with James J. Bennett, assistant to the president of the University.

THE LUCY CASE started more than four years ago, and Judge Grooms ruled on July 1, 1955, that she would have to be admitted. The University fought the decision all the way to the Supreme Court, but finally was forced to admit her Feb. 1, 1956.

On Feb. 6, she was suspended for safety reasons after a mob had driven her from the campus.

Only a reversal of Judge Grooms' ruling yesterday could open the doors of the University to Mrs. Foster, but the decision does not close the school to other qualified Negro applicants.

Lucy Charge Of Riot Plot Held Baseless

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 18 (AP). A federal judge today ruled that University of Alabama trustees were justified in expelling Autherine Lucy Foster, the Deep South's school's first Negro student.

U.S. Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms held that the woman's charges that university authorities conspired in rioting which drove her from the campus are "baseless and without foundation in fact."

He dismissed contempt proceedings brought against the board of trustees by Mrs. Foster's attorneys, and ordered her taxed with court costs.

Hill Ferguson, Birmingham, chairman pro-tem of the board, said in a statement, "I am highly pleased with the decision of the court."

SHARPEST REBUFF

Atty. Arthur D. Shores, who represented Mrs. Foster, said he would study the decision before announcing whether the case will be appealed.

The ruling by Grooms, the judge who ordered the university to drop its racial barriers, was the sharpest rebuff suffered in Mrs. Foster's 4½-year court battle for admission to the university.

It does not close the school to other qualified Negro applicants however.

The university fought Grooms' historic July 1, 1955, ruling to the U. S. Supreme Court, and after losing there permitted Mrs. Foster to enroll last Feb. 1.

REPELLED BY MOB

She was suspended for safety reasons when a mob drove her from the campus Feb. 6. She won a second order from Grooms Feb. 26 requiring the school to readmit her March 5, but was expelled a few hours later.

"While the equal protection provision forbids racial discrimination," said Grooms in a written decision, "it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race. If I correctly read the Supreme Court decisions construing the equal protection provisions and especially the more recent decisions, that provision does not warp the color line—it erases it.

"The evidence offered upon this hearing," said Grooms, "establishes the fact that the charges and statements above referred to are baseless and without foundation in fact.

"The members of the Board of Trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of this state, and these charges and statements are of a serious nature. They reflect not only upon the individuals but upon the university as well. Under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling movant, Autherine Lucy."

Earlier in the decision Grooms cited the long list of allegations made by Mrs. Foster against University officials.

Contrasting with the crowd of whites and Negroes who sought seats at earlier hearings on the case, only a small number of spectators were present.

Among these was R. E. Chambliss, at one time alleged by Mrs. Foster to have conspired with University authorities in the rioting. Chambliss, who identified himself as a Ku Klux Klan official, is suing the Negro woman and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for one million dollars because of the allegations, which were dropped on Feb. 29.

A university trustee testified during the hearing that a white student as well as the Negro co-ed was expelled for false charges against school officials.

Attorney John Caddell, Decatur, Ala., said the action was taken against pro-segregation leader Leonard Wilson after the latter charged that Dr. O. C. Carmichael was "not fit to serve as president of the university."

Caddell said Wilson asserted that other university officials should be "cleaned out."

The way it looks from here about the only solution to the problem we could suggest to the University of Alabama's board is that the school give someone like Senator Eastland or Sam Englehardt an honorary doctorate and elevate him to the presidency.

That Alabama Search

Afro American

The University of Alabama's board of trustees, from all we can learn, is still seeking a president of that school.

The search began on January 1 when scholarly, sensitive and law-abiding Dr. O. C. Carmichael resigned the post, rather than remain with an institution which had disgraced itself with the Autherine Lucy incident. P. 4

After surrendering to lawlessness, the board compounded its felony by expelling Autherine for having the temerity to resent being the target of an enraged mob.

Ala. 8-31-57

One of the requirements of the university's new president is that he pledge a continued violation of the Constitution by keeping the classrooms of this tax - supported institution free of colored citizens.

That's quite an order, especially in these days when more than 3,000 colored students are now enrolled in state schools of higher learning all over the South.

Federal Judge Denies Autherine Lucy Appeal

Defender Sat. 1-26-57 Chicago, Ill.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — The University of Alabama's board of trustees was cleared last week of contempt charges rising from their expulsion of the first Negro to attend the university.

Birmingham Federal Court Judge Hobart Grooms ruled that the University had the judge had ordered her re-admitted right to expel any student, and to the school. therefore, the decision of the board to expel the Negro co-ed could not make them liable to contempt charges.

Judge Grooms said if the student was expelled justly and not because she was a Negro, the board's action was perfectly within the rights of the university. He added:

"While the equal protection provision of the constitution forbids racial discrimination, it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race."

Negro Attorney Arthur Shores said he "hadn't decided" what further court action he was going to take.

A darkened federal court saw motion pictures of Autherine Lucy Foster accusing University of Alabama officials of not using all means at their disposal to stop rioting which drove her from the campus.

In an unusual procedure, university attorneys succeeded in showing a television sound-film in which Mrs. Foster repeated charges her attorneys had made in court — that university officials "conspired" to permit rioting on the campus.

The film was offered to back the university's contention that Mrs. Foster was not expelled from the university because she is a Negro, but because she publicly made damaging charges which her attorneys later said they could not prove.

The university contends it was exercising proper disciplinary control over a student when it expelled the 27-year-old former secretary, hours after a federal court finally ordered her admitted, she was excluded after rioting, the court ordered her re-admitted, and then she was expelled.

AUTHERINE FOSTER

Mrs. Foster's attorneys contend the university board of trustees should be held in contempt of court. It was on the same sort of petition that the charges, which resulted in her being expelled were raised last February.

She had been barred from the campus earlier, after three days of protest rioting, "for her own safety."

A member of the board of trustees, John A. Caddell, testified that Mrs. Foster was not the only student expelled for charges leveled against officials during the fur- or early last year.

He pointed out that the university had expelled a white student, Leonard Wilson, for his criticism of university officials. The actions were taken, he said, in the interest of maintaining discipline at school.

Mrs. Foster, who university officials had said narrowly escaped death at the hands of a mob on the campus, had sought for two years to enroll in school. A federal Judge Rules U. of Alabama Officials Had Legal Right to Oust Autherine Lucy

By PHILIP BENJAMIN

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 18 —Federal Judge Hobart H. Grooms ruled today that University of Alabama officials were justified in expelling Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster last year.

In vacating his own order to show cause why the officials should not be held in contempt of court, Judge Grooms sided with the university's board of trustees. They had accused Mrs. Foster, who had been the university's first Negro coed, and her attorneys of making "false, defamatory, impertinent and scandalous charges" against them.

New York, N.Y.

The judge also ordered Mrs. Foster to pay the court costs.

The board of trustees had referred to accusations made publicly and in motion pictures by Mrs. Foster that the trustees had conspired to permit persons to mill about the campus to simulate an air of riot and disorder. The trustees had based their permanent expulsion of Mrs. Foster on the disorders that took place when she tried to attend classes last February.

In July, 1955, Judge Grooms had permanently enjoined the university from denying Mrs. Foster admission to the university. Mrs. Foster's contempt proceedings had been based on the school's failure to comply with an order by Judge Grooms last Feb. 29 to reinstate her.

Judge Grooms declined today to take into consideration the fact that, in amended motion papers for the contempt action, Mrs. Foster's attorneys had deleted the accusations of conspiracy against the trustees.

In his ruling today, Judge Grooms said:

"The evidence offered upon this hearing establishes the fact that the charges and statements * * * are baseless and without foundation in fact.

"The members of the board of trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of this state, and these charges and statements are of a serious nature.

"They reflect not only upon the individuals but upon the university as well. Under all the evidence the board of trustees was justified in expelling the movant, Autherine Lucy."

Mrs. Foster, who was married after the incidents at the university, is living in Teas. Arthur D. Shores, her attorney, said today he would study the transcripts of today's hearing and ask Mrs. Foster what she wanted to do next.

Mr. Shores said his next step could be to ask for a rehearing or to take the case to the United States Court of Appeals. Asked whether the fight might be dropped, Mr. Shores said he would have to consult with Mrs. Foster first.

U.S. Judge Holds Alabama U. Justified In Expulsion

Sun. 1-27-57

Memphis, Tenn.

P. 3

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 26. — (AP)—A formal finding clearing University of Alabama trustees of contempt charges in the Autherine Lucy case has been filed by a Federal judge.

United States District Judge H. Hobart Grooms announced his ruling last Friday. The formal action Friday spelled out the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment that the trustees were justified in expelling the Negro Feb. 29, 1956.

The former Birmingham secretary, now the wife of a minister living in Texas, was expelled for her unproved charges that school officials conspired in rioting that drove her from the campus early last year.

Judge Grooms was asked by the woman's attorney to hold university trustees in contempt of court for refusing to readmit Her. She first had been excluded from classes "for her own protection."

Judge Grooms ruled that the trustees were justified in permanently expelling her, providing that such disciplinary action is not used arbitrarily.

He said conspiracy allegations made by the former Negro student's attorneys were not privileged and that the trustees could use them as a basis for action against her.

Attorney Arthur D. Shores said no decision has been reached on whether to appeal Judge Grooms' decision.

Text Of Court Ruling

Post-Herald Sat. 1-19-57

Birmingham, Ala.

P. 2

A text of yesterday's ruling—complete except where noted—by U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms in the Autherine Lucy Foster case follows:

"What is the test for the determination of the issue here involved? Is it not this: Is the evidence sufficient to justify expulsion of any student, regardless of color, standing in the shoes of movant Lucy?

"Applying this test, if the evidence is not sufficient to justify expulsion, the court would be warranted in concluding that the movant was expelled because she is a Negro. If the evidence is sufficient, movant has no cause to complain, and the court would be warranted in concluding that she was not so expelled but was expelled for justifiable cause.

"If she was expelled for just cause and not because she is a Negro, she cannot be heard to say that she has been denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

"While the equal protection provision forbids racial discrimination, it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race.

"If I correctly read the Supreme Court decisions construing the equal protection provision, and especially the more recent decisions, that provision does not warp the color line—it erases it.

"In her 'motion for issuance of order to show cause and for contempt judgment' filed on Feb. 9, 1956, the plaintiff made the following among other averments":

(Here Judge Grooms quoted at length from the motion, including the charge that "her suspension is a cunning stratagem for denying her right to attend and pursue courses of study at the University.")

"In her affidavit filed with said motion, plaintiff states that 'she believes the members of the board of trustees have conspired with the defendant Adams and other identified persons.'

"That 'she believes she has been suspended by the board of trustees. . .' to appease persons having no connection with the University of Alabama who wish to defy and prevent the enforcement of the order of this court.

"'That Adams and the members of the board of trustees . . . have failed and refused to take action within their power to prevent persons having no connection with the University of Alabama from interferring with the order of this court.'

"These charges, if sustained, would appear to constitute a violation of the criminal conspiracy statutes of the State of Alabama, Title 14, Sections 99 and 101, Alabama Code of 1940.

"They would appear also to constitute a violation of the criminal statutes against riots and mobs, Title 14, Sections 407, 408 and 355, Code of Alabama 1940.

"The federal criminal statutes, Title 18, USCA 241, make it a criminal offense for 'two or more persons to conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or the Laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same.'

"The charges were given wide publicity by the various news gathering agencies, including the radio and television news service. When the motion was called for hearing on the 29th day of February, 1956, plaintiff's counsel, in open court, stated that these charges referred to could not be substantiated, and asked leave to amend the motion. Such leave was granted.

"The court will not further undertake to detail the evidence taken upon the trial of the instant motion.

"The evidence offered upon this hearing established the fact that the charges and statements above referred to are baseless and without foundation in fact.

"The members of the board of trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of this state, and these charges and statements are of a serious nature.

"They reflect not only upon the individuals but upon the University as well.

"Under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling movant, Autherine Lucy.

"It is therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed:

"1. That the order to show cause should be and the same is hereby vacated and the defendants be and they are hereby discharged therefrom.

"2. That movant be and she is hereby taxed with costs.

"Done and ordered, this 18th day of January, 1957.

Autherine Lucy Case Is 'All Over'

The Autherine Lucy case is 'all over."

Arthur Shores, attorney for the University of Alabama's only Negro student, said yesterday there will be no appeal of a Jan. 18 ruling that Trustees were justified in expelling her.

"We've decided not to go any further," he said.

Shores said he understood Autherine Lucy Foster "definitely" plans to enter the University of Texas this Fall. She now lives in Texas with her husband, the Rev. H. L. Foster, pastor of a Tyler, Tex., church.

U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms ruled Jan. 18, "under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling . . . Autherine Lucy."

The expulsion by the board came after the 27-year-old former secretary made "false, defamatory, impertinent and scandalous charges," the trustees' resolution of Feb. 29, 1956, stated.

The charges were contained in a motion filed with the court 20 days earlier, in which i twas said the University officials conspired with a mob that drove her from the campus after three days of classes.

The trustees said that "any student who was guilty of similar misconduct, regardless of race or color," would be expelled.

The Lucy case was filed in court here July 1, 1953, asking that the University be required to admit the Negro student.

On July 1, 1955, Judge Grooms issued an injunction restraining University officials from denying to Negro students the right to enroll in the University solely on account of their race or color.

The trustees, late last January, instructed the dean of admissions to allow Autherine Lucy to enroll at the University. She registered and appeared on the campus for three days.

Three separate mob demonstrations led to her "exclusion" by the trustees "for her own safety." On Feb. 29, Judge Grooms ruled the University not in contempt for this action, but ordered her re-admitted on March 1. A few hours after this ruling the trustees met and "permanently expelled" the student.

At a contempt hearing in August Judge Grooms said "the court is of the opinion that it should not interfere with the administraive acts of the trustees . . ."

"The trustees have an unquestioned right to expel a student for just cause," he said.

Says Allegations Against Educators Baseless

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 18 (AP)—A federal judge Friday ruled that University of Alabama trustees were justified in expelling Autherine Lucy Foster, the Deep South school's first Negro student.

US district Judge H. Hobart Grooms held that the woman's charges that university authorities conspired in rioting which drove her from the campus are "baseless and without foundation in fact."

He dismissed contempt proceedings brought against the board of trustees by Mrs. Foster's attorneys, and ordered her taxed with court costs.

Hill Ferguson, Birmingham, chairman pro-tem of the board, said in a statement, "I am highly pleased with the decision of the court."

Attorney to Study Ruling

Attorney Arthur D. Shores, who represented Mrs. Foster, said he would study the decision before announcing whether the case will be appealed.

The ruling by Grooms, the judge who ordered the university to drop its racial barriers, was the sharpest rebuff suffered in Mrs. Foster's 4½-year court battle for admission to the university.

It does not close the school to other qualified Negro applicants, however.

The university fought Grooms' historic July 1, 1955, ruling to the US supreme court, and after losing there permitted Mrs. Foster to enroll last Feb. 1.

She was suspended for safety reasons when a mob drove her from the campus Feb. 6. She won a second order from Grooms Feb. 29 requiring the school to readmit her March 5, but was expelled a few hours later.

'Does Not Warp Color Line'

"While the equal protection provision forbids racial discrimination," said Grooms in a written decision, "it does not grant immunity from equal application of the laws because of race. If I correctly read the supreme court decisions construing the equal protection provisions, and especially the more recent decisions, that provision does not warp the color line—it erases it."

"The evidence offered upon this hearing," said Grooms, "establishes the fact that the charges and statements above referred to are baseless and without foundation in fact.

"The members of the board of trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of this state, and these charges and statements are of a serious nature. They reflect not only upon the individuals but upon the university as well. Under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling movant, Autherine Lucy."

Earlier in the decision Grooms cited the long list of allegations made by Mrs. Foster against university officials.

Contrasting wth the crowd of whites and Negroes who sought seats at earlier hearings on the case, only a small number of spectators was present.

Says White Student Ousted

Among these was R. E. Chambliss, at one time alleged by Mrs. Foster to have conspired with university authorities in the rioting. Chambliss, who identified himself as a Ku Klux Klan official, is suing the Negro woman and the National Association for Advancement of Colored People for $1 million because of the allegations, which were dropped Feb. 29.

A university trustee testified during the hearing that a white student as well as the Negro co-ed was expelled for false charges against school officials.

Attorney John Caddell, Decatur, Ala., said the action was taken against prosegregation leader Leonard Wilson after the latter charged that Dr. O. C. Carmichael was "not fit to serve as president of the university."

Caddell said Wilson asserted that other university officials should be "cleaned out."

Judge Issues Formal Ruling Upholding Ousting Of Coed

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 25 (AP) — A formal finding clearing University of Alabama trustees of contempt charges in the Autherine Lucy case has been filed by a federal judge.

U.S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms announced his ruling last Friday. The formal action today spelled out the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgement that the trustees were justified in expelling the Negro, Feb. 29. 1956.

The former Birmingham secretary, now the wife of a minister living in Texas, was expelled for her unproved charges that school officials conspired in rioting that drove her from the campus early last year.

Grooms was asked by the woman's attorney to hold university trustees in contempt of court for refusing to readmit her. She first had been excluded from classes "for her own protection."

Grooms ruled that the trustees were justified in permanently expelling her, providing that such disciplinary action is not used arbitrarily.

He said that conspiracy allegations made by the former Negro student's attorneys were not privileged, and that the trustees could use them as a basis for action against her.

Atty Arthur D. Shores said no decision has been reached on whether to appeal Grooms' decision.

Answers civil suit—

NAACP denies paying attorney fees for Lucy

News Thurs. 1-3-57 p. 38
B'ham, Ala.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People have filed an answer to a civil suit, denying that the organization paid attorney fees for Authurine Lucy's fight to become the first Negro student at the University of Alabama.

14e(1)

The answers were to interrogatories put by attorneys for Ed Watts, one of four white men who are seeking damages against the NAACP for being accused of helping to incite trouble at the University.

Discrimination

WATTS AND THE others are seeking $1 million against the Negro organization, claiming their reputations were damaged, and they were put to expense and caused embarrassment after being cited for contempt of a U. S. District Court order.

The answers were signed by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, and by its attorneys, Arthur D. Shores of Birmingham, and Robert L. Carter of New York.

In the suit, Watts had asked that the NAACP make public the names of those who contributed to Authurine Lucy's expenses during the time she was attempting to study at the University last Spring.

The document filed in Circuit Court here today listed 15 contributors, all out of the state. The largest contribution listed was $100 from the United Packinghouse Workers of America, in St. Paul, Minn. Most of the other contributors, listed as giving amounts from $5 to $25, were New York or New Jersey residents.

THE TOTAL contributed to the cause during February, March and April, 1946, according to the sworn statement, was $240.

The defendant NAACP alleged in its answers that it paid none of the attorney fees in the Lucy or the Polly Ann Hudson case.

A total of $5000 in attorney fees were paid from the Alabama Scholastic and Educational Fund, and from the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, apparently not considered a part of the NAACP.

The NAACP listed 46 chapters in Alabama, including seven in Jefferson County. Those in Jefferson are in Birmingham, Bessemer, Dolomite, Fairfield, Cairo and Roosevelt.

AS TO THE QUESTION OF whether Ruby Hurley, Southeastern regional director, NAACP, solicited membership in Alabama, the organization said it "presumed" she had.

She was not specifically authorized to solicit membership, the answers said, but was "impliedly" authorized to do so due to her position.

The document filed stated that there are no records kept on how many, or the names of, any members she might have solicited in the state.

In addition to the civil suits against the NAACP here, it is under a $100,000 contempt of court citation in Montgomery, and is enjoined from doing further business in the state.

UA presents evidence on Lucy expulsion

News p. 1
B'ham, Ala.
Fri. 1-18-57

The University of Alabama presented evidence today to support its contention that Negro co-ed Autherine Lucy made false charges against school officials last February and that her expulsion had nothing to do with her race.

Discrimination

The school's trustees are before Federal Judge H. Hobart Grooms in a contempt case. He will decide whether they were in contempt of his court when they expelled the co-ed last Feb. 29 despite a court order for her readmission.

There was no immediate indication as to when a decision will come.

SHE HAS SINCE married and is now Arthurine Lucy Foster, living in Tyler, Tex.

Davenport Smith, news director of Radio Station WBRC, testified he attended a news conference in the office of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People here on Feb. 9.

Attorneys for the co-ed, he said, asserted that the trustees and school officials conspired with the mob which drove Miss Lucy from the Alabama campus on Feb. 6, her third day of attending classes.

SMITH SAID Constance Motley, NAACP attorney from New York, told the 30 to 40 newsmen present that school officials "intentionally allowed" the demonstrations against the Negro co-ed "so as to constitute a subterfuge" and prevent her attendance at classes.

The charges made by her attorneys, Smith testified, were distributed by wire services, radio and television.

NEWS STAFF WRITER Irving Beiman gave similar testimony and the court adjourned for a 15-minute recess.

JAMES J. (JEFF) BENNETT, assistant to the president of the University, testified he saw a telecast in which Arthur D. Shores and Mrs. Motley, attorneys for the Negro co-ed, read charges that the trustees conspired with the mob and made comments on the charges.

John Caddell, Decatur attorney and member of the board of trustees, supported the contention that the false charges against school officials were the sole reasons for expulsion of the Negro student.

He said he attended the board meeting at which the decision was made to expel Miss Lucy.

Her attorneys claim that the trustees are in contempt of two court orders. One was an order of July 1, 1955, which enjoined Dean of Admissions William F. Adams from denying the student the right to enroll because of her race or color.

The other was Grooms' order of last Feb. 29, saying that she should be readmitted to the school by March 5.

Lucy returning

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, the first student of color at the University of Alabama, is going back. She re-signed a statement Friday authorizing Arthur Shores, her lawyer, to continue working for her re-admission.

Discrimination

Members of the school's board of trustees must show cause on Jan. 18 why they are not in contempt of court in their expulsion of Mrs. Foster after violence accompanied her enrollment at the Tuscaloosa campus.

Judge Grooms' Sound Ruling

Federal Judge H. Hobart Grooms ruled yesterday that the University of Alabama board of trustees is not in contempt of court for refusing to re-admit Autherine Lucy to the University. The Negro woman student was permanently expelled by the trustees last Feb. 29 on the grounds that she made unfounded charges of connivance by University officials in demonstrations against her.

14e(1)

Judge Grooms held that evidence offered established the fact that the charges "are baseless and without foundation in fact," that they are of a serious nature, reflecting upon the trustees as individuals and upon the University as well, and that upon all the evidence the board was justified in expelling the student.

Judge Grooms' ruling again upholds the right of trustees to expel a student for just cause and their power to delegate the right of expulsion to officers of the University. School authorities clearly must have broad administrative powers bearing on student conduct and discipline. Student discipline and morale obviously depend to a great extent on adequate administrative authority and on sound procedure under such authority.

We see no basis whatever for the contempt petition. The ruling, in our view, was soundly based and well considered.

NAACP Denies School Fight Aid To Lucy

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 11 (AP)—In a statement filed in Circuit Court today, the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People denied giving any financial assistance to a Negro woman in her fight to attend the University of Alabama.

14e(1)

The statement was in answer to one of four million-dollar suits filed against the NAACP. They were filed by four men whom the organization had accused of participating in riots which drove Autherine Lucy from the campus last Feb. 6.

The woman is now Mrs. H. C. Foster, of Tyler, Texas. She had made the charges in a federal court petition, but dropped them when the legal action came up for hearing.

Today's statement was filed in the case by R. E. Chambliss of Birmingham.

The statement said the NAACP paid $325 travel expenses for the former Birmingham secretary to attend its annual convention in San Francisco, but denied that she was used to raise funds for the group.

Uncle Sam Pays $195 For Autherine Lucy Stories

Call Kansas city, missouri

Jrn. 4-19-57

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The United States Information Agency paid a reporter for the Tuscaloosa (Ala.) News $195 for stories on the Autherine Lucy case at the University of Alabama.

The reporter, John T. Hamner, also was covering for the Associated Press.

P.1

These facts came to light during hearings on appropriations for the USIA for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The agency requested $11,474,000 for "press service" for the next fiscal year—$1,593,074 more than it got for the current year.

Under questioning by Representative Frank T. Bow, Republican of Ohio, it was developed that USIA has about 300 free-lance writers scattered over the country, most of whom work for newspapers and write for the agency as a sideline.

Quizzed On Case

Bow asked what was the development in the Autherine Lucy case that made it necessary for USIA to buy a story on it and where did the agency use the story abroad.

Burnett Anderson, deputy director in charge of the press service, replied that the story was written so that the agency would have its "own reliable information about actually what was going on." He continued:

"As you know, there was a great deal of material sent abroad on the Autherine Lucy case, and it was widely discussed and to a considerable extent distorted in other countries.

"We filed material that would tend, if required to be used, to put this sensational reporting into perspective.

"We did not put anything out for publication, as such. We filed the basic, factual information without sensationalism for the information of our officers to use at their discretion in replying to the charges and sensationalism that were flying around."

Asked what was the editorial attitude of the Tuscaloosa News, Anderson replied that he did not know.

Jrn. 4-19-57

"Did you get your AP files on this case?" Bow asked.

"He (Hamner) was also covering for AP there," Anderson replied. "We did get AP and UP files."

P.4

"So you have a pretty complete file over at the AP without going down to a local newswriter on one of these rather sensational papers and certainly one with a lot of heat back of it?" Bow asked.

Anderson replied that USIA is not permitted to use AP and UP material. He said USIA felt that the Autherine Lucy stories were important enough for the agency to have its own factual reports on which to rely.

MRS. ARTHERINE L. FOSTER

Lucy Not Giving Up

Afro-American

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — "We haven't given up," Arthur D. Shores, attorney for Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, told the AFRO, Saturday, in commenting on the adverse ruling made the previous day on the case in U.S. District Court.

"I have asked for a transcript of the hearing and, after studying it, I shall decide whether or not to appeal the decision," the civil rights attorney said.

P.1

Mr. Shores had asked that the board of trustees of the University of Alabama be held in contempt of the Feb. 29, 1956, ruling of a Federal Court that Autherine (then Miss Lucy) be readmitted to the hitherto all-white university.

WHEN MISS LUCY sought to re-enter the school in March, the board refused her admittance on the grounds that certain allegations maintaining that a conspiracy to keep her out of the institution had been made by her and were grounds for her expulsion.

Mr. Shores, in his petition for the contempt charges, argued that contrary to the Federal court's order, Miss Lucy had never been readmitted to the school and that this constituted contempt of the court's order.

Afro-American

U.S. DISTRICT Judge H. Hobart Grooms, who ruled on the appeal Friday, stated that the Univerity of Alabama trustees were justified in expelling the would-be student.

P.2

He called her charges that university authorities conspired in rioting that drove her from "baseless and without foundation in fact."

He therefore dismissed the contempt proceedings and ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs of the court hearing.

Judge Grooms was the same judge that ordered the university to admit Miss Lucy in 1955 and readmit her on Feb. 29, 1956.

THURSDAY'S RULING climaxes the now Mrs. Foster's 4½-year fight to enter the University of Alabama. It does not close the school to other qualified colored applicants, however, Mr. Shores pointed out.

He said that in the latest litigation, no reference was made to race.

The University of Alabama had fought Judge Groom's July 1, 1955, ruling that it must open its doors to Miss Lucy all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, and after losing there permitted her to enter the school on Feb. 1, 1956.

After she had attended peacefully for a day, mobs began forming on the campus and on Feb. 5, the school suspended her for "safety reasons."

THE YOUNG WOMAN then petitioned the court to make the university readmit her, and the order for her readmission was signed Feb. 29, but when she went back the school stated that she was expelled for charges aired against authorities during the readmission hearing.

At the appeal hearing this week, Judge Grooms cited the long list of allegations made by Miss Lucy and noted that her counsel had stated that they had no proof of the charges.

ONE OF THE spectators at the hearing was R. E. Chambliss, who Miss Lucy charged with having conspired with university authorities in the rioting.

Chambliss, who identified himself as a Ku Klux Klan official, is suing the would-be student and the NAACP for $1,000,000 because of the allegations.

It was testified at the hearing by a university trustee that not only Miss Lucy but also a white coed had been expelled from the school for making "false charges" against school officials.

Autherine was married last April to Rev. Hugh L. Foster of Tyler, Texas, and the couple makes their home near there.

J. H. Newman Takes Office As University President

Advertiser Wed, 1-2-57
Montgomery, Ala.

UNIVERSITY, Ala., Jan. 1 — Addicted to work, devoted to state and school, the interim president of the University of Alabama, J. H. Newman, took office today.

Newman is now in his 24th year of university administration. Were you to ask him about his hobby, he might unthinkingly say "educational administration," for this is what has occupied much of his waking hours since his graduation here amid a flurry of honors back in the depression year of 1930.

In that year, the UA conferred its master of arts degree in political science upon this young man from LaFayette, Ala. That year he was recipient of the Algernon Sydney Sullivan award for demonstrated leadership and outstanding character.

These were additional notes of merit to a campus leader who had been tapped to Phi Beta Kappa, top scholastic honor society in liberal arts; to Omicron Delta Kappa, national senior honor society for men, and to Jasons, Alabama's senior men's honorary. He is also a member of Alpha Phi Omega, Quadrangle, and Phi Eta Sigma.

His tutelage in educational administration was begun that year under the inspired guidance of Dean of Men, Dabney S. Lancaster. One of Newman's first assignments was to help the UA organize its 100th year celebration, its centennial anniversary.

Another assignment was one close to the student pulse at the UA, that of director of the Student Union Building.

In subsequent steps he became assistant dean of men and associate dean of men. In 1938 he was named dean of men at the university by the late Richard E. Foster. Newman was one of President Foster's first appointees.

In 1942 came a three-year stint in the Navy which saw him rise to the rank of lieutenant commander, and he'll confide that a Navy officer is usually no more effective than are junior officers and seamen who serve under him. "I had good men with me all the way," he likes to recall.

For four years after World War II Newman was Dean of Students at the University of Virginia. Then in 1950 he was recalled to the UA as Dean of Administration, serving in that capacity under Dr. John M. Gallalee, but for a short time under Dean Lee Bidgood and since 1953 under Dr. O. C. Carmichael.

These are the facts behind the Board of Trustees' resolution that "by virtue of his familiarity with the office and duties of the president, because of the close relationship between the two offices . . . he is hereby elected interim president . . ."

NAACP Denies Paying Fees In University Admission Fight

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 3 (AP)—The National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People has denied paying attorneys' fees for two Negroes who sought admittance to the University of Alabama.

After a long legal battle, Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster was admitted, but later expelled. Mrs. Polly Anner Myers Hudson was refused admittance.

NAACP attorneys issued the denial in a statement yesterday in answer to interrogatories in one of four one-million-dollar suits on file in Jefferson County Circuit Court.

In other answers, the NAACP listed 46 chapters in Alabama and named several out-of-state contributors to the Autherine Lucy educational fund.

FOUR SUITS

The four suits against the NAACP were filed because of allegations by Autherine Lucy after she was driven from the University campus by mobs last Feb. 6.

The answers filed yesterday were in the suit brought by Ed Watts, Tuscaloosa.

Largest contribution listed from out-of-state sources was $100 from the United Packinghouse Workers of America, St. Paul, Minn.

Most of the other funds came from New York or New Jersey residents.

According to the statement, $5,000 in attorneys fees was paid from the Alabama scholastic and educational fund and from the NAACP legal defense and educational fund. The NAACP fund is considered separate from the organization itself.

Negro Coed's Expulsion Legal, U. S. Judge Rules

Courier-Journal 1-2
Sat. 1-19-57 Louisville, Ky.

Birmingham, Jan. 18 (AP)—A federal judge ruled today that University of Alabama trustees had a legal right to expel Negro coed Autherine Lucy Foster, and refused to hold them in contempt.

The trustees expelled Mrs. Foster last February 29 because of her unproved charges that school officials conspired in rioting that drove her from the campus last February 6.

The trustees contended that the expulsion of the university's first Negro student was an administrative action, and within powers granted by the State Constitution.

White Also Expelled

A white student who took part in demonstrations against the woman was also expelled for criticism of school authorities.

Attorneys for Mrs. Foster had asked United States District Judge H. Hobart Grooms to declare the trustees in contempt of court for failing to readmit her in compliance with an order he issued a few hours before she was expelled.

Judge Grooms, a native of Kentucky, held that Mrs. Foster's charges that university authorities consipred in rioting were "baseless and without foundation in fact."

To 'Study Decision'

Hill Ferguson, Birmingham, chairman pro tem of the board, said in a statement, "I am highly pleased with the decision of the court."

Attorney Arthur D. Shores, who represented Mrs. Foster, said he would study the decision before announcing whether the case will be appealed.

The ruling by Grooms, the judge who ordered the university to drop its racial barriers, was the sharpest rebuff suffered in Mrs. Foster's 4½-year court battle for admission to the university.

Ku Klux Klan Boils Over Race Discussion at Alabama School

Dispatch Fri 3-29-57 P.1
Oklahoma City, Okla.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala.—(ANP)—A seminar at the University of Alabama where race relations were discussed last week has caused the Ku Klux Klan here to do a slow burn.

Members of the hate group assembled near the Methodist student center where an Open Forum was underway and the subject of discussion was "The Impact of Segregation on the South."

A spokesman for the racist group of about 70, identified himself as boss of a Tuscaloosa Klan group and proceeded to blast the discussion as being "pink" and "Communist."

He said: "The University of Alabama is a white man's school. It has always been that way and we intend for it to stay that way."

Dr. Paul Ramsey, university faculty member and chairman of the forum, said the forum was "purely a discussion group open to anyone from the university staff or students." He added: "We have been discussing racial relations because it is one of the most important problems we have to deal with."

Reinstatement Urged For Leonard Wilson

Sat. 3-30-57 P.4
Birm, Ala.

It was a year ago this month that the University of Alabama Board of Trustees expelled Leonard R. Wilson for having made, as they charged, "unwarranted and outrageous attacks . . . upon the integrity of the president and faculty and officials of the University."

At the time of his expulsion it was the general belief that Leonard Wilson had, in fact, overstepped the bounds of propriety and that his punishment was justifiable.

There was hardly anyone who would have denied that his assertions were without factual basis, as Dr. Carmichael and the Board of Trustees contended.

Since that time, however, a strong current of opinion has developed which questions this action by the Trustees on the grounds of the precipitancy with which it was taken and in the light of documentary evidence now available.

The evidence to which I refer was first produced piecemeal during April and May of 1956.

It was contained in a series of letters to The Tuscaloosa News and one to The Alabama Journal, the collective contents of which provided indisputable proof of student Wilson's "attacks" upon President Carmichael.

Fully documented, the substance of these letters revealed Dr. Carmichael's previous activities in organizations dedicated to the task of racial integration in the field of higher education.

In one of these letters his role as a member of the president's commission on higher education, 1947, was dealt with extensively. These revelations were never refuted by him or any official at the University.

Unfortunately the public at large was unaware of these facts due to the reluctance of news agencies to give them adequate cover.

The University faculty also invited "attack" by this young crusader. That an alarming percentage of the former faculty did harbor integration sentiment has been subsequently disclosed in statements of resigning members themselves to such magazines as Life and Ebony. Since last March a score or more of these people have left either in "protest" or in "disgust" over the Lucy disposition.

If Leonard Wilson is to be forever denied an education and made an example of because he dared to speak the truth, what protection is afforded to any University student whose conscience may demand similar action?

As an alumnus of the University I would rather see it razed to the ground than that this intolerable condition should continue.

Leonard Wilson spoke the truth and should be reinstated. If the University can accommodate Chinese, Japanese, Persians, East Indians, Puerto Ricans and people from New York City, it can certainly make room for one boy from Selma, Ala.

Public justice demands this much.

Contempt Action Against Trustees Of UA Dismissed

Post-Herald P.1
Sat. 1-19-57
Birm, Ala.

BY JIM STRICKLAND

University of Alabama trustees were justified in expelling Autherine Lucy in February, U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms ruled yesterday.

After listening to four hours of testimony, Judge Grooms said the trustees were not in contempt of court for refusing to readmit the school's only Negro student. She attended classes less than a week.

The evidence offered "established the fact," he said, that charges made by the woman, now Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, 27, and her attorneys against University officials "are baseless and without foundation in fact."

Negro Atty. Arthur Shores, representing the Birmingham woman, said after Grooms gave his ruling he "would not know whether there will be an appeal until I talk with my client and have studied the decision."

The Negro woman, who was not present for the hearing, was taxed with costs of the long court action. Presumably she is in Texas, where she now lives.

Hill Ferguson of Birmingham, president pro tem of the board of trustees and a defendant in the action, said, "We are highly pleased with the decision of the court."

Shores called Ferguson as his only witness soon after the 9:30 a.m. hearing started.

Ferguson testified that Autherine Lucy was expelled Feb. 29, 1956, by the trustees and that the resolution they issued on that date stated "the only grounds" for the expulsion.

He identified a copy of the resolution, which said that Mrs. Foster (then Autherine Lucy) had made "false, defamatory, impertinent and scandalous charges" against University officials.

She had said, the resolution stated, that the school officials "conspired to defy" the injunction order of the federal court and did "certain overt acts in defiance of said action."

They also "intentionally permitted persons to mill about on the campus of the University in such a manner as to assimilate an air of riot, disorder and rebellion," according to a motion field by Mrs. Foster's attorneys, which motion formed the basis of the expulsion, Ferguson said.

Autherine Lucy attended three days of classes at the University in February 1956 but was "excluded" for "her own safety" following campus demonstrations.

She was ordered readmitted by Judge Grooms in a Feb. 29 hearing, but was expelled a few hours later by the trustees.

Atty. Andrew J. Thomas, representing the University trustees, called five witnesses and showed the court a movie.

Two newsmen, Davenport Smith, news director of WBRC-radio, and Irving Bieman, business reporter of The Birmingham News, were questioned by Thomas concerning a news conference held Feb. 9.

Both said they attended the conference and heard Shores and Constance Motley, another Lucy lawyer, read two motions which had been filed that day in federal court.

One of these motions contained the charges for which their client was expelled.

Smith said the conference was held in the regional offices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and was well attended by press, radio and television men.

He identified a picture which appeared in the Knoxville News-Sentinal of Feb. 10, 1956 as being taken at the conference.

Thomas showed the court a 400-foot sound movie taken by National Broadcasting Co. cameramen at the conference. Smith was recalled to the stand and said that the film showed only a part of the conference.

Leroy Holt, director of film photography for television station WABT, said he also made a film of the conference, substantially the same as the one shown.

James Jefferson (Jeff) Bennett, assistant to the University president, and Trustee John A. Caddell of Decatur were the other defense witnesses.

Both said they had seen pictures of the press conference on television.

Post-Herald

Caddell backed up Ferguson in saying there were "no other reasons" for the expulsion action than those stated.

Ward Case Resumes Here Today

Daily World Thurs. 1-3-57 Atlanta Ga.

The U. S. district court hearing of the Horace Ward-University of Georgia case is scheduled to resume at 9:30 this morning.

Final argument in the case is expected to be presented before Judge Frank A. Hooper by both sides.

Ward, a student at Northwestern University's law school is contending that the University of Georgia "wilfully discriminated against him because of his race and denied him admittance to the university's law school in Athens" about five years ago.

The university is contending that "Ward was denied enrollment to the law school because he lacks academic qualifications from a school which is a member of the Southern Regional College and Secondary School Association."

Ward is being represented by Chief Atty. Austin T. Walden; Atty. Donald L. Hollowell; Atty. Constance Baker Motley; Atty. Thurgood Marshall.

The University is presenting defense by Special Atty. D. B. Murphy; State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and Asst. Atty. Gen. Robert Hall and Freeman Leverett.

The case has attracted keen interest because Georgia is believed to be the only state in the union which has not admitted Negroes to any all-white college or university.

University Integration Seen

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Jan. 5—A Tuscaloosa newspaper publisher told a pro-segregation Citizens Council meeting here Friday night that Negro students were inevitable at the University of Alabama.

Buford Boone, 47-year-old publisher of The Tuscaloosa News, told the segregationists that concessions must be made by both whites and Negroes the next time a Negro applied for admission to the university here.

Mr. Boone was invited to speak before the council at the Tuscaloosa County Courthouse by Leonard Wilson, a former university student. Mr. Wilson was expelled by university authorities some time after mob violence broke out last February when Autherine Lucy Foster became the first Negro to enroll at the institution.

Mr. Boone, who was born in Georgia, was jeered and lightly applauded. He paused in his speech to ask council members what they proposed to do when another Negro attempted to enroll.

"Kill him,' one man in the audience answered. "Hang him," shouted another. A third spectator sugested that Mr. Boone be thrown out the window."

UA integration certain, fair, says publisher

News Birmingham Ala. Sat. 1-5-57

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., Jan. 5—(AP)—A Southern newspaper publisher Friday night urged a White Citizens Council to uphold law and order when the next Negro seeks admittance to the University of Alabama.

Buford Boone, publisher of The Tuscaloosa News, told the West Alabama Citizens Council here that integration at the University is inevitable.

He declared that concessions among both Negroes and whites would be necessary to avert bloodshed.

THE UNIVERSITY was the scene of violent demonstrations last February when Autherine Lucy was driven from the campus after attending classes for three days. She was the first Negro ever to attend the all-white school.

Boone addressed the council in the Tuscaloosa County Courthouse by invitation. He had been called an advocate of integration by the council.

Curt Copeland, Hot Springs, Ark., segregation leader, drew loud applause from the council audience when he attacked "top-water preachers who have followed the Golden Rule so long they wouldn't recognize guts, and out so-called intelligent educators."

The publisher stressed the urgency of meeting the segregation issue with open minds.

"Fortunately, we came through our most difficult period with no lives lost and little blood spilled but we had a lot of ammunition sold," Boone said in reference to the Lucy rioting.

"A lot of people were ready for a great deal of trouble. We could have had it in abundance the day that Autherine Lucy was taken from the campus . . ."

HE SAID HE had been informed that ammunition and guns in quality had been in evidence by members of both races during the days of the Lucy rioting.

"We got by then; but what about the next time?" he asked.

"Court orders applying to all Negroes give those who are qualified to enter the University of Alabama the right to do so. Your organization has taken a stand against activity outside the law. What are you going to do when the next Negro student appears on the University campus under the protection of our courts and with the right to expect assistance from law enforcement officers, if needed?"

Boone said that integration at the University is inevitable.

"Sooner or later, and I have no idea how soon or how late it will be, another Negro student will appear on the University campus. Under such circumstances are whites again going to attempt to take the law into their own hands?" he asked.

The publisher said the Supreme Court decision outlawing come and was morally right."

REFERRING to a council charge that he is an integrationist, Boone said "nothing in it (the Supreme Court decision) is inconsistent with my conception of democracy, even though a background of Southern living, Southern custom and Southern tradition tells me it will be strange to see colored faces at the University of Alabama. But I believe we should prepare outselves to accept this development, since it has been ordered as rightful, and just by our courts."

Boone said Tuscaloosa is being "tested as a people, as a community and as a state, and we alone can give the answer of whether we can and will make the compromises and adjustments that will be unnatural, difficult and hard, but make them we must, if we are to stay within the law."

He reminded the council that "this United States is one country, we in the South are outnumbered. We don't like what the Supreme Court has said, but we have been telling the rest of the country to go to hell, and we can't do that and get away with it.

"They're going to do like you and I would do if one of our communities told us it meant to violate the law as much as it pleased. We'd control them lawfully. So will the rest of this country use the full force of the law on us if we drive them to it," he declared.

BOONE SAID there will have to be compromises from both sides.

"For whites, the contribution must be in a willingness to give up some of their traditions and customs so as to share more equally the blessings of education.

"For the Negro, the contribution must be acceptance of less speed than could be demanded legally in implimentation of newly established rights. Meanwhile, time and attention can be directed by our Negro groups and institutions toward a greater understanding of the responsibilities of first-class citizenship. For there is much responsibility along with privilege."

COPELAND WAS introduced as publisher of The Arkansas Faith, a worker in the states' rights movement for 10 years, and a close associate of the late Huey Long.

Copeland criticized the U. S. Supreme Court, newspapers and preachers. He referred to "top-water preachers" and "so-called intelligent educators" as "two messes of trash that have hurt us most."

He advised Citizens Council members to stay out of the courts, which he said "are a one-way street leading in the wrong direction."

The Arkansas man said he was not speaking of the younger generation because "they have been brainwashed in the schools."

Speaking of the segregation conflict, Copeland said, "It isn't a question of whether a few impudent Negroes ride a bus or go to school with us, but whether or not a Christian civilization will continue to exist on earth or be enslaved by a Communist conspiracy. All demands aimed at destruction of racial segregation in the South are aimed at Christian civilization."

Mrs. Foster Brings Case To Fed. Court

Daily World Fri. 1-18-57 Atlanta Ga.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — Another round in the long legal battle between the University of Alabama and the school's only Negro student is scheduled today in U. S. District Court in Birmingham, when a motion is heard charging the University Board of Trustees with contempt.

Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster has asked that the trustees be held in contempt of court for refusing to readmit her in accordance with a previous court order.

If the contempt motion is granted in favor of the plaintiff, the university will be under court order to allow Mrs. Foster to reenter the university at Tuscaloosa.

The legal battle started more than three years ago when Mrs. Foster (then Miss Lucy) and Polly Hudson, Birmingham Negress, filed suit in District Court asking that they be allowed to study at the university.

One of the first damaging blows to Alabama's segregation laws was struck later when Federal Court ruled that Mrs. Foster and other persons could not be denied the right to enroll at the University of Alabama solely because of race or color.

Mrs. Foster attended classes for three days. During this time riots and demonstrations broke out, marked by stone-throwing and egg-tossing.

Following the riots, Mrs. Foster was "excluded" from attending classes for "her own safety." Later a court ordered that she be readmitted. A few hours after this order, she was permanently expelled by the trustees for making unproved charges against the trustees and university officials.

TYLER, Tex., March 4 (AP)—Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, first Negro to attend the University of Alabama, said today in an interview she intends to enter the University of Texas in September.

Mrs. Foster was expelled from the Alabama school last year.

Her husband, the Rev. H. L. Foster, will become pastor of the Liberty Baptist church at Tyler.

AUTHERINE'S FIGHT OFFICIALLY AT END

Battle With University Will Be Taken No Further

BIRMINGHAM, March 26. — (AP)—Autherine Lucy Foster's fight to reenter the University of Alabama has ended officially after a court fight lasting several years.

Negro attorney Arthur D. Shores said Tuesday the case would not be pursued further in the courts. She was admitted to the university under a Federal court order and attended classes three days in February, 1956.

Driven from the campus by a mob, she was ordered re-admitted by United States Judge H. Hobart Grooms on Feb. 29, 1956, but school trustees "permanently expelled" her the same day for "false, defamatory, impertinent and scandalous charges" against school officials.

Autherine had charged the authorities with conspiring with the mob to drive her away.

Shores, on her behalf, attempted to overthrow that decision with another petition before Judge Grooms but the judge held the trustees were within their rights.

The Negro woman, now married and living in Texas, has said she expects to enter the University of Texas this fall. Her husband is Rev. H. L. Foster, formerly of Birmingham.

She is the only Negro student ever registered at the University of Alabama.

Tuscaloosa Editor Believes Segregation Not Democratic

By KENNETH BEFNE

United Press Staff Cor ndent

TUSCALOOSA, Ala., n. 1 (UP) A soft-spoken, southern-born newspaper pubisher who believes segregation is in conflict with American democracy has put his position boldly and frankly before the public in this area of die-hard opposition to integration.

Ala. Buford Boone of the Tuscaloosa News does not consider himself a hero or martyr for the cause of desegregation. Rather he believes people in responsible positions in the South must adopt a positive approach to the inevitable" lest the region is overrun by the house-bombers and political demogogues.

Tuscaloosa is the site of the University of Alabama where one of the first serious outbursts of violence over integration occurred last year. Autherine Lucy Foster, a Birmingham Negro woman, won admission to the all-white school under federal court order only to be excluded after police said they feared adequate protection of her life could not be provided.

INVITED TO SPEAK

Perhaps the climax to Boone's newspaper crusade for "law and order," however, came last week when he accepted an invitation to speak to a meeting of a white citizens council group. The council also scheduled a pro-segregation leader and tabbed Boone on the program as an "outspoken advocate of integration."

Chairman of the council is a 20-year-old former University of Alabama student who was expelled from the campus for fiery pro-segregation activities during the Lucy incidents. Most persons would have cringed from making such an appearance but Boone said he wanted the chance to "explain" his views.

Before the often jeering crowd, Boone said he thought the Supreme Court's school segregation ruling "had to come and that it was morally right."

He said nothing in it was inconsistent with his conception of democracy "even though a background of southern living, southern custom, and southern tradition tells me it would be strange to see colored faces at the University of Alabama."

Boone said it is easy to condemn the Supreme Court and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People but "our problem is with ourselves and what we are going to do as responsible American citizens to recognize, or deny, privileges which our courts have said are the proper rights of Negroes."

The publisher said "it seems to me that our problems are complicated by the ease with which we apply labels and the facility with which we speak of large groups of people as if they were only one individual.

"All whites are not honorable, upright and fair. All Negroes are not dirty, ignorant, shiftless and lazy. In fact, one of the very greatest things about our country is the privilege of any person to be judged on the basis of what he stands for and what he can amount to."

Boone speaks and writes with the gamble he may get wholesale subscription cancellations from his readers. But a week after he had explained his stand, he said he had counted only eight cancellations.

Plans to Enter Texas U. in Fall, Her Husband Says

Times

TYLER, Tex., March 4 (UP) —Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, 26-year-old Negro coed who was expelled from the University of Alabama after student riots a year ago, will attempt to enter the University of Texas this fall, her husband said today. The University has been integrated.

A spokesman for the University of Texas said that "only the facts could determine whether she could be admitted, and if so under what conditions."

The spokesman said she would have to meet entrance requirements, an aptitude test and present proper transfer credits, which would be subject to examination.

3-5-57

The University of Texas admitted Negroes on the undergraduate level last September. About ninety were admitted. A number of others are in graduate school, where Negroes have been admitted for several years.

Mrs. Foster has been living in Tyler since her marriage last April to the Rev. H. L. Foster.

The Trustees Were Justified

Advertiser P. 4-A

FEDERAL JUDGE HOBART GROOMS' ruling yesterday that the University of Alabama board of trustees was justified in expelling Student Lucy was a forceful repudiation of the current concept that a Negro litigant can do no wrong.

Birmingham, Ala.

In what is perhaps the most outlandish, scandalous charge ever made by a University freshman, she and her corps of attorneys had accused the University, its president and trustees of conspiring in the riots that resulted in her suspension last February. After she was ordered reinstated, the trustees expelled her for the libel and a young white agitator, Leonard Wilson, for his attacks on the University. Both expulsions were justified by extreme provocation.

Judge Grooms, who had originally ordered the University doors open to Negroes, said yesterday that the conspiracy charges were "baseless and without foundation in fact," adding:

The members of the board of trustees are prominent in the professional, business and civic life of the state and these charges and statements are of a serious nature. They reflect not only upon the individuals but upon the University as well. Under all the evidence the board was justified in expelling Autherine Lucy.

This seems to lay the groundwork for a libel or slander action against the excoed should she wish to pursue the matter further. Judge Grooms' original ruling was hailed by Negroes as a triumph of justice. His latest ruling will doubtless be denounced by them as a miscarriage.

Hawkins May Shun Fla. Court In Bid For Law School

World 7-1, Sat. 6-22-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., — (INS) — Asst. State Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum held Tuesday that Virgil Hawkins is attempting to by-pass the Florida Supreme Court in his new bid to gain admission to the University of Florida Law School.

Odum expressed the opinion after receiving notice of an appeal which Hawkins attorneys filed with the U. S. Supreme Court in Washington.

The appeal calls on the high court to direct the state board of control to admit the Daytona Beach man to the all-white school.

Odum termed the procedure "unusual," and said Hawkins, in effect ,was attempting to by-pass the Florida Supreme Court.

The U. S. Supreme Court ruled last march that Hawkins should be admitted to the law school without delay, but the Florida Court threw up a states rights barrier, contending the Federal Court had no authority "to dictate" when a state could issue a final order in a local case.

ate enrollment.

The Florida Supreme Court recognized that Hawkins, under U. S. desegregation mandates, cannot be barred solely because of color. But it invoked state sovereignty to put off his enrollment until public attitudes will permit.

Earlier, the U. S. court had ruled there is no reason for a delay in admitting Hawkins to the graduate school.

The U. S. court, he said, "will not arrogantly brush aside as impertinent a delay by the Supreme Court of Florida based on factual considerations and local conditions."

Supreme Court Asked For Delay on Negro

Miami Fla.

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — The U.S. Supreme Court was urged Monday to go along with a delay in admission of a Negro to the University of Florida Law School because of a "solid wall of opposition to integration in Florida."

Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin asked the high court to throw out Negro Virgil Hawkins' latest legal maneuver to gain entrance to the law school in Gainesville. Hawkins, from Daytona Beach, has called on the U.S. court to bypass Florida courts and order his immedi-

High Court Rejects Fla. School Case

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Virgil D. Hawkins, who has been fighting for the past eight years for an opportunity to enroll in the professional and graduate school of the University of Florida, must again call upon the District Court for relief.

This became evident, last week, when the United States Supreme Court declined to review the case. The petition was denied without prejudice to Hawkins with the suggestion that he seek relief in an appropriate United States District Court.

Sat. 10-26-57

Hawkins was one of the four applicants who sought admission to the Florida University back in 1949. A month after the application was filed he was advised that his admission to the University Law School was prohibited because he was a Negro. And the Board of Control offered to pay his tuition to any other institution of his choice outside of the state.

The following year the Board of Control ordered the establishment of a school of law and other graduate courses at Florida A and M College for Negroes.

It again offered to provide out-of-state scholarship aid to applicants pending the establishment of these segregated educational facilities. My so doing the Board claimed that it had fully satisfied the state's constitutional obligation to furnish equal educational opportunities to the Negro students. And the court agreed that similar facilities for Negroes in the stae had satisfied the equal protection requirement of the 14th Amendment.

The case was appealed to the State Supreme Court in 1951 but the motion was denied. The case was then brought to the United States Supreme Court where it was denied on the grounds that no final judgement had been entered.

The case had to go back to the Florida Supreme Court again where it was denied in 1952. It was then brought back to the United States Supreme Court. By this time the famous school desegregation decision had been rendered in 1954, and the high court vacated the judgement below and sent it back to the lower court for "consideration in the light of the School Segregation cases decided on May 17, 1954 . . . and conditions that now prevail."

High Court Rejects Negro Student's Plea

Miami Herald

By the United Press

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.— The Supreme Court today rejected the fourth appeal of Virgil D. Hawkins, a Negro who has been trying since 1949 to enter the University of Florida.

The court said, however, that the way is open for Mr. Hawkins to apply for relief "in an appropriate U.S. District Court." The action was taken in a brief order.

Mon. 10-14-57

The case had already been through the courts when on March 12, 1956, the Supreme Court ordered Mr. Hawkins admitted promptly to the university's law school.

On June 20, 1956, Mr. Hawkins applied to the Florida Supreme Court for an order requiring his admission. The state court refused to issue one. But it said he could ask again when he is able to show his admission will not do "great public mischief."

In bringing the case to the U.S. Supreme Court for the fourth time, Mr. Hawkins' lawyers said "not since the early days of the republic has the authority of this court to interpret the Constitution been challenged in so flagrant a manner by a court of inferior jurisdiction."

Negro School Suit Faces Top Court

Herald, Miami, Fla. P. 10-A
Sun. 10-13-57.

WASHINGTON — (UP) — The Supreme Court meets in the term's first "work" session Monday, faced with a particularly stubborn school segregation problem in Florida.

HAWKINS

Virgil D. Hawkins, a Negro who has been trying since 1949 to get into the University of Florida law school at Gainesville, has brought his situation to the high court for the fourth time.

Hawkins' lawyers—Thurgood Marshall and Robert L. Carter, of New York—have asked the court to resolve the impasse by going back to the early days of the last century for precedents. In a series of decrees beginning in 1816, the Supreme Court established its superiority over recalcitrant state tribunals.

The Florida Supreme Court has refused to order Hawkins admitted to the law school on the grounds that violence would result, although the U.S. Supreme Court directed his immediate admission a year and a half ago.

The court is expected to act on this and a small mountain of other appeals filed during the summer recess.

Keeping The Virgil Hawkins Record Straight

14e(1) Discrimination

Lest politics and cold war strategy eclipse the real meaning of the Virgil Hawkins case in which he sought entrance to the law school of the University of Florida, the record should be kept consistent with the disposition of the affair. Thurs. 10-17-57

In the first place, there is nothing new, in what the Supreme Court decided as some would cite to the contrary. It is the time set policy of the court that one exhaust all local means before a case is channeled to the Supreme Court. That is common court procedure and the precedent has been laid down in other such cases.

Atlanta Record

The Autherine Lucy case and the coming up from Claren-don County South Carolina, are all well established.

In the now current Little Rock affair, the local federal district judge is the one who issued that order, Judge Ronald Davies.

This case did not have to go up to the Supreme Court because Judge Davies in his review found that its merits would warrant just what he decided, and the army went to the rescue of the government and those persons affected by his order when they were refused the franchise granted under the orders of the court.

So, in keeping with a policy of consistency, there was nothing left for the courts to do but as it did in the Virgil Hawkins case.

However, it should be apparent by this time that since going the rounds of the federal district court is merely procedural, the state has time to admit Hawkins on the merits of the case and in keeping with what has already happened in like cases.

Maybe, the time will be ripe in this case for the state to consider admitting the student, rather than wait for the certain inevitable. It would more become a state of the moderation, like florida, not to relish being pushed into something, it otherwise has an option on making voluntarily.

Soon or late, the states might see fit to drop all this law suit fanfare, which in the end is a disservice to our pretended legal ethics, and go on admitting such students as qualify for matriculation in these graduate schools. We are desperately in need of scientists, engineers, lawyers and physicians in these critical times. Our technical courses and graduate schools might find the answers through a process of color blindedness.

LET'S NOT FIDDLE WHILE ROME BURNS

Supreme Court Refuses To Order Negro Into Fla. U.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Supreme Court refused today to order the immediate admission of a Negro to the law school of the all-white University of Florida.

But the court did point out to the Negro, Virgil Hawkins of Daytona Beach, the legal route he must take in future efforts to get into the law school.

In rejecting Hawkins' plea for an order directing the university's Board of Control to admit him immediately, the court said its action was "without prejudice to the petitioner seeking relief in an appropriate U.S. district court."

CALLED PROCEDURAL

Robert L. Carter of New York, general counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said he regarded the action as "merely procedural."

It indicated to him, Carter said, reluctance on the part of the court to issue an order directly upon the university. Carter said the court has the power, but rarely exercises it. He added that a new action probably will be started in the near future in a U.S. district court in Florida.

The court's refusal to speak directly to the university's officials aroused some hope in the South that it constituted a reversal of its position that qualified Negroes are entitled to prompt admission to graduate schools of tax supported universities.

COURT'S POLICY

In general ,however, the action was viewed here as adherence to the court's almost inflexible policy of requiring that cases reach it through the usual route—federal district and appellate courts—before being ripe for review.

On March 12, 1956, the Supreme Court said Hawkins was entitled to prompt admission to the law school "under the rules and regulations applicable to other qualified candidates."

The court at that time took occasion to observe that it did not intend to imply in an earlier action in the same case that "decrees involving graduate study present the same problems of public elementary and secondary schools."

It added that its decision implementing its public school decision, which allowed federal district courts considerable leeway in timing desegregation orders, "had no application to a case involving a Negro applying for admission to a state law school."

The Florida Supreme Court, in a 4-2 decision March 8, 1957, refused to order Hawkins admitted to the law school on the ground that to do so at this time "would tend to work serious public mischief." The Florida court ruled that Hawkins might renew his motion for admission "when he is prepared to present testimony showing that his admission can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

Hawkins, through his attorneys, returned to the U.S. Supreme Court seeking an order bypassing the Florida Supreme Court and directing the university Board of Control to admit Hawkins.

In a separate action dealing indirectly with the public school integration controversy, the Supreme Court refused to review John Kasper's 1956 criminal contempt conviction.

Kasper, avowed segregationist, was found guilty of disregarding a U. S. District Court order in Knoxville, Tenn., growing out of the Clinton, Tenn., integration disorders last year.

In other actions today—the first all-out business session of its new term which opened last Monday—the tribunal:

1. Set aside the convictions of Junius I. Scales and Claude M. Lightfoot, first two persons tried under the "knowing membership" clause of the Smith Anti-Communist Act. The government had said the convictions had to be upset in the light of the high court's Jencks' case ruling of last June.

2. Set aside on a government motion the convictions of three Portland, Ore., residents for refusing to answer questions asked by a House Subcommittee on Un-American Activities. Herbert Simpson, Donald M. Wallom and John Rogers MacKenzie refused to tell anything but their names when the subcommittee on June 18 and 19, 1954, held hearings on Communist activities in the Portland area. The three pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

The Justice Department in a memorandum to the high tribunal said some of the questions might have tended to be incriminating.

3. Agreed to rule whether union inducement of employes not to handle "hot cargo" is legal under some labor - management contracts.

The contracts contain "hot cargo" clauses which allow union members to refuse to handle non-union or struck goods. The legal issue is whether inducement to refuse to work on "hot cargo" violates the secondary boycott provisions of the Taft-Hartley labor law.

Florida Denies Negro Law-School Entrance

Courier-Journal P. 3

State Supreme Court Is Convinced That Violence Would Break Out

© New York Times News Service

Tallahassee, Fla., March 8.—Declaring that "the states are the natural guardians of the public against violence," the Florida Supreme Court today denied a Negro's request for immediate entrance to the University of Florida Law School.

The states'-rights barrier was thrown up by the Florida court a year after the United States Supreme Court said the Negro should be admitted promptly.

The Negro, Virgil D. Hawkins, Daytona Beach, has been trying to enter the school eight years.

The court split, 5 to 2, on the question.

The majority said it was convinced violence would break out in university communities and a critical disruption of the University system would occur if Negroes were permitted to enter white schools at this time.

The court said it could not conceive that the U. S. Supreme Court "would hold that the highest court of a sovereign state does not have the right to control the effective date of its own discretionary process."

Dissenter Cites Oath To Uphold Constitution

In a dissenting opinion, Justice E. Harris Drew said he had taken an oath to uphold the U. S. Constitution and the U. S. Supreme Court had been long established as the "final interpreter."

He added, "Such an interpretation has been made in this case. I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

The other dissenter, Justice Elwyn Thomas, said as far as he was concerned the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling had ended the litigation. "The matter is now one purely of administration," he added.

The majority opinion capitalized on the words used by the U. S. court ordering Hawkins' admission "if it's feasible to do so at this time."

Court Says Conclusion Is Inevitable

The State court in 1955 ruled Hawkins should be admitted but held off on saying when he should be admitted until after a special survey was made.

The State court said, "Our study of the results of the survey material to the question here and other material evidence leads inevitably to the conclusion that violence in university communities and a critical disruption of the university system could occur if Negro students are permitted to enter the State white universities at this time."

The opinion concluded, "The old expression, 'An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure,' is especially applicable to the situation here—involving as it does the public welfare of all our people."

The majority opinion was written by Justice B. K. Roberts.

Denied Entry To Florida College

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 3-16-57 p. 3

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS)— The State Supreme court dealt Florida integration forces a stinging blow by challenging a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court and denying a Negro entry to the University of Florida law school.

The Florida court voted 5-2 against immediately admitting 48-year-old Virgil Hawkins to the all-white school, despite a ruling by the U. S. Supreme court last year that Hawkins should be admitted without delay.

The Florida tribunal said it could not conceive that the U. S. Supreme court "would hold that the highest court of a sovereign state does not have the right to control the effective date of its own discretionary process."

Hawkins has been trying since 1948 to win entry to the law school and his case has become a symbol for the integration movement in Florida.

Francisco Rodriquez of Tampa, Fla., Attorney for the NAACP, said he was not as concerned with the ruling itself "as the thinking it seems to represent."

He said there "seems to be a current throught that the Hawkins and other segregation cases on file were brought for the purpose of strife."

Rodriquez pointed out that "judicial review is the only way to test the validity of laws," and added: "If we ever get to the point where we start criticizing the practice of judicial review, we will have cut at the very foundations of our democracy."

SUPREME COURT IN FLORIDA OK'S BAN ON NEGRO

Daily Mirror Chicago Ill. Sat. 3-9-57

Tallahassee, Fla., March 8 (AP)—The Florida Supreme court today threw up a state rights barrier to block immediate entrance of a Negro to the all-white University of Florida law school.

The state tribunal took the action despite a year old ruling from the United States Supreme court that he be admitted promptly.

Relying on the "compelling duty" of the state to maintain the public peace and prevent violence, the Florida court in a 5 to 2 decision denied the petition of Virgil D. Hawkins for an immediate order requiring his admission.

Hawkins, 49, an instructor at Bethune-Cookman college has been trying for eight years to gain admittance to the university.

Court Fears Violence

The majority opinion, written by Justice B. K. Roberts, recognized the duty of the state court to compel Hawkins' admission "if it is feasible to do so at this time."

But the majority said it was convinced that violence would break out in university communities and a critical disruption of the university system would occur if Negroes were permitted to enter white schools at this time.

In a dissenting opinion, Justice E. Harris Drew said he had taken an oath to uphold the federal Constitution and that the United States Supreme court had been long established as the "final interpreter."

"Such an interpretation has been made in this case," Drew said. "I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

The other dissenter, Justice Elwyn Thomas, said he thought the ruling of the United States Supreme court that "there is no reason for delay" had ended the litigation.

No Authority to Dictate

Roberts, however, took the position that the United States Supreme court has not knocked out a 1955 decision of the state court which called for a study of when Hawkins could be admitted to the white university without causing "public mischief."

He held further that the federal court would have had no lawful authority to dictate when the highest tribunal of a sovereign state must issue a final order in a state case.

Roberts said the 1955 decision of the state court to delay Hawkins' admission until it was determined whether his enrollment would create trouble was based on two grounds —one state and one federal. The state ground was the possible threat to the public peace; the federal ground the United States Supreme court's previous ruling that local courts would have discretion to consider local conditions when fixing times for integration of local schools.

Supreme Court Defied In Florida Bias Ruling

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Mar. 8 (AP).—The Florida Supreme Court today threw up a states' rights barrier to block immediate entrance of a Negro to the all-white University of Florida Law School.

The state tribunal took the action despite a year-old ruling from the United States Supreme Court that he be admitted promptly.

Relying on the "compelling duty" of the state to maintain the public peace and prevent violence, the Florida court in a 5-2 decision denied the petition of Virgil D. Hawkins for an immediate order requiring his admission.

8-Year Battle

Mr. Hawkins, a forty-nine-year-old instructor at Bethune-Cookman College, has been trying for eight years to gain admittance to the university. Mr. Hawkins' attorney, Horace E. Hill, of Daytona Beach, declined to comment until he had examined the opinion. Mr. Hawkins also declined comment.

Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said in New York, "If Virgil Hawkins requests our assistance we shall continue our efforts to secure his prompt admission to the University of Florida Law School."

The majority opinion, written by Justice B. K. Roberts, recognized the duty of the state court to compel Mr. Hawkins' admission "if it is feasible to do so at this time."

"Such an interpretation has been made in this case," Justice Drew said. "I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

Cites Ruling

The other dissenter, Justice Elwyn Thomas, said he thought the ruling of the United States Supreme Court that "there is no reason for delay" had ended the litigation.

"The matter is now one purely of administration," he said.

Justice Roberts, however, took the position that the United States Supreme Court has not knocked out a 1955 decision of the state court which called for a study of when Mr. Hawkins could be admitted to the white university without causing "public mischief."

TALLAHASSEE — An attorney for a Negro seeking admittance to the University of Florida denied Thursday that he violated the Florida Bar's code of ethics in allowing the legal defense fund committee of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to deal with him on behalf of his client.

Horace E. Hill, Daytona Beach Negro, defended his handling of the lawsuits for Virgil D. Hawkins and others before the legislative investigating committee adjourned its public hearings until Monday, Feb. 18.

Hawkins, trying to get into the UF law school, was called back before the committee and asked if he wanted to change his story and agree that the NAACP committee made arrangements for attorneys to file the suits before he ever consulted with the attorneys.

"That may have been the way of it," Hawkins said. "I'll say yes."

Hill was asked why he permitted the defense fund committee to intervene in the legal direction of the cases. He replied that he apologized if any indiscretions had occurred but "I always had my client uppermost in my mind . . . my responsibility as a lawyer . . . and my loyalty to the Negro people. I felt the case was a legitimate and valid struggle and that I did not go afoul of the code."

Earlier, Hill asserted he did not "want to commit perjury before this committee. I want to be helpful."

He then recalled he had received fees from the NAACP defense funds for his work in the Hawkins case and Hawes introduced a letter from Davis to Hill, accusing the attorney of being "only in this case to draw every cent from it you possibly can."

Was Hawkins Action Launched Illegally?

Tues. 2-26-57

TALLAHASSEE —(AP)— The Supreme Court was told Monday there are indications Virgil Hawkins, a Daytona Beach Negro, may have stirred up litigation illegally in his attempts to gain entrance to the white University of Florida law school.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ralph Odum asked the court to take testimony bearing on evidence uncovered by the legislative committee to investigate the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

"The testimony relates to how this suit was instigated, how the petitioner's attorney's fees and other costs of the litigation were paid, certain contracts relating to the employment of attorneys, the control and conduct of the case from its inception and the interest of the various parties concerned in the outcome of the litigation," Odum told the court.

Miami, Fla.

"Parts of this testimony are contradictory and conflicting to the extent that the possibility of perjury may be present."

P. 9

The court took Odum's motion under advisement. There was no indication of when it might rule.

14e(1)

Neither Hawkins nor his attorney, Horace Hill of Daytona Beach, appeared.

However, Hill filed a written answer to Odum's motion in which he declared his client had proved his good faith by his "eight years of personal and protracted endeavor" to gain entrance to the university.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "I have taken an oath to uphold the U.S. Constitution, the U.S. Supreme Court has long been established as the final interpreter (of the laws).

"Such an interpretation has been made in this case (Virgil Hawkins vs University of Florida) and I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

These words, in substance, formed the heart of a dissenting opinion by Justice E. Harris Drew as the Florida Supreme Court for the third time hurled defiance at the Supreme Court of the United States.

THE OTHER DISSENTER in the court's 5-2 decision to fly in the face of the Supreme Court, Justice Elwyn Thomas, said he thought that the ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court that "there is no reason for delay" had ended the litigation.

"The matter is now one purely of administration," Justice Thomas said.

The court's majority opinion on Friday based its action on the state's right to bar Mr. Hawkins from the state university on the ground that his admission would "cause public mischief."

RELYING ON THE "compelling duty of the state to maintain the public peace and prevent violence," the Florida court voted to deny Mr. Hawkins' petition for an order requiring his immediate admission.

The state supreme court took its action in the face of a year-old ruling from the U.S. Supreme Court that Mr. Hawkins be admitted to the university promptly.

The first reversal for the Florida high court in the Hawkins case came seven days after the Supreme Court decision in the school segregation cases decided on May 17, 1954.

In that order it remanded the case and directed that the Florida Supreme Court reconsider the case in the light of its May 17 decision, but the state court continued the case pending findings on "conditions that now prevail."

ON MR. HAWKINS' petition for review, the Supreme Court refused the review but issued a new order after recalling and vacating its previous order to the Florida court.

The new order, issued March 12, 1956, the court said, "makes it clear that while the principle of the initial decision in the school segregation cases is applicable to all levels of public education, the factors of possible delay in the public schools recognized in the second 'implementation' decision in those cases are not involved in graduate professional schools."

Mr. Hawkins, 49, instructor at Bethune-Cookman College, has sought for eight years to gain admission to the university. His attorney, Horace E. Hill of Daytona Beach, declined comment until he has had time to study the decision.

MR. HAWKINS ALSO refused to discuss the court's ruling, apparently for similar reasons.

Meanwhile, in NYC, Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, said "If Mr. Hawkins requests our assistance we shall continue our efforts to secure his prompt admission to the University of Florida law school."

The majority opinion, written by Justice B. K. Roberts, recognized the duty of the state court to compel Mr. Hawkins' admission to the university only "if it is feasible to do so at this time."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 8.—The Florida Supreme Court Friday threw up a states' rights barrier to block immediate entrance of a Negro to the all-white University of Florida Law School.

The state tribunal took the action despite a year-old ruling from the United States Supreme Court that he be admitted promptly.

Relying on the "compelling duty" of the state to maintain the public peace and prevent violence, the Florida court in a 5-2 decision denied the petition of Virgil D. Hawkins for an immediate order requiring his admission.

Hawkins, a 49-year-old instructor at Bethune-Cookman College, has been trying for eight years to gain admittance to the university. Hawkins' attorney, Horace E. Hill of Daytona Beach, declined to comment until he had examined the opinion.

Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said in New York "if Virgil Hawkins requests our assistance we shall continue our efforts to secure his prompt admission to the University of Florida Law School."

In a dissenting opinion, Justice E. Harris Drew said he had taken an oath to uphold the Federal Constitution and that the United States Supreme Court had been long-established as the "final interpreter."

Dissents Explained

"Such an interpretation has been made in this case," Justice Drew said. "I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

He held further that the Federal court would have had no lawful authority to dictate when the highest tribunal of a sovereign state must issue a final order in a state case.

The majority ruling said while certain recent decisions of the Federal court indicate a "progressive disappearance of state sovereignty we cannot assume that the Supreme Court intended to deprive the highest court of an independent sovereign state of one of its traditional powers, that is, the right to exercise a sound judicial discretion as to the date of the issuance of its process in order to prevent a serious public mischief."

State Tribunal Rules Negro Cannot Enter University, Lest Violence Result

Special to The New York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 8—The Florida Supreme Court denied today a Negro's request for immediate entrance to the University of Florida Law School. It said, "the states are the natural guardians of the public against violence."

The state's rights barrier was thrown up by the Florida court a year after the United States Supreme Court had said the Negro should be admitted.

The Negro, Virgil D. Hawkins of Daytona Beach, has been trying to enter the school for eight years. Both he and his attorney, Horace E. Hill of Daytona Beach, declined comment. Mr. Hawkins, 49 years old, is an instructor at Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach.

The Florida court split, 5 to 2, on the question. The majority said it was convinced violence would break out in university communities and a critical disruption of the university system would occur if Negroes were permitted to enter white schools at this time.

The Dissenting Opinion

The court said it could not conceive that the United States Supreme Court "would hold that the highest court of a sovereign state does not have the right to control the effective date of its own discretionary process."

In a dissenting opinion, Justice E. Harris Drew said he had taken an oath to uphold the Federal Constitution and the United States Supreme Court had been long-established as the "final interpreter." He added:

"Such an interpretation has been made in this case. I cannot conclude that any discretion remains in this court to lawfully postpone the issuance of the peremptory writ."

The other dissenter, Justice Elwyn Thomas, said that as far as he was concerned the United States Supreme Court's ruling had ended the litigation.

"The matter is now one purely of administration," he said.

Court Fears Violence

The majority opinion capitalized on the words used by the Federal court in ordering Mr. Hawkins' admission "if it's feasible to do so at this time."

The state court in 1955 ruled that Mr. Hawkins should be admitted but held off on setting a date until after a special survey had been made.

The Florida court said today that "our study of the results of the survey material to the question here and other material evidence leads inevitably to the conclusion that violence in university communities and a critical disruption of the university system could occur if Negro students are permitted to enter the state white universities at this time.

"This court has an opportunity to prevent the incidence of violence which are even now occurring in various parts of this country as a result of the states' efforts to enforce the Supreme Court in the Brown case [public school disegration case]."

The opinion concluded:

"The homely expression 'an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure' is especially applicable ot the situation here—involving as it does the public welfare of all our people."

The majority opinion was written by Justice B. K. Roberts. Concurring were Justices Glenn Terrell, T. Frank Hobson, Campbell Thornal and Stepnen C. O'Connell.

Negro Dropping Fight To Enter Georgia School

Advertiser Thurs. 6-6-57 Montgomery Ala.

ATLANTA, June 5 (AP) — Horace T. Ward, 27-year-old Atlanta Negro, has abandoned his long effort to gain entrance to the all-white University of Georgia Law school.

Ward's attorney, A. T. Walden, said today the attempt to gain approval for Ward to transfer from the Northwestern University Law School to the Georgia Institution has been dropped for the present time.

Ward has sought admittance to the Georgia school for seven years. He first filed an application in 1950 and when that was turned down by university system officials he filed a suit in 1953 asking the court to order his admittance.

In March of this year he suffered a major reversal as U.S. Federal District Court Judge Frank A. Hooper declined to keep jurisdiction of the suit.

In February Hooper dismissed the action on the ground that Ward failed to file a new application for admittance to the law school upon returning from two years Army service and that the question had become moot since Ward entered Northwestern.

Judge Denies State School Suit Motion

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

A motion by the State Board of Regents to kill a suit by four to enter the University of Georgia State College of Business Administration has been turned down by Federal Judge Boyd Sloan.

The Judge said Monday in an order, that "there is no substantial merit in any of the grounds" of the state's motion to dismiss the suit.

THE APPLICATIONS

..Those applying for entrance were

Those applying for entrance were Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, Myra Elliott Dinsmore and Russell T. Roberts. The group filed applications last summer to enroll at the school, but were barred for what the Board termed a "failure to entrance rules."

The suit was later taken to U. S. District Court here. It was done on the contention that the rules, as set up by the Board were designed specifically to keep Negroes out of the university on the grounds of race.

SUPPORT OF ALUMNI

The state has contended that the applicants failed to furnish a certificate of residence from the Fulton County orinary and such recomendations as required from the alumni.

The judge took under consideration that the ordinary "does not sign such certificates under the existing policy or arrangement" and they "were therefore unable to comply'

The judge in ruling set aside other state objections, including a contention that the four applicants could not seek relief jointly and for all "similarly situated" because the 14th Amendment of the U. S. Constitution concerns individual and not class rights.

Judge Sloan also added the names of new Regents James D. Gould of Brunswick and Allen Woodall as alditional defendants in the case.

"We have won the first round," Attorney E. E. Moore said last night.

DISCRIMINATION

Dismissal of the college suit filed by Barbara Hunt, Iris Mae Welch, Myra Elliott Dinsmore and Russell T. Roberts, was asked in a petition filed by Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook.

The case has been pending in U. S. District Court since June 15, 1956. The plaintiffs claim they were denied admission to the all-white college because entrance requirements are "unreasonable and arbitrary" and "discriminate and unlawfully . . . exclude qualified Negroes from admission."

Five Years The Road

Ward Case Concluded; Judge Is Given Issue

BY THADDEUS T. STOKES

Attorneys for Horace Ward, plaintiff in a federal court case against the University of Georgia for "racial discrimination," Thursday asked the court to "enjoin the university from discriminating against Ward solely because of his race or color."

The request was made during final argument of the five-day hearing which started Dec. 17. District Judge Frank A. Hooper is expected to hand down his final decision in the very near future since he expressed a desire to clear the six-year-old case from the court's docket at the start of the hearing.

However, he did not indicate when the decision would be delivered. Speculation placed it within 60 days.

Ward, 29, currently a student at Northwestern University's law school is the first Negro who has ever attempted to enroll at the all-white university. He was not present for the final argument.

If a decision is handed down in Ward's favor, the university stands the chance of losing it's state appropriation which the state's law says that "any school which permits integration of the races could possibly suffer discontinuance of the appropriations.

Georgia is one of the last three states in the union which has not permitted integration in colleges or universities.

ATTY WALDEN

On presenting final argument the chief counsel for the plaintiff, Austin T. Walden pointed out Ward's contention that:

(1) Evidence showed the application to the law school was made "June 1950."

(2) He met all academic qualifications of an applicant.

(3) All facts and circumstances, perhaps not ony single fact alone, that he was denied admission simply because of race and color and that consideration must inevitably show this in the court's findings.

At this point Judge Hooper asked Atty. Walden "if the court would say now that the university is enjoined, where would that leave the case?"

Walden replied "he would be admitted on his qualifications which applied in 1950. However we don't contend he should be admitted against the regulations which govern the admittance of any other student."

DEFENDANTS

Counsel for the defendants D. B. Murphy, special attorney for the state, in his final argument contended:

(1) The plaintiff failed to exhaust administrative remedies.

(2) He would have been admitted had he presented the required credits from an accredited institution.

(3) He was refused because his lack of general fitness of character and attitude.

(4) He was not refused because he was a Negro.

(5) The case should be dismissed on these grounds.

Murphy continued he recognized the force and effect of the 14th Amendment, the U. S. Constitution and the Constitution of Georgia.

However, the plaintiff has voluntarily put himself in a position where he cannot be admitted as of 1950 because he has enrolled at a law school. He would have to start all over or apply as a transfer student, explained Atty. Murphy.

Under rebuttal another counsel for the plaintiff, Atty. Constance Baker Motley of New York City, said that Ward had clearly established in court that he did exhaust administrative remedies, he did qualify.

She explained that if the board of regents wanted to prevent the plaintiff from entering the university, they could change the rules and regulations every time he applied.

Atty. Motley contended that is the reason in the pleadings they asked the court to consider the rules for applicants as of June 1950, when Ward first applied, rather than currently. The board of regents had made several changes regarding entrance.

She cited from several Federal court cases including the famous Lucy versus Adams case in Alabama.

On conclusion Atty. Motley advanced "if he is qualified to enter Northwestern university surely he would qualify for the University of Georgia's law school. I don't know the requirements at Northwestern but it is reasonable to assume they are not less than Georgia university."

Earlier in the argument Atty. Donald L. Hollowell, also a counsel for the plaintiff, had said, no evidence shows that the board of regents had passed resolution to raise the standards of the law school until July 15 and later, after Ward's application was pending.

"When you begin to look at the total picture and notice the changes, the timing, and the dates, it is a prime consideration," in determining that the school did discriminate because of race.

Judge Hooper's final words concerning the final arguments were: "I take this evidence under advisement."

Georgia Waits Court Ruling In Race Test

Advertiser p1 Jan. 1-4-57

ATLANTA, Jan. 3 (AP)—Arguments were concluded in U.S. District Court today in the case of Horace Ward, 29-year-old Atlanta Negro who is attempting to enroll in the all-white University of Georgia.

Judge Frank A. Hooper said he hopes to make a decision "within the next two weeks" in the six-year-old suit.

B. D. Murphy, special state counsel, contended Ward was denied admission because he failed to comply with University regulations and not because of his race and color.

Ward's attorneys contended their cleint refused to comply with the regulations because they were adopted by the University in June, 1952, some 18 months after he first applied for admission.

Horace Ward Faces 3 Barriers In Attempt To Enter U. of Georgia

Call. p1 Kansas City, Mo. Jan. 1-25-57

ATLANTA. — (INS) — Attorneys for Horace Ward face three apparent barriers in their attempt to obtain a court order forcing the University of Georgia to enroll him.

The three were raised Monday by Federal Judge Frank Hooper who said the case is "different from any other case," involving racial discrimination.

Ward's federal court suit contends he was denied admission in 1950, and subsequently, because of his race. The state of Georgia contends there was no discrimination against Ward because he is a Negro, but insists he was not qualified to become a law student.

There was no discrimination by reason of state law or school policy.

"This is the first case in which the qualifications of the student, and not the policy of the school," are at issue, Judge Hooper observed.

The jurist posed these legal possibilities to Ward's attorneys:

1—That he had "abandoned" in 1950 application when he enrolled last September at Northwestern University at Chicago.

2—That he had not exhausted administrative procedure, because he did not file a new application for admission and supply necessary new data when he returned from military service.

3—That he was rejected, not because of race, but because of a lack of qualifications.

The jurist said at the conclusion of arguments however that he would consider the case in the light of contentions of these points advanced by Ward's attorneys.

Constance Baker Motley took issue with the suggestion that the Ward case was different from the long list of segregation cases. The New York attorney, on the legal staff of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, argued:

"The common thread running through all these cases is (a plea for) enjoining segregation."

Testimony was, the judge observed, that there was no discrimination based on race at the University of Georgia, and to this Miss Motley replied:

"The out-of-state aid policy, declared unconstitutional 20 years ago, is still in operation. It has not been abandoned. It is the same policy that excludes Ward. We say that policy is discriminatory."

was unqualified and not because he is a Negro scored an important point today.

In view of this position, U.S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper said the most the court could say is that the Negro's rejection is "tainted with a spirit of discrimination." The court, he added, then could order the board to reconsider Ward's application.

When a University spokesman declared that a qualified Negro applicant would be accepted by the law school, Hooper said, the issue became one of individual qualifications and not racial discrimination as in most such litigation.

The judge made his observations at a hearing to clarify the issues in Ward's six-year-long efforts to enter the law school. He did not indicate when his ruling might be expected.

Hooper declared that the court would not order the Board of Regents to admit Ward forthwith. No school, he observed, could be expected to admit an unqualifed student.

He was openly critical of the legal conduct of both Ward and his attorneys. Ward, he held should have informed the court in September that he had been accepted as a student by Northwestern University Law School in Chicago instead of waiting until start of the trial in December to make the disclosure. The court, the judge went on, made every effort to bring the suit to an early decision under the mistaken impression that Ward wanted to enter Georgia Law School last fall.

Hooper taxes Ward's attorneys with doing everything they could to keep the action from coming to trial in September. Their delaying action, he said, included a "useless and frivolous proceeding" of naming two individual regents as defendants.

The Horace Ward Case Brings The Issue Into Closer Focus

Daily World p. 4

The ruling of Judge Frank A. Hooper in the Horace Ward case that Negroes cannot be denied admission to the law school of the University of Georgia, at least brings the cause evident in the Ward case closer into focus. The judge's ruling must be carefully scrutinized in order to obtain the merit upon which he based his decision.

Atlanta, Ga. (Discrimination)

First, the judge ruled that discrimination might have existed when Ward first filed in 1950, when the Board first refused admission, but Ward did not pursue his administrative remedies and was denied admission on the grounds that he was not qualified as to "attitude and character."

Thurs. 2-14-57

By some arrival the judge held that his suit became "moot" when he entered the law school of Northwestern University.

In fact, the judge's decision was based upon that class action which denied Ward the right to enroll.

The judge observed that in all decided cases, however, the decision was either a class action in which the qualifications of the applicant were admitted or had been judicially determined.

Judge Hooper, therefore, decided that Ward's failure to file a new application as required by school authorities and his failure to comply with the valid portions of rules adopted by the university subsequent to his original application, "would bar any relief to him by the courts."

In a nutshell, Judge Hooper said Ward's suit had become "moot" when he enrolled at Northwestern University. Apparently, this is a question of law.

The decision, one of the first of its kind to come up in Georgia, deserves careful study. From the judge's decision, future cases may be processed from another given point; the judge said that no person should be denied admission to the university purely on a color basis; that this is not class action in reference to his decision regarding Ward's application.

We can at least find comfort in the fact that for the first time a federal jurist and a Georgian has opined:

"It is well established that the authorities in control of the operation of any state-supported law school in this country may not refuse admission to any person solely on account of race or color."

That had not been legally decided here before in Georgia, and by such a token, the issue is at least brought into closer focus.

ATLANTA — An appeal of Federal Judge Frank A. Hooper's dismissal of Horace Ward's suit to enter the University of Georgia law school is under study, A. T. Walden, attorney for Mr. Ward, stated last week.

Judge Hooper listed three reasons for his dismissal of Mr. Ward's suit, filed in U.S. District Court in 1950. They were:

1. His (Ward's) failure to file a new application as required by school regulations.

2. Ward "failed and refused to furnish additional information as to character" to the university.

3. When Ward entered Northwestern University in 1956, the action "expressly abandoned his formal application to enter" Georgia as a first year law student.

The ruling pointed out that it is now well established that state supported law schools

"may not refuse admission to any person solely on account of his race and color."

"THIS IS not a class action," the ruling said, adding that Mr. Ward was denied admission on grounds that he was "not qualified as to attitude and character."

Mr. Ward applied for admission to the law school in September 1950. During trial of the case last December, university officials testified that he was turned down because he did not meet entrance requirements.

The applicant's attorneys contended that he was refused admittance to the all white school because of his race and color.

Ward Seeking Transfer to U. of Georgia

Constitution Tues. 2-26-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Attorneys for Horace T. Ward were back Monday for another round in their fight to get their Negro client admitted to the University of Georgia Law School.

They filed a motion in federal court for an "order modifying the order of dismissal" on grounds that Ward—whose case against the Board of Regents was thrown out of court Feb. 12 by Judge Frank Hooper—has filed application to transfer from Northwestern University Law School to the Georgia Law School.

Judge Hooper had dismissed the suit inasmuch as, he said, Ward's status had changed because he matriculated at Northwestern after he first applied for admission to the University of Georgia in 1950.

Ward's attorneys have asked Judge Hooper to hold a hearing on their new motion March 4.

A. T. Walden, Atlanta, one of the attorneys representing the 29-year-old Ward, said Ward would enter Georgia this fall if the ruling is favorable to his suit.

Ward Request Gets 'Routine' Consideration

Negro Horace Ward will be sent application papers in a "routine manner" in his bid to transfer from Northwestern University to the University of Georgia Law School, University Chancellor Harmon W. Caldwell said Friday.

The transfer attempt is the latest move in Ward's long fight to gain admission to the all-white university law school.

Federal Judge Frank Hooper earlier this year dismissed Ward's suit to enroll at the university. The 29-year-old Ward claims he was denied admittance because of his race.

Following this ruling, Ward's attorneys asked Hooper to retain jurisdiction in the case while the Negro sought to transfer from Northwestern University to the University of Georgia Law School.

Negro Plans To Reapply At Georgia

Post Time Herald Tues. 2-26-57 Washington, D.C.

ATLANTA, Feb. 25 (AP)—Attorneys for Horace Ward, 29-year-old Negro law student, say he plans to reapply for admission to the all-white University of Georgia law school at Athens.

A motion filed in U. S. District Court asks Judge Frank A. Hooper to retain jurisdiction of the case brought by Ward against the university system board of regents and dismissed by Hooper Feb. 12.

The attorneys said Ward is "presently in the process of making application" for a transfer from Northwestern University, where he is now in law school, to the University of Georgia. They asked that Hooper retain the case "pending disposition of plaintiff's application for admission . . . as a transfer student."

Attorney A. T. Walden of Atlanta said Ward had written the University of Georgia for application blanks and "it is my understanding that he has received those blanks and is in the process of filling them out."

Negro's attorneys to appeal dismissal of admission suit

News Fri. 2-15-57 Athens, Ga.

ATLANTA, Feb. 13 —(AP)—Attorneys for a 29-year-old Atlanta Negro today indicated they will appeal dismissal of his U. S. District Court suit for admission to the University of Georgia Law School.

Judge Frank A. Hooper dismissed Horace T. Ward's suit yesterday. It was the latest move in Ward's six-year-old effort to become a student at the all-white law school.

WARD APPLIED for admission in September, 1950. University officials who turned him down testified last month that he did not meet entrance requirements.

Attorneys for the Negro contended he was refused admission because of his race.

Hooper, in his decision, said Ward failed to "pursue his administrative remedies." Specific reasons for the ruling were:

(1) Ward's failure to file a new application after he was turned down in 1950, (2) His failure and refusal "to furnish additional information as to character" to the university, and (3) Ward "expressedly abandoned him formal application to enter" Georgia as a first-year law student when he entered Northwestern University in 1956.

A. T. Walden, chief legal counsel in the involved suit, said "the great probability is that we will appeal" the decision.

ATTY. GEN. EUGENE Cook, whose office represented the defendants, commented: "I believe the judge is on solid ground. I am willing to predict that the Circuit Court of Appeals and the U. S. Supreme Court will affirm the decision."

This is "not a class action," the ruling said. Ward was denied admission on grounds he was "not qualified as to attitude and character."

"The court should not now declare any discrimination even though it might have existed at or about September, 1950," Hooper said. The non-jury trial was heard by Hooper in December.

Cook Urges Ward Suit Be Killed

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 2-1-57

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook made a new request for dismissal of the Horace Ward segregation suit here Thursday—this time on the ground that the Atlanta Negro's enrollment at Northwestern University renders the action "moot."

Cook's request is contained in a written brief filed in federal court in rebuttal to a request by Ward that his "prayer for relief" be amended. The proposed amendment seeks an order requiring University of Georgia officials not to discriminate against Ward should he later attempt to transfer from Northwestern to the University of Georgia law school.

CITES RULINGS

In his brief Cook cites several previous rulings to support a state contention that the courts may not base their rulings on "something that may or may not happen in the future.

"This court may not determine questions which may arise if the plaintiff makes application for admission based upon his attendance at Northwestern School of Law," Cook argued.

WARD'S AMENDMENT

The state has taken the position that the University of Georgia "cannot now or in the future" treat Ward as a new student based on his status at the time he originated his suit in 1950. To be considered as a candidate for admission to the school, Ward must reapply under the rules governing transfer students, the defense claims.

Cook also contends in his brief that Ward's proposed amendment sets out a "new cause of action" which is not authorized under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

The attorney general's brief charges that Ward's claims that he had been discriminated against solely because of his race and color "are not based upon the facts in this record." It further claims that Ward's "assumptions" are based on rulings dealing with "an entirely different class of cases."

Constitution

"This case differs . . . in that the chancellor of the University (of Georgia) System, Dr. Harmon Caldwell, has categorically settled the question of discrimination on account of race by a forthright statement made in the presence of the court and which is in the record."

The brief apparently referred to Caldwell's testimony during the recent trial of the case. Caldwell said at that time he would rul any qualified Negro eligible fo admission to any state-supporte college, and that the "regent (Board of Regents of the Univer sity System) could take it fron there."

U.S. Dist. Judge Frank A. Hoo per presided at the non-jury tria but has not yet issued his deci sion. He recently conducted "clarification of issues" hearin at which he observed that Ward' admitted refusal to reapply fo admission to the University o Georgia following military serv ice—as required by school regu lations — apparently complicate the issues involved.

The judge said at that time tha if he should order the regents t reconsider Ward's application they apparently would "have nothing to consider." He also said he "could rule" that the handling of the 29-year-old former teacher's application was "tainted" with racial discrimination.

Judge Hooper also said the Ward case differs from segragation suits in other states in that the defense did not oppose integration but maintained that Ward was not otherwise qualified for admission.

a six-year court battle to gain ad mission to the Georgia law school, is believed to be considering an attempt to transfer from Northwestern University.

Regent Charles Bloch of Macon emphasized that the new blank does not make any distinction as to race, however.

The abolishment of Dr. Brown's post was termed an economy move by one of the regents.

Other action by the board included:

1. Re-election of all presidents of the university system units except Tech and Georgia State College.

2. Approval of further study of a plan to establish a preparatory school for Tech at Middle Georgia College in Milledgeville.

3. Approval of a plan to enlarge the proposed new Regional Education Board building to include space for the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

JUDGE RULES AGAINST WARD'S BID TO ENTER SEGREGATED SCHOOL

His Race Not Reason, Says Judge Hooper

Daily World
Wed. 2-13-57
Atlanta Ga.

A federal court judge ruled here Tuesday that Negroes cannot be denied admission to state supported schools because of "race and color," but dismissed the case of Horace Ward, who was denied admission to the Law School of the University of Georgia for nearly six years.

U. S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper, who has heard presentments on the case since 1950 when the board of regents first refused admission to the graduate of Morehouse College, ruled that Ward did not pursue his administrative remedies, and was denied admission on grounds that he was not "qualified as to attitude and character."

Judge Hooper said that discriminations may have existed when he first filed in 1950, but should not be declared at present in determining the case.

It was also held that his suit became "moot" when he entered the law school of Northwestern University last fall after being denied entrance for several years through obvious efforts to maintain the south's old system of segregation.

Ward's attorneys did not reveal whether the matter will be taken to a higher court. Attorney Austin T. Walden said he had not received a copy of the decision, and knew only the minute details he had heard over a radio newscast.

He indicated, however, there may not be too much concern over the decision.

Ward's lawyers had last month asked Judge Hooper for an injunction in which Georgia University officials would be kept from discriminating against the veteran if he later should attempt to transfer from Northwestern. Hooper said Ward could again apply for relief to the courts if such an application in the future was denied.

However, he ruled, "the court should not now declare discrimination even though it might have existed at or about September, 1950."

The opinion said in part:

"It is now well established that the authorities in control of the operation of any state supported law school in this country may not refuse admission to any person solely on account of race and color.

"In all the decided cases, however, the decision was either a class action in which the qualifications of the applicant were admitted or had been judicially determined."

Judge Hooper held that Ward's case was not class action. He further held that Ward's refusal to file a new application as required by the school "would bar any relief to him by the courts."

Ward's attorneys had set up that new regulations were set up after Ward filed to enter the school. They had told the court that these rules were set up primarily to keep Negroes from being able to complete application to attend the school.

When Ward first filed to enter the school, the attorneys said at an earlier hearing, the application was not even answered for several months during which time applications of white students were considered and passed upon, with many of them attending school long before the trial came up ..... At the trial the state vigorously denied Ward's race had anything to do with his being refused.

By BOB WILLIMON

U.S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper dismissed the Horace Ward segregation suit here Tuesday—primarily on the ground the Atlanta Negro failed to "pursue his administrative remedies."

The judge also ruled that "regardless" of the foregoing ground, Ward's "cause of action" in his suit as originally brought became moot when the plaintiff entered Northwestern University's school of law last September

NOT ON COLOR ALONE

Discussing the case, non-jury trial of which was completed here in January, Judge Hooper said in his opinion:

"It is now well established that the authorities in control of the operation of any state-supported law school in this country may not refuse admission to any person solely on account of race and color.

"In all the decided cases, however . . . the decision was either a class action in which the qualifications of the applicant were admitted or had been judicially determined."

This is "not a class action," the judge continued. Ward was denied admission on the ground he was "not qualified as to attitude and character."

WOULD BAR RELIEF

Ward's failure to file a new application as required by school regulations, and his failure to comply with the "valid" portions of rules adopted by the university subsequent to his original application, "would bar any relief to him by the courts," Judge Hooper commented.

This would be "particularly true," the opinion continued, "where (Ward's) refusal to file a new application was persisted in up until the time of final trial in December, 1956." It would be true, too, in regard to the period of six-and-a-half years which elapsed during which the "plaintiff had two years military service and was absent from the state for a considerable period during which his whereabouts were unknown to the defendants," the ruling said.

Turning to Ward's January petition for an injunction in which University officials would be prohibited from discriminating against the plaintiff should he later attempt to transfer from Northwestern, Judge Hooper said Ward could again apply to the courts for relief if he should file such transfer application and be denied.

Constitution

"The court should not now declare any discrimination even though it might have existed at or about September, 1950," the opinion said. "The court does not see any necessity for retaining jurisdiction over this case for an indefinite time in the future, nor does plaintiff ask for same."

Citing a previous ruling, Judge Hooper said "remedy by injunction . . . ought not to be had to control the state officer in the conduct of his office, even though his conduct may appear to be wrong, until the remedy to correct him provided by the state has been exhausted. This rule is of special importance between the federal courts and state functionaries."

Ward's failure to pursue his administrative remedies means that "no determination of (his application to enter the university) can be made, nor can it be the basis of a fragmentary ruling" for use in cases which "may possibly be brought in the future," the ruling said.

A. T. Walden, chief counsel for Ward, said he hadn't read copies of Judge Hooper's opinion yet, but "the great probability is that we will appeal it."

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, whose office represented the defendants, said, "I am extremely gratified. This is one of the few cases that I am willing to hazard a guess as to what the circuit court or Supreme Court will do.

"I am of the firm opinion, continued Cook, "that these courts will affirm Judge Hooper's decision."

Negro Student Loses In Ruling

Post-Herald P. 33 Fri. 3-22-57

ATLANTA, March 21 (AP)—The seven-year-old effort of Horace Ward, 28, an Atlanta Negro, to enter the all-white University of Georgia Law School received a major reverse yesterday in refusal of U. S. District Court to retain jurisdiction in a suit for admission. Birmingham, Ala.

Attorneys for Ward, now a law student at Northwestern University in Illinois, asked the court to keep jurisdiction because Ward now is in the process of applying for admittance as a transfer student.

Judge Frank A. Hooper, who had dismissed the action Feb. 21, ruled that the court could not retain jurisdiction because it already has held that it does not have jurisdiction.

The ruling was viewed as disposing finally of the action filed in 1952 after a 1950 application to the law school was rejected, unless reversed by a higher court.

Fla. Says 'No' In Spite Of Ruling By Federal Court

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. The Florida State Supreme Court last Friday overrode a decision of the highest court in the land when they ruled again that a Negro, Virgil Hawkins, an instructor at Bethune - Cookman College, cannot gain admission to the all-white University of Florida Law School.

Norfolk, Va.

The ruling was another in a series against the efforts of Hawkins to gain entrance to the school, the first coming eight years ago when he first applied for admission to the school.

DESPITE A RULING by the United States Supreme Court over a year ago that Hawkins be admitted to the university promptly, the Florida high court this time threw up a 'states rights barrier to deny Hawkins' admission.

By a vote of 5-2, the state tribunal defeated Hawkins' petition to enter the school. The court said that it could not conceive that the U. S. Supreme Court "would hold that the highest court of a sovereign state does not have the right to control the effective date of its own discretionary processes."

THE FLORIDA court voiced its decision by a 5-2 vote. One of the dissenters, Justice E. Harris Drew, said that he had taken an oath to uphold the Federal Constitution and that the United States Supreme Court had long been established as the "final interpreter." The majority claimed that the admission of Negroes would create a critical disruption of the university system while recognizing that it is the duty of the court to compel Hawkins' admission "if it is feasible."

Mr. Hawkins is an instructor at Bethune-Cookman and has been trying to enter the school for the past eight years.

Reasons Other Than Race for Going Slow, State Tribunal Says

MIAMI, Fla., July 20—State officials believe Florida's pupil assignment law will stand despite a federal court action ruling unconstitutional a similar Virginia statute.

Ralph Odham, Florida assistant general, who is a specialist in school matters, acknowledged that Florida's pupil assignment law is almost identical to that of Virginia.

But, he said, the U. S. Court of Appeals threw out the Virginia law because of another law which would have automatically cut off state funds to schools forced to integrate.

Odham said this showed that Virginia had no intenton of complying with the U.S. Supreme Court's edict to end segregation and brought on the lower tribunal's ruling.

Florida doesn't have such a law, but nearly matched it during this year's Legislature.

Vetoed by Governor

The so-called "last resort" bill to prevent integration in the schools passed the 1957 Legislature but was vetoed by the governor.

It authorized the suspension of mixed schools upon a favorable vote of the people of a city, district or county to escape integration. State and county funds would have been provided to send pupils to private schools if other segregated facilities were not available.

Opponents of the bill said its passage might endanger the defense of Florida's pupil assignment law before federal courts.

Florida's pupil assignment law empowers local school boards to assign pupils to schools. The boards can use a number of criteria in making decisions, none of which is based on race.

There has not yet been a clear test of this law in federal court.

A Miami federal judge threw out the only case to reach the court so far.

He based the dismissal on the ground the Negro student should attend the school nearest his home. This was a Negro school. The judge did not attempt to rule on the legality of the assignment law.

Odham warned that the Florida law might be declared unconstitutional if it should be applied in an arbitrary manner which showed it to be an obvious subterfuge to keep Negroes out of white schools.

Meanwhile, Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin has filed a brief with the U.S. Supreme Court asking for a delay in the enrollment of a Negro at the University of Florida Law School.

FLORIDA

Sends Resolution

He sent along a copy of the Interposition resolution passed by the 1957 Legislature.

The U.S. Supreme Court already has ordered that the Negro, Virgil Hawkins of Daytona Beach, be admitted to the law school.

The Florida Supreme Court, however, invoked state sovereignty, declaring that while Hawkins, in view of the high tribunal's ruling, could not be barred solely because of his race, that there were other reasons for delaying admission of the Negro to the school.

Results of an exhaustive survey, which tended to discourage integration, were included in Ervin's brief.

Hawkins has called on the U.S. court to again order his admission to the university.

But, in his brief to the U.S. Supreme Court, Ervin said that the interposition resolution, which refuses to recognize the desegregation decisions, is evidence of the official expression of the feelings of the white people of Florida against mixing of the races in the schools.

Ervin said that the Florida Supreme Court was "conscious of its duty and responsibility" in carrying out the U.S. Court's order to admit Hawkins to the school, but he added that the Florida tribunal felt that some delay was necessary for reasons other than race.

Administrative problems, he said, that may be encountered include:

Provision for housing of Negro students.

Administration of an increased number of course drops by students indicating that they would not be in the same class with a Negro.

Need for additional time and personnel to administer the program of more rigid entrance requirements.

Vigilance on the part of administrators and counsellors to prevent racial incidents which may occur because of the admission of Negroes.

Housing Inspection

Inspection of off-campus housing to protect the health and welfare of all students.

Replacement of the faculty and staff who would resign because of integration.

Development of understanding on the part of alumni of the universities to insure continued loyal and enthusiastic support.

Adjustments in food service operations to prevent deficits resulting from loss of white student patrons refusing to eat with Negroes.

Counseling of students to prevent them from engaging in activities to discourage Negroes from attending classes.

Provision for care of Negroes in the student health services.

Modification of regulations governing swimming classes and other sports.

And review of present offerings at Florida A&M University, the Negro college, to eliminate unnecessary and uneconomical offerings.

Ervin said that the factual problem now confronting Florida was one of administration, not of law.

"The law," he declared, "cannot alter the minds or mores of men in a free nation and the dilemma is concerned with the conflict between the law and mental attitudes. We know that these conflicts exist and believe that we have given this court (the U.S. Supreme Court) abundant evidence of a solid wall of opposition to integration in Florida schools and colleges which justifies the Supreme Court of Florida in delaying its writ in the interest of the general peace and welfare of this state."

Ervin urged the U.S. court to take a "realistic" view of the factual reasons behind the Florida court's delay in ordering the university to admit Hawkins.

Elsewhere on the segregation front in Florida, the Fort Lauderdale city commission has agreed to sell to private interests for $562,000 a golf course valued at more than one million dollars, which federal court has ordered integrated.

Florida Officials Say Ruling Indicates Considerate Approach

MIAMI, Fla., Oct. 26—State officials are encouraged over the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to order the immediate admission of a Negro to the University of Florida law school, and are hopeful the high tribunal's outlawing of Virginia's pupil assignment law won't affect a similar Florida statute.

The court told the Negro, Virgil Hawkins, he would have to apply to a lower federal court.

Florida legal circles are interpreting the decision as a victory for the state supreme court, which had refused to follow the high court's previous order to admit the 48-year-old Daytona Beach Negro to the law school without delay.

Gov. LeRoy Collins, who has attempted to mediate the Little Rock dispute said that the court's ruling on Hawkins indicated "a more conciliatory and understanding position. And for this I can say only thank goodness."

Commends Court

Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin, who has been extremely critical of the U.S. Supreme Court's earlier rulings in segregated matters, commended it on its "considerate and wise approach to this most difficult problem."

The attorney general, who has represented the state in the Hawkins case, and twice intervened in U.S. Supreme Court proceedings regarding the racial issue, declared:

"We believe the United States Supreme Court has proceeded wisely and prudently in treating the university case as falling in the same category as grade school cases by having it considered in the light of implementation or second decision of the Brown case rather than ordering immediate admission.

"We further believe that the federal district courts will give the most respectful consideration to the finding of the Florida Supreme Court that disruption of the university system would occur if Negro students are permitted to enter at this time, if resort is had to these courts."

U.S. Sen. George Smathers said it appears that members of the Supreme Court have begun to "recognize the havoc and confusion which their (desegregation) decision has caused."

He declared the court's decision indicates "possibly a change of attitude."

Smathers said the court shows indications it is considering the psychological effect of integration on the South. When racial tests first came before the court, he recalled, the justices emphasized the psychological effect of segregation on Negroes.

FLORIDA

8-Year Effort

Hawkins, who has been trying for eight years to gain admission to the all-white law school, had asked the high court to void a Florida Supreme Court decision.

In 1952, the Florida court ruled that Hawkins could not be denied admission "solely because of his race," but withheld approval pending a survey.

The court wanted to determine whether violence or social upheaval would result from mixing of races in the school.

The U.S. Supreme Court two years later asked the Florida tribunal to reconsider its decision as there was "no reason for delay."

But, following the survey, the Florida court refused to order Hawkins admitted to the school on the ground it would "tend to work serious public mischief."

The state court said Hawkins could renew his application "when he is prepared to present testimony showing that his admission can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

Hawkins' next legal move isn't expected to be disclosed until next month when his attorney, Robert L. Carter of New York, general counsel of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, returns from vacation.

Carter has indicated, however, that a new action probably will be started in the near future in federal district court either at Tallahassee, Tampa or Jacksonville.

Sees No Effect

As to the U.S. Supreme Court's action in striking down Virginia's pupil placement law, Florida Assistant Atty. Gen. Ralph E. Odum said this would have no effect on the validity of this state's pupil assignment statute.

Odum, a specialist in school law, expressed confidence the Florida law will be found constitutional when, and if, it gets before the federal courts.

He explained the Virginia law was one of a series which, when read together, made integragation of public schools impossible. Florida has no laws which eliminate completely the possibility of integrated public schools, he added.

"Our pupil assignment law," said Odum, "stands by itself and sets forth criteria, other than race, which are to guide local school boards in assigning pupils to specific schools. These include scholastic achievement, location of the applicant's home in relation to a school, sociological and psychological factors."

Odum explained: "It is entirely possible under Florida law for a Negro to be assigned to a white school if in the opinion of a local school board he qualifies in all respects. And there are no companion laws which would make the assignment an empty gesture."

He also pointed out the difference in the administration of the Virginia and Florida laws. "The Virginia act puts the decision for placing students in a state school board," said Odum. "Florida law vests responsibility for assigning pupils in the local school boards. Policies adopted by a state board logically could be construed as applying to every school in a state. The policies of one local school board could not be considered binding upon any other school board."

High Court Denies Entry Of Negro To U. Of Florida

Kasper Case Turned Down By Tribunal

Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 (AP)—The Supreme Court today underscored its ruling that specific steps in school integration cases are to be left in the hands of local U. S. courts—to determine whether the time is ripe for Negroes to be enrolled in all-white schools.

The tribunal did so in refusing to order the immediate admission of a Negro, Virgil Hawkins, to the University of Florida law school. It told him to bring his suit in an appropriate U. S. District Court.

In a separate action dealing indirectly with the public school integration controversy, the Supreme Court refused to review John Kasper's 1956 criminal contempt conviction.

Kasper, a vowed segregationist, was found guilty of disregarding a U. S. District Court order in Knoxville, Tenn., growing out of disorders last year.

RENEW EFFORTS

Atty. J. Benjamin Simmons of Washington promptly announced that he will renew his efforts to save Kasper from going to jail. Simmons said he will file a petition specifically asking that all nine justices hear Kasper's case.

Kasper's appeal got no special attention, and there was no indication that any of the justices disagreed with the action in denying him a Supreme Court hearing. This case was grouped with scores of others with the notation at the end of the list that the petitions for review "in these cases are severally denied."

Kasper's bond will remain in effect pending disposition of more legal formalities. He has 25 days in which to ask the court to reconsider today's action. If this is denied, the court will send out its formal notice to lower federal courts involved. This usually requires about 30 days.

GROSSLY EXCESSIVE

In asking the high court to review his conviction, Kasper contended his constitutional right of freedom of speech had been violated. He also called his sentence grossly excessive.

Kasper, executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council, lists his residences as Washington, D.C., and Camden, N.J.

The action today did not involve another contempt conviction growing out of the Clinton disorders. Kasper and six others were convicted by a jury in Taylor's court last July 23 of fomenting disorders in violation of an injunction against obstructing orderly integration of Clinton High School.

Kasper also figured in integration disorders in Nashville, Tenn. He was convicted in local courts there on minor charges.

In other actions today—the first all-out business session of its new term which opened last Monday—the tribunal:

1. Set aside the convictions of Junius I. Scales and Claude M. Lightfoot, first two persons tried under the "knowing membership" clause of the Smith Anti-Communist Act. The government had said the convictions had to be upset in the light of the high court's Jencks' case ruling of last June.

2. Set aside on a government

motion the convictions of three Portland, Ore., residents for refusing to answer questions asked by a House subcommittee on Un-American Activities. Herbert Simpson, Donald M. Wollam and John Rogers MacKenzie refused to tell anything but their names when the subcommittee on June 18 and 19, 1954, held hearings on Communist activities in the Portland area. The three pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

WERE INCRIMINATING

The Justice Department in a memorandum to the high tribunal said some of the questions might have tended to be incriminating.

3. Agreed to rule whether union inducement of employes not to handle "hot cargo" is legal under some labor - management contracts.

The contracts contain "hot cargo" clauses which allow union members to refuse to handle non-union or struck goods. The legal issue is whether inducement to refuse to work on "hot cargo" violates the secondary boycott provisions of the Taft-Hartley labor law.

U. S. courts of appeals have divided 2-2 in cases involving the issue.

4. Agreed to rule on efforts by Interhandel, Swiss holding firm, to keep alive a suit to recover stock control of General Aniline & Film Corp.

Interhandel was owner of more than 90 per cent of the capital stock of General Aniline & Film. The stock was seized by the government during World War II. Basis of the seizure was that Interhandel was controlled by I. G. Farben, a German enemy corporation.

The world Court also is considering the case.

5. Granted Max Lerner, a New York City subway conductor, a review of his dismissal for refusing to state whether he ever had been a Communist party member.

DISMISSMAL ORDERED

Lerner's dismissal was ordered under the 1951 New York security risk law, which says evidence of membership in an organization found by the State Civil Service Commission to be subversive makes an employe a security risk.

6. Set aside the contempt conviction of Willard Uphaus for refusing to supply a list of guests at the World Fellowship Center at Albany, N.H.

7. Agreed to review a decision requiring lower Panama Canal tolls. The decision, by the U.S. Circuit Court in New York, was given in a suit by Grace Line, Inc. and other steamship lines which use the canal.

8. Agreed to review the contempt conviction of Milton Knapp, Bronx manufacturer, for refusing to answer questions asked by a New York County grand jury during a 1956 investigation of alleged bribery of Teamster Union officials.

REVIEW DECISION

9. Agreed to review a decision that a widow who receives the proceeds of her husband's life insurance policies is not liable for his unpaid federal income taxes. The decision given by the U.S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati rejected government efforts to collect $32,777 in income taxes and penalties from the widow of Dr. Milton J. Stern, of Lexington, Ky.

10. Let stand by refusing to review a state court decision upholding a Connecticut "drunk" law. The law makes an alcoholic beverage dealer liable for damages if he sells to an intoxicated person and the "drunk" thereafter causes any injuries.

11. Also let stand a decision permitting a cut in back pay ordered by the National Labor Relations Board for employes found to have been unlawfully discharged.

The decision, by the U. S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati, applied to instances where discharged employes made good-faith efforts to get new jobs in their line of work but were unable to do so.

PAY REDUCED

The Circuit Court said that if the employes failed to seek a different type of employment, even though at lower wages, the back pay ordered by the board should be reduced.

12. Rejected the plea of General Electric Co. for review of a U. S. Circuit Court decision in New York permitting a Washington, D. C., mail order firm to advertise and sell GE products in New York at below "fair tade" prices.

The decision upheld business activities in New York permitting a Washington, D. C., mail order firm to advertise and sell GE products in New York at below "fair trade" prices.

The decision upheld business activities in New York State by Masters Mail Order Co. of Washington, D. C., Inc.

13. Refused to review the conviction of Acy Lennon, a secretary to Rep. Powell (D-NY) on four counts of federal income tax evasion.

Florida Negro Case Before Supreme Court

Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 10-14-57

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13 (UP)—The Supreme Court meets in the term's first "work" session Monday, faced with a particularly stubborn school segregation problem in Florida.

Virgil D. Hawkins, a Negro who has been trying since 1949 to get into the state university law school at Gainesville, has brought his situation to the high court for the fourth time.

Hawkins' lawyers — Thurgood Marshall and Robert L. Carter, of New York — have asked the court to resolve the impasse by going back to the early days of the last century for precedents. In a series of decrees beginning in 1816 the Supreme Court established its superiority over recalcitrant state tribunals.

The Florida Supreme Court has refused to order Hawkins admitted to the law school on grounds that violence would result, although the U.S. Supreme Court directed his immediate admission a year and a half ago.

MOUNTAIN OF APPEALS

The court is expected to act on this and a small mountain of other appeals filed during the summer recess. Then it will begin hearing arguments on some of the cases that were accepted for review during the closing weeks of last term.

The summer backlog includes test of New Hampshire and New York anti-subversive laws, the latest legal quirk in the "fair trade" price controversy, and a challenge to "hot cargo" contracts which protect labor union members from having to work on non-union goods.

On the argument list is a plea to overrule a 1954 decision that aliens may be deported solely for past membership in the Communist Party.

Another is a complaint by Negro railroad employes in Texas alleging discrimination by the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

The Hawkins' case presents the Supreme Court with the problem of what to do when its orders to state courts are not carried out. In its last action in the case on March 12, 1956, the high court pointed out that decisions rendered prior to the historic school segregation ruling of 1954 provided for admission of Negroes to state-supported graduate schools.

STATE COURT REFUSES

Nevertheless, the state court refused to issue an admission order for Hawkins. It said students and parents planned to make life very unpleasant for any Negro students who might enter the university, that may students would leave, that revenue would fall off, and that "a critical disruption of the university system would occur."

The opinion said Hawkins can apply again when he can show that his admission "can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

Marshall and Carter have asked the U.S. Supreme Court to bypass the state tribunal by issuing an order in Hawkins' favor directly to the State Board of Control, which administers the university. The high court took similar action in 1816 and 1880 to bypass the Virginia Court of Appeals and in 1872 to oypass the Missouri Supreme Court.

Florida Atty. Gen. Richard W. Ervin contended that these cases are not in point. He said the high court ought to "welcome the counsel, the prudence, and the careful considerations of a state appelate court. . ."

Last week the Florida Legislature approved a bill providing for automatic shutdown of any school to which federal troops are sent to compel integration.

The Florida Supreme Court, thumbing its nose at the United States Supreme Court, has denied Virgil D. Hawkins immediate admission to the University of Florida.

Mr. Hawkins first appealed to the courts for the right to attend the state law school in 1949.

Sat. 3-23-57

Twice, the nation's highest tribunal has ruled that by denying him admission, Florida was robbing Hawkins of his constitutional rights.

Five years after he had entered the state courts, the Florida Supreme Court dismissed his petition, an action which was immediately appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

Editorial

On May 24, 1954, that court issued a mandate requiring the Florida Supreme Court to reconsider its action in light of previous rulings opening tax-supported professional and graduate schools to all citizens.

The Florida Supreme Court, ignoring this mandate, began a survey of "capacity, plant, and other conditions that prevail at the University of Florida," meanwhile refusing Hawkins the right to enroll.

A second appeal was made to the United States Supreme Court which on March 12, 1956, issued another mandate declaring "there is no reason for delay" and that Hawkins is "entitled to prompt admission" to Florida's law school.

A year after receiving this order five of the seven members of the Florida Supreme Court, say, in effect "we're not going to obey."

Up to now the Florida court has made a travesty of this case.

Stripped of its legal verbiage, it is simply a case of the judiciary itself breaking the law.

The Florida court's delays, deliberate refusal to act and open defiance amount to criminal violation of the law.

The fact is Florida doesn't intend to grant Hawkins his citizenship rights because he's colored.

In our lay view, the Supreme Court has no alternative but to deal with this brazen challenge of its authority.

We see no reason why members of the judiciary should enjoy any special immunity from the law, not enjoyed by individuals or corporations.

No government in which judges are above the law can long exist.

We are certain it would be painful and action might be taken with extreme regret but we feel there's nothing left for the Supreme Court to do but to treat these five Florida judges like ordinary criminals and lawbreakers.

But we're not lawyers.

We have been told by persons far more competent in this field than us that it will now be necessary for Hawkins to go back to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus.

And then if members of the Florida court for the third time refuse to act, they can be cited for contempt, convicted, fined and possibly sentenced to jail.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 8.—The Florida Supreme Court, contending a state court should decide when integration can be accomplished peacefully, postponed today a Negro's admission to the University of Florida.

In a 5-2 decision, it held that the admission of Virgil Hawkins to the university law school at Gainesville at this time would result in violence in university communities and a "critical disruption of the university system."

Disregarding a March, 1956, U.S. Supreme Court mandate ordering Mr. Hawkins' "prompt admission," the state's highest court told him to renew his application "when he is prepared to present testimony showing his admission can be accomplished without doing great public mischief."

Justice E. Harris Drew, who dissented, said "justice delayed is justice denied."

The Florida court already had ruled—in 1955—that Mr. Hawkins could not be barred because of color in view of U.S. court desegregation rulings. But the court held then and repeated today that the highest court of an "independent sovereign state" had the right to "exercise a sound judicial discretion" as to when integration could be put into actual practice.

Justice T. Frank Hobson based a special concurring opinion on the fact a state survey showing students, parents and alumni of the universities would violently resist integration was not in the record when the U.S. court ruled "there is no reason to delay" Mr. Hawkins' enrollment.

Justice B. K. Roberts, who wrote the majority opinion, said "this court has an opportunity to prevent the incidents of violence which are, even now, occurring in various parts of this country as a result of the states' efforts to enforce desegregation."

Now on top of that the school's officials have accepted a Federal Government contract which specifically states that the university cannot discriminate on grounds of race or color.

The contract, with the Atomic Energy Commission, provides $95,000 for a reactor and $130,000 for instruments needed for research in the atomic field.

Dr. J. Wayne Reitz, president of the school, says he knows the anti-discrimination clause is in the contract but he doesn't believe the colored people of Florida are advanced enough to apply for study in this highly specialized field and in the event one did, he would find a way to keep him out.

Dr. Reitz could be only fooling himself.

Funds Sought For Medical School Help

Post-Herald
Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK, April 9 (AP)—The Nation's 82 medical schools will have no choice but to seek more Federal aid if private sources do not do better in providing support, a report of the National Fund for Medical Education said today.

The report said the medical schools were in a "struggle for solvency."

At stake, the report added, was the ability of the schools to supply medical personnel as well as "their ability to realize the full potential of the medical sciences and to fulfill new opportunities for advancing the Nation's health."

The report voiced an appeal for $10 million in annual contributions, chiefly from industry, to be distributed in grants to accredited medical schools.

Operating costs of medical schools, the report noted, are at their highest point in history, having risen from $27 million in 1941-42 to $120 million in 1956-57. Income from tuition currently is about one-sixth of the total operating cost. Thus "for every dollar the average school receives in tuition, it spends an additional $5 on operation," the report added.

The report noted also that tuition costs had risen 84 per cent since 1940, and "further increases might bar many qualified students—students the medical profession could ill afford to lose."

The chief reason for the crisis in medical education, the report said, was the "swarm of new activities and responsibilities" which the schools have accepted or "had thrust upon them" as a result of the rapid advance of the medical sciences during and since World War II.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 14—A ground breaking ceremony for a building that will become the permanent home of the Southern Regional Education Board will be held here next Saturday at 9:15 A. M.

The board, an agency of the Southern states dealing with interstate cooperation among the colleges and universities of the South, has had its headquarters here since it was established in 1949.

The first spade of ground symbolizing the start of construction for the modern, two-story office building will be turned by Gov. LeRoy Collins of Florida, chairman of the education board. He will be introduced by Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, whose plan made it possible for the interstate agency to have its first permanent headquarters building.

Among others who will take part are Gov. Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, who will give the invocation, and State Representative George Rayne Cossar of Mississippi, vice chairman of the board, who will act as master of ceremonies.

The new building was designed by Blau & Hall, an Atlanta architectural firm. It will consist primarily of office spaces with a library and conference room combination on the second floor.

National Effort On To Stamp Out Illiteracy

Call Kansas City, Mo.

By ALICE DUNNIGAN

Jan. 17-19-57

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)— There are ten million Americans of adult age who are functionally illiterate i.e., who cannot read or write, and an alarming number of them are Negro.

P. 20

This fact adds interest to the announcement that Dr. Ambrose Caliver who holds the highest post reached in the U. S. Office of Education, will serve as consultant to the newly formed National Commission on Literacy.

Six Point Program

A six point program for action at the commission's first meeting in regard to combatting illiteracy is as follows:

1. The 35-member independent commission plans to help create a national awareness of the magnitude, seriousness, and urgency of the problem of illiteracy.

2. It aims to assist in developing an understanding of the significance and implications of illiteracy to (a) our national security, (b) our national economy and prosperity, (c) our social and cultural development (d) the individual worker in an age of rapidly increasing mechanization and automation and (e) the growing need for personal adjustment and growth.

3. The commission expects to bring together the salient facts about illiteracy and to interpret and present them dramatically to the nation.

4. It will take the leadership in promoting community action in eradicating the blot of adult illiteracy.

Dr. Caliver's "Brainchild"

Although this commission was organized and is operating completely independent from government it is actually the brainchild of Dr. Ambrose Caliver, chief of the adult education section of the U. S. Office of Education, and assistant to the commissioner.

This adult illiteracy is the factor underlying most of our major social ills such as poverty, ignorance, disease, occupational inefficiency, poor citizenship and personal, family and group maladjustment.

Notables on Commission

Beside Dr. Caliver, some of the other members of the commission are Dr. Luther H. Foster, president Tuskegee Institute; and Miss Roberta Church, Minority Groups Consultant, Bureau of Employment Security, U. S. Department of Labor.

A few of the other members are Jonathan Daniels, Editor, "The News and Observer" of Raleigh, N. C.; Senator J. W. Fulbright; Dr. Willard Givens, former executive secretary of NEA and chairman of the U. S. Commission for UNESCO; Dr. Frank P. Graham, UN, India-Pakistan Mediator; Mrs. Agnes Meyers, famous author and lecturer; Henry V. Putzel of St. Louis; Victor Reuther, assistant to the president of UAW; Miss Myrna Loy, star of screen and radio; and Dr. Howard McC. Snyder, White House physician.

National Effort On To Stamp Out Illiteracy

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)— There are ten million Americans of adult age who are functionally illiterate i.e., who cannot read or write, and an alarming number of them are Negro.

P. 20

This fact adds interest to the announcement that Dr. Ambrose Caliver who holds the highest post reached in the U. S. Office of Education, will serve as consultant to the newly formed National Commission on Literacy.

Six Point Program

A six point program for action at the commission's first meeting in regard to combatting illiteracy is as follows:

1. The 35-member independent commission plans to help create a national awareness of the magnitude, seriousness, and urgency of the problem of illiteracy.

2. It aims to assist in developing an understanding of the significance and implications of illiteracy to (a) our national security, (b) our national economy and prosperity, (c) our social and cultural development (d) the individual worker in an age of rapidly increasing mechanization and automation and (e) the growing need for personal adjustment and growth.

Young Negro Vaccinates A Pig And Graduates At Piney Woods

Associated Press Staff Writer

PINEY WOODS, Miss., May 23—Mussolini Magee has proved he can vaccinate a hog and thus became a 1957 graduate of Piney Woods Country Life School.

The 19-year-old Columbia, Miss., Negro lad plunged a needle into a squirming pig in one of the "demonstrations of skills" by 40 graduates of one of the world's most unusual schools.

Piney Woods has come a long way since it was founded in 1909 by Dr. Laurence C. Jones as a school for the underprivileged Negro children of Mississippi's backwoods.

The emphasis then was on survival—how to work, how to keep clean. Today, its graduates are known the nation over not only for such skills as bookkeeping, accounting, carpentry and bricklaying. They also recognized for their pride and for such niceties as faultless grammar and accent-free speech.

The one thing has not changed. Each graduate is required to learn two "trades" and demonstrate on graduation day that he has learned his lessons well.

The "demonstrations of skill" were performed yesterday in a natural amphitheater surrounded by tall pines. The wind sang through the trees, birds wheeled overhead and the sun glinted off a blue lake a few steps away.

Mary Retta Solomon, a slender girl from Americus, Ga., showed her sewing skill. The dark fingers of Clara Anderson, 19, of Eudora, Ark., flew over the keys of an accounting machine.

Minnie Marie Leeper, slender 20-year-old girl from Nettleton, passed a supreme test with flying colors. She fried chicken for the families and friends at the annual commencement exercises.

Other students operated drill presses and lathes, laid tile, made brick, ironed shirts, and operated office machines.

Piney Woods has grades from kindergarten to an accredited junior college level. Yesterday's graduates, many of them planning to be teachers, were all junior college students. Each student works his way, attending classes half a day and working the other half.

The school is supported by donations and the students' own work. A windfall of more than $600,000 followed Dr. Jones' 1954 appearance on a national television program.

That his commencement speech was not the high point of the occasion was quickly admitted by the Rev. Preston Bradley of People's Church, Chicago, a Congregational-Unitarian minister.

Bradley, a white man long interested in Piney Woods, said their new skills will enable the graduates to "participate effectively in our economy."

In the only reference to the racial question which is so volative in Mississippi, the Chicago minister urged the graduates to "develop Christian courage" in seeking a "minimum of economic tragedy and racial antagonism." He said, "There are no unimportant souls in the kingdom of man."

Dr. Jones, agile at 72, happily watched the "demonstration of skills" and joked easily with the graduates as he handed them their diplomas.

Mississippi may have been hostile when he came here in 1909 from Iowa to found the school, winning his first support among the few Negroes who could offer land and the buildings. Two years ago, he was called to the state capital at Jackson to be honored. He shared the speaker's platform with then Gov. Hugh White, who acclaimed Jones as Mississippi's first citizen."

Prentiss Institute To Mark 50th Anniversary

Delphian, Chicago, Ill. Apr. 4-13-57

PRENTISS, Miss. — One of the founders of Prentiss Normal and Industrial Institute will head a mammoth celebration April 21-22 in observance of the institution's 50th year.

Mrs. J. E. Johnson, who with her late husband founded the school in 1907 on a red clay hill one mile east of the town, will be on hand to receive plaudits from all over the world for 50 years of service.

The Johnsons also founded the Oak Park Vocational school in Laurel, Miss., in 1929.

The two schools have grown from humble beginnings to plants of enormous size with curriculums recognized by the Mississippi Department of Education.

The fruits of the Johnsons' labor is best seen in the hundreds of Prentiss graduates scattered throughout the United States and in foreign countries.

Prentiss Institute Observing Its 50th Anniversary

Advocate p. 7 Apr. 4-20-57

Jackson, Miss.

Public Invited To Commencement Sunday And Monday

Prentiss, Miss., April 15—Prentiss Normal and Industrial Institute here, widely known both in and out of the state for its contribution to Negro education, is observing ifts Fiftieth Anniversary along with its annual commencement program Sunday and Monday.

The Commencement program includes the Sermon at 2:00 P. M. Sunday by Rev. J. R. Davis, Pastor, First Baptist Church, Columbia, Miss., and the Commencement address at 2:00 P. M. Monday, by Rev. Ramsey Bridges, Class 33, Pastor of Warren Methodist Church, Pittsburgh, Penn.

The history of the Prentiss Institute is evidence of complete faith of two young people in God, in mankind and in themselves. They came to Prentiss in 1907 from Pike County, Mississippi where they had married in 1904. Prof. Johnson was a graduate of Alcorn College, the state college for Negroes, and Mrs. Johnson had graduated from Tuskegee Institute under the late Booker T. Washington.

They were looked upon with distrust by members of their own race as well as by the white inhabitants. This was especially true when it was learned that they intended to establish a school in this rural section where Negroes outnumbered the whites two to one. They had no money and their only worldly possessions were their clothing and two children, one seven weeks and the other two years of age. Thus, the Prentiss Institute was born under these humble circumstances some fifty years ago.

Ad. Advocate

A small plot of land, situated about one mile east of Prentiss and containing only an ante-bellum dwelling, was secured by Prof. Johnson. This was purchased with borrowed money from the local bank. A group of Negro farmers endorsed the note.

Most of the white and colored people were skeptical of the Johnsons and the school project. This meant the beginning of a long and hard struggle. The school had to be sold to both races.

About 40 day students were enrolled the first year with some four or five boarders. Money had to be raised to meet immediate needs as well as to make payments on the mortgage. Prof. and Mrs. Johnson canvassed from house to house among the colored people throughout Jefferson Davis and adjacent counties. A chicken here, a peck of meal there were used to feed themsevles and the boarders. These were the most difficult years in the school's history.

Two complete years of college work and two years of Teacher-Training work-based on theory and supervised practice; four years of accredited high school work including Home Economics and Vocational Agriculture, Bricklaying, Business and Commercial Music, Cleaning and Pressing, Carpentry, Shoe Repairing, Auto Mechanics, and Vocational Photography. Bible Training may be secured through the coopearting and adjacent Mississippi Union Theological Seminary.

PRENTISS NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE

Non-Sectarian, but Christian.

The physical plant of the school consists now of 550 acres of land, 24 buildings and farm and trade equipment. The enrollment 1956-1957 session was 780, including many veterans with a staff of 44.

The Institute is supported largely by hundreds of contributors who live in every state in the union. Their many friends believe not only in the type of training offered to the Negro of Mississippi, but feel that it is a good program for youth of the nation as well..

The late Booker T. Washington founded Tuskegee Institute on the thesis that "the training of the head, the heart and the hands" offers the best foundation for the future development of young people, regardless of the individual's plans for a life's vocation. Prentiss Institute, fashioned after Tuskegee, has foilowed this theory of education from its very beginning. Each student is encouraged to develop his individual talent with a view toward service to his fellowman.

The Institution has always prided itself on being the moving spirit in many new ventures. In 1912 the work of the Jeanes Agent in the South began at Prentiss. These agents are assistants to the various county superintendents of education and supervisors of Negro Public Schools. Today there are 17 states with such agents in the South.

In 1913 the first Negro farm extension agent in the state of Mississippi began his work at Prentiss. In 1913 the American Sunday School Union, with headquarters in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, began its work in the South for Negroes at Prentiss.

The Institute has always been a community school, concerned first with local needs and problems. Never has a majority of its students resided outside of the county. A community appeal for help was made by the teachers, high school graduates, who were interested in furthering their education in a school which could offer some opportunity for progression, rather than attend the summer normals then in vogue. In answer to this appeal the two years of teacher training were added in the year 1940. The State Department of Education approved the Institute for certification of teachers.

On November 19, 1953, Prof. J. E. Johnson passed to his heavenly reward. However, the tenets upon which the school was founded have remained unchanged. On April 29, 1954, the board of trustees elected Mrs. J. E. Johnson to succeed her late husband as President.

Sketches ready on new Negro library

A new Negro branch of the Birmingham Public Library may be completed this Fall.

Architect's sketches for the building at Avenue F and Center-st were approved yesterday by the Library Board.

The branch is the last of four buildings constructed with $500,000 from a 1953 bond issue, Library Director Fant Thornly said.

Thornly said the library may be opened next September.

It will have adult and children's reading rooms, a staff room, equipment, work and public meeting rooms.

The building will be air conditioned and will have recessed fluorescent lighting, vinyl tile and acoustical ceilings.

Architect is Jack B. Smith.

2 Negroes 1st Professionals In Library's Book Division

Courier-Journal 9-6
Louisville Ky.

Transfer of two employees at Western Branch Library, 604 S. 10th, to the Main Library was approved yesterday by the Library Board of Trustees.

Mrs. Ruth Harry will be assigned to the reference department and Mrs. Barbara Miller to the children's department at the Main Library.

9-11-57

They are the first Negro professional workers in the "book division" of the Library. A Negro has been employed for some time in the Library's Audio-Visual Department.

Branches' Hours Changed

C. R. Graham, Library director, said the transfers will result in a "more efficient use" of Library personnel. Western Branch has had five professional workers. Before the transfer, the Main Library had "serious problems" because of a staff shortage.

The trustees also approved changing Western's hours to coincide with those of other branches—from 2 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, instead of 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday hours will remain the same—10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Hours of Eastern Branch, 600 Lampton, were changed to 2 to 6 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and 2 to 9 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. The branch is closer on Saturday.

Graham reported the resignations of Miss Jane Davies as head of the children's department at the Main Library, Miss Ellen Harding as head of the Kentucky Room, and Mrs. Mary Spradling as head of Eastern Branch.

Miss Davies, who had been here two months, left to marry. Mrs. Spradling has taken a position in another state and Miss Harding is ill. Mrs. Martha McCoy was promoted to assistant in charge of the Eastern Branch.

The trustees accepted a bequest of $2,012.58 from Mary Graton Bartlett, Plymouth, Mass. The 1886 Louisville directory lists a woman by that name as "teacher at Hampton College." An earlier directory lists such a person as "a teacher who boards at the Galt House."

Death Date Not Known

Library officials did not know when Miss or Mrs. Bartlett died, but have carried on correspondence with executors of her estate since 1930. She left her money to a woman who died recently, with the stipulation the Library was to get a share eventually.

Income from the bequest to the Library will be used to purchase framed art reproductions to be lent to the public.

Matter Of Libraries

Afro-American

A number of public libraries in North Carolina are not open to colored citizens.

Some of them have systems, by which colored readers must make application for a book in writing and the book is then delivered under cover of darkness to their homes.

The elemental function of a library is to show books where the public can browse and select books to glance over for a few minutes or to take home and read.

The mayor of Smithfield, N.C., seems alarmed because a group of colored people proposes to take legal action to open that community's library to all tax-payers.

He issued a long statement on the subject of the interest of colored people in books.

He should assume that all people have the same interests and the same rights —and if the Smithfield library is open to one citizen, it should be open to all.

NEGROES GAIN LIBRARIES USE

Greensboro Desegregates Public Libraries; Keeps Pool Segregated

GREENSBORO, July 15 (AP) — Greensboro's public libraries were officially opened to Negroes today, but the city's public swimming pools will continue on a segregated basis for the time being.

Members of the City Council voted unanimously to adopt a statement of policy issued by the Greensboro Public Library's Board of Managers that, in effect, declares the library desegregated.

This is the policy laid down by the board and adopted by council:

"The facilities of the Greensboro public library are available to any citizen of Guilford County who can present satisfactory identification."

A petition asking an end to segregation in the city's libraries and public swimming pools was presented to the Council on June 27.

Among the 26 were Edwin R. Edmonds, chairman of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advance of the Colored People, and Mrs. Annie L. Gist, mother of Dr. Ann Gist, who was denied admission to the All-white Lindley Park pool on June 26.

At the time it was presented, Council referred the petition to City Attorney Jack Elam for further study.

As to public swimming pools, Council turned thumbs down on the proposal that they be opened to both races, at least for the rest of the 1957 season. The following resolution setting forth the policy as to public swimming pools was adopted without a dissenting vote:

"Be it resolved that it be declared to be the policy of the city council to maintain and operate the public swimming pools of the city for the remainder of the 1957 season in the same manner as they presently being used; provided, however, that the city will, before the 1958 season, give earnest consideration to the problems raised in the petition."

C. C. Fordham Jr., chairman of the Board of Library Managers, said the action means that Negroes may now obtain library cards at the white library.

"Actually, it's a minor change in policy," he said. "Negroes have in the past been able to use reference works at the local library and to borrow books on an inter-library loan basis."

In the past, Negroes have been able to borrow books from the white library by presenting cards from Carnegie Library, the Negro library, saying that the book was not available there.

Use Of Library In Smithfield, N. C. Pushed By Attorney

SMITHFIELD, N. C. — (ANP) — Denouncing the fact that Negroes have twice been denied use of the municipal library here, built and maintained by public funds, an attorney for four Negroes bringing litigation against library segregation said last week that "one way or the other" his clients intend to use the public reading center.

"If nothing can be gained by discussion, then we have no other course but to file suit," stated Atty. Samuel S. Mitchell of Raleigh, who had earlier stated that he would exhaust all bargaining possibilities before going into the courts.

In the event the case reached the courts, it would be the first such action to force a public library here to desegregate. Earlier this week the Greensboro City Council lowered racial bars and admitted Negroes to its public libraries.

Mitchell pointed out that he is willing to confer with city officials to determine what arrangements can be made in regard to library integration.

Currently, Negroes use city library books through the county library which closes at night and on Saturdays.

Pays Taxes, He May Sue To Use Library

Afro-American Sat. 3-2-57 P.3

Baltimore Md.

PURCELLEVILLE, Va. — "There is no doubt about the Virginia State law. It provides that libraries to be free to all inhabitants."

Thus commented Oliver E. Stone, Washington lawyer, on a letter he sent to trustees of the Purcelleville Public Library, advising them that he will bring suit unless his client is given full rights under Virginia law.

Mr. Stone is counsel for Samuel C. Murray, 42, local upholsterer, who was refused service by both a clerk and Library Board Chairman O. Emerick when he sought to borrow a book there on Jan. 10.

Mr. Emerick, who presided, presented the letter from the attorney to the board at its monthly meeting Thursday night.

ON FRIDAY, Mr. Emerick said the library's board of trustees had decided to delay any decision on the letter until after consultation with the county board of supervisors March 4 and the Town Council on March 12.

The library board chairman reportedly refused to permit Mr. Murray to borrow the book from the library on grounds that it would be "contrary to practice."

"I went to the library to get a book on French drapes to use n my business," Mr. Murray said. "The librarian, Miss Graham, told me I'd have to get permission from Mr. Emerick."

When Mr. Emerick refused him service, Mr. Murray said he would get a lawyer to enforce his right to use the library if necessary.

HIS "HOT POTATO" was turned down by two Loudoun County lawyers, according to Mr. Murray, so he then went to Washington and approached Mr. Stone, who accepted the case.

"If I didn't pay my taxes, they would sell my home," Mr. Murray declared. "Since I do pay my taxes, I felt that I should have the use of the books from the library which is paid for by my taxes."

Mr. Emerick admitted that Mr. Murray's taxes, like those of others, help support the library, but that the trustees felt that allowing colored people to borrow books would not be in the "spirit of the citizens who organized the facility in 1937."

Library Is Told To Lend to All

The Loudoun County Board of Supervisors paved the way for integration of Virginia's last segregated library yesterday.

Board members ruled that the county library in Purcellville, challenged recently for its failure to lend books to Negroes, should be "conducted have the authority to grant the right to borrow books. The Board decided Feb. 21 to consult with the Supervisors and the Purcellville Town Council before making its decision.

Action by the Purcellville Council is expected March 12. A final decision by the library board of trustees is scheduled March 21.

Library Racial Test Due Today

Post + Times Herald

Mon. 3-4-57

Virginia's last completely segregated library service faces a major test today.

The Loudoun County Board of Supervisors will consider a complaint by a Negro citizen of Purcellville, 41-year-old Samuel C. Murray, that he cannot borrow books from the town library.

Washington D.C.

Only the library's board of trustees has the authority to grant the right to borrow books. However, the board decided Feb. 21 to consult with the supervisors and the Purcellville Town Council before making its decision.

The County pays two thirds of the library's $9000 yearly budget.

The issue of segregation came to a head after Murray's attorney, Oliver E. Stone of Washington, threatened legal action if his client was denied access to the library in the future.

Murray, an upholsterer, said he wanted to take out a book about French drapes — necessary to his business—but was turned down Jan. 10 by O. L. Emerick, board chairman. Murray noted that his own taxes help pay for the library.

Stone's letter set a Feb. 25 deadline for an answer, but he extended it to give the officials a chance "to work this thing out."

He said Virginia laws provide that state-supported libraries shall be available to all citizens. State aid to Purcellville's library this year is $1400.

Board Chairman Emerick said he knows about the laws and feels Murray probably qualifies. But, he added, to allow Murray to borrow books would be contrary to "practice." Purcellville's library, he added, is the only one in the state which does not have any arrangements for borrowing by Negroes.

The board, he added, has a feeling that the "wishes of the founders be considered." A final decision is expected at a board meeting March 21.

Purcellville's library was organized and built in 1937 with 55 per cent privately subscribed funds and 45 per cent Federal money. Prime mover in the founding was Mrs. C. L. Roby, wife of the Purcellville bank president.

Mrs. Roby is known around the town as "Mrs. Library." Her husband is currently a trustee of the library, but he would not comment on the segregation issue.

Other members also declined to say how they thought the March 21 vote will go.

"It can even be a question of closing the library," said Douglas N. Myers, a trustee for about three years.

J. T. Hirst, a Leesville lumber dealer and board member since the library's founding, said he has "an open mind."

"The South is not ready for integration," commented Karlton L. Monroe. He said he was not sure how he will vote.

S. Hawpe Adams feels "the state law must stand," but would not predict where the library goes from here.

Action by the Purcellville Town Council is expected March 12. Board members report the dispute is being taken calmly by community residents.

to comply with the law of the state of Virginia." Virginia law provides that state-supported libraries shall serve everyone.

A Board decision was sought by the 14-man Board of Trustees of the Purcellville Library.

Trustee Douglas N. Myers told the Supervisors the Library Board was not seeking the supervisors' views on segregation or integration of the library.

Instead, he asked the governing board for its reaction to a single question, "If the trustees should integrate the library, would that have any effect on the appropriations usually given the Purcellville Public Library by the county?"

Before taking a vote on the issue the Supervisors asked Commonwealth's Attorney Stirling M. Harrison for a legal opinion. The lawyer said, "If public funds are allocated to this library it must be operated on an integrated basis."

The County Board sidestepped the issue of whether it would continue to allot county funds to operate and maintain the library if it is integrated.

The challenge arose when a Negro upholsterer of Purcellville, 41-year-old Samuel C. Murray, attempted to borrow a book about French draperies and was turned down Jan. 10. Murray pointed out that his taxes helped support the library. Murray's attorney, Oliver E. Stone of Washington, threatened legal action if his client was denied access to the library in the future.

PURCELLEVILLE, Va. — "I am looking at the problem from a realistic standpoint. We are threatened with suit. Commonwealth's Attorney Sterling Harrison says we cannot use public funds without integration."

Thus spoke Oscar L. Emerick, chairman of the Purcelleville Library Board, as he placed before his colleagues on the board a resolution opening all of the library's services to all persons, regardless of race last week.

AFTER Mr. Emerick offered the resolution, making the library's services available to all Loudoun County residents, "irrespective of race or color," the board voted 7 to 5, with one trustee not voting, to adopt the measure.

The board was notified in February by Oliver B. Stone, Washington attorney, that he would file suit in behalf of a client who had been denied a book on orders of Mr. Emerick if the discriminatory policy was not ended.

Mr. Stone pointed out that his client, Samuel E. Murray, local upholsterer, had been refused a book at the library Jan. 10, being told it was not the library's policy to serve colored citizens.

MR. MURRAY said he went to the libary to borrow the book on French drapes to aid him in his business. Local lawyers turned him down, so he hired a Washington attorney when he decided to file suit.

Notified of the planned action, the library board sought guidance from both the Loudoun County Board of Supervisors and the Purcelleville Gown Council. Both said, in effect, that funds would be cut off if state law was not obeyed.

State law provides that any library receiving state aid must make its services "available to all persons living in the county, region or municipality." The library receives funds from the state, county and town.

Loudoun Library Opens To Negro, Averting Suit

Star Fri. 3-22-57 p.22-a

Washington, D.C.

PURCELLVILLE, Va., Mar. 22 (AP).—Services of the Purcellville Library have been made available to all Loudoun County residents "irrespective of race or color."

The library's board of trustees by a 7 to 5 vote yesterday opened the doors to Negroes and apparently stopped a threatened suit. One trustee did not vote.

The board was notified in February by a Washington attorney, Oliver B. Stone, that he intended to file suit in behalf of a Negro client who had been denied a book at the library.

Mr. Stone said the client, Samuel E. Murray, 42, a Purcellville upholsterer, was refused a book at the library January 10, and was told it was not the library's policy to serve Negroes.

Both the Purcellville Town Council and the Loudoun County Board of Supervisors were asked for guidance by the library's trustees. Both said, in effect, that appropriations would be cut off unless State law was obeyed.

The library receives funds from Purcellville, Loudoun County and the State. State law provides that any library receiving State aid must make its services "available to all persons living in the county, region or municipality."

In offering the resolution opening the library to all comers, Chairman Oscar L. Emerick said he had been looking "at the problem from a realistic standpoint. We are threatened with a suit. Commonwealth's Attorney Sterling Harrison says we cannot use public funds without integration."

Racial Seating To Be Argued

Evening Star Washington D.C.

Court Will Hear Librarian Case

Ines 9-3-57

STAUNTON, Va., Sept. 3 (AP).—Constitutionality of Virginia's law requiring racially segregated seating at public assemblies will be argued before the State Supreme Court of Appeals here tomorrow.

The seating case is the first on the brief docket for the court's September session.

Miss Faith Bissell, 43-year-old white librarian who lives in Arlington County, has challenged constitutionality of the law which provides for separation of whites and Negroes at public meetings.

She appealed a $15 fine imposed by the Arlington County Circuit Court, which upheld the State law after Miss Bissell had appealed a lower court conviction.

Sat Beside Negro

The librarian was arrested after taking a seat beside a Negro at a political meeting last November at the Thomas Jefferson Junior High School in Arlington.

In a written brief filed with the State appeals court, Edmund D. Campbell, counsel for Miss Bissell, contended the challenged law violates the right of peaceable assembly guaranteed in the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and the 14th Amendment ban against depriving a person's liberty without due process of law.

Mr. Campbell said the Federal Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court "is the supreme law of the land" and the Virginia appeals court "is bound thereby."

The question, he said, "is not whether we like the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, but only whether under the supremacy clause of the Federal Constitution they now constitute 'the law of the land.'"

State Law Defended

In asking confirmation of the Arlington Circuit Court judgment, the Commonwealth in its brief contends the State law "is not unconstitutional on its face; and that no other or broader question is presented in this case."

In upholding the trial court's $15 fine, Circuit Judge Emery N. Hosmer ruled the State has the right, under the 10th Amendment, to enforce the segregated seating law. He took occasion in his ruling to note that he recognized the Federal Constitution, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, is as binding on a State judge as on a Federal judge.

However, he said the Supreme Court has given no decision indicating that separation of races in a public meeting is unconstitutional so long as equal facilities are available.

White Baptists Contribute $40,000 To Ark. College

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 7-20-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (ANP) — Arkansas Baptist college here last week received $40,000 in contributions from the white Arkansas Baptist Convention, which announced it might contribute an additional $20,000. The convention estimated about $15,000 to $20,000 had beeen collected but not yet sent in to Baptist headquarters.

DRIVE FOR FUNDS P. 4

The $40,000 is part of a $100,000 drive for funds for the college. Several churches in the area are cooperating in the drive. They are expected to take up special collections to raise an additional $70,000.

Rev. Clyde Hart, director of Negro affairs of the convention, said the drives will get underway late this summer.

Last year the convention budgeted $20,000 for the college.

MANCHESTER, Conn. —Atlanta University, a graduate school in Atlanta, Ga., has been bequeathed a trust fund totaling about $140,000 by the daughter of the founder.

The will of Mrs. Gertrude Ware Bunce, of Manchester provided that the trust fund, left to her in 1955 by her husband, go to the Atlanta institution. B'ham Ala.

The bequest was announced here where the will was probated.

The late Mrs. Bunce was a former teacher at Atlanta University and was the daughter of the late Edmund Asa Ware who served as the institution's first president from 1869 to 1885. He is buried on the Atlanta University campus.

In addition to the trust fund, she left a personal estate of about 22,000 to various individuals and charities. The Manchester Trust Co. was named executor of the estate.

U.S. Steel Foundation Grants Educational Gifts To Over 600 Institutions

Register & Tribune Des Moines, Iowa
Thurs. 4-4-57

Philadelphia—All of the country's privately supported, fully accredited four-year Negro liberal arts colleges have been included in an educational grant announced by United States Steel Foudation, Inc. Forty-four Negro colleges will share in the overall appropriation of approximately $1,800,000 to be given to more than 600 institutions, including technological institutes and medical schools.

The Foundation's move includes a covering grant to the United Negro College Fund, to which substantial gifts have been made during each of the last several years, and $1,000 each to additional schools now now members of that college group. The grants, according to the Foundation, will constitute unrestricted operating aid so far as the liberal arts schools are concerned.

The covering grant made to the United Negro College Fund will be administered through its regularly established channels and formula as operational aid for the 31 member units averaging $1,000 each. Executives of the Fund have also been instrumental in guiding the U. S. Steel Foundation in the clearance of this year's precedent-setting aid for the 13 Negro colleges not members of the United Negro College Fund.

In addition to the Fund's 31 member clleges, the nine accredited four-year schools receiving aid include: Allen University, Columbia, S. C., Barber Scotia College, Concord, N. C., Claflin University, Orangeburg, S. C., Florida Normal and Industrial College, St. Augustine, Miles College, Birmingham, Ala., Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss., St Paul's Institute, Lawrenceville, Va., Stillman College, Tuskaloosa, Ala., and Jarvis Christian College, Hawkins, Texas. The four other institutions receiving aid indirectly through the Association of American Colleges include: Oakwood College, Huntsville, Ala., Paul Quinn College, Waco, Texas, Selma University, Selma, Ala., and Daniel Payne College.

Broad Scope

In announcing the broadened scope of U. S. Steel Foundation's aid to education, Roger M. Blough, chairman of the board of trustees of the Foundation said that the action of the trustees "represents an effort by this Foundation to extend aid in some form to almost every voluntarily-supported institution of higher learning which has clearly demonstrated both its desire and ability to help itself through the crisis presently facing higher education."

This year's grant by the U. S. Steel Foundation to the United Negro College Fund is in addition to a $100,000 capital gift made to the by all participants for immediate application to operational expenses. fund two years ago. The 1957 appropriation, therefore, may be used

United Negro College Fund Gets $35,000

Norfolk, Va. Journal & Guide Sat. 4-20-57

DETROIT —(INS) —General Motors Corp. this week announced a $35,000 grant to the United Negro College fund.

The announcement was made by Louis G. Seaton, GM vice president in charge of personnel and chairman of its Committee for Education Grants and Scholarships.

THE GM grant opens the 1957 nationwide drive by the United Negro College Fund, which provides financial aid to 31 colleges in 12 states. It brings to $135,000 the amount General Motors has given to the fund thus far.

The grant was made under GM's expanded program of support for higher education which is now in its third year.

BESIDES providing yearly grants to associations of colleges, the plan, when in full operation, will be aiding 1,600 outstanding young men and women each year studying under four-year scholarships in colleges of their choice.

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 4-20-57

DETROIT—A $35,000 General Motors gift to the United Negro College Fund was announced by Louis G. Seaton, GM vice president in charge of personnel and chairman of its committee for education grants and scholarships.

The GM grant comes at the beginning of the 1957 nation-wide drive by the UNCF, which provides financial aid to 31 colleges in 12 states. It brings to $135,000 the amount General Motors thus far has given to the fund.

"We recognize their needs and are pleased to support the United Negro College Fund," Mr. Seaton said. "We know that from the 23,000 students enrolled in its member colleges will come many of tomorrow's outstanding leaders."

Leonard N. Simons, partner in Simons-Michelson Co. and Michigan co-chairman of the fund, expressed appreciation for the gift.

"Through its program of support for higher education, General Motors is helping to mobilize the intellectual manpower of the future," he declared. "This grant will help member colleges meet annual operating expenses, give scholarship aid to promising students, increase teacher salaries and expand library and laboratory facilities."

11-Year-Olds Edit Paper For UNCF

NEW YORK — A little 4-page newspaper, price at 5 cents a copy, and put out by a group of 11-year-olds, reaped one of the happiest contributions to reach the United Negro College Fund's 14th annual appeal.

Not content with working on a plan to support foreign relief, Class 6-1 of Public School 99, the Bronx, voted also to "help people within our own borders." Their history lessons had made them aware of great Negro leaders and of the people of Montgomery, Ala. In their own way they felt it important that they help Negroes who are seeking achievement and enlightenment in the face of great odds. They thought the United Negro College

Fund was ideal for relaying their message.

Mrs. Edith Wilner, teacher of the class, suggested a newspaper that could be sold to other classes at P. S. 99. Thus, "Junior Journal" was born. It was dedicated to "all fighters for freedom." Poems, historical sketches, news stories, illustrations, questions and answers and interviews were included in the paper. "Junior Journal" was sold to students, parents and neighbors.

In her letter to the UNCF, with a $7.50 check, Mrs. Wilner wrote, "I wish you could have seen the enthusiasm and pride that shone from their faces when they counted the pennies, nickels and dimes. We hope the small sum we are enclosing will in some way help in your great undertaking."

NEW YORK — A salute to the United Negro College Fund will be telecast and broadcast over the ABC-TV and ABC Radio Networks Sunday afternoon, May 19, when a student from Bennett College will participate as a panel member of the "College News Conference" program.

The Conference, produced and moderated by Mrs. Ruth Hagy, in Washington, will be televised from 4:00 to 4:30 P. M. Eastern Daylight Time, and broadcast over the ABC Radio Network from 5:30 to 6:00 P. M. the same evening. Check newspapers for exact time of local radio re-broadcast.

Miss Gwendolyn Elaine Harris, a senior at Bennett, one of the Fund's 31 member colleges, joins four outstanding students from other American colleges and universities on the Conference panel. The students will interview the Hon. Walter Williams, Under Secretary of the Department of Commerce. With the President's Budget and the proposed "Right to Work" rider on the Civil Rights Bill high in the news, a lively discussion is anticipated.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Harris of Greensboro, N. C., Miss Harris majors in the social sciences and looks forward to a career in social work. She has been elected to Sigma Rho Sigma, honor society for the social sciences, and serves as secretary of the organization.

Miss Harris also serves as vice president of Bennett's International Relations Club and is active in the campus student center program.

On the day of the College News Conference, Sunday, May 19, the Bethune-Cookman College Choir will also be heard over the ABC Radio Network. The Choir's program will be dedicated to the school's founder to mark the second annual observance of "Mary McLeod Bethune Commemoration Week."

As one of the United Negro College Fund's regular weekly choir programs, the Bethune-Cookman Choir will be aired from New York City from 10:35 to 11:00 A. M., and heard at varying times over ABC radio stations throughout the nation. Consult newspaper radio pages for time of local broadcast.

Fri. 11-1-57

NEW YORK. — The Esso Education foundation has made a grant of $50,000 to the United Negro College fund for distribution to its 31 member institutions, it was announced last week by Dr. F. D. Patterson, college fund president.

"The grant represents a 100 per cent increase over the Esso foundation's 1956 contribution of $25,000," Dr. Patterson said. "Esso has been a supporter of the college fund since it was organized in 1944."

The $50.000 grant to the United Negro College fund was one of 345 financial grants totaling $1,332,760 the Esso Education foundation made to institutions of higher learning for the academic year 1957-1958. This brings the total grants made by the foundation in its three-year existence to more than $3,600.000.

The foundation was established in 1955 by Standard Oil company (New Jersey) and a group of domestic affiliates to assist privately supported college and universities in the United States. Contributors to the foundation, in addition to the Jersey company, are: Esso Standard Oil company, Esso Research and Engineering company, Esso Export corporation, Interstate Oil Pipe Line company and the Carter Oil company.

The grants represent an increase of 48 over the 297 made to educational institutions last year. The District of Columbia and 42 states which have private, accredited colleges are represented in the foundation's latest program. Non-denominational as well as Protestant, Catholic and Jewish-sponsored colleges are among the recipients.

The United Negro College fund is now conducting its 14th annual nation-wide appeal in behalf of its 31 privately supported, accredited member colleges and universities. The current campaign for funds to help meet the operating expenses of these institutions continues through Dec. 31.

Massachusetts Solon Says Failure To Use Negro Brain Bower May Spell Disaster In Coming Contest With Soviets For World Leadership

New York, May 17—Sen John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts presented his $500 Puluitzer Prize check to the United Negro College Fund in Boston, May 11.

The Democratic Senator won the Pulitzer biography award for his volume, "Profiles in Courage."

The check was accepted by Winthrop H. Churchill, chairman, and Mrs. Norris G. Davis, co-chairman of Boston's UNCF appeal. "This is one of the most important causes I know and I feel it a privilege to contribute to it," Senator Kennedy said in making the presentation.

"America's failure to exploit its Negro brain potential may spell the difference between keeping pace or falling behind Soviet education and technology," Senator Kennedy said in a public address earlier that week.

"The potential of the Negro in the scientific and technical field today is particularly marked. And this is an area where he can penetrate the more readily because the need is greater," the Senator told 600 at a Fund meeting in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Discussing "Current Challenges to American Colleges," Kennedy stated that although the recent Supreme Court decision would gradually open more integrated colleges for Negroes, the immediate need for better college training in America means "the Negro institutions need to be expanded to handle the flow of students knocking at their doors."

A highlight of the Boston meeting was a performance by Roland Hayes, internationally known tenor. Edward A. Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, served as chairman.

The United Negro College Fund is now conducting its 14th annual national campaign to aid 31 privately supported, fully accredited member colleges.

About The Negro Co

Defender 5-25-57

Chicago, Ill.

The United Negro College Fund is seeking to raise $2 million on a nation-wide basis and $150,000 in the Chicago area. This isn't too much of a donation to ask of the public considering the fact that the amount sought is to be apportioned to 31 member colleges. Those institutions have a total enrollment in excess of 23,000 students, 88 percent of whom live in the South.

One might ask why continue to support a segregated program of this sort in the face of daily emphasis on integration? The answer is that if the Negro colleges were allowed to fade out of existence, most of the students attending them now would have to discontinue their academic career for lack of financial means. It is the low tuition that makes it possible for Negro men and women to obtain the blessings of higher education.

The Negro is denied a fair slice of America's industrial offerings; his area of participation in the country's economic system is yet ruthlessly restricted. Southern oligarchy with its anti-racial bias has not deviated from its medieval course. Thus, until segregation is soundly defeated the Negro college will continue to have a mission in the educational life of the nation.

We believe that one of the best means of hastening the onset of the new social orientation is for Negro colleges to welcome white students. These institutions do not have to obey the South's unconstitutional segregated laws. They should therefore not hesitate to widen the circle of the racial composition of their student-body. It would be good educational statesmanship; a policy that may contribute mightily to the final dissolution of a decaying social system.

Generous Gift to Negro College Fund From South Africa

Bystander
Thurs. 7-25-57
Des Moines, Iowa

New York—One of the most generous contributions ever made to the United Negro College Fund has just been received, according to William J. Trent, Jr., executive director.

The gift amounts to $22.77. It represents a month's salary to the contributor.

The contributor is the Rev. Livingstone N. Nzimba, a minister in Alice, Cape Province, South Africa, whose parishioners earn two shillings (28c) a day.

Devoted Member

The Rev. Nzimba is an alumnus of Lincoln University—one of the Fund's member colleges—and he remembers his years there with affection. Lincoln remembers him with pride. The football team never had a better man play end. And he was a devoted member of the choir.

Livingstone Nzimba was born in South Africa in 1885, the son of Peter Mzimba, an African pastor. In 1902, Peter Nzimba sent Livingstone and six companions to Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, with the hope of creating an educated ministry for his people. These seven boys were graduated from the University in 1906; and from the Theological Seminary in 1909. That year they returned to South Africa and Mzimba became a rural pastor of the African Presbyterian Church.

Nearly 50 years later—in 1954—the Rev. Nzimba returned to the United States to help Lincoln University celebrate its centennial, and to receive an honorary D.D.

Dr. Mzimba's children have done well. One was the first African to graduate in medicine from the University of Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, before apartheid was adopted as policy. He is now a practicing physician in Capetown. Another son is a senior medical student. One daughter is a nurse; two are teachers.

"It is evident that Dr. Nzimba credits his American education for much of the success he and his family have achieved," Mr. Trent said. "For when he received a letter appealing to the alumni of our member colleges for contributions to the College Fund, Dr. Nzimba sent us a money order for ten pounds—$22.77—his monthly stipend."

The United Negro College Fund is conducting its 14th annual campaign to raise 10 per cent of the operating costs of its 31 privately supported, fully accredited member colleges and universities.

Not Enough Seats When Negro Southerners Spoke

The Call, Kansas City, Mo. P.1
Fri. 10-18-57

CHICAGO. — (ANP) — More than 2,000 applications for seats to hear "The Negro Southerner Speaks" program staged here Thursday night by the Chicago Women's committee of the United Negro College fund, had to be returned because the 3,000 seating capacity of Orchestra hall had already been reserved.

Sparking the program was a galaxy of current southern leaders who were queried by a panel of outstanding northern newspaper men who served as interrogators. These were buttressed by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who wrapped the program up with "A Report From The South."

The Southern leaders, each of whom gave a brief report on conditions in the South from his viewpoint included President Albert W. Dent of Dillard university at New Orleans, Dean Charles Gomillion of Tuskegee Institute, chairman of the Tuskegee Civic association, the organization which is the center of a struggle for voting rights in Alabama, and John H. Wheeler, president of the Mechanics and Farmer's bank of Durham, N. C., and an attorney who has argued school segregation cases in North Carolina courts.

Newsmen Ask Questions

The newspaper men who fired searching questions at the group included William Ray, NBC-WMAQ news director, noted for his quiz programs; Burt Meyers of Time magazine who had just returned from Little Rock where he did an outstanding job of news reporting, and Carl Rowan of the Minneapolis Tribune, whose recent books on conditions in the South and in India are well known. Robert Sargent Schriver Jr., president of the Chicago Board of Education and one of Chicago's leading business and civic leaders, served as chairman.

NBC's Bill Ray drew approving applause and laughter when he directed a question to Dr. Gomillion regarding the methods used to disfranchise a large segment of the citizenry of Tuskegee and Tuskegee Institute. Ray asked about the role of the Christian clergy in those practices with this query: "Have you heard from the ministers lately?"

Dr. Gomillion said one white minister had been in to discuss the matter. He thought conditions might get worse before they got better. Carl Rowan asked the panel of Southerners whether they wondered what the white Northerner was thinking in the present struggle.

Is Issue Southern Problem?

Dent replied that he had wondered, more six months ago than he did today, whether southerners considered segregation or desegregation a "southern problem." He realized that southern-paid propagandists had been bombarding the north with propaganda and thought some of it might have been effective. However, now "thanks to the antics of Faubus, the gravity of the situation in terms of world prestige has been brought into focus. Northerners are beginning to realize that the South is their back yard no matter where they live and must be put in order," he said.

Meyer of Time magazine asked Dent how he justified being president of Dillard university, a Negro college, in the light of the present struggle for desegregation. Dent told the audience that Dillard, like most of the other private Negro colleges in the South, was established in areas where Negroes were not allowed to go to white colleges. Dillard's charter has a clause which reads there shall be no discrimination because of race, religion or sex. The founders did not believe in segregation and this clause therefore was their protest against the practice.

Banker Wheeler pointed to the division in the South as recently shown in the governor's conference. Those states which hope to woo northern capital and industries show a far more favorable tendency than those of the deep, more rigid South, he thought.

Mrs. Walter Lowe and Mrs. Edward Carus were co-chairmen of the event. Their program comment showed that Chicago has contributed more than one-half million dollars through individuals, corporations and foundations during the past four years to the United Negro College Fund.

Rev. Martin Luther King summed up the program when he closed his report from the South with the words, "We have come a long way—and we still have a long way to go."

William J. Trent Jr., director of UNCF who came on from New York, declared the event a smashing success.

Masons, Labor Make Gifts To Negro College Fund

World B'ham Ala. Sat. 6-1-57 p. 5

NEW YORK — A Grand Lodge of the Masons and a Labor Union sent representatives to United Negro College Fund Headquarters last week to make formal presentations of their gifts to the 1957 Campaign.

John J. Nash, Right Worshipful Grand Treasurer of the Prince Hall Grand Lodge, F. and A. M. State of New York, presented a check for $500 to William J. Trent, Jr., UNCF executive director, in his office at 22 East 54th Street, New York City. Accompanying Mr. Nash to make the presentation were Dr. Richard H. Stitt, Senior Grand Warden of the Lodge; Edward S. Hill, vice chairman of the public rlations committee and Grand Director of Ceremonies; and Baxter F. Jackson, public relations committee member.

"During the past several years the Fund has been receiving increasing support from the Prince Hall Masons from jurisdictions all over the country. This is encouraging, for it indicates a concern on the part of this powerful fraternal organization for the education of Negro youth," Mr. Trent said.

Henry Rhodes Sr., is the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the Lodge and Aiton L. Haywood, Sr., Right Worshipful Grand Secretary.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS CONTRIBUTE

A contribution of $1,000 to the United Negro College Fund was unanimously voted by Local 3 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers following a presentation to the membership of the needs of the 31 member colleges of the Fund.

The check was given to Mr. Trent by Miss Muriel T. Hadley, of Local 3 on behalf of the union membership.

The current campaign is the 14th annual appeal conducted by the Fund to raise 10 per cent of the yearly operating costs of its privately supported, fully accredited colleges and universities. The 1957 goal is $2,000,000.

Esso Gives $50,000 To United College Fund

NEW YORK—The Esso Education Foundation has made a grant of $50,000 to the United Negro College Fund for distribution to its 31-member institutions, it was announced by Dr. F. D. Patterson, College Fund president.

"The grant represents a 100 per cent increase over the Esso Foundation's 1956 contribution of $25,000," Dr. Patterson said. "Esso has been a supporter of the College Fund since it was organized in 1944."

The $50,000 grant to the United Negro College Fund was one of 345 financial grants totaling $1,332,760 the Esso Education Foundation made to institutions of higher learning for the academic year 1957-1958. This brings the total grants made by the Foundation in its three-year existence to more than $3,600,000.

The Foundation was established in 1955 by Standard Oil Company (New Jersey) and a group of domestic affiliates to assist privately supported colleges and universities in the United States. Contributors to the Foundation, in addition to the Jersey company, are: Esso Standard Oil Company, Esso Research and Engineering Company, Esso Export Corporation, Interstate Oil Pipe Line Company and the Carter Oil Company.

The United Negro College Fund is now conducting its 14th annual nation-wide appeal. The current campaign for funds to help meet the operating expenses of these institutions continues through Dec. 31.

United College Fund Increased by Esso

NEW YORK—The Esso Education foundation has made a grant of $50,000 to the United Negro College Fund for distribution to its 31 member institutions, it was announced Oct. 26 by Dr. F. D. Patterson, College Fund president.

"The grant represents a 100 per cent increase over the Esso Foundation's 1956 contribution of $25 000," Dr. Patterson said. "Esso has been a supporter of the College fund since it was organized in 1944."

United Negro College Fund, Inc. was expected to get its biggest Pocketbook boost in Birmingham at the 1957 campaign culminating program set for this Friday night, Oct. 18 at the Sixth Avenue Baptist Church, pastored by the Rev. J. H. Goodgame, Jr.

Highlights of the meeting will be the speech by Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga. He will be introduced by Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute.

Music will consist of an organ prelude by Mrs. Gregory Durr White, head of the music department of Ullman High School; the No. 1 Choir of Sixth Avenue Baptist Church; the Talladega College Choral Group and the Tuskegee Institute Male Chorus.

Paul L. Ware, UNCF director will state the occasion; Mrs. A. G. Gaston will present awards; W. W. Whetstone, campaign co-chairman will make the appeal; Mrs. Bessie S. Estell will make acknowledgements and express appreciation and Dr. Goodgame will intone the benediction.

The campaign is targeted for $25,000 in the Jefferson County area. Mrs. Estell reiterated that she believes that the goal will be reached. Meanwhile she lavished praise on the campaign staff, the office force and the committees which "have worked so hard to help make this fund-raising drive a success."

A capacity audience is expected to hear Dr. Mays because of his bold, fresh, inspiring ideas. Native of Epworth, S. C. he has earned the triology of academic degrees awardable by the university. Honorary degrees have been bestowed upon him recognition of his services in the field of scholarly and civic action. He is a Phi Beta Kappa scholar.

Columnist for a national weekly he is the author of four books, many essays and guest editorials for newspapers. Since July 1, 1940 he has been president of Morehouse College. To Be Permanent, Patterson Says

RICHMOND — The Negro college will survive desegregation of its member institutions", Trent and become a permanent part of American Higher Education, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of the United Negro College Fund, Inc., said at an academic convocation at Virginia Union university.

Dr. Patterson said the Supreme court ruling outlawing segregation in public institutions has raised the queston of whether Negro colleges are still necessary. He advanced three reasons why "colleges for Negro youth must continue for sometime to come to provide the bulk of educational opportunities available to Negro youth beyond high school."

3 REASONS

He said the Negro institutions "are freely available to those who meet the academic qualifications", that the costs of attending these institutions are lower than in white institutions; and Negro colleges will be selected by the majority of Negro youth "for the moral social experience they will be able to offer."

"All the evidence indicates that educational integration will be a gradual process. In almost every community of any size there will be primary and secondary schools which will be integrated largely in name only. At the college level integration will move faster but even there it will be too often on a token basis because the quota system and a rigid enforcement of admission standards will deny many students admission even though they stand in the upper one-third of the one-fourth of their classes. . ." Dr. Patterson said.

PRODUCED LEADERS

Dr. Patterson said the Negro college has helped to produce the leadership which is taking its place in the forefront of African progress today.

He continued:

"I believe the Neero people have achieved, through their own institutions, the experience and the strength necessary to take integration in stride. The Negro church, like the Negro college, the Negro insurance company, and other businesses, came in to existence to meet a need not being adequately met otherwise.

"Their existence not only met the need which caused their creation, but also symbolized the determination of the Negro people to achieve for themselves the privileges of worship, education and other forms of expression which prejudice had denied them. To do this they had to combat two morally destructive and almost devastating assumptions:

"That their own institutions, because they were Negro, were inferior and the other was that the white institution, which excluded them were superior because they were white.

"Neither of these assumptions has proven true by standards of objective measurement. Some of both groups have been inferior and some have been superior. That the advantage, because of attending circumstances, has been on the side of the white institutions is both true and understandable. . ."

Dr. Patterson predicted that the Negro college would not only take its place as a pernament part of the American higher education but would "perform that role with distinction."

$450,000 Given To 31 Schools By College Fund

NEW YORK, — The United Negro College Fund distributed $450,000 to its 31 member colleges and universities last week according to W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director.

The allocation is the second distribution of money raised in the College Fund's 1957 appeal. It brings the total amount received this year by the participating colleges to $1,395,388. Final grants will be made after the official closing of the 1957 campaign Dec. 31.

"SINCE IT WAS established in 1944, the College Fund has annually raised approximately 10 per cent of the combined operating budgets of its member institutions," Mr. Trent said. "The unrestricted nature of Fund grants has increased their usefulness tremendously. They may be used to meet any current need, from engaging a Ph.D. to repairing a boiler."

During the current year, UNCF allocations will be used principally to provide scholarship and work aid for exceptional students who could not otherwise continue their education; to increase faculty salaries thus retaining valuable faculty members and to purchase laboratory and classroom esuipment.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE RECEIVES UNCF ALLOCATION

In the recent distribution of $450,000 by the United Negro College Fund, Tuskegee Institute received $32,236.25, Dr. L. H. Foster, President of Tuskegee Institute announced.

This amount is the second allocation to Tuskegee Institute from contributions to the College Fund's nation-wide 1957 Campaign, making a total of $54,407.62 received to date.

Mr. W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, states that a final grant will be made after the closing of the 1957 appeal December 31. He indicated that the recent distribution brings the total sum for the current year to $1,395,388.

This important financial support to the member colleges confirms the faith of a growing number of people in America and citizens dispersed in many foreign countries, in the private college as a citadel of democracy.

Dr. Foster said, "The financial aid received each year from the UNCF bridges the gap between the institute's total needs and that amount covered by income from endowment, tuition and recurring grants."

He said that during the current year, UNCF allocations have been used principally to provide scholarship and work-aid for exceptional students who otherwise would not be able to continue their education.

The recent public effort to reach our local goal fell short by several hundred dollars. Contributions are urgently needed before December 31, to bring our total contributions up to normal. Please contribute.

YULETIDE COMES TO THE LIBRARY

We say Christmas is for the children; however, old and young look forward to the fine festive foods and all the wonderful decorations that herald the holiday season. No yuletide festivities would be complete without Christmas holly, greenry and holiday flowers.

On the invitation of Mrs. Frances Davis of the Library, the Catering Class 431, under the supervision of their instructor, Mr. Ernest E. Gibson, assisted by Mrs. Juanita C. Jones, has centered the yuletide tables around a beautiful pink tree.

The members of the class in Catering 431 are: Julia Cummings, Freddie Key, Mary Sibert, Eldon Jones, Albillie Smith, Martha Williams, Ernest Jones, Sam Frank Reuben, Leon Thomas Mims, Carl Douglass, Willie Taylor, Ester Johnson, Virginia Chappelle, Charles Willis, Louise Benton, Ernest White and Mitchell Parks.

Mr. Hicks, the school florist, has arranged a table of beautiful suggestions for yuletide centerpieces. Visit the display on the second floor of the Library.

Dear Dr. Selby:

One of the nicest chores I have to perform is to write chairmen in our campaign cities who have achieved, or nearly so, their goal. I know what it involves in a successful campaign. We know the amount of time it takes; we know the concern that the leader must have; we know the hard work of inspiring others to give; we know there are so many competing interests. It is so important to us to find out that there are outstanding men and women in the United States who care about the cause which is represented by the United Negro College Fund.

DR. E. A. SELBY

To you and your co-workers—our congratulations again for a job well done. You have been economical in your expenditures, you have been persistent in your efforts and you have again put Nashville over.

I hope that throughout your life whenever you see a student or graduate of one of the thirty-one colleges you will say to yourself, "I had something to do with the preparation of this young man or woman." Your generosity and influence in the hard work of your campaign colleagues will live for a long time in the lives of the people so helped.

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely,

/s/ W. J. Trent, Jr.

W. J. Trent, Jr.

As chairman for the past three years of the Fisk University Chapter of the United Negro College Fund in Nashville, Dr. Selby has proven again and again the wisdom of using a busy man to get a job well done. Outside of his regular job as Secretary-Treasurer of the AME Sunday School Union, this up-standing AME finds time to function as a member of the very important and influential Nashville Transit Authority. This commission is the regulatory body for bus transportation in the city of Nashville and Davidson County. After serving a full three-year term, Dr. Selby was appointed again for five years by the Honorable Ben West, Mayor of the city of Nashville.

UNCF Allocates $450,000 To Member Schools

NEW YORK CITY, — (ANP) — The United Negro College fund on Friday distributed $450,000 to its 31 member colleges and universities according to W. J. Trent Jr., fund executive director.

The allocation was the second distribution of money raised in the college fund's 1957 appeal. It brings the total amount received this year by the participating colleges to $1,395,388. Final grants will be made after the official closing of the 1957 campaign Dec. 31.

"Since it was established in 1944, the college fund has annually raised approximately 10 per cent of the combined operating budgets o

COLLEGE FUND HEAD SAYS NEGRO SCHOOL WILL SURVIVE

Richmond, Va. (ANP) — The Negro college will survive desegregation and become a permanent part of American higher education, Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of the United Negro College Fund, Inc., said at an academic convocation at Virginia Union University.

Dr. Patterson said the Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in public institutions has raised the question of whether Negro colleges are still necessary. He advanced three reasons why "colleges for Negro youth must continue for some tim eto come to provide the bulk of educational opportunities available to Negro youth beyond high school."

He said the Negro institutions "are freely available to those who meet the academic qualifications;" that the costs of attending these institutions are lower than in white institutions; and Negro colleges will be selected by the majority of Negro youth "for the moral social experience they will be able to offer."

"All the evidence indicates that educational integration will be a gradual process. In almost every community of any size, there will be primary and secondary schools which will be integrated largely in name only. At the college level, integration will move faster, but even there, it will be too often on a token basis because the quota system and a rigid enforcement of admission standards will deny many students admission even though they stand in the upper one-third of the one-fourth of their class. . . . ", Dr. Patterson said.

Dr. Patterson said the Negro college has helped to produce the leadership which is taking its place in the forefront of African progress today.

its member institutions," Trent said. "The unrestricted nature of fund grants has increased their usefulness tremendously. They may be used to meet any current need, from engaging a Ph.D. to repairing a boiler."

Four N. C. Colleges Get Financial Aid From UNCF

NEW YORK — Four North Carolina colleges received substantial checks last week from The United Negro College Fund, according to W. J. Trent Jr., executive director of the fund. Getting the aid was Shaw University, Johnston C. Smith University, St. Augustine's College and Livingstone College.

In all the UNCF distributed some $450,000 to its 31 member colleges. The North Carolina colleges received approximately a combined amount of approximately $50,000.

JOHNSON C. Smith University received $14,193.51 from the Fund according to Dr. R. P. Perry, president of the college.

Livingstone College in Salisbury, N. C. received $12,530.76 and St. Augustine's College in Raleigh got $11,135. The other North Carolina college, Shaw University, recieved $10,539.50 from the Fund.

DURING THE current year, UNCF allocations have been used principally to provide scholarship and work aid for exceptional students who otherwise would not be able to continue their education; to purchase laboratory and classroom equipment, to give summer school aid to faculty members. to make necessary repairs to campus buildings, and provide annual increases in faculty and staff salaries at the colleges.

Lee H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Company, is national chairman of the current campaign. Stanley C. Hope, president, Esso Standard Oil Company; William T. Gossett, vice president, Ford Motor Company; and James E. Stamps, regional director, Social Security Administration, are vice chairmen.

The 1957 campaign is being conducted in 118 cities and towns throughout the country, including the communities where the 31 colleges are located.

UNCF Receives $75,000 From Education Board

Norfolk, Va.

NEW YORK — The United Negro College Fund has received a grant of $75,000 from the General Education Board to open new campaign territory during the next three years, W. J. Trent Jr., Fund executive director, announced this week. P.3

Thirty of the fund's 31 member colleges and universities are located in the South. "With requirements raised by the Southern Education Association, the Fund must secure increased support to enable its member institutions to maintain their accreditation," Trent said. "This can best be accomplished by broadening the Fund's base of support through the establishment of campaign procedures in hitherto uncanvassed areas.

"THE FUND has been fortunate in finding venture capital whenever it has been needed. The money which enabled the Fund to get started in 1944 came from the General Education Board and the Rosnewald Fund. The Board and the Carnegie Corporation made it possible to undertake a capital funds appeal for the colleges in 1951. The Ford Foundation enabled the Fund to establish consultation services on academic programming and administrative procedures in 1952."

Since its inception, the Fund annually provides an average of 10 per cent of the yearly operating costs of the member schools. "In the case of some of the smaller colleges this aid amounts to 20 per cent," Trent said. "Without this support it is questionable whether many of the colleges would have been able to meet the requirements for accreditation."

THE FUND is now conducting its 14th annual appeal in 100 campaign cities located within four geographical regions across the country. Lee H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., is national campaign chairman of the 1957 appeal for $2,000,000.

UNCF Asking $2 Million In '57 Drive

Help Finance 31 Colleges

Defender Sat. 4-13-57

Sat. 4-13-57

NEW YORK — The United Negro College Fund is going to the American people in 1957 for $2 million to help finance the current operations of 31 private, accredited member colleges. The following factors, singly or in combination, are significant:

P. 18

As an integral part of the higher education system of America, these colleges, with $60 million invested in plants and equipment, will help serve the rising number of students who will be knocking at the doors of colleges in the immediate future.

These colleges help America realize her dream of equal opportunity to all, irrespective of race. With 30 of the 31 member institutions located in the South, they provide readily available, accredited colleges in the region where they are most needed. Seventy-three per cent of college-age Negroes live in the South — and 80 per cent of all American students go to college in their own home states.

America believes in the pluralistic free enterprise system. Free, untrammeled, privately supported educational institutions are necessary to the maintenance of a free enterprise system. Private schools enrich the whole educational system and break new ground in educational thinking.

The 31 private Negro colleges are playing an important role in the changing educational scene in the South. Their campuses are often the only meeting places where white and Negro citizens come together for free discussion. Their interracial faculties and resources have been utilized time and time again to help solve pressing problems. The student bodies are, in some small way, showing that desegregation in higher education can work —and that it is a two-way street.

Newer and greater opportunities are opening up for Negroes in industry, business, government and the professions. With deep concern for the full development of the student, these 31 colleges are preparing young Negro men and women to meet these opportunities.

America calls incrasingly upon the graduates of the United Negro Colleges to serve American interests abroad in privately sponsored and government sponsored projects. In the Middle East, Far East, India and Africa, these graduates are proving invaluable in their work with other colored peoples of the world. During the current year:

1. A Tuskegee graduate heads a rural improvement program in Iran; another Tuskegee alumnus heads a similar program in India;
2. A Hampton graduate serves as consultant on home economics in India;
3. A Fisk graduate directs an American education commission in Thailand;
4. A Knoxville graduate, with a masters degree from Fisk, is Assistant to the President of the Philippines, in charge of the country's rural community program.

New York State Assembly Woman Chairs College Fund Division

Chicago Defender

Des Moines Sun

New York—All the charm and talent of Mrs. Bessie Buchanan, first Negro woman member of the New York State Legislature, will be directed toward the United Negro College Fund as she assumes chairmanship of the Uptown Division of UNCF. The announcement of her appointment was made by Lee Hastings Bristol, national chairman of this year's campaign.

Chron. 4-4-57

A native New Yorker, Mrs. Buchanan is an alumnus of the dramatis and musical comedy stage of the twenties. Since her marriage 25 years ago to Charles Buchanan, managing director of the famed Savoy Ballroom, she has given full-time attention to civic and welfare activities. She is presently on the board of directors of Forest House and vice president of the Lemuel Philanthropic League.

Her First Time

Mrs. Buchanan's election as Assemblywoman marked the first time she had ever sought public office.

As chairman of the Uptown Division of UNCF, she succeeds Mrs. Louise Morris, well-known school teacher and volunteer civic leader, who served successfully as chairman for the past five years. Mrs. Morris, who will continue as an actie volunteer, was responsible for raising $106,176 for the Fund between 1952 and 1956.

The Uptown Division is one of 100 volunteer groups throughout the nation who hope to raise $2,000,000 in the 1957 campaign. The United Negro College Fund aids 31 private, accredited colleges and universities with a total enrollment of 23,000 students.

INSTITUTE TO SHARE IN GIFT FROM GM

$35,000 General Motors giftto the United Negro College Fund was announced this week by Louis G. Seaton, GM vice president in charge of personnel and chairman of its committee for education grants and scholarships.

Tuskegee Institute will receive its proportionate share of the fift as one of the colleges benefiting from the Fund.

The GM grant comes at the beginning of the 1957 nationwide drive by the United Negro College Fund which provides financial aid to 31 Negro colleges in 12 states. It brings to $135,000 the amount General Motors thus far has given to the Fund.

Leonard N. Simons, Michigan co-chairman of the Fund, expressed appreciation for the gift and termed it "the largest individual grant received from any corporation in the country."

"Through its program of support for higher education, General Motors is helping to mobilize the intellectual manpower of the future," he declared. "This grant will help member colleges meet annual operating expenses, give scholarship aid to promising students, increase teacher salaries and expand library and laboratory facilities."

The United Negro College Fund

Defender p.16

Aside from the training dispensed to Negro youth, Negro colleges render a rather unique service to America as a whole. They supply needed technicians to the ever increasing industrial demand and furnish specialists who are carrying today the intriguing gospel of America's mechanical genius and industrial skill and know-how to the far flung outposts of the free world, through the State Department overseas service.

Chicago, Ill.

These colleges, limited as they are in financial resources, in equipment and manpower, manage somehow to meet the rigid scholastic requirements set down by exacting accrediting agencies. Their graduate and post graduate students are performing in their fields of concentration at the high academic level expected of them.

Date 5-4-57

This speaks well not only for Negro-administered colleges, but also for the American system of free enterprise which makes it possible for such institutions to exist through foundations, grants and individual gifts. Unfortunately these awards and personal donations are never large enough to meet the continuing budgetary needs of these institutions. Hence, the necessity for the existence of the United Negro College Fund which makes an annual appeal for contributions to be shared by 31 privately supported colleges.

Since these colleges, in the main, draw their students from the lowest income groups in America, tuition, board and room fees are, by necessity, kept to a bare minimum. But for this consideration, nearly nine-tenths of those who are receiving college training would either be wards of their states swelling the relief rolls or would be in the ranks of the brooding army of menial workers. Thus Negro colleges cannot possibly maintain themselves out of the meager income from student fees. Therefore, they need the generous support of all those who believe in the fundamental ideals of our present day society and who cherish the principle of equal opportunity for all as an inherent constituent of our great American heritage.

Let us remember that in a democracy such as ours, the more enlightened the citizenry, the greater the chances for perpetuating the noble concept upon which rests our form of government. Let us therefore give, and give without stint, to the United Negro college fund which is helping to hold high the glorious banner of democracy before a doubting world.

NEW YORK — Sen. John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts presented his $500 Pulitzer Prize check to the United Negro College Fund in Boston, May 11.

The Democratic Senator won the Pulitzer biography award for his volume, "Profiles in Courage."

The check was accepted by Winthrop H. Churchill, chairman, and Mrs. Norris G. Davis, co-chairman of Boston's UNCF appeal. "This is one of the most important causes I know and I feel it a privilege to contribute to it," Senator Kennedy said in making the presentation.

"America's failure to exploit its Negro brain potential may spell the difference between keeping pace or falling behind Soviet education and technology." Senator Kennedy said in a public address earlier that week.

NOTE POTENTIAL

"The potential of the Negro in the scientific and technical field today is particularly marked. And this is an area where he can penetrate the more readily because the need is greater," the Senator told 600 at a Fund meeting in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Discussing "Current Challenges to American Colleges," Kennedy stated that although the recent Supreme Court decision would gradually open more integrated colleges for Negroes, the immediate need for better college training in America means "the Negro institutions need to be expanded to handle the flow of students knocking at their doors."

A highlight of the Boston meeting was a performance by Roland Hayes, internationally known tenor.

Edward A. Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, served as chairman.

The United Negro College Fund is now conducting its 14th annual national campaign to aid 31 privately supported, fully accredited member colleges.

New York — Entertainer Harry Belafonte has accepted the vice-chairmanship of New York City's Uptown Division for the United Negro College Fund Campaign, Lee H. Bristol president of Bristol-Myers Co., and Fund national campaign chairman, announced. Mr. Belafonte will serve with Mrs. Bessie Buchanan, New York State Assemblywoman, who chairs the division.

"Mr. Belafonte's interest in the United Negro College Fund is typical of his concern with the heritage of our country and the progress of our people," Mrs. Buchanan said.

Born in New York City, Mr. Belafone moved with his family to Jamaica, BWI while a young boy. He returned to New York to attend George Washington High School. In 1944 he joined the U. S. Navy for a two-year tour of duty.

A dedicated artist, Mr. Belafonte has come forward during the past year as the musical historian of the times. His Eminence Cardinal Stritch of Chicago has called Mr. Belafonte one of America's most important artists and, as a Negro, the most important.

The United Negro College Fund campaign is now under way in 100 cities and college communities throughout the country. The 1957 goal is $2,000,000 to meet the current operating costs of the Fund's member colleges and universities.

BUFFALO FIRST OVER THE TOP IN 1957 UNCF CAMPAIGN

Jackson, Miss.

New York, May 3 — Buffalo is the first city to report "over the top" in the 1957 United Negro College Fund Campaign, Lee H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., and national campaign chairman announced today.

Volunteer workers reported 102.6 per cent of Buffalo's share of the $2,000,000 national goal, at their victory dinner, April 30.

The convocation of UNCF's 31 college presidents, held in Buffalo in March, helped alert local citizens, business and industry to the importance of the appeal, according to LeGrand F. Kirk, Buffalo attorney, who heads the Fund's Western New York Committee. "This is the first time Buffalo could announce that its goal had been reached at the final dinner," Mr. Kirk said. "And there is more to come."

An extensive publicity program also served to bring the Buffalo campaign to a successful conclusion on schedule.

Headed by Miss Elloeen Del. Oughterson, Buffalo's volunteer publicity committee obtained extensive airtime on radio and TV; spectacular outdoor poster boards; and excellent newspaper coverage. "The publicity program resulted in more than financial returns," Mr. Kirk said. "Through these channels of communications we told the Fund's story and imbued many people with the philosophy and the spirit of the United Negro Colleges."

This year's campaign, conducted in 100 cities and college communities throughout the country, marks the Fund's 14th annual appeal for the support of its member colleges and universities.

NEGRO COLLEGE FUND

New York Post 4-6-57

For more than 100 years the member colleges of the United Negro College Fund, Inc., have been a major source of Negro leadership in this country. Today, with 23,000 students, they are still providing the bulk of trained Negro personnel. Although the United Negro Colleges keep tuition and board and room fees to a minimum, more than 75 per cent of their students depend upon scholarship or work aid provided by the colleges.

The faculties of these colleges have long been interracial. With the entrance doors now open to all qualified students, the student bodies of the colleges are, in their own way, showing that desegregation in higher education can work in the South—that it is a two-way street. The campuses of these colleges are meeting places where men of goodwill—Negro and white—can meet to discuss their common problems.

With its great educational and sociological background, the fund has embarked upon its fourteenth annual money-raising campaign to support its work. This year's goal is $2,000,000, to provide 10 per cent of the operating costs of its thirty-one member colleges and universities. The drive will continue through June 15. Contributions for this most deserving campaign should be sent to the United Negro College Fund, Inc., 22 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York 22.

CASE FOR THE 1957 CAMPAIGN

United Negro College Fund

The United Negro College Fund is going to the American people in 1957 for $2 million to help finance the current operations of 31 private, accredited member colleges. The following factors, singly or in combination, are significant:

1. As an integral part of the higher education system of America, these colleges, with $60 million invested in plants and equipment, will help serve the rising number of students who will be knocking at the doors of colleges in the immediate future.

2. These colleges help America realize her dream of equal opportunity to all irrespective of race. With 30 of the 31 member institutions located in the South, they provide readily available, accredited colleges in the region where they are most needed. Seventy-three per cent of college-age Negroes live in the South—and 80 per cent of all American students go to college in their own home states.

3. America believes in the pluralistic free enterprise system. Free, untrammeled, privately supported educational institutions are necessary to the maintenance of a free enterprise system. Private schools enrich the whole educational system and break new ground in educational thinking.

4. The 31 private Negro colleges are playing an important role in the changing educational scene in the South. Their campuses are often the only meeting places where white and Negro citizens come together for free discussion. Their interracial faculties and resources have been utilized time and time again to help solve pressing problems. The student bodies are, in some small way, showing that desegregation in higher education can work—and that it is a two-way street.

5. Newer and greater opportunities are opening up for Negroes in industry, business, government and the professions. With deep concern for the full development of the student, these 31 colleges are preparing young Negro men and women to meet these opportunities.

6. America calls increasingly upon the graduates of the United Negro Colleges to serve American interests abroad in privately sponsored and government sponsored projects. In the Middle East, Far East, India and Africa, these graduates are proving invaluable in their work with other colored peoples of the world. During the current year:

*A Tuskegee graduate heads a rural improvement program in Iran; another Tuskegee alumnus heads a similar program in India;

*A Hampton graduate serves as consultant on home economics in India;

*A Fisk graduate directs an American education commission in Thailand;

*A Knoxville graduate, with a masters-degree from Fisk, is Assistant to the President of the Philippines, in charge of the country's rural community program.

Drs. Graham, Mays To Speak For UNCF In Buffalo, N. Y.

New York,—United Nations mediator, the Hon. Frank P. Graham, and Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College, will be guest speakers at the public meet- of the United Negro College Fund's annual convocation in Buffalo, March 17, 8:30 P. M., in the Kleinhans Music Hall, it was announced here today by Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, Fund president. Mr. Graham will speak on "The United Nations and the Atomic Age."

Heading the convocation committee as honorary chairman is the mayor of Buffalo, the Hon. Steven Pankow. George A. Newbury, president, Manufacturers and Traders Bank of Buffalo, is chairman. All the presidents of the 31 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund will attend the convocation. It is the first visit of the entire presidential group to the City of Buffalo.

The public meeting will conclude a three-day convocation, during which the college presidents will occupy local church pulpits on Sunday morning. As members of the board of directors of the United Negro College Fund they will attend the Fund's annual meeting to be held for the first time in Buffalo.

The Universities of Buffalo, Syracuse and Rochester, and other university institutions in the western New York area will be hosts at a luncheon in honor of the 31 Negro college presidents, on Saturday. A reception is planned for that evening in the Hotel Statler.

Fifteen of the 31 United Negro Colleges are represented by alumni in the Buffalo area. They are members of an inter-alumni council headed by Mrs. Josephine Holmes, a graduate of Talladega.

The United Negro College Fund is an association of 31 leading private, independent Ngro Collges which make an annual united appeal for funds. All but one of the 31 colleges are located in the South. They have a combined enrollment of 23,000 students.

Frank P. Graham was appointed United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan in 1951. He is currently engaged in mediating the Kashmir question. A former Senator from North Carolina, he served as president of the University of North Carolina for 19 years.

Prior to his appointment to the United Nations, Mr. Graham was Defense Manpower Administrator in the U. S. Department of Labor; president of the National Association of State Universites and U. S. Representative on the U. N. Committee of Good Offices in the Dutch-Indonesian Dispute.

Dr. Beniamin E. Mays, formerly dean of the School of Religion at Howard University, Washington, D. C., has been president of Morehouse since 1940. He is a former vice president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. In 1950 he was named "Alumnus of the Year" by the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, from which he received his Ph. D. in 1935. Dr. Mays holds honorary degrees from six universities, and is a member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches.

Negro Colleges Seek $2 Million

The United Negro College Fund will seek contributions of $2 million this spring, to pay part of the operating expenses of its 31 member colleges and universities. This was announced today at the opening of the Fund's 14th annual campaign.

Addressing an open meeting today at the Waldorf-Astoria, Louis B. Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, declared it was "urgent that the Negro colleges, as well as other privately endowed colleges, get the maximum support from the people who have the money.

In announcing the campaign, which will run through June 15, Lee H. Bristol, UNCF chairman said: "For more than 100 years, the member colleges of the UNCF have been the major source of Negro leadership in this country. Today, with 23,000 students, they are still providing the bulk of trained Negro personnel."

Mr. Bristol pointed out that all but one of the member colleges are located in the South where 73 percent of college age Negroes live.

Contributions to the 1957 campaign may be sent to UNCF headquarters, 22 E. 54th St.

UNCF Creates Corporate Committee For 1957 Fund-Raising Appeal

Jackson, Miss.
Sat. 4-27-57

NEW YORK, Apr. 19. — The United Negro College Fund has adopted a new technique for fund raising within the framework of its 1957 appeal, according to William J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director.

"For the first time in its 14-year history, the Fund has organized a special committee in New York City for the solicitation of a select list of corporations throughout the nation," Mr. Trent said.

Dr. Lindsley F. Kimball, vice president of the Rockefeller Foundation, has been appointed chairman of this Corporation Gifts Committee by Lee H. Bristol, the Fund's national campaign chairman. Mr. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., will also serve as a member of the committee. The other members are:

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., honorary chairman of General Motors Corp.; John M. Budinger, vice president, Bankers Trust Co.; Ray D. Murphy, chairman, Equitable Life Assurance Society; John W. Hanes, chairman, finance committee, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp.; Samuel D. Leidesdorf, senior partner, S. D. Leidesdorf & Co.

Also, Stanley C. Hope, president, Esso-Standard Oil Corp.; C. J. Jackson, vice president, Time, Inc.; Devereux C. Josephs, chairman, New York Life Insurance Co.; and Thomas A. Morgan, director, U. S. Industries, Inc. Mr. Morgan serves as chairman of the board of directors of the United Negro College Fund.

$35,000 Given To UNCF Drive By Motor Firm

11-Year-Olds Edit Paper For UNCF

Daily Herald Thurs. 4-18-57
Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — A little 4-page newspaper, price at 5 cents a copy, and put out by a group of 11-year-olds, reaped one of the happiest contributions to reach the United Negro College Fund's 14th annual appeal.

Not content with working on a plan to support foreign relief, Class 6-1 of Public School 99, the Bronx, voted also to "help people within our own borders." Their history lessons had made them aware of great Negro leaders and of the people of Montgomery, Ala. In their own way they felt it important that they help Negroes who are seeking achievement and enlightenment in the face of great odds. They thought the United Negro College Fund was ideal for relaying their message.

Mrs. Edith Wilner, teacher of the class, suggested a newspaper that could be sold to other classes at P. S. 99. Thus, "Junior Journal" was born. It was dedicated to "all fighters for freedom." Poems, historical sketches, news stories, illustrations, questions and answers and interviews were included in the paper. "Junior Journal" was sold to students, parents and neighbors.

In her letter to the UNCF, with a $7.50 check, Mrs. Wilner wrote, "I wish you could have seen the enthusiasm and pride that shone from their faces when they counted the pennies, nickels and dimes. We hope the small sum we are enclosing will in some way help in your great undertaking."

Says Reduction Of Negro Colleges Would Be Calamity

Kansas City, Missouri

WASHINGTON, D. C. (ANP) — Contending that overcrowding in colleges demands that all colleges be kept operating at their top capacity, the assistant superintendent of District public schools here said last week that "a reduction in the number of Negro colleges would be a calamity."

The speaker was Carl F. Hansen who addressed a United Negro College fund meeting here in the Plymouth Congregational church and emphasized the fact that many "so-called Negro colleges are not segregated."

Hansen stated that he was against segregated colleges, but said that "there is still a need for support of Negro colleges under today's conditions."

Alumni Group Plans Dinner For UNCF

Chicago, Ill.

The Chicago Inter-Alumni council has scheduled a $25-a-plate dinner in the Morrison hotel's Grand ballroom on June 14 to help raise funds for the 1957 campaign of the United Negro College Fund.

The goal for the Chicago alumni is $15,000. Dr. A. W. Dent, president of Dillard university, New Orleans, was guest speaker at a meeting last Sunday, initiating the drive.

Ten colleges registered in the kick-off meeting: Bishop college, $155; Tuskegee, $110; Talladega, $100. Hampton, $100; Dillard, $100; Fisk, $100; Paine, $55; Spelman, $50, and Texas college, $25.

Presidents of the member colleges of the UNCF will join other national figures at the banquet.

Atty. George W. Moore, president of the alumni council, is seeking the support of all college alumni in the area. Mrs. Claire L. McIntyre is chairman of the dinner.

UNCF RECEIVES CHECK — Dr. Benjamin Brawley, president of Clark University, accepts a check from Mrs. Mary E. Buffalo Is First "Over The Top" In Raising United Negro College Funds

Bluefield Independent
Jue. 5-10-57 P.1

New York, May 3—Buffalo is the first city to report "over the top" in the 1957 United Negro College Fund Campaign, Leo H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., and national campaign chairman announced today.

Mackville, Tenn.

Volunteers workers reported 102.6 per cent of Buffalo's share of the $2,000,000 national goal, at their victory dinner, April 30.

The convocation of UNCF's 31 college presidents, held in Buffalo in March, helped alert local citizens, business and industry to the importance of the appeal, according to LeGrand F. Kirk, Buffalo attorney, who heads the Fund's Western New York Committee. "This is the first time Buffalo could announce that its goal had been reached at the final dinner," Mr. Kirk said. "And there is more to come."

An extensive publicity program also served to bring the Buffalo campaign to a successful conclusion on schedule.

Headed by Miss Elloeen Del. Oughterson, Buffalo's volunteer publicity committee obtained extensive airtime on radio and TV; spectacular outdoor poster boards; and excellent newspaper coverage.

"The publicity program resulted in more than financial returns," Mr. Kirk said. "Through these channels of communication we told the Fund's story and imbued many people with the philosophy and the spirit of the United Negro Colleses."

This year's campaign, conducted in 100 cities and college communities throughout the country, marks the Fund's 14th annual appeal for the support of its member colleges and universities.

The fund was founded by Dr. F. D. Patterson, former president of Tuskegee Institute. Dr. Patterson, who now heads the Phelp-Stokes Fund, serves as UNCF president. W. J. Trent, Jr., is the Fund's executive director.

Atlanta Ga. P. 4

It was the supreme challenge of the freedom of speech, with that same freedom attending academic precision in a free interpretation of the text book as relates to a free world.

The independence of the private college and the freedom of its faculty to express in the light of its conscience such reactions as might be consistent with the will are basic American essentials that must survive if a free people are to have access to a free range in private thinking and public teaching.

The United Negro College Fund is no stranger in these parts. For years it has represented among us that pool of those funds, from foundations, corporations and private individuals, meant for a more wholesome program of soliciting and a more equitable division of funds for deserving institutions.

The colleges within our ranks have shared from this fund in a large way. They have been able to make needed expansions as well as the granting of scholarships for students and teachers in order that the work of the independent college might not suffer for the want of funds.

The independent college has a special mission in this period of an educational and social transition. This nation and government need just now that academic freedom and the liberties to implement it on the part of strong school-men, that the grand principles upon which this government might survive.

Let every hand come up on deck and give a long pull and a strong pull in behalf of the United Negro College Fund in order that the last lamp of a bold faith might keep burning upon the pathway of a free people and a free world.

SPRING ELECTIONS

Spring elections at Tuskegee Institute get underway Thursday, April 4, with five candidates named to seek the coveted role--"MISS TUSKEGEE for 1957-58.

There will be other elections of class officers, student organizations and student publications. However, none will approach the enthusiasm which the campaign to elect "MISS TUSKEGEE" will engender, if past elections can be taken as criteria.

Equally as important as winning an election is winning the honor and respect of one's fellow students by following through on the rules of the campaign. Spring elections offer training in one of the most important aspects of student life. We know that each of you will line up behind his favorite candidate and help get out the vote.

Campaigning will be confined to two weeks--April 4 through April 17. The election will be held Thursday, April 18. The date of the coronation is Friday, April 26. And who are the candidates? Alphabetically they are:

Dorcas L. Davis
Roberta M. Jones
Sylvia Dunham

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR AT TUSKEGEE FOR CAMPAIGN OPENING

Wednesday evening at 6:30 o'Clock the Tuskegee Institute community will be privileged to hear Mr. William J. Trent, Jr., Executive Director of the United Negro College Fund, tell of the far reaching benefits which the organization has brought to American education.

Far more has been achieved than meets the eye. It is not the dollars and cents alone which have helped strengthen these 31 colleges. It has been an experience-sharing venture which has awakened the American public to the basic needs and opportunities which exist in our private colleges and universities.

While here last week, Dr. F. D. Patterson, President Emeritus, Tuskegee Institute and President U. N. C. F., addressed the campaign committee. He stated that Dr. Donald C. Agnew of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools made the following statement: "No similar sum of money has been so usefully spent for higher education that the funds distributed through the United Negro College Fund.'

The 1957 U. N. C. F. Campaign Committee headed by Dr. E. T. Odom and the Steering Committee will meet Thrusday morning, April 4, in the Pine Room of Dorothy Hall, with Mr. Trent for the Kick-Off breakfast launching the drive. Members of all committees working with the 1957 campaign are invited. A special invitation is extended to student members.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND CAMPAIGN STARTS TODAY

Few fund campaigns hold a greater significance for this community than the Annual United Negro College Fund Campaign. Here to speak on the UNCF, from a national point of view, at the Wednesday Vesper program, was Mr. William J. Trent, Jr., Executive Director of the Fund.

His statements last night and again at the Kick-Off Breakfast today help to stimulate an interest in the UNCF Campaign which is based upon knowledge of, and enthusiasm for the cause.

Mr. Trent said that pride over what we have and what we have developed will give us a basis for appreciation in the 31 colleges represented in the UNCF. He strongly urged the importance of giving in the communities representing these colleges. "Such giving," he stated, "stimulates the American public to give more generously."

Mr. Trent said that intelligent giving or sharing one's means is one of the highest forms of expressing one's sense of social responsibility. He emphasized the importance of the Tuskegee Institute Campaign in the total pattern of giving. He pointed out the fact that the idea for the Fund originated here and that its founder, Dr. F. D. Patterson, can be credited with putting the whole scheme for financing higher education in America on a sounder basis. Many white institutions have adopted the chest fund appeal.

Coupled with the prestige factor of Tuskegee Institute and its history of leadership, many are depending upon us to point the way.

In its thirteen years of operation the UNCF has distributed over 31 million dollars to its member colleges. The need in these colleges is on the increase. We are urged to give as individuals and through our several organizations to reach our goal of $6,500.

The Campaign officially opened today. When you are approached, give and give generously. The major campaign efforts will be concluded at Commencement.

CURB MARKET TO MOVE

The Macon County Curb Market, formerly located on the Montgomery Road at the intersection of Gregory Street, will move this Saturday to its new location at the intersection of Franklin Road with Washington Avenue.

Tuskegee Institute has encouraged this project from the beginning, as it provides a service both to the producers and the consumers.

UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND CONVENTION HELD IN BUFFALO

Buffalo, N. Y., March 17—"The colleges of the United Negro College Fund have carried the torch of freedom and interracial good will for the entire South," declared Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president, Morehouse College, speaking before a capacity audience at a meeting in Kleinhans Music Hall, concluding the three-day convocation of the Fund's 31 member-college president and representatives.

Dr. Mays and Frank P. Graham, mediator for the United Nations, were the principal speakers. The Bethune-Cookman College Choir, directed by Thomas D. Demps, was featured on the program.

"In the past, and even today, with increasing racial tension in the deep South, it is only on the campuses of the United Negro Colleges that desegregated interracial meetings can be held and free discussion of integration permitted," Dr. Mays said. "These colleges have always been free in soul, heart and mind, restricted only by custom and law which they did not make. They have been segregated, but have never been segregating institutions."

Predicting that the Negro colleges would continue to serve, regardless of progress towards integration, Dr. Mays asserted that four things insured their future:

1) Increased enrollment in all colleges;

2) As good colleges UNCF schools would continue to meet academic standards of excellence;

3) The colleges have a following and a reputation; and

4) They serve an economic need since the median income for Negroes is far below that of white families.

Speaking on "The United Nations and the Atomic Age," Mr. Graham pointed out that racialism was "social dynamite." He urged that America make its position clear to the world on this issue.

"The main hope of man's surmounting racial prejudice in his quest for survival is in a wider understanding of its origin, nature and peril," Mr. Graham said. "There is developing in the U. S. a more genuine appreciation of the rich exchange value of the high culture of diverse races (and) the differences between races as less than the difference between individuals of the same race."

The president of Buffalo's City Council and Acting Mayor, William B. Lawless, Jr., welcomed the presidential group to the city. The three-day convocation, making the first visit of representatives of the 31 United Negro Colleges to the city, featured a luncheon Saturday in their honor, sponsored by the University of Buffalo; an alumni reception; and the semi-annual meeting of the Fund's board of directors.

The member-college presidents, all of who also serve as UNCF directors, attended the board meeting. Other board members attending were: Sidney B. Pfeifer of Buffalo, Dr. D. T. Burton of Detroit, Robert Ogden Purves of New York, Mrs. Leona Williams of Chicago, and Charles Robinson of Wilmington.

Chancellor Clifford C. Furnas of the University of Buffalo presided at the Saturday luncheon. Guests included representatives of Buffalo State Teachers College, Canisius College, Colgate, Cornell, Houghton, Niagara University, University of Rochester, Rosemary Hill College, William Smith and Hobart Colleges, St. Bonaventure, Syracuse University, and D'Youville College.

The reception in honor of the presidents was given by the Buffalo Inter-alumni Council, headed by Mrs. Herbert C. Holmes, president, and a committee including Mrs. Clarence M. Maloney, Dr. I. L. Scruggs, F. Cecil Brown, Otto Simmons, E. Vincent Suitt and Mrs Lois Dabney. Twenty-eight of the 31 UNCF member colleges are represented by alumni in Buffalo.

Sunday morning the presidents occupied pulpits in local churches. Dr. F. D. Patterson, founder and president of the Fund, spoke at the New Hope Baptist Church in Niagra Falls. W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, addressed the congregation of St. Lukes A. M. E. Zion in Buffalo.

On Monday, the presidents were scheduled to be luncheon guests of Buffalo business leaders of the following corporations: Atlas Steel Casting Co., Bethlehem Steel Corp., Donner Han Coke Co., Republic Steel Corp., General Mills, Inc., National Aniline Division of Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., Barcalo Mfg. Co.

Also Bell Aircraft Corp., Buffalo Evening News, Loblaw, Inc., Manufacturers and Traders Trust Co., National Gypsum Co., Symington Gould Corp., Twin Coach Company, and Westinghouse Electric Corp.

$2,084,841 Received by College Fund During '56

NEW YORK, N.Y. —(ANP) —A grand total of $2,084,841, including contributions from all sources, was received by the United Negro College Fund for its members institutions during 1956, W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director, announced last week.

A record $1,667,317 of this total represents contributions to the annual national fund-raising appeal to help meet the operating costs of the Fund's 31 member colleges and universities.

A capital-funds campaign for these institutions, formally concluded July 1, 1956, received gifts of $205,800 earmarked for building purposes. Unrestricted lagacies bequeathed to the Fund during the year amounted to $211,724.

"An increase in the number of business firms contributing to the annual appeal and a rise in corporate support were significant factors in achieving the largest campaign returns in the Funds' 12-year history," Mr. Trent said.

"Greater participation of alumni groups of the member colleges also contributed to the success of the 1956 appeals. Many of the member college alumni, included among the 5,000 volunteer campaign workers throughout the country, were outstandingly successful in their solicitation of individual gifts."

Money raised in the annual campaign provides 10 per cent of the current operating costs of the privately-supported, accredited member colleges and universities. Some 23,000 students are enrolled in these institutions. Thirty of the colleges are located in the South.

"There is an awareness of the significant role of these private Negro colleges in providing the leadership sorely needed in the South during these difficult times," Mr. Trent said. "The Fund gained many new contributors this year because of their faith in these institutions."

The legacies received by the Fund in 1956 also set a record high. To help insure the economic stability of the colleges, the Fund's board of directors has taken action to place all unrestricted bequests in reserve. Income from these invested funds will be used to help defray the expenses of the annual appeal. If ever necessary, these reserved funds can be used to supplement appropriations to the member colleges.

Since its first annual nation-wide campaign in 1944, the United Negro College Fund has raised more than $31,000,000 for its member institutions.

Carroll On Job For The UNCF

Journal Sat. 3-9-57 Wilmington N.C.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Edward M. Carroll, director of public relations at Bishop College, Marshall, Texas, has undertaken a special assignment for the United Negro College Fund's 1957 campaign in the State of Texas, W. J. Trent, Jr., UNFC's executive director, announced Friday.

Mr. Carroll will coordinate the activities of UNCF volunteer chairmen in major communities throughout the State. In Houston, he will have the assistance of Emmerson Norris, principal of Harper Junior High School, who has been appointed technical director for the area's Negro community.

College Fund Described As Bulwark Of Freedom

Journal's Guide Sat. 3-30-57
Norfolk Va.

BUFFALO, N. Y. — The United Negro College Fund was recently described as the bulwark of freedom and interracial goodwill at a meeting held here in connection with the three-day convocation of the fund's 31-member college presidents and representatives.

P. 19

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., asserted "the colleges of the United Negro College Fund have carried the torch of freedom and interracial goodwill for the entire South." He was heard on the closing day of the convocation.

DR. MAYS and Frank P. Graham, mediator for the United Nations, were the principal speakers. The Bethune-Cookman College Choir, directed by Thomas D. Demps, was featured onthe program.

"In the past, and even today, with increasing racial tension in the deep South, it is only on the campuses of the United Negro Colleges that desegregated interracial meetings can be held and free discussion of integration permitted," Dr. Mays said. "These colleges have always been free in soul, heart and mind, restricted only by custom and law which they did not make. They have been segregated, but have never been segregating institutions."

PREDICTING that the Negro colleges would continue to serve, regardless of progress towards integration, Dr. Mays asserted that four things insured their future. He explained that they are:

Increased enrollment in all colleges; As good colleges UNCF schools would continue to meet academic standards of excellence; The colleges have a following and a reputation; and they serve an economic need since the median income for Negroes is far below that of white families.

Speaking on "The United Nations and the Atomic Age,' Dr. Graham pointed out that racialism was "social dynamic.' He urged that America make its position clear to the world on this issue.

"THE MAIN hope of man's surmounting racial prejudice in his quest for survival is in a wider understanding of its origin, nature and peril," Mr. Graham said. "There is developing in the U. S. a more genuine appreciation of the rich exchange value of the high culture of diverse races and the differences between individuals of the same race.'

The president of Buffalo's City Council and Acting Mayor, William B. Lawless, Jr., welcomed the presidential group to the city. The three-day convocation, marking the first visit of representatives of the 31 United Negro Colleges to the city, featured a luncheon Saturday in their honor, sponsored by the University of Buffalo; an alumni reception; and the semi-annual meeting of the Fund's board of directors.

THE MEMBER college presidents, all of whom also serve as UNCF directors, attended the board meeting. Other board members attending were: Sidney B. Pfeifer, of Buffalo; Dr. D. T. Burton, of Detroit; Robert Ogden Purves, of New York; Mrs. Leona Williams, of Chicago, and Charles Robinson of Wilmington.

The reception in honor of the presidents was given by the Buffalo Inter-alumni Council, headed by Mrs. Herbert C. Holmes, president, and a committee including Mrs. Clarence M. Maloney, Dr. I. L. Scruggs, F. Cecil Brown, Otto Simmons, E. Vincent Suitt, and Mrs. Lois Dabney. Twenty-eight of the 31 UNCF member colleges are represented by alumni in Buffalo.

UNCF Colleges Lift 'Torch Of Freedom'

All the president of the 31 member colleges of the United Negro College Fund will attend the convocation. It is the first visit of the entire presidential group to the City of Buffalo.

The public meeting will conclude a three-day convocation, during which the college presdients will occupy local church pulpits on Sunday morning. As members of the board of directors of the United Negro College Fund, they will attend the Fund's annual meeting to be held for the first time in Buffalo.

The Universities of Buffalo, Syracuse and Rochester, and other university institutions in the western New York area will be hosts at a luncheon in honor of the 31 Negro college presidents, on Saturday. A reception is planned for that evening in the Hotel Statler.

Fifteen of the 31 United Negro Colleges are represented by alumni in the Buffalo area. They are members of an inter-alumni council headed by Mrs. Josephine Holmes, a graduate of Talladega.

The United Negro College Fund is an association of 31 leading private, independent Negro colleges which make an annual united appeal for funds. All but one of the 31 colleges are located in the South. They have a combined enrollment of 23,000 students.

Frank P. Graham was appointed United Nations Representative for India and Pakiston in 1951. He is currently engaged in mediating the Kashmir question. A former Senator from North Carolina, he served as presiednt of the University of North Carolina for 19 years.

Prior to his appointment to the United Nations, Mr. Graham was Defense Manpower Administrator in the U. S. Department of Labor; president of the National Association of State Universities and U. S. Representative on the UN Commission of Good Offices in the Dutch-Indonesian Dispute.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, formerly dean of the School of Religion at Howard University, Washington, D., C., has been president of Morehouse since 1940. He is a former vice president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. In 1950 he was was named "Alumnus of the Year" by the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, from which he received his Ph.D. in 1935. Dr. Mays holds honorary degrees from six universities, and is a member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches.

$31 Million in 13 Years

Courier Sat. 3-16-57

We learn from the United Negro College Fund that since its founding in 1944, it has collected $31,000,000 for the support of the private colleges dedicated to the education of Negro youth, with the collections increasing annually.

Pittsburgh, Pa. Pg. 9

It is scarcely necessary to emphasize to a Negro audience the necessity for the support and expansion of these colleges and universities which are independent of political control and generally provide a type of education difficult to obtain elsewhere in their respective areas.

The total of $31,000,000, while large, is actually insignificant considering the number of private colleges needing help and the higher educational deficiencies of young black America; and it compares very unfavorably with the $500,000,000 which the Negro community spends yearly on consumption of beer alone!

We hope that this year there will be a greater realization among our people of the need for generous contributions to the United Negro College Fund, located at 22 E. 54th St., New York 21, N. Y.

John Suman Heads UNCF 1957 Appeal

Informer Sat. 3-16-57

Houston Texas

NEW YORK — Appointment of John R. Suman, retired oil executive, as chairman of the Houston Metropolitan Area for the United Negro College Fund's 1957 campaign was announced last week by Lee Hastings Bristol, national chairman of the spring appeal.

In assuming the Houston chairmanship, Mr Suman paid tribute to his predecessor, R. E. Turner, who headed Houston's 1956 UNCF campaign.

Under Mr Turner's leadership and the earlier leadership of the late Jesse Jones, Houston led all other Texas cities in raising support for the United Negro College Fund's 31 member colleges and universities.

Since 1944, Texas has raised a total of $582,573 in its combined operating and capital fund appeals for the United Negro College Fund. Houston's contributions of $237,960 were the highest in the State. The Negro community of Houston leads the nation in the percentage of quota subscribed for the UNCF each year averaging $10,000 of a city-wide $25,000 goal.

The four UNCF member colleges located in Texas received $3,200,000 from the annual nation wide appeals during the same 13year period. These institutions are: Bishop and Wiley Colleges in Marshall, Texas College in Tyler and Huston - Tillotson College in Austin.

Mr Suman, who served as national campaign chairman for the UNCF in 1949, will have Ira B. Bryant, principal of Booker T. Washington High School, as co chairman. Mr Bryant will be responsible for work in the Negro community. He succeeds Dr Samuel M. Nabrit, president of Texas Southern University, who headed the UNCF campaign in Houston's Negro community last year.

Officially scheduled April 1 June 15, the 1957 United Negro College Fund campaign seeks a goal of $2,000,000 through its 14th annual nationwide appeal.

Through the weekly choir programs national attention has been focused on the work of the United Negro College Fundand its member institutions and has contributed to the success of the Fund's annual appeals.

DR. M. R. TRABUE

JAMES W. BRYANT

Add 2 new specialists to United College Fund staff

Afro-American p. 19 Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK—Two authorities in the field of college curricula and business management have been added to the United Negro College Fund's staff of part-time consultants, William J. Trent Jr., executive director, announced last week.

They are Dr. M. R. Trabue, professor of higher education at the University of Kentucky, and James W. Bryant, assistant treasurer of Hampton Institute, who will help UNCF member colleges and universities with curricular problems and fiscal procedures, Mr. Trent said.

Director of summer sessions and dean of Pennsylvania State University's College of Education since 1937, Dr. Trabue joined the University of Kentucky faculty in 1956.

Sat. 1-5-57

During the 1930's his administrative assignments included direction of the division of education for the Consolidated Universities of North Carolina and the division of diagnosis for the NYC adjustment service.

Mr. Bryant took his master's degree in business administration at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Commerce and completed advanced studies at New York University's Graduate School of Business.

He graduated from Tuskegee Institute in 1938 and served his alma mater as cashier, chief accountant and resident auditor between 1945 and 1953. Before assuming his duties at Hampton Institute in 1956, he was business manager of Texas College.

Negro College Fund Reports In 1956

NEW YORK, N.Y. — A grand total of $2,084,841 including contributions from all sources, was received by the United Negro College Fund for its member institutions during 1956, W. J. Trent Jr. Fund executive director, announced today.

A record $1,667,317 of this total represents contributions to the annual national fund-raising appeal to help meet the operating costs of the Fund's 31 member colleges and universities.

A capital - funds campaign for these institutions, formally concluded July 1, 1956, received gifts of $205300 earmarked for building purposes. Unrestricted legacies bequeathed to the fund year amounted to $211,724.

"An increase in the number of business firms contributing to the annual appeal and a rise in corporate support were significant factors in achieving the largest campaign returns in the Funds 12-year history,' Mr Trent said.

"Greater participation of alumni groups of the member colleges also contributed to the success of the 1956 appeal. Many of the member college alumni, included among the 5,000 volunteer campaign workers throughout the country, were outstandingly successful in their solicitation of individual gifts.'

Money raised in the annual campaign provides 10 per cent of the current operating costs of the privately - supported, accredited member colleges and universities. Some 23,000 students are enrolled in these institutions. Thirty of the colleges are located in the South.

"There is an awareness of the significant role of these private Negro colleges in providing the leadership sorely needed in the South during these difficult times,' Mr Trent said. "The Fund gained many new contributors this year because of their faith in these institutions.'

The legacies received by the Fund in 1956 also set a record high. To help insure the economic stability of the colleges, the Fund's board of directors has taken action to place all unrestricted bequests in reserve. Income from these invested funds will be used to help defray the expenses of the annual appeal. If ever necessary, these reserved funds can be used to supplement appropriations to the member colleges.

Since its first annual nationwide campaig nin 1944, the United Negro College Fund has raised more than $31,000,000 for its member institutions.

J. E. Stamps Leads UNCF Drive Seeking To Raise $2 Million

Atlanta Independent Nashville Tenn. Fri. 3-1-57

James E. Stamps, whose acceptance of a vice chairmanship of the 1957 United Negro College Fund Appeal was announced last week, has a distinguished record of volunteer service with the organization, according to W. J. Trent, Jr., Fund executive director. It is regretted that the original announcement erroneously described Mr. Stamps' 1957 appointment as his first assignment with the UNCF's national campaign committee.

Mr. Stamps, a regional director of the Social Security Administration, was the founding president of the UNCW's Inter-Alumni Council. He has also been active as an officer of the Chicago Inter-Alumni Council for many years. Mr. Stamps has served on the UNCF Board of Directors under the Fund's president Dr. F. D. Patterson, and as a member of UNCF National Council headed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

An experienced campaigner, Mr. Stamps was appointed vice chairman of the Fund's third annual appeal by 1957 Campaign Chairman Frank M. Totton. Mr. Stamps' appointment as an officer of this year's UNCF Appeal was made by Lee H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., who is the Fund's 1957 National Chairman.

A goal of $2,000,000 has been set for the 1957 Campaign, the amount needed by the 31 UNCF member colleges and universities to meet their operating costs during the current year. Contributions will be sought from individuals, large corporations, small business firms, foundations, unions, clubs, lodges and church groups in hundreds of cities throughout the nation.

Edward M. Carroll Of Bishop College In United Negro College Fund Post

Advocate Sat. 3-9-57 Jackson, Miss.

Edward M. Carroll, director of public relations at Bishop College, Marshall, Tex., has undertaken a special assignment for the United Negro College Fund's 1957 campaign in the State of Texas, W. J. Trent, Jr., UNCF's executive director, announced today.

Mr. Carroll will coordinate the activities of UNCF volunteer chairmen in major communities throughout the State. In Houston, he will have the assistance of Emmerson Norris, principal of Harper Junior High Sochool, who has been appointed technical director for the area's Negro community.

Four UNCF's 31 member institutions are located in Texas. They are: Huston-Tillotson College in Austin, Texas College in Tyler, and Wiley and Bishop Colleges in Marshall. Mr. Carroll has been associated with Bishop College for the past 17 years, where he has been a faculty member and served as assistant to the president, before becoming public relations director.

With Lee H. Bristol, president of Bristol-Myers Co., as national chairman, the United Negro College Fund campaign will seek a goal of $2,000,000 to help meet the operating costs of its 31 member colleges and universities for the current year. The 1957 appeal is the UNCF's 14th annual nationwide campaign.

The great injustice in the American racial picture is, of course, the fact that the well-educated, well-mannered Negro, as capable in business or the professionas or as talented in the arts as are thousands of his white counterparts, is set apart by the same criterion applied to the most uneducated and primitive Negro field hand or laborer.

Atlanta, Ga.

One of the great obstacles in the way of solving the American race problem is the fact that, due to the long impovishment of the South and to various forms of discrimination everywhere, the proportion of poverty and ignorance within the Negro group is still very high. The economic and cultural retardation of the Negro majority has tended to block the acceptability of the advanced Negro minority.

Tues. 2-26-57

One of the answers, obviously, is to educate white attitudes where they are unjust because unfounded. The other is to raise the general educational level of the Negro and thus pare down the factual basis for much of the whites' reluctance to admit him to equal opportunity.

The key is Negro leadership—educated leadership. And the record of the 31 colleges which make up the United Negro College Fund is a long and inspiring one. They have been sending out an ever-increasing number of ever-better-qualified teachers, ministers, professional and laymen and women conscious of their people "out of the wilderness."

The fund seeks $2,000,000 this year to supplement the budgets of these colleges (which are 90 per cent self-sustaining). This will increase their capacity to lift not only the American Negro group but also the quality and unity of the whole citizenry.

Discuss Future Of Negro College At Alumni Meet

Courier Sat. 3-2-57 P. 13

Pittsburgh, Pa.

MARSHALL, Tex.—"Chicago will really have to work hard next year to come up to the standard set by Marshall." Those were the words of Mrs. L. J. Williams of Chicago, president of the National Council of United Negro College Fund Alumni.

Mrs. Williams' words were spoken at Wiley College at the closing session of the eleventh annual conference of the National Council of UNCF Alumni.

Principal speaker was Dr. F. D. Patterson, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund and founder-president of the United Negro College Fund.

Dr. Patterson delivered his address on the topic "The Challenge of Integration." The former president of Tuskegee Institute pointed out some of the problems facing Negroes as the nation moves toward integration which must be solved.

AT ONE point Dr. Patterson stated that lower educational standards for Negroes over the years have brought about an inadequacy which will exist for years, even after full integration. He asserted that the challenge is to raise standards in Negro colleges so that integration may be successful. The noted educator also declared that the challenge also is the acceptance of a greater responsibility for preparing for integration on the part of Negroes.

Randall L. Tyus, field director for the United Negro College Fund, preceded Dr. Patterson's address with a history of the national council of UNCF alumni and its purpose.

Banquet speaker was Dr. S. M Nabrit, president of Texas Southern University. He pointed up the seriousness of the financial problems of private college in the face of growing state institutions. He said the conditions which have existed in Negro colleges over the years have given rise to second-class education, much the same as second-class citizenship.

HE CITED lower salaries paid by private institutions as one of the conditions contributing to second-class education of Negroes. Dr. Nabrit further stated that our present system of education is inadequate and declared that Negro colleges should establish minimum requirements for degrees.

14th Annual Appeal

Advocate

When the United Negro College Fund opens its 14th annual fund-raising campaign, there are several facts to bear in mind. All but one of the 31 member institutions are located in the South. Since the fund was established in 1944 $31,000,000 has been raised for the member college. Sat. 2-9-57

More and more the independent, private and church-connected colleges will have to obtain financial assistance from mass contributions. The group which is to be most directly benefited by services from these institutions will have share more deeply in the financial support. B'ham, Ala. P. 8

Business and related enterprizes are beginning to see the need for their doing more to help the non-state educational institutions. The competitive college is the bedrock of competitive business. All of the good colleges are fed and therefore should be supported widely.

$2 Million Donated To UNCF During '56

Will Aid 31 Member Schools

Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK, N. Y. — A grand total of $2,084,841, including contributions from all sources, was received by the United Negro College Fund for its member institutions during 1956, W. J. Trent, jr., Fund executive director, announced.

A record $1,667,317 of this total represents contributions to the annual national fund-raising appeal to help meet the operating costs of the Fund's 31 member colleges and universities.

A capital-funds campaign for these institutions, formally concluded July 1, 1956, received gifts of $205,800 earmarked for building purposes. Unrestricted legacies bequeathed to the Fund during the year amounted to $211,724.

"An increase in the number of business firms contributing to the annual appeal and a rise in corporate support were significant factors in achieving the largest campaign returns in the Fund's 12-year history." Mr. Trent said.

"Greater participation of alumni groups of the member colleges also contributed to the success of the 1956 appeal. Many of the member college alumni, included among the 5,000 volunteer campaign workers throughout the country, were outstandingly successful in their solicitation of individual gifts."

Money raised in the annual campaign provides 10 per cent of the current operating costs of the privately - supported, accredited member colleges and universities. Some 23,000 students are enrolled in these institutions. Thirty of the colleges are located in the South.

"There is an awareness of the significant role of these private Negro colleges in providing the leadership sorely needed in the South during these difficult times," Trent said. "The Fund gained many new contributors this year because of their faith in these institutions."

The legacies received by the Fund in 1956 also set a record high. To help insure the economic stability of the colleges, the Fund's board of directors has taken action to place all unrestricted bequests in reserve. Income from these invested funds will be used to help defray the expenses of the annual appeal. If ever necessary, these reserved funds can be used to supplement appropriations to the member colleges.

Since its first annual nationwide campaign in 1944, the United Negro College Fund has raised more than $31,000,000 for its member institutions.

Southside Youth Wins Top Honors In Speech Contest

The first Negro ever to win the "Voice of Democracy" teen age speech contest in its 11 year history in Chicago talked his way to the laurels last week.

He is Terrence Mason, of 13391 S. Langley ave., a graduating senior at Carver High school.

Mason was one of six finalists who appeared before top-ranking judges Friday, Nov. 15, at the television studios of WGN, 441 N. Michigan ave.

The contest is sponsored locally by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. The South End Jaycees and the Hotpoint company group were responsible for arrangements. Mason was sponsored by the South End Jaycees.

The six finalists were selected from a starting field of several thousand high school boys and girls. Elimination contests were held first at 45 high schools throughout the city, being climaxed by sectional contests at St. Phillips High school, 3141 W. Jackson blvd., and at the Hotpoint plant, 5600 W. Taylor st.

In addition to Mason, the six included Carol Ann Lindseth, of Schurz high; Richard Meece, of Mt. Carmel; Andrea Pontecorvo, Harrison high; Philomene Marcy, Resurrection high and Sandra Sciacchitano, of Austin.

Mason, the son of Jack and Bonnie Mason, had his choice of a 17" Hotpoint Television set, a Webcor Musicale Hi-Fi set or a Revere Tape recorder as his prize for the victory. He chose the TV.

He and the five other contestants will represent Chicago in the state finals which are to be held at Roosevelt university in December, according to state VOD chairman Henry Hervey, 7712 S. Wabash ave., senior director of the South End Jaycees. The exact date has not yet been determined.

Radio Station WLS made tape recordings of the six young speakers who are to take part in the state meet. A state rule makes it impossible to have live participation.

The Illinois winner will receive a trophy and all-expense trip to the National Awards program in Washington, D. C., in February.

Four co-equal winners in the national contest will receive a $500 scholarship each and a gold recording of his award winning script.

Mason said he hopes to attend Howard university to study psychology.

Assisting the Junior Chamber with the contest were members of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters and the Electronic Industries association.

Serving as judges last Friday were Fran Coughlin, continuity editor of WGN; Les Moneypenny, editor broadcaster; Don Quinn, disc jockey on WIND; Harry Trigg, NBC program manager, and Harry Ward, NBC continuity director.

Co-chairmen in charge of the South End chapter participation were David Kilgore, 4629 S. Wabash ave., and Wallace Hall, 6534 S. Stewart ave. Willie McDaniel, 1520 N. Wieland ave.; Ed Jones, 7200 S. Perry ave., and Frank Marchant, 500 E. 33rd st., were officers in charge.

Stan Tate, 5322 South Park ave., president, announced that Mason will be awarded the chapter's Burnett Weathers trophy at the annual Bosses' night banquet, December 9, in the Hotel Sherry.

The trophy, in honor of the late Burnett Weathers, a former South End president, is being presented for the second consecutive year to the contest's all-city winner. Last year a young lady from Aquinas High school was honored.

In addition, the South End chapter will present gold keys to each of the teenagers who represented the eight South Side High schools in its assigned district in the contest and one to the second place city-winner, who is Richard Meece.

Besides Mason, the localities were Jean Herring, of Englewood High; Joan Budyk, Hyde Park; Barbara Smith, DuSable; Nancy Pogel, South Shore; Pamela Dart, Aquinas; Sharon Dewyer, Loretto Academy and Capt. Joseph Ziemba, Morgan Park Military academy.

Mrs. DeBerry Is Guest Of Canadian Govt.

"The Canadian people are friendly reserved and very intelligent" . . . . At least that's the opinion of Mrs. Frances DeBerry who just returned from the Shakespearean Festival where she was the special guest of the Canadian Government.

Beyond 'Wildest Dreams'

In Canada, the Shakespearean authority says she was royally entertained "beyond my wildest dream". Mrs. DeBerry and her daughter Mrs. Myra Sims arrived in Winson, Canada, July 6, and were met by the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and member of the Canadian Parliament, the Honorable Bryan Cathcart. Also greeting the Louisvillians was Colin McDonald, Journalist for the government there.

Retraces Steps

"These important persons took us on a tour of Canada," the elderly Kentuckian stated, "and that's when the fun and activity began.

"First stop was Amhersburg which is the home of the famous museum and was (in days of old) an underground railroad station for run-away slaves."

Mrs. DeBerry says the next day she went to Sarnia, Canada, where she "met many of the prominent people, lectured at the Sarnia Rotary Club and was key figure at a press conference." Also in Sarnia is the recently built million-dollar Stratford Theatre where Shakespearean plays are performed. Here she saw a performance of Hamlet and Twelfth Night and was interviewed by "25 or 30 newsmen, one of whom was a Louisvillian."

The next day Mrs. DeBerry and her daughter were driven to Toronto, Canada, where they stayed at the King Edward Hotel and where the mother was guest of honor at a buffett luncheon.

Is Guest Of British Star

"We left the hotel the next day," she continued, "and my daughter and I became the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Gray.

"You'll remember Mrs. Gray," Mrs. DeBerry gestured, "she is the one-time famous English actress, Miss Mary Godwin."

'Aim clearly for progress,' Dr. Foster tells students

ALAMOSA, Colo — "The challenge in the pursuit of progress is to aim clearly, to sense with perspective, to apply knowledge and to initiate and maintain sustained attack"

Sixty-nine Adams State College summer graduates heard Dr Luther H Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, say those words here last week.

Although the many problems of this world may seem separate, actually they merge as one great social opportunity," he stated, adding, "It is the individual, finally, who produces the major force of progress in the world through his own effort, through his joint effort with others, but always with Divine guidance"

DR FOSTER told the 55 bachelor of arts and 14 masters of education degree winners that "There is offered to each of us the opportunity to seek the full measure of our individual capacities"

He said that is God's gift to each of us, pointing out that "with such a Divine challenge goes the sacred duty to make the most of every opportunity we have"

Adams State College conferred the honorary doctor of public service degree upon Dr Foster

In reading the citation, Tom L Girault, president of the Board of Trustees for the college said, "Booker T Washington expressed his philosophy of living in these words: 'I will permit no man to narrow and degrade my soul by causing me to hate him'"

Miss Gregg is also Study Chairman of the Student Christian Association and the recipient of the Blue Ribbon Scholarship. She is Grammateus of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority and is now serving as University Carilloneur. During her junior year, she was selected for a Blue Ribbon scholarship to work in the new audio-visual aids and television programs which were initiated at Fisk. She was also named an exchange student to Whittier college and selected by the Wesley Foundation to attend a work camp in Mexico.

YOUNG SCIENTISTS MEET THE PRESIDENT.—These young scientists had the opportunity to meet President Eisenhower during his recent visit to Oklahoma City. The six students were winners of research fellowships for high school juniors. They are, from left: Charles Frenzel, Robert Owen, both of Bartlesville; Henry Bennett III, Oklahoma City; Marguerite French, Muskogee; the president, Welthia Roberts, Tulsa and David Williams, Gymmen.

Junior editor—The suggestion for Friday's Junior Editor came from Glover P. Parham Jr. of 846 60th st. Fairfield. His name and his question, "Can animals talk?" will appear in Junior Editors' columns in newspapers all over the country. He is an eighth grader at Robinson School (See Page 7)

Grandmother wins record $3120 pot

News 8-2-8

Mrs. Luvenia Gilmore, of 1006 Third-st, n, a 53-year-old Negro day worker, is the sole winner of the $3120 Cashword Puzzle jack pot.

Gen. 8-11-57

"I always said I would be happy to get just part of it," she said. "I don't know how I happened to be the only one out of all the people who entered to get the puzzle right."

Birm. Ala.

Because of the size of the prize and the tremendous interest in the contest, Ol' Bill decided to break a precedent. He made a trip to interview the winner on Saturday afternoon.

Ordinarily even the winner does not know until the Sunday paper comes out. Mrs. Gilmore has decided to let her husband read the good news just like the rest of you Cashword fans.

"I have so many plans," she said. "I don't know where to start. I will give some to the church. Lately I have not been able to support it as I would like.

"I JOINED St. Paul's Methodist Church when I came here from Village Spring near Mt. Pinson in 1929. And I still go there."

One of the first things she plans to do is get her furniture out of storage. She explained that the family just recently moved to the Third-st address. They formerly lived at 128 Sixth-av, n.

Besides Mrs. Gilmore there are her husband, William L. Gilmore, a waiter at the Birmingham Country Club, and their granddaughter, Allece, 8, who lives with them.

The Gilmores have a daughter, Mrs. Estelle Williams, and two other grandchildren, Eugene Williams Jr., 7, and Phylis Williams, 4.

Allece turned in four Cashword entries last week. Her grandmother turned in six and one of them was "it." There was no doubt. Bill's checkers said the entry was extremely clear and legible.

"I almost didn't get my husband away in time to turn them in for the Wednesday morning deadline," Mrs. Gilmore said.

"I consulted the Lord in making out my entries," she said. "I'd just about given up hope of winning.

"Then I put down the first thing that came to my mind. I left them that way, just like I put them down the first time."

IN GENERAL, Mrs. Gilmore thinks "the Cashword Puzzle is interesting and I enjoy working it."

She added, "I miss it the days it is not in the paper. As much as anything, I look forward to studying the answers in Sunday's paper. I never looked at it until after church."

She has been working the puzzles ever since it came out two and a half years ago, she said. One time when it first appeared she came close to winning.

"I had all the words, but not in the right place."

Now that she has won she still intends to work the puzzle. Most of the 33 winners of our Cashword Puzzles are trying to be the first to repeat. Three of those winners were Negroes.

The only other jack pot over $1000 was won by Gordon Adams of 221 Montgomery-ln. That was on Puzzle No. 75. The amount Adams received was $1680.

Another thing Mrs. Gilmore intends to do with her money is to have a telephone installed.

"I've had a phone all these years, before moving here. I just can't get use to being without one," she said.

She may be fortunate in not having one right now. Other winners have said the phone rings off the hook after the Sunday paper hits the street.

So, we congratulate our winner for all the fans who would like to do so by phone.

Explanations of more difficult clues:

Clues across

1. SCORE not scare. "A young man anxious" to succeed in whatever he is doing certainly "would" not just "possibly show" the effects of a bad" scare regardless of "his mistakes." The clue is true of SCORE, however.

6. FIRING not hiring. He "may well be exasperated" at the perversity of being fired and then given his job back. Being hired only to be FIRED again "may well" make "him" furious. Wiring is vague—what is it about? Tiring and airing are poor.

9. ANKLE not angle. The

S	C	O	R	E		T		H
	O		O		F	I	R	I	N	G
A	N	K	L	E		N	E	T		U
	F		L		B		W			N
F	U	R	S		E		A	N	T
	T				P	A	I	R
B	E	T	T	E	R		D	O	C	K
					R		C		A
M		B	O	T	T	L	E		R
A	L	E				A		F	E	W
D		D			B	O	Y	S

CORRECT SOLUTION

ANKLE "plays its part," of course. The angle is merely a circumstance and does not positively "play a part" in the sense of performing some function.

12. FURS not fuss. FURS, yes; but fuss may be of the wrong kind! "Making a fuss of her" would be correct.

15. BETTER not letter. If "a patient gets" plenty of visitors he may "not care" particularly "about getting" a letter, yet "there is" nothing "pathetic about" the fact. BETTER is clearly a good answer.

16. DOCK not deck. Why specify deck (rather than any other part of the ship)? It is more natural to select DOCK (as opposed to any other part of town). Duck (military truck for amphibious use) is remote.

21. ALE not ape. As far as "the general public" is concerned, an ape is almost always, rather than "quite often seen behind bars." Only the wild game hunter would "see" an ape in its natural habitat, hardly the "general public." ALE is "quite often seen" but not generally, since it is usually stored in a cooler "behind the bar."

22. FEW not new. New "jokes are" not necessarily good enough to be "worth remembering." Of all the "jokes" one hears, relatively FEW "are" really "worth remembering and passing on."

23. BOYS not toys. "The older generation" calls for BOYS (as representing the younger "generation"). Also, "pour scorn" is not good towards toys. Joys is vague.

Clues down

2. CONFUTE not confuse. 'Manages to" favors CONFUTE, since the normal object of "argument" is to convince the other "man" that he's wrong, rather than merely "to" get "him" confused. You aren't trying "to confuse him."

4. TIN not gin, win, sin, fin or din. The underlying implication that it would be nice to have a "substitute for it" favors TIN, a highly expensive metal. There would be no real point in finding a "substitute for" gin, win, sin, fin or din. There are "substitutes" for bin and pin.

5. HIT not bit. HIT is more comprehensive, since to "make" a bit, you must "make" a HIT in one way or another. Bit (as on a bridle or for machinery use) is poor as are kit, pit and wit.

8. GUN not gum or gut. GUN fits the clue words "should you pay out good money" indicating something expensive and, furthermore, a GUN can be rented or borrowed. This is not generally true of gum or gut. Guy is remote.

11. BEAR not wear or tear. The average "woman" doesn't want to wear them; that is, she won't (rather than "can't") do so. It is easy to imagine "a woman" saying she, "can't bear thick stockings." Tear is remote.

14. PERT not pest. If she's known to be a pest, she will probably be fired rather than hinder the work of others. A PERT "girl" may be tolerable and efficient, but she is nevertheless, "always liable to be fired."

17. CARE not cure. A cure that really is a "proper" cure is far more than being merely "beneficial." Proper CARE benefits an invalid," while still leaving him "an invalid."

18. CLAY not play. CLAY can be modeled but a play may be so poor as to have no "artistic possibilities."

19. MAD not bad. A bad "driver" may realize his limitations and play safe. A MAD "driver" is definitely dangerous and, of course, is a bad "driver." SAD is poor.

20. BED not bet. "If he's broke and away from home, a playboy would" miss the common comforts, such as "a good" BED. He "would" hardly be in the mood or position even to think about placing "a good" bet.

Business and Professional Women's National Queen Contest Offers Scholarship for Worthy Student

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla.

PHILADELPHIA.—(Global)—Mrs. Florence Madison Hill, one of the past national presidents of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., and now the national goodwill ambassador, enjoys directing the annual National B&P Popularity Contest for the B&P Queen because it enables the organization to help a worthy student to further her college career through a $500 cash scholarship. This year when the national convention is held in Pittsburgh, Pa., October 10-12, at Hotel Sherwyn, the sixth queen will be crowned by one o fthe nation's outstanding celebrities.

Fm. 8-30-57

Applications for the 1957 Scholarship are still being received by the national president, Mrs. Marie L. Harrison, at the national office of the B&P, 248 S. Burnet St., in East Orange, N. J.

High praises go to the contestants in the Popularity Queen contest because of their efforts in working to make this $500 scholarship possible for the student who qualifies as to the requirements as set up by the Educational committee of the B&P. Contestants so far in the running are from Pennsylvania, Maryland and New Jersey. Miss Wanda Jane Goode is representing "Miss Main Line in Philadelphia; Miss Loretta Jean Hawkins, "Miss Chester, Pa."; Miss Alfretta Lynette Turner, "Miss Pittsburgh"; Miss Geraldine E. Punn, "Miss Baltimore"; Miss Louise Arleen Stanley, "Miss Cambridge, Md."; and Miss Jone Cooper Goode, "Miss New Jersey." Others expected to enter queens in this most worthy contest are New York City, Jamaica, New York, and Camden, N. J.

"Stop Having a Ball and Get on the Ball Instead"

A White Man Writes on Bobby Cain!

Editor's Note: This week's contributions to the Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund slowed to a mere trickle . . . and the Courier thought this would be a fine opportunity to publish a letter sent in from New York City by Joseph Kasper, white!

What he says might irritate, infuriate or shame you . . . but we feel that it merits your serious consideration.

New York, N. Y.
Aug. 10, 1957

To the Editor
The Pittsburgh Courier,
Dear Sir:

The enclosed clipping from my hometown newspaper will show what a brave lad Bobby Cain is. He faced a hostile crowd from the day he entered Clinton High School until the day he graduated, and for him not to be sent to college is a "crying shame."

Where are all your so-called "Big Negroes" with their summer and winter homes, big cars, minks and skunks, big party-givers and world travelers?

Why don't these "fourflushers" chip in and help establish a real scholarship fund for Bobby Cain? They are always showing off and shooting off their big mouths in the society columns and got nothing to back it up with but a lot of baloney.

Being white, I am afraid that the rank and file of Negroes are just plain FAKERS. They want somebody else to fight their battles.

The Negro buys what he wants and begs for what he needs, and no race of people can succeed with that motto.

Instead of pooling their resources and getting together and fighting together for the common good . . . no! . . . your people try to be individual stars. Everyone trying to outdo the other instead of helping the other.

Beseech your people to stop buying liquor, stop playing numbers and the horses, etc. Stop HAVING A BALL AND GET ON THE BALL INSTEAD.

Stop showing off and come to a showdown. I am white, but I am going to just wait and see how all these 16,000,000 Negroes, clamoring for civil rights, are going to help the Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund.

I am sending in a good contribution as soon as I see how the ball is bouncing. Print this and let your readers know what a white man thinks.

(Signed) JOSEPH KASPER

Six Morehouse Students Awarded European Travel-Study Grants

Six students of Morehouse College have recently been notified that they have been selected by a faculty committee to receive the MERRILL TRAVEL - STUDY AWARD for study and travel in Europe during the academic year 1958 - 1959. Each student will receive a grant of $3,000 to defray his expenses.

These travel-study awards have been made posible by a friend and trustee of Morehouse College, Charles E. Merrill, who is interested in providing Negro students who show promise and ability with the kinds of experience that will equip them for foreign service and provide them with the broad horizons necessary for effectively participating in our present-day world society. Mr. Merrill is an educator and the son of the late Charles E. Merrill, senior partner of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Beane.

The recipients of the Merrill Awards are carefully screened by a faculty committe using scholarship, character, atttitude, articulateness, appearance, and promise among its criteria of selection.

The following six men are those chosen for the Merrill Travel-Study Awards for 1958-1959: MELVIN A BUTLER, a 19-year-old sophemore from Monroe Louisiana, majoring in English; MORRIS J. DILLARD, 19, a sophomore from Luverne, Alabama, majoring in psychology; WILBUR T. LEAPHART, 21, a senior and a political science major, from Waycross, Georgia; JOSEPH W. PATTERSON, 19, a junior majoring in chemistry, from Brunswick, Georgia; PHILLIP A. THOMPSON, 20, a senior and a political science major, from Chattanooga, Tennessee; and DONALD WILLIAMS, 18, a junior majoring in busines administration, from New Orleans, Louisiana.

Each man will work out with his adviser and a faculty committee the country where he can best pursue his formal studies in Europe, according to his field of concentration; and his informal education will be gained from travel in the major European countries.

Originally the Merrill Travel-Study Award was given to one Morehouse student each year for the first two years.

FOUR FACULTY MEMBERS GIVEN SUMMER TRAVEL GRANTS

Mr. Merrill, who makes the travel-study grants possible for Morehouse students, has for the last four summers made it possible for two Morehouse faculty couples to travel in Europe on grants of $3,500 per couple.

An administrative committee announced recently their selection to receive the Merrill Faculty Travel Awards for the summer of 1958. The teachers chosen are DR. AND MRS. EDWARD A. JONES (Dr. Jones is professor and chairman of the Department of Modern Foreign Languages), DR. GERALDINE L. CLARK, associate professor of English, and MISS DORIAN S. GANT, instructor in humanities.

Previous recipients of the Faculty Travel Grant are the following: Dr. and Mrs. Edward B. Williams, Professor and Mrs. A. Russell Brooks, Dr. and Mrs. B. R. Braxeal, Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Brisbane, Professor and Mrs. G. Lewis Chandler, Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Nix, and Professor and Mrs. G. Murray Branch.

65 Receive Scholarship Grants To Study At Interracial Colleges

Weekly New Orleans, La. Sat 7-20-57

P. 14

New York - (Special) - The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students has granted scholarship awards totalling $16,400 that will enable 53 outstanding Negro high school seniors to enter 45 interracial colleges this fall. The recipients come from 19 states, including 10 in the south, and the District of Columbia. Announcement of the awards was made today by New York State Rent Commissioner Robert C. Weaver, NSSFNS Supplementary Scholarship Fund Trustees Chairman.

In addition, Mr. Weaver reported that 12 other Negro students entering non-segregated colleges will receive $4,000 in similar supplementary scholarships secured for them by NSSFNS from a cooperating Foundation. An announcement will be made next month of renewals of supplementary scholarships to Negro upper - classmen helped by NSSFNS since their freshman year.

Because of their academic promise, the 65 new recipients of supplementary scholarships have also won $70,000 in scholarship aid this year from a representative cross-section of the nation s colleges. These colleges include such institutions as the University of California, Colgate, Michigan, Oberlin, Radcliffe, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, St. Louis University and Swarthmore. The supplementary scholarships, however, are necessary to bridge the gap between college scholarships, modest parental resources, summer earnings, and the students' total financial needs.

The supplementary grants are a final step in the annual effort of NSSFNS to seek out and help talented Negro high school seniors who migh not otherwise continue their education. In the course of this work, the organization also assists many hundreds of seniors through its advisory service which brings qualified students together with appropriate colleges.

As a result of its efforts, the National Scholarship Service and Fund has helped more than 4,600 Negro students to enter over 300 interracial colleges and universities during the past nine years. Total scholarship aid of over $1,600,000 was secured by NSSFNS for these students of which $1,300,000 came from college and other sources and $300,000 in direct supplementary grants. This year NSSFNS counselors screened more than 1,400 high school seniors of whom at least 600 will be attending interracial colleges in September.

Among the scholarship recipients are two Orleanians, namely, Alton Barber, 2621 Valence Street and Walter H. Buckner, III, 931 North Prieur Street who will attend Blackburn College in Carlinville, Ill.

"A study of past scholarship winners who graduated from college in June reveals that they more than fulfilled the promise they showed as high school seniors," says Richard L. Plaut, Executive vice-Chairman of NSSFNS. "Harold C. Haizlip of Washington, D.C., for example, was the first Negro in the history of Amherst College to be elected president of a social fraternity. A Woodrow Wilson Fellowship award winner, he will start working towards a doctorate in the classics this fall at Harvard.

"Another recent graduate," Mr. Plaut adds, "is Werner Traynham of Baltimore, Maryland. Young Traynham was graduated magna cum laude and elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Dartmouth. He also has been awarded a Reynolds Fellowship to study philosophy at Oxford University."

NSSFNS officials emphasize that there still is a serious shortage of motivated and qualified college candidates coming from the deprived groups of the nation. To correct this condition, the organization has supplemented its long-standing program of assisting Negro high school seniors by launching the "Community Talent Search" project aimed at helping selected cities uncover and develop gifted youth in their formative years from all deprived groups regardless of race or creed.

Toledo School Elects Negro Girl As Queen

Call & Post Kansas City, Mo. 12-6-57

TOLEDO, Ohio (ANP) —Janet Quinn reigned as queen.

Thus, came a happy ending to a story that had both serious and sanguine aspects.

A 17-year-old senior, Janet, was the first Negro elected football queen at Scott high school.

She defeated two white contestants in a 3-way race.

Scott high school has about 50 per cent Negro students and the fact that a Negro girl was elected queen—three out every five football 11 players are Negroes created quite a stir.

Janet's effigy was hanged over the front of the school. Petitions were circulated asking that a white queen be elected.

But school officials were firm. Janet, they said, had been elected fairly and she would reign as queen in the annual Thanksgiving game between Waite and Scott. She did.

Before that she was crowned in State Theater in a court consisting of five Negro and five white students.

Then Janet was truly Scott's queen at the football game—accompanied by the white runners-up.

Finally, she was a feature attraction at the Varsity Hop, the annual dance honoring the football teams of the two schools.

She was, in brief, queen. Scott won over Waite for the first time since 1952. The score was 6-0.

'Teacher Of The Year'

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Mrs. Ruth Oliver Newman was honored as "Teacher of the Year" by Lee County Teachers' Association at Wacoochee High School, Salem. This project is sponsored by the Alabama State Teachers' Association to recognize superior teaching.

Mrs. Ruth Newman Chosen 'Teacher Of Year' In Lee

Alabama Journal Montgomery, Ala. 4-B

TUSKEGEE, Ala., March 23—Mrs. Ruth Oliver Newman, was honored as "Teacher of the Year" for Lee County Teachers' Association at Wacoochee High School, Salem.

The "Teacher of the Year" project is sponsored by the Alabama State Teachers' Association to recognize and encourage superior teaching through selection of a "Teacher of the year" for each city, or county, then district and finally state.

Stewart Bennett, vice president of the Lee County Teachers' Association, who presided in the absence of the president, J. A. Roberts, presented Mrs. Newman to the association as Lee County's Teacher of the year.

A bouquet of carnations was presented to her and corsages were presented to each of the other nominees: Mrs. Essie Summers, Mrs. Susie Clark, Mrs. Lottie Martin, Mrs. Sallie Martin, Mrs. Sadie Brown, Mrs. Julietee Brown, Mrs. Lois Boyd, Mrs. Carolyn Bryant, Mrs. Odel Standford, Mrs. Annie B. Miller, Mrs. Inez Mitchell and Mrs. Florence Benford; also Misses Emma J. ipscomb and Emily Harris.

V. C. Helms, Lee County superintendent of education, congratulated Mrs. Newman on her selection.

In her response, Mrs. Newman pointed out the great opportunity and role of the teacher in releasing the "imprisoned potentialities" of children and in molding them into personalities whose abilites and character will make the world a better place. She urged teachers to fulfill this role by utilizing their maximum powers and advancing themselves through active membership in professional organization participation in study groups, utilization of experts, advanced summer study and free exchange of ideas among fellow teachers.

Mrs. Newman holds a Bachelor of Science degree and Master of Education degree from Tuskegee Institute, membership in county, state and national teachers' associations and in the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics. She has been teaching mathematics at Lee County Training School for the last six years of her 20 years in teaching.

In addition to her duties as teacher of mathematics, she has been active as adviser to the Student Council and to the LCTS chapter of Quill and Scroll, international honorary society of high school journalists. Quill and Scroll members make up the staff of the school paper, "The Wildcat."

Active in the civic and religious life of her community, Mrs. Newman is a member of the Tuskegee Civic Association and the Macon County Republican Party. She is a member of the Washington Chapel AME Church, and her religious activities include service to various churches as guest speaker, director of the young people's department of the missionary society of the East Alabama Conference of the AME Church, teacher in the State and Connectional Training Institutes and writer of several playlets for the Connectional Youth Magazine.

Mrs. Newman if the wife of the Rev. T. R. Newman, presiding elder of the Opelika District and the mother of a son, Theodore R. Newman Jr., who is a student at Harvard Law School, Cambridge.

Farmer's Son Wins $1,000 Scholarship

Sat. 8-10-57 Pittsburgh, Pa.

DETROIT—Alton Earl Johnson, 20, of Melrose, La., was named winner of a $1,000 university scholarship in the 1957 Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild model car competition.

BOSTON, Mass. (ANP)—James M. Toller, 1957 graduate of Technical High School, has been officially notified that he won first state and regional Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild Award, senior division.

Young Toller will receive a check for $900 and an all-expense paid trip to Detroit where he will compete with other regional winners.

Alton is a sophomore at Southern University in Baton Rouge. His ambition is to become a mechanical engineer. His father is a farmer living on Route 1, Melrose.

He first entered the model car competition in 1950 and won a second place state award. This is his sixth entry and his perseverance has been rewarded with a design scholarship.

HIS AWARD-WINNING model is a six-passenger convertible. It is metallic gray with heavily sculptured lines. It has canted front fenders with in-board headlights and outboard running lights.

Alton began working in wood when he was a small boy and says he designed and built many of his first toys.

James E. Goodman, vice president of General Motors and president of the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild presented scholarships valued at $41,000 to 19 boys whose model cars were judged awards to youthful craftsmen.

Enrollment for next year's competition begins in September with $115,000 in awards, including the university scholarships, to be distributed.

THESE 19 BOYS now join 160 previous scholarship winners in the Body by Fisher Hall of Fame. Altogether the 179 master craftsmen have received university scholarships valued at $525,000.

Since the competition began in 1930, Fisher Body has distributed more than $1,250,000 in national, regional and state

Wins Award For Student Project

If there is a noticeable increase in the number of American high school students who feel they "got the guts and the brains" to become scientists and mathematicians, part of the credit should go to a 44-year-old high school teacher of St. Louis, Mo.

Oscar D. Washington, of 4741 Leduc st., head of the Science department at Vashon High school, recently won a national award from the National Science Teachers Association, a branch of the National Education Association (NEA).

Washington won the award for a "project outstanding in science" which was designed specifically to increase enrollments in higher science and mathematics in the high school.

The project initiated at Vashon, was conducted through surveys, questionnaires, interviews and special research projects. "Guinea pigs" for the project included Vashon students, St. Louis businessmen, employment agencies and various departments of the state and national governments.

Impetus for the plan grew out of the alarming rate of students across the nation who for various reasons are "avoiding" courses that have to do with the sciences and mathematics.

The problem, then, was to discover ways and means of getting students interested in these course after it was learned why they did not enroll in them.

Washington discovered many of the students lacked a clear knowledge of the relationship of science and mathematics to their future work. He discovered there was a lack of guidance on the part of teachers who could or did not properly explain the courses and who were not too sure of the objectives themselves.

Many false notions of unneccessary difficulties on the part of the students, overcrowding of schools — and the students freedom to choose his own courses have all contributed to a decrease in enrollments in the scientific courses.

Washington and the National Science Teachers Association have considered the results of this year's long research project a little short of astounding. It was adopted for radio by the University of Oklahoma and for TV by a St. Louis station.

But the most amazing results of the study took place at Vashon High school. From two chemistry classes of 51 students in 1951, enrollment jumped to five classes of 116 students.

A definite increase was shown in other scientific courses and for the first time in the history of Vashon High, a trigometry class was organized.

Washington said the same program could be started in any school with similar results and would in no way affect the liberal arts program of the school.

When Oscar Washington isn't teaching or planning ways to get more scientific "brains" for America, he spends his time writing music and publishing records through his Ballad Record Co. Well."

Few people know that he wrote the words for "Night Train." "Portrait of a Faded Love." "How Sentimental Can I Be" and "I Hope hTese Words Find You

Bishop Bowen Returns To Phillips Exeter Academy For 50th Reunion

Daily World Fri. 6-7-57

Atlanta Ga. P. 3

BY MRS. L. McALLISTER SCOTT

Nestled in the hills of New Hampshire, we find one of the finest and oldest Prep Schools, The Phillips Exeter Academy for boys of Exeter ..... This is a story of that school and one of its graduates ..... The Academy offers instruction in all the studies required for admission to the leading colleges and scientific schools of the country — especially, Harvard, Yale and Princeton Universities. Thus, it was the choice of a boy from Atlanta.

Today he is an outstanding religious and civic leader of the community ..... He has just returned from his Fiftieth Anniversary Reunion at the Phillips Exeter

BISHOP J. W. E. BOWEN

Academy ..... It is quite noteworthy when reviewing facts, you find that even back in his prep days, this young man had definitely decided what path he wanted to follow — for he was a member of the Christian Fraternity and Harvard Club, from which University, he later graduated.

The unusual fact about this story is that we seldom hear of a Prep School having reunions, but Phillips Exeter Academy did.. Three glorious days were planned and invitations were sent to all members of the class of 1907. In this class, there were two Negro boys, John W. E. Bowen, Jr., of Atlanta, and Perry Dennis Glenford Pennington of Baltimore, Md.

It was with great anticipation that John W. E. Bowen, Jr., (now Bishop John W. E. Bowen, Jr.,) made plans to attend. Winging his way back to his Alma Mater early Thursday, he greeted and relived memories with friends and classmates of days long passed, and told of works and accomplishments since that momentous day of fifty years ago.

J. W. E. BOWEN
(In 1907)

MANY HAVE PASSED

There he learned that almost half of the one hundred and ninety-six classmates had passed into the great beyond .... Most of those returning for the Reunion were retired executives, professional and business men.

Bishop Bowen had hoped that his former classmate, the Mr. Pennington of Baltimore, would be there to greet him, but before his departure, Mr. Pennington, who is a retired High School teacher, called to say that he would be unable to attend because of a recent illness.

Arriving at Exeter early last Friday morning, Bishop Bowen registered and got settled, later attended the "Get-together" in the lobby of the Exeter Inn, followed by the family dinner. Saturday. Saturday found Alumni and friends at the Academy Building. After which, they inspected the new buildings, grounds, athletic field, etc., followed by chapel exercises with the seniors. The 1907 Alumni Day luncheon was held at Langdell Hall before the guests witnessed the Exeter-Andover baseball game ..a special section was reserved for class of 1907 ..... Principal and Mrs. Saltonstall, 27 Pine Street, entertained with a reception and tea, to which the wives and guests were invited. Saturday evening featured the class dinner (members only) at 6:30, in the Pine Room of the Exeter Inn. Bishop Bowen, only bishop of the group, gave invocation and blessing.

tribute is extended as a great honor for the influence and effort which you have exerted in the cause of public education. The appreciation and indebtedness of the board of education and the community are herein greatly acknowledged.

Retires After 36 Years At Lincoln School

Call-Kansas City, Mo.

No longer will Mrs. Alta Nash Wilson welcome the pupils to Lincoln school, an eight-grade institution for Negroes in North Clinton, Mo. Last month she retired from the school after teaching there for the past 36 years. For nine years she was the only teacher at Lincoln school. The oldest building in the Clinton system it remains segregated.

Last school term Mrs. Wilson taught 30 pupils, the school's entire enrollment. Four of these pupils were graduated in May.

On May 27th Mrs. Wilson was presented a watch and a certificate by George Heltzell on behalf of the Clinton Community Teachers and staff members of the school district.

The school, heated with an oil burning furnace, was modernized and redecorated recently. It has two large class rooms on the first floor and an auditorium on the second floor. The high ceilings makes the building cool in the summer.

Mrs. Wilson taught her first year in 1921 when A. W. Freeman was the principal. The decline in enrollment caused the school board to hire only one teacher the last nine years.

Early days of Mrs. Wilson were spent in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Nash, her uncle and aunt. In 1942 she was married to Clarence Wilson, an employee at the Chevrolet firm and custodian of the First National bank. They live close to the Lincoln school.

She was graduated from Lincoln university of Missouri and became Clinton's first life member of the NEA.

The certificate presented to Mrs. Wilson was signed by the eight members of the Clinton school board. It reads:

"This certificate is awarded to you in appreciation of the fine service rendered through the years to the youth of your community. This

HONORED FOR SERVICE. — After teaching 36 years at Lincoln school in North Clinton, Mo., Mrs. Alta Nash Wilson decided to retire. In appreciation of the services rendered to the youth of that community Mrs. Wilson was presented a wrist watch and a citation by the Clinton Community Teachers and staff members of the school district. Shown presenting the watch to Mrs. Wilson is George Heltzell, superintendent of schools. The presentations were made at a dinner of the teachers, May 27.

WASHINGTON (ANP)—For the first time in the history of its existence, the Capitol Page School, this year, graduated two Negro youths, Charles Vernon Bush and Frederick J. Saunders, both residents of the District of Columbia.

Bush won acclaim three years ago when he had the distinction of being the first of his race ever to be appointed as page boy to the United States Supreme Court.

Sanders, 18, was appointed two years later as library assistant to the Supreme Court. He is a native of Washington and plans to attend Lincoln University in Pennsylvania next fall.

BUSH, NOW 17, took the Required College Entrance Examination for the Air Force Academy, making second highest grade. Since the District of Columbia is only allowed one vacancy in the academy, Bush was classified as alternate appointee. He plans to try for entrance to the Air Academy again next year if he fails to make it this year. In the meantime he plans to enter Howard University on a scholarship.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Bush, the youthful page boy was born in Tallahassee, Fla., in 1939. He was graduated from Banneker Junior High School just prior to receiving the appointment at the Supreme Court at the age of 14. Bush's father is educational director of Clarke Hall, Howard University.

The winner said that generally she doesn't get her cashwords in each week until "right at the last moment." She said she almost didn't get her husband started in time last week to deliver her winning entry.

She said she does each week's puzzle a little bit at a time. She writes what she thinks is the best possible answer on a piece of paper and then studies it. To last week's puzzle though, she said the first answers she thought of hit pay dirt for her.

"Generally, there is always a lot of erasing and changing when I work out the puzzles," she said.

She has been working the puzzles ever since they began two and a half years ago. She said it would be absolutely impossible to compute the number of hours she has spent working on them.

Each week when the answer to the puzzles comes out, she studies them carefully and tries to figure out the correct procedure to follow in working out the others.

The Gilmore family recently moved to their present address from 128 Sixth-av, n. The Cashword winner said she wants to get a telephone in the new residence as soon as possible.

"I've had a phone all these years, before moving here," she said. "I just can't get used to being without one."

Dyersburg Negro Given Flag Gift

From The Commercial Appeal Dyersburg, Tenn., Bureau

DYERSBURG, Tenn., Jan. 1. —A white-haired Dyersburg Negro, who has helped place thousands of miniature flags on the graves of Dyer County war dead during the past 25 years, was honored Monday with a flag of his own.

It wasn't an ordinary American flag, however, that came through the mail to Eugene Gentry. The Stars and Stripes given 'Gene' flew until recently over the Capitol in Washington.

The strange thing about it is that 'Gene' doesn't know who sent it. First came an unsigned letter from Washington, telling him that a gift was on the way "in recognition of your service to your country and fellowman." Without revealing the contents of the package, the letter explained that the gift was something from the Capitol Building in Washington.

"I was so proud of it I just sat down and cried," said 'Gene'. "It was the nicest Christmas present I've ever had."

'Gene', who is as agile as an 18-year-old despite his 75 years, is dictrict commander of the 11th District American Legion, and has long been active in Legion affairs at Dyersburg. A few days ago, he was appointed to membership on the national distinguished guests committee by National Commander W. C. Daniel.

FRIENDSHIP OF THE YEAR

1st U. of Md. Pharmacy grad and pal get degrees Saturday

Afro-American Sat. 6-15-57 P. 8

Baltimore Md.

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

BALTIMORE

The happiest day of their lives — graduation day—will long be remembered by two Baltimore Army buddies and University of Maryland School of Pharmacy classmates

The two friends of six years' duration are James Hodges, 953 Ellicott Driveway and Norman L. Levin, 2101 Garrison Blvd.

Both were graduated from the pharmacy school on Saturday, June 8. The exercises will took place at College Park, at 9:45 a.m.

The reasons for lasting memories of this day for Mr. Hodges and Mr. Levin are twofold.

THE FIRST is that a dream shared by both at last came true.

Since 1951, they had worked toward graduating with bachelor of science degrees in pharmacy to become eligible for the state board examination.

The second reason, also shared by both, is that James (Jim to his pal) became the first member of his race to finish the state school of pharmacy.

The two young men appeared at the AFRO office on Wednesday smiling like two high school graduates although both vow they are "over 24."

As they talked together, they unfolded the story of their years of study together.

EXCITEDLY, they recalled: "We entered the school of pharmacy in September, 1951. Then, in 1953, both of us were drafted into the Army. It happened that we both came back home in 1955 and then we re-entered the school of pharmacy."

Mr. Hodges stated that he went to Camp Gordon, Ga., while Mr. Levin went to Korea.

Continuing the story, they said:

"Now, we've made it! We're graduating in a class of 2,000 at College Park on Saturday!"

The AFRO's attention was called to the accomplishments of the two last week when Mr. Levin called to reveal the good news and to make sure it was printed.

Almost breathless, he said: "This is a real news tip. The very first colored graduate of the school of pharmacy is my friend!

"We started school together. We went to the army at the same time and now we are graduating together."

Alcorn Student Is First To Get Crosby Award

Jackson Miss. Sat. 6-8-57

Alcorn, Miss. June 3 (Special)—Helen Mae Johnson becomes the first recipient of the Crosby Scholarship Award for Negroes. Mr. Crosby personally presented the award to J. D. Boyd, President of Alcorn College, at a public meeting at Picayune, Mississippi. In accepting the award for the college, President Boyd said that through this kind and generous gift by Mr. and Mrs. Crosby, the hearts of an humble and thankful people had been touched; a child had been taught again to have faith in the brotherhood of man; Negroes everywhere were given new courage to hope for a new era of goodwill and understanding and to him ,greater faith that Alcorn College would again offer to boys and girls increasing opportunities for gaining an education that will prepare them for useful lives here in our great state.

The act setting up the scholarship award reads as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Crosby, Jr., through the Crosby Forest Products Company, hereby establish a scholarship award to be made annually to a student selected from the graduation class from the George Washington Carver High School which is to be designated as the Crosby Scholarship Award. The awards will continue as long as the intent and purpose of the award are carried out. This will be determined by Mr. and Mrs. Crosby. In the event no student can qualify to the categories that will be listed below, no award will be given that year.

The recipient shall be selected from the graduating class of the George Washington Carver High School by a committee composed of the Superintendent of the Schools, the City Manager, the Principal of the George Washington Carver High School, the Senior English Teacher of the George Washington High School, and a representative of Mr. and Mrs. Crosby.

The scholarship shall consist of a cash award of One Hundred Dollars and a sixty-dollar monthly payment to continue for 36 months which is to be used only for educational training. The payments shall cease only if the recipient terminates his or her education. The institution of higher learning to be attended shall be Alcorn A. & M. College.

The committee shall base its selection on the following cateories to determine that the student merits the award by being outstanding in all of the following categories:

1. Character
2. Attitude.
3. Desire to be of service within the boundaries of his or her race.
4. Scholarship
5. Adaptability
6. Need.

The Crosby Forest Products Co. will supply the funds needed for the scholarship awards as they are needed.

The announcement of the recipient shall be made at the graduating exercises and in the announcement the rules of the award shall also be announced each year at the time the award is presented.

12 Studying In Israel On Grant

Defender Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 7-20-57

NEW YORK — The winners of the first David Petegorsky scholarship awards, college students from 12 communities around the country, left last week for a six-week, all-expense-paid study-vacation trip to Israel.

The group — six men and six women, ranging in age from 17 to 22 — won their trips to Israel on the basis of a nationwide essay competition sponsored by the women's division of the American Jewish Congress among American college students of all races, religions and creeds.

For all 12 winners, this is their first visit to Israel. The 12 winners attend 10 American universities, nearly all hold scholarships at their colleges and several have travelled abroad, to Europe and South America, on special fellowships.

Their fields of study range from pre-medical courses to marine biology. They are an interracial and inter-religious group.

The scholarships were established as a memorial to the late Dr. David Petegorsky, political scientist, author and Jewish communal leader, who died in July, 1956, after serving for a decade as executive director of the AJ Congress.

The winners of the first David Petegorsky scholarship awards are:

Arthur J. Berenson, 20, Brooklyn, N. Y., Princeton university; Judith Ann Dynner, 19, Coral Gables, Fla., University of Miami; Jerry Bernard Finkel, 21, Bronx, N. Y., Columbia university; Hillel D. Halkin, 17, New York City, Columbia university.

Sidney David Jackson, 18, Detroit, University of Michigan; Sylvia Kowitt, 18, Rockville Centre, N. Y., Bryn Mawr; Elaine Keller, 20, East Orange, N. J., Swarthmore; Stephanie Krasnow, 20, Yonkers, N. Y., Sarah Lawrence college.

Claire Jean Kuhne, 18, Chicago, University of Chicago; James Joseph Orlow, 21, Philadelphia, Harvard university; Joel Rutman, 19, Cleveland Heights, Ohio, Western Reserve and Linda Adelaide White, 20, Long Island City, N. Y., University of Michigan.

Students refusing J.C. scholarships

Afro-American p.3

Baltimore Md.

CHARLESTON, S.C.—Sponsors of the controversial four-year college scholarships, provided for colored students by the city and county, have run into difficulty this year.

J. Arthur Brown, president of the local NAACP and also state vice NAACP president, disclosed the matter to the AFRO this week.

In order to stifle a threat to integrate the College of Charleston about seven years ago, public officials arranged 10 all-expense scholarships annually at S.C. State College in Orangeburg. There are now about 90 students receiving this aid.

THE ISSUE split the local leadership into opposing camps. Those approving the grants contended that they could mean intermediary benefits, or nothing at all.

Those disapproving, including former U.S. District Judge J. Waties Waring, himself a graduate of the College of Charleston, and NAACP leaders, considered the schaolarships "pay offs" and compromising a practice now outlawed by Federal courts.

Mr. Brown, a graduate of S.C. State, told the AFRO he had a telephone call from a sponsor of the scholarships, who reported that students to whom they had been offered were refusing them to S.C. State.

HE SAID they were demanding that the scholarships be extended to colleges of their choice, including private colleges.

"I told him," Mr. Brown said of the caller, "we're not interested, and never have been, in anything which perpetuates segregation.

"I told him also," Mr. Brown continued, "that what these seniors in high school are doing now is what should have been done when these scholarships were first offered."

P.3

More than four hundred associates and friends of the educator attended the dinner which gave interesting flash-backs in his life from early childhood to the present. Mr. Taylor is a native of Huntsville, Texas, the sone of the late Reverend and Mrs. David F. Taylor. A brother Frank Taylor, of Chicago, Illinois, was present for the occasion.

Mr. Taylor was cited for a brilliant career as an educator, community worker, pioneer in public relations and radio newscasting, newspaper man, publisher, church worker and fraternal leader.

The City of New Orleans presented Mr. Taylor with a certificate of merit by Marcus Neustadter, representing acting mayor Victor H. Schiro. As a community worker he was chairman of the first infantile paralysis drive, cancer drive and sold more than a million dollars in war bonds, during World War II.

Last May he was given an honorary degree by Wiley College, Marshall, Texas, as the "most outstanding alumnus of the year." Later citizens of New Orleans cited him for more than a decade of community service as a radio newscaster.

Sharing honors with Mr. Taylor was his charmning wife Mrs. Thelma R. Taylor, a counselor at the J. S. Clark high school. Mrs. Taylor was presented with a beautiful bouquet of American beauty roses.

Miss Helen M. Badie presided over the program and Mrs. D. W. Sholes was narrator. Participating in the program, representing various interests of Mr. Taylor were: Mr. L. A. G. Blanchet, Mr. David Segue, Mrs. Maweaner Mauldin, Mr. Ernest Wright, Mr. Elgin Hychew, Mr. Gilbert Smith, Dr. C. H. D. Bowers, Rev. James W. Temple, Mr. Earl Wright, Miss Myrtle R. Banks, Mrs. Thelma Dixon, Mrs. Annabelle G. Williams, Mrs. Francis W. Joseph, Miss T. Barrett, Mrs. E. S. Netter, Miss Gloria Johnson, Mrs. C. G. Davis, Mr. James E. Gayle, Mr. August J. Tramonte, Mr. Nathan King, Mr. E. J. V. Beal and Mr. John G. Lewis, Jr.

Mr. Taylor presented his successor Mr. Edward F. Johnson and thanked the many friends present for their thoughtfulness.

Mrs. Roberta Moody, of Chicago, is house guest of the Taylors and attended the banquet. The affair was sponsored by the teachers of Ricard School.

MISS MARY FRANCES EARLY

FRED MORGAN

Two Atlantans Earn Top Honors At Clark College

Daily World Atlanta Ga.
Sat. 6-1-57

Top honors in Clark College's graduating class have been earned by two Atlantans, Mary Frances Early, who will be class Valedictorian ,and Fred Morgan, who has won the Salutatory title.

The daughter of Mrs. J. H. Early, of Atlanta, Miss Early will not be new in the role of Valedictorian. She earned that honor both in graduating from E. P. Johnson Elementary School and from Turner High School as a member of the class of 1953.

Continuing her long list of high school achievements, which includes vice-presidency of the Turner student body, president and student director of the Band, and, winner of both the Atlanta Journal and Parent-Teachers Association "Best All-Around Student' awards, Miss Early has compiled a distinguished record at Clark as a student of the Music Department where she has specialized in instrumental music.

Beside accumulating a four-year maga cum laude scholastic record, Miss Early's activities at Clark include clarinetist in the College Band, Basileus of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, student director of the Clark Band -- for which she recently composed a march; -- secretary for her junior class, treasurer of the senior class, and holds memberships in the Music Educators National Conference, Philharmonic Society and Yearbook Staff.

In recognition of her superior scholarship, Mary was elected to membership in the Alpha Kappa Mu National Honorary Scholastic Society, and her biography is listed in past and current editions of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges.

SALUTATORIAN

Fred Morgan, Salutatorian, has similarly channeled his skills and energies into many extra-curricular activities while compiling a four-year magna cum laude average. A graduate of David T. Howard High School and an English major at Clark, Morgan has been associated with the college Publicity Office for four years and has edited the Clark student newspaper for two years.

His campus memberships include Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, the Literary Symposium, Kappa Zeta Tau Journalistic Society. He was President of the Sophomore and Junior Classes and President of the Clark Student Government Association in his senior year.

Supplementing these activities Fred has traveled in Europe on a scholarship awarded by the Experiment in International Living, Omega Psi Phi "Scholar of the Year", and is Director of Publicity for his fraternity's Seventh District. In addition he has appeared on ABC Television's College Press Conference. His biography appeared in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges in

CAN YOU HELP?

Tribune Los Angeles, Calif. P. 20 Wed. 5-29-57

Former L. A. girl, doing research in Paris, needs aid to complete work on doctorate

Former Los Angeles teacher of the "profoundly deaf and severely hard-of-hearing" children in the Los Angeles City School System, Lorre Curry, is "desperately in need of financial assistance" for the school year, 1957-58, in Paris. She is doing research work related to her doctorate which she will receive from Columbia university upon completion of her dissertation after her return to the United States.

Miss Curry, who lectured and demonstrated 'extensively", as she wrote the Tribune, throughout Los Angeles, is doing research in Paris related "to the psychological problems that are a part of an individual's inability to communicate effectively."

She writes further:

"Since mental hygiene and the problem of communication, or understanding, are of such great importance in our present day civilization (as in any civilization), I am extremely anxious to be able to realize the completion of my research project and ultimately to make a contribution of value in these areas."

Miss Curry writes that was an honor student throughout college, with a grade point average "between A and B". She received her bachelor's degree in Psychology and her master's in Psychology and Audiology. An abstract of her master's thesis, entitled "Home-School Relationships," appeared in the Volva Review, published by the Votal Bureau, Washington, D. C. in January of 1954.

To date. she believes. she is the only Negro to have been employed in her former field. work with hard-of-heraring children, in the state of California. Her lectures and demonstrations included the John Tracy Clinic, Los Angeles City and State colleges.

APPEAL MADE TO SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE

She writes her 'home town' paper, the Tribune. that she "will not be able to realize my objectives" without financial help. She is seeking a scholarship, fellowship, special grant, or loan.

She will be glad to furnish any interested organization with all pertinent information relative to her college work, professional experience, research, also letters of recommendation.

The Tribune has written in her behalf to the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, and has advised Miss Curry to follow this up with a letter. The Tribune also advised the young scholar to contact the Ford Foundation, at Pasadena.

However, there is the possibility that, due to the advanced nature of Miss Curry's studies and research, neither source will be interested in helping her. Any local organization wishing to interest itself in her project would do so to the advantage of the community, the Tribune observes, and advises direct contact with her to Cite Universitaire, Foundation Des Etats-Unis, 15, Boulevard Jourdan, Paris XIV, France.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Honors galore, silver keys, gold keys, certificates, plus a $3,200 scholarship to the University of Pennsylvania dropped into the studious lap of 17-year-old Helen H. Gilmore of this city during the mid-year graduation exercises at the John Bartram High School.

The young scholar who won practically everything available in awards, plus graduating with honors, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Gilmore of Philadelphia and the granddaughter of Mrs. Harvey Hatcher of Pitssburgh. Mrs. Gilmore is the former Helen Harvey of Pittsburgh.

MISS GILMORE was a commencement speaker, her subject, "Juvenile Decency—It's Future." She was graduated first in her class and on the long list of honors, won a silver key given by the Student Association; two gold keys, one given by the Mothers' Club for excellence in English, and the other, by the same group, for excellence in foreign languages. The Peter Hamilton Memorial Choir Award was hers, plus an award presented by General Electric, based on scholarship, character, leadership and service. This was a watch and a certificate, one of the most coveted awards given in the school.

THE YOUNG SCHOLAR took part in all phases of school life, including the dancing club (where she taught during her senior year), the school paper, the gym, Leaders Club, and became a member of the National Honor Society, a high honor.

With her eyes set on a goal of teaching foreign languages in secondary schools, Miss Gilmore may look back with pride at the excellent record of her high school days.

NEW YORK — Although 22-year-old W. Wayne Durham of Brooklyn made the winter session dean's list at Columbia College, few people would call him lucky, for he is blind.

Yet the main ambition in life of the young sociology major, blind since he was 14, is "to help people with handicaps who aren't as lucky as myself."

Durham and his seeing-eye dog, Dottie, have been familiar sights on the Columbia campus since 1954.

During the week Dottie shares a campus room with her sightless master. On weekends the two travel to Durham's home at 949 Prospect Pl., where he lives with his parents.

WAYNE, WHO is now in his junior year, graduated at the head of his class from Bushwick High School in 1954. Since entering Columbia he has been taking his classroom notes on a braille slate.

Other students read his outside assignments to him, and he records them, then plays them back later for study. As though earning grades of B-plus in his six courses during the past semester was not enough, he is also a music student at the Lighthouse School.

He plays the saxophone and clarinet, leading his own quartet, which plays occasional dance or club dates at night.

Upon completion of his education he plans to become a social worker, to help others who are not so fortunate.

Dr Ferrer In Tulane Mag

HOUSTON — The February 1957 issue of The South Central Bulletin published in New Orleans by Tulane University has an abstract of the paper read by Dr Jose Ferrer-Canales during the last meetings of the South-Centrl Modern Language Association held at Tulane on November 2-3, 1956.

Houston, Texas

The title of the study written by the Texas Southern University Associate Professor is Gonzalez Prade and Dario. "The author affirms," says the Bulletin, "that the Peruvian Gonzalez Prada was a forerunner, a herald of the Modernista Movement and that, like uben Dario, the Nicaraguan creator of beauty, he uses a modernist vocabulary. The Greek themes and mythology ara found in these poets. Both are also moved by the same metaphysical question Adonde vamos? Where do we go after death? Certainly, verses and rhythmic combinations in Gonzalez Prada announced some of the characteristics of Modernism."

This marked the first time that a Negro scholar has read a paper before this 14 year old association.

Re: Michael Jenkins

Over the protest of some legal authorities almost three years ago, the Supreme Court ruled segregation in Delaware's public schools was unconstitutional.

Sat. 3-2-57

Today there are pending eight cases involving the right of children to attend the school nearest their homes in southern Delaware.

Baltimore, Md.

Last week there was a significant action in Wilmington.

Students of Dupont High School, the largest in the state in enrollment and physical plant, elected Michael Jenkins of the 11th grade to be president of the student council.

That Michael is not white was not important to them.

If the parents and the politicians, who are fighting so bitterly to maintain the crumbling era of segregation would only get out of the way and let the children select their associates, opposition to integration would disappear as quickly as would snow in July.

Douglas Senior Wins Honor Society Award

Sat. 3-31-57

Martha Ann Warren, graduating Douglass high school senior and member of the Douglass chapter of the National Honor Society, was awarded a $200 scholarship from the Honor Society during an Awards Assembly held Friday, May 24, in the Douglass auditorium.

P. 4

Martha Ann was selected on the basis of her having met the requirements set up by the organization for recipients of the scholarship. During her junior and senior years, she was most cooperative in every project the chapter undertook. Such projects included scholarship fund-raising drives such as selling souvenir pencils with football and basketball schedules on them; selling candy and presenting the Langston university A Cappella choir in concert. A "Back to School" social, sponsored in September also was among the projects in which Martha Ann participated. Other worthy activities included the giving of baskets of food and toys to the needy during Thanksgiving and Christmas, and helping with the "Old Clothes Drive" sponsored by Goodwill Industries.

Martha Ann is pianist for the Honor Society and a member of the Student Council. She plans to attend Oklahoma university during next year.

Scholarship To Donald Hopkins

Call p.20 Fri. 5-24-57

Donald R. Hopkins, junior student at the University of Kansas in Lawrence, has been awarded the $300 Gustafson scholarship for the year.

Hopkins, 19, was notified of his selection to receive the award by Ethan P. Allen, chairman of the department of political science at K.U.

The scholarship was established this year by Frederick B. Gustafson, a graduate of K.U. and a successful aeronautical engineer, in honor of his mother and father, both of whom were K. U. graduates.

The scholarship is to go each year to an outstanding and worthy undergraduate majoring in political science. Gustafson told university officials that he wishes to encourage persons already in the area of political science to remain in the field and to encourage those who are undecided as to a career to enter this field of public service. Selection of the recipient is left to the faculty of the political science department.

DONALD R. HOPKINS

Young Hopkins becomes the first Gustafson scholar at K. U. He is the son of Mrs. Carrie Versea 2126 N. 5th St., Kansas City, Kas.

Hopkins was recently one of 16 K. U. students initiated into Pi Sigma Alpha, national honorary political science fraternity. The initiation took place at a banquet honoring Herman Chubb, professor of political science at K.U. for 39 years, who is retiring. The Gustafson scholarship was presented to Hopkins at the banquet.

Hopkins has been on the dean's honor roll for the last two years. He was graduated from Sumner high school in 1954 and attended Washburn college at Topeka for a semester before entering K.U.

The young man is a member of the Eighth Street Baptist church in Kansas City, Kas. and is a member of the Young Republicans on the K. U. Campus.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — First place honors went to a Lincoln university student and two other Lincoln students won honorable mention for research papers presented at the College Science culb section of the Missouri Academy of Science last week.

The meeting was held at Central Missouri State college, Warrensburg, with students from five Missouri colleges and University of Missouri competing for awards.

Top award went to Robert C. Schroer, of Jefferson City, senior chemistry major at Lincoln. Schroer's prize-winning paper, entitled "The Preparation, Equilibrium Pressures and Thermodynamic Constants of the Decomposition of the M-Bromoaniline-Sulfur Dioxide Complex," was based on a research project which he has been carrying on in the chemistry department since last September.

Schroer, an assistant in the department, and president of the Chemistry club, will receive his B.S. degree in June. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Schroer.

Honorable mention was awarded to Albert Williams, junior, of Jefferson City, and Lawrence Rice, senior, of Gary, Ind., both biology majors. Their jointly prepared paper was entitled "A Study of the Distribution of the Arthropods in the Five Strata: Soil, Leaf Layer, Herbs, Shrubs and Trees. Williams is the retiring president of the organization, and presided at the meeting.

In addition to the prize winners, others from Lincoln who attended the meeting were Carl Smith, Hilliard Scott, Dr. U. S. Maxwell and Dr. Willis E. Byrd.

Enrolled in the School of Nursing, Eish Morrison, also won a certificate of merit.

Gallaudet Marks 93d Graduation

Post + Times Herald P. 6-B Tues. 5-28-57 Washington D.C.

By Jean White, Staff Reporter

Gallaudet College's two top graduates gave the commencement address yesterday side by side—one speaking the words and the other "signing" them with flashing hands.

"This is something you can do when you have sign language," President Leonard M. Elstad noted with a smile, after he explained how Ida Wynetta Gray and Jean Vander Schalie had run a close scholastic race.

Gallaudet, the world's only college exclusively for the deaf, awarded 48 degrees yesterday at its 93d commencement. Among these was an honorary degree of doctor of letters for Dr. Edward J. Waterhouse, director of the 125-year-old Perkins School for the Blind at Watertown, Mass., who was cited for his work in the "most difficult" field of education, with blind-deaf children.

Outside of the faculty members transposing the speakers' words into sign language, the exercises yesterday were just like any other college commencement. But many of the 41 graduates hadn't heard a word their professors said in classes conducted simultaneously in both sign and spoken word.

Gallaudet had its beginnings as a "brave and venturesome" experiment 100 years ago next month, Edward Foss Wilson, Assistant Secretary of Health, Educatio and Welfare, pointed out in his commencement speech.

Miss Gray, who walked off with the highest scholastic average in the senior class, is the first deaf Negro woman to be granted a degree by Gallaudet. Another "first" was Henning Christian Frederick Irgens, first student from Norway to graduate from Gallaudet.

3 Morehouse students given foreign travel-study grants

Afro-American Sat. 4-6-57 Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Three Morehouse College students have been selected by a faculty committee to receive travel study grants of $2,500 each for a year in Europe during the academic year of 1957-1958.

They are Brinston Collins, a senior, a political science major from Norfolk, Va.; William Glass, a junior, history major from Red Oak (near Atlanta), Ga.; and Andre D. Hammons, junior, psychology major from Chattanooga, Tenn.

According to their major or minor interests, the students will do some formal study in either English or French universities, or both, and will travel in the major European countries to the end of broadening their educational and cultural horizons.

* * *

THE DONOR of these grants is a friend of Morehouse College who prefers to remain anonymous and who is interested in exposing young and promising colored students to the kind of cultural and educational experiences and contacts that will equip them for foreign and diplomatic service.

This is the third year he has given such grants to Morehouse students.

The same friend who makes possible these student travel-study grants also makes possible two travel grants of $2,500 per couple for Morehouse faculty and staff couples to travel in Europe during the summer.

Purpose of the faculty couple grants is to enrich their experiences and thus enhance their teaching effectiveness at the institution.

THIS YEAR the two couples that have been selected for travel in Europe during the summer are Mr. and Mrs. G. Murray Branch and Mr. and Mrs. William M. Nix.

Mr. Branch is a member of the faculty of the school of religion and Mr. Nix is director of student personnel at Morehouse.

TEACHER FOR 22 YEARS—

Miss Ella Rhone Honored For Service to Community

Advertiser Aug. 4-2-57 Montgomery, Ala.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, April 1—Miss Ella Rhone, principal-teacher of a two-teacher school located 14 miles from Tuskegee on Highway 80, has served in this capacity for 22 years.

The school is a two-room frame building with a small shed room that is used for the hot lunch program. It is tidy and comfortable in spite of the lack of modern fable in one room with a few well chosen books, the daily newspaper and the "News Weekly." The lunch room program is free to the students as the food is obtained from the State Surplus Commodity and supplemented by the parents; thus all of the 86 children enrolled enjoy a well planned balanced meal daily.

Realizing the need for a more inclusive program that would tend toward the fuller preparation for life. Miss Rhone decided to add a course in sewing to her already crowded list of offerings. Her program was explained to the P-TA and soon there was a broiler project underway. The money realized from this project was used to purchase a sewing machine for the sewing class. The broiler project having yielded such splendid results, she decided to continue it. She has purchased chairs, pictures, of great leaders and other pertinent teaching materials.

YOUTH ACTIVITIES

Evaluating her program, Miss Rhone decided to improve the social life of her community through youth activities. A Youth Fellowship club was organized. The club conducts one business meeting monthly and two monthly recreational meetings. The school, also, has a 4-H club.

Miss Rhone attends all meetings and functions held at her school and attends the local church regularly. Her initiative has earned for her the respect and admiration of the entire community and hearty cooperation of all patrons.

She has surrounded herself with the latest publications on teaching and administration.

She has a B.S. degree in Elementary Education and has completed most of the requirements for the Master's Degree, is a member of the choir of Greenwood Baptist Church, a civic worker and cooperates with all movements for community improvement.

Asked what she enjoys most, she says, "People, they are so easy to get along with."

Miss Rhone's travels have carried her to Atlantic City, N. J.; Albany, Long Island and New York City; Lennox and Pittsfield, Mass.; Chicago, Detroit, Miami, Toronto, Canada, and a tour of Cuba.

Among the former students of Miss Rhone are Walter Lumpkin, teacher at Talladega College, and Miss Catherine Crowell, senior student in elementary education at Tuskegee Institute.

The following is Miss Crowell's impression of Miss Rhone: Tuskegee Institute.

MY IMPRESSION OF MISS RHONE

"Miss Rhone has done much to influence my life up to now. She was one of my best teachers in elementary school. In fact, it is due to her encouragement that I am a senior in college today.

"Miss Rhone possessed a genuine interest in all children entrusted in her care. She appeared pleasant at all times, which made it a pleasure to be around her. She did all that she could to make her pupils happy and encouraged them to put forth every effort in trying to obtain the best qualities in everything.

"We could always depend upon Miss Rhone for help or advice in all problems. She made each of us feel as if we belonged to the group. She was aware of our individual differences and was successful in providing for them. She encouraged creativeness in all of us.

Miss Rhone was always prepared with her lessons. She knew what she wanted to accomplish and provided possible means for doing so. Her goals and objectives were clear cut and her creativeness made it possible to achieve them with ease. The classroom provided an atomosphere that was certainly conducive to learning. The room was always clean and attractive with brightly colored curtains and a normal temperature.

The lessons were taught in such a way that they were made meaningful to us. The problems to be solved centered around real life situations. She always made assignments in such a way that each pupil knew exactly what he was asked to do. If a pupil failed to understand any part of a lesson, she was willing always to explain again and again in many ways until he did understand.

I am very proud that Miss Rhone had a part in shaping my life. To me she taught much and gave the courage to go far. Although I'm a senior in college, I'm still depending upon that courage and the little things she taught me to do several years ago. I am indeed grateful to her for many things.

Yes, that impression of my elementary school teacher is the basis of my ambition. Incidentally, I'm studying to be an elementary school teacher. Thanks to Miss Rhone for the wonderful ideals for which she stood and those ideals for which I'm striving.

Other nominees for the "Macon County Teacher of the Year" were O. H. Poole, the Mesdames Sallie P. Harris, Estell J. Jones, Mary Moore, Kate Darnaby, Winfred Davis, Katie Dixon and Hattie Flennoy.

TYPING CHAMP—Miss Glyadys Scott Grant, left, a junior in commercial education at A. and T. College, is the North Carolina state typing champion. She won the title in speed competition for junior and senior college students held at North Carolina College. Miss Grant, a native of Florence, S. C. ripped off more than 1,000 words in the 10-minute time test and her copy showed just 12 errors, for a corrected average of 89 words per minute. Miss Grant proudly shows her trophy to Mrs. Katie G. Humphrey, A. and T. typing instructor.

$500 Scholarship To L. U. Soprano

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Soprano Frankie Weathers of St. Louis, a 19-year-old junior at Lincoln university, on Friday was awarded a $500 scholarship in the annual Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air.

Miss Weathers auditioned in New York in mid-February following a victory over 14 other finalists at Tulsa, Okla., in January. On this occasion Miss Weathers won a $300 cash award plus the expense paid trip to New York.

At both auditions she gave her rendition of Gian Carlo Menotti's "Saint of Bleecker Street." In the New York audition Menotti was present and so impressed by Miss Weathers' voice that he reportedly asked her to accompany him on an operatic tour to Italy this summer.

Miss Weathers is presently in New York on tour with the Lincoln university concert choir which appeared on the Ted Mack Amateur Hour special Easter program.

U. of Md. Law senior named to honor society

Afro-American Sat 4-13-57
Baltimore Md.

BALTIMORE

"It was far more than I expected when I first entered the university. I find it an honor to be a part of an organization which has so many distinguished members."

Christopher H. Foreman, 31-year-old law school senior, was commenting Tuesday on his election to the Order of the Coif, a national law honor society.

Already the holder of a Phi Beta Kappa key, Mr. Foreman earned his latest scholastic achievement the hard way.

He remained in the upper ten per cent of his class at the University of Maryland while working full-time as a bailiff for Chief Judge Emory Niles.

* * *

MR. FOREMAN is the second colored law school student to be elected to the University of Maryland chapter of the legal profession's most respected honor society.

Wendall Freeland, an assistant attorney general in Pittsburgh, was the other honoree.

Mr. Foreman and six other senior law students were told of their election at the annual banquet of the University of Maryland Law School Alumni Association Saturday night.

Mr. Foreman graduated with high honors in economics from the University of Cincinnati in 1950, the same year he earned his Phi Beta Kappa key. The following year he received a masters of arts degree in economics from the Ohio University.

He entered the Maryland law school in September, 1953, and is scheduled to receive his law degree this June.

* * *

UNTIL HE was appointed a bailiff by Judge Niles last September, he was employed as an education specialist at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, where he served as an Army lieutenant for 17 months.

During World War II Mr. Foreman, a native of New Iberia, La., served three years in the Marine Corps.

Mr. Foreman recalled with a chuckle that when he decided to enter college following his discharge from the Marine Corps he was rejected by both Dillard University, New Orleans, La., and Howard University.

It was then that he enrolled at the University of Cincinnati and blazed an enviable scholastic record.

Of his position as court baliff, Mr. Foreman said, "I have gained tremendous experience and valuable insight into court procedure."

Upon graduation from law school Mr. Foreman expects to become associated with the law firm of Brown, Allen and Watts.

Married to the former Thelma Pulliam, a teacher at School 120, Mr. Foreman has a 5-year-old son, Christopher Jr. The Foremans reside at 3417 Piedmont Ave.

Methodists Foster Race Student Exchange Plan

Journal & Guide Sat. 4-6-57
Norfolk Va.

NEW YORK—A student exchange program between a white university in Ohio and a college for Negro girls in North Carolina—both schools of the Methodist Church—is now under way.

Dr. Willa Player, president of Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C., has announced that six girls from Bennett, an all-Negro school, are spending two weeks on the campus of Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware. On March 31, four white girls from Wesleyan went to the North Carolina campus, she added. Under the exchange, worked out by the Bennett and Wesleyan faculties, the students will enter completely into the life of the campus, Dr. Player said.

"IN EFFECT, our Bennett girls will be Wesleyan students for two weeks and the Wesleyan girls will be Bennett students," she said. "At each school, the girls will sit in the classes in which they are enrolled at their own school. They will live in dormitories, participate in chapel and assembly programs and take part in those extracurricular activities in which they are enrolled in their own school."

Dr. Player sees the exchange plan as an effective means of beginning to break down racial barriers on the college campus and of preparing college students for the coming of integration.

Wins Honors at Columbia Aided by Records, Braille and Seeing-Eye Dog

Tues. 3-26-57

W. Wayne Durham, a Brooklyn scholar who listens to books on records and takes his notes in Braille, has made the dean's list at Columbia College.

The 22-year-old student, blind since he was 14 years old, received grades of B-plus in six courses in the winter session of his junior year. The announcement of his academic achievement was made yesterday by Charles C. Cole, assistant dean of the college. Wayne is a sociology major.

He shares a dormitory room with his 4-year-old seeing-eye dog, Dottie, a German shepperd that has been guiding him around the Columbia campus since 1954.

On week-ends, Wayne and his dog travel to Brooklyn, where he lives with his parents at 949 Prospect Place. Wayne, who also studies music at the Lighthouse School, plays occasional jazz dates at night. He plays the saxophone and clarinet and leads his own quartet.

He wants to do social work when he finishes his education. "I'd like to help people with handicaps who aren't as lucky as myself," he explains.

He studies with the aid of fellow students who read his assignments to him. He records them for a later playback. In class, he takes notes with a Braille slate.

Wayne headed his graduating class at Bushwick High School in 1954. He has received scholarship aid from the Urban League of Greater New York, the New York State Rehabilitation Service and the New York Association for the Blind.

CLASSMATES: W. Wayne Durham and his Seeing-Eye dog Dottie attend class at Columbia College. Yesterday the 21-year-old student received a commendation for his high grades, which have placed him on college's Dean's List.

13 PV Students Now Members Of Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society

Informer Houston, Tex Sat. 1-19-57

PRAIRIE VIEW, Texas — Thirteen Prairie View students have recently become members of the Alpha Pi Mu Chapter of the Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society. Alpha Pi Mu is one of the fifty-two chapters in as many schools which constitute the Alpha Kappa Mu National Honor Society. This organization is the only general academic honor group on the Prairie View College campus which accepts majors from all branches of the college.

The Prairie View students who quaified and were initiated into the local chapter were: Edward Clark, junior in Agriculture; Robbie Gee, junior in Music; Bobbie J. Haywood, junior in Chemistry; Bernard Johnson, senior in Biology; Joyce Johnson, junior in Business; Jo Ella McCauley; senior in Elementary Education; Bobbie A. Nicholson, senior in Biology; Lee Odom, senior in Business, Rosemary Pigford, senior in Sociology; Constance E. Royal, senior in Elementary Education; Algerita Spencer, senior in Music; and Norma Tilley, senior in Elementary Education.

Primarily through ther exceptional academic accomplishments these students qualified for admission to this scholastic honor society by meetng three basic tests: (1) They proved to be in good standing with the College; (2) each had completed seventy-five semester hours of college work; and (3) each possessed at least a 3.3 cumulative academic average. The students named above are now members of the organization and are eligible to wear a gold key of special design which is the official symbol of the Society. Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society, which is a member of the Association of College Honor Societies, has three basic purposes: (1) To coordinate and stimulate the efforts of men and women of superior abilities in rendering socially ddesirable services for mankind; (2) "to encourage and emphasize studies, original investigation, research creative work and publication;" and (3) "to discover gifted students . . . (and to) dignify scholarship through symbols, publicity, and the interpretation of achievement to laymen."

POST-INITIATION PROGRAM

Members of the Alpha Pi Mu are especially interestel in stimulating higher academic achievement among Prairie View students generally. In support of this objective the organization planned several projects. The first of these, which has been completed, was a post-initiation program for the members of the chapter and their guests. The program was held in the Saurez Hall Lounge. On that occasion an inspiring address was delivered by Professor George Sinkler, who is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Honor Society and an instructor in the Department of History and Philosophy. Mr Sinkler was introduced by Dr Cedric Stubblefiell of the Department of Chemistry, who as one of the faculty sponsors for Alpha Pi Mu had arranged the entire program. Folowing Mr Sinklers address, Dr J. M. Drew, Dean of Instruction, spoke to the group briefly but provocatively.

VESPER PROGRAM

On January 6, the Chapter sponsored a Vesper program which featured an effectively delivered and stimulating address by Dr J. L. Brown, Director of Extramural Services and Head of the Department of Economics and Social Science. Dr Brown spoke on the subject, "Man's Right to Knowledge."

A third project of the Chapter will be its annual Honors Day Convocation in tribute to students whose names appear on the First Semester Honor Roll. This program will be presented in February,, as is customary, and will feature an address by an individual of regional or national stature.

On the evening of the Convocation, Dr E. B. Evans will tender his annual Presidential Dinner for Honor Studenets. As has become traditional the Alpha Pi Mu Chapter will serve as host for President Evans and arrange the affair. It has also become traditional for faculty members to appear on program at the President's Dinner and entertain the honor students. This has been a gracious gesture on the part of the members of the college staff and will undoubtedly make this year's affair as thoroughly enjoyable for students as previous ones.

CHAPTER OFFICERS

The officers of the Alpha Pi Mu Chapter for the current school year are: Bobbie A. Nicholson, president; Nelson Odoms, vice president, Bobbie J. Haywood, recording secretary; Robbie Gee, corresponding secretary; Edward Clark, treasurer; and Rosemary Pigford, parliamentarian.

Lincoln Student Studies Abroad

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 1-19-57

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa. — Charles Collins, II, is Lincoln university's (Pa.) first student to study abroad under the recently inaugurated "Junior Year Abroad" plan.

Enrolled for the study of philosophy at the University College of the Gold Coast, Collins is also believed to be the first American student to enroll, under this plan, at an African university.

Under the plan, the American student spends his junior year at some overseas institution, receiving credit toward his graduation at Lincoln. Collins is expected to return to Lincoln in September, 1957 and complete his work for graduation with his June, 1958 class.

The University College of the Gold Coast — scheduled for independence on March 6, 1957, as the new Republic of Ghana — is a new educational foundation, recently created with a physical plant already valued at more than 20 million dollars, endowment of 10 million, and a studnet body of 800. Its degrees are offered through the University of London, England, until the University College achieves full university status in the near future.

Officials of the African college report that Collins has thoroughly adjusted himself to undergraduate life; he has made many friends; and is proving himself to be "an excellent ambassador" from Lincoln university and from the U. S.

Collins himself reports that the long holidays, characteristic of British-type universities, are giving him the opportunity for extensive travel.

Was Dr. Alain Locke last Rhodes scholar?

PHILADELPHIA—Dr. Courtney Smith, American Secretary of the Rhodes Scholarship Trust, told the AFRO this week that he could not verify reports that there were no colored Rhodes Scholars on the present list.

Dr. Smith of Swarthmore College, Penn., said that he had not received full reports from the eight district committees throughout the country.

"If there are no colored persons on the present list, then there has not been a colored scholar since Dr. Alain Locke.

"There is, of course, no regulation limitation to white students only.

Indeed Cecil Rhodes provided in his will which established the scholarships that 'no student shall be qualified or disqualified for election to a scholarship on account of his race or religious opinions.'

"THE SELECTION of Rhodes scholars from the students endorsed by the various colleges and universities is not made by the Rhodes Trustees but by selection committees meeting in the 48 states and subsequently in 8 districts throughout the country.

"It is my opinion," Dr. Smith said, "as I am sure it has been that of the selection committees, that top standing colored students in both the integrated and the colored colleges and universities will be interested in the opportunity provided by the Rhodes Scholarship and will enter the competition for it.

"I have made special efforts in the leading colored colleges and universities to encourage them to do so."

Coed Wins $500 Magazine Prize

DURHAM, N. C. — A 19-year-old NCC sophomore from Chinquapin, N. C., is the winner of a $500 Readers Digest prize. An additional $500 will be given to NCC's Scholarship fund.

Gertie Lee Chasten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chasten, a farm couple with eight children, is the lucky coed.

"I am very excited and thrilled," said Miss Chasten.

She will use the money to pay her tuition and fees for the second semester at NCC which starts Feb. 2.

Miss Chasten's family, like many other farm families, is a closely knit unit. Through team work they have been able to educate two other sisters, Mrs. Willie C. Jones of LaGrange, Ga., and Miss Esther Chasten of Hartwell, Ga.

The two older sisters finished A. and T. College in Greensboro, Mrs. Jones in 1948 and Esther in 1955.

Esther has been the NCC coeds sponsor thus far this year. She will get relief next semester when Gertie Lee uses the Readers Digent fund to pay her own way for the next part of the school year.

Other members of the family are located in Detroit, Mich., Beulahsville, N. C., and Chinquapin, where there are two married brothers. One of the brothers is a farmer and the other is a packer.

Gertie Lee attended Charity High School in Rose Hill, N. C., where the principal is C. W. Dobbins. The NCC coed says she entered the Digest Contest at the suggestion of Miss Louise M. Latham, Dean of Women.

This is the first contest of any kind she ever entered.

Reading is one of her favorite hobbies but she also likes to sew and cook.

For the magazine prize she chose eight titles from the list of thirty most likely to be read.

In high school Gertie Lee was a member of the New Homemakers of America, treasurer of the sophomore and junior classes, secretary of the senior class, a member of the Student Council, and later assistant secretary of the Council. At NCC she has been active with the Women's Athletic Association and in the dormitory government program.

13 HONOR DEGREES AWARDED BY YALE

New York

Judge Hastie, Carmichael, Louisville School Head, Among Group Cited

Times. 6-11-57

By RICHARD H. PARKE

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, June 10—A Negro Judge and a Southern integrationist were honored today by Yale University.

Judge William H. Hastie of the Third District, United States Ciritu cCourt of Appeals, and Dr. Omer Carmichael, superintendent of schools in Louisville, Ky., were among thirteen recipients of honorary degrees at the university's 256th commencement.

A Doctor of Laws degree was conferred on Judge Hastie, former Governor of the Virgin Islands. He was cited as a "sensitive arbiter of social conflicts" and an exponent of the "finest tradition of Anglo-American law."

Dr. Carmichael, who last year brought about the complete integration of white and Negro children in the Louisville schools, received a Master of Arts degree. His citation said:

"You have shown how the ideals which have made this nation great may be translated into the laws of the land when men of understanding and goodwill are the translators."

Hammarskjold Honored

Other honorary degree recipients were Dag Hammarskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations; Donald A. Quarles, Deputy Secretary of Defense; Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, president of the American Red Cross and former Supreme Allied Commander in Europe; Dr. Robert F. Coheen, president-elect of Princeton University, and Sir Percy C. Spender, Australian Ambassador to the United States, all Doctors of Laws.

Also Kenneth S. Latourette, Sterlin Professor Emeritus of Missions and Oriental History at Yale, and Halford E. Luccock, Professor Emeritus of Preachin gat Yale, both Doctors of Divinity.

Also Joshua H. Burn, Professor of Pharmacology, Oxford University, and Dickinson W. Richards, Lambert Professor of Medicine, Columbia University, Doctors of Science; Hamilton Fish Armstrong, Editor of Foreign Affairs, Doctor of Letters, and Stephen C. Clark, collector and benefactor of art, Doctor of Humane Letters.

2,066 Are Graduated

Dr. A. Whitney Griswold, university president, conferred the honorary degrees at exercises on the Old Campus after academic degrees had been awarded to 2,066 graduates.

Seven thousand persons witnessed the exercises, which began with the traditional blare of trumpets from Harkness Tower overlooking the elm-shaded college green.

Just before the ceremonies, Mr. Quarles and General Gruenther took part at the commissioning of members of Yale's Army, Navy and Air Force units of the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Following are the citations for the honorary degrees:

DAG HAMMARSKJOLD, Secretary of the United Nations. Scholar and author, connoisseur of the arts, diplomat, worthy son of a great Prime Minister, your early career reflects the finest standards of public service in a democracy. Called to high office by the world community, you have shown courage, skill and resourcefulness which have won the respect and gratitude of free peoples everywhere. In a world haunted by war you symbolize mankind's unquenchable hope for peace with justice. Yale University is honored to confer upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

ROBERT FRANCIS GOHEEN, President-elect of Princeton University. Seventeen years ago you were awarded the highest token of esteem bestowed by Princeton upon a member of the senior class. In many ways, you have since caused your judges to congratulate themselves. First in the armed forces of your country, then as a classical scholar, more recently as teacher and administrator, you have steadily augmented a record of constructive service. Confident of your leadership of her sister university, Yale confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

SIR PERCY CLAUDE SPENDER, Australian Ambassador to the United States. You have been for six years not only the symbol but the instrument of unity between our two English-speaking peoples. As War Minister you stood by our side in peril; as Minister of External Affairs and the author of the Colombo Plan you helped restore an area torn by war; as a leader in the United Nations you have been outspoken in the conviction that peace and security can be gained only if nations will fight for them. Yale University is pleased that you should now join your sons in becoming her son and confers on you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

DONALD AUBREY QUARLES, one of the Yale Class of 1916, Deputy Secretary of Defense. Scientist and leader in electronic research, administrator, public servant. You have never failed to accept the call of duty. An artillery officer in the first World War, an administrator of vital military projects in the second, as Secretary of the Air Force and now second in command of the Department of Defense, you have shown special qualities of wisdom and statesmanship which bring strength to the nation and can mean peace to the world. Your Alma Mater proudly confers on you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

ALFRED M. GRUENTHER, General, United States Army, retired, president of the American National Red Cross. Today president of the American National Red Cross, yesterday Supreme Commander Allied Forces Europe. As a soldier statesman guided by the ideal of perfect performance and fulfilling it, you gained the love and admiration of men throughout NATO and became an invaluable source of allied strength and unity. As you now turn your talents to civilian duty of the highest calling, Yale confers on you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

WILLIAM HENRY HASTIE, judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Brilliant student at Amherst and Harvard, lawyer, public servant, Governor of the Virgin Islands, dean of the Howard University Law School, and now Federal Judge for the Third Circuit. Your work has earned the admiration of your peers. Skilled and creative in your employment of lega knowledge, sensitive arbiter o social conflicts, you speak foı the finest tradition of Anglo-American law. Yale University is happy to confer upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws.

DICKINSON WOODRUFF RICHARDS, of the Yale class of 1917, Lambert Professor of Medicine, Columbia University. Physician, scientist and teacher; Nobel laureate in medicine. Your courageous exploration of cardio-pulmonary functions has opened new avenues for the diagnosis of disorders of the heart and lungs and laid the foundation for significant advances in treatment. The discoveries you have made will mean longer and more productive lives for millions of people throughout the world. Your Alma Mater rejoice that it can add one more honor to those you have already received and confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Science.

JOSHUA HAROLD BURN, Professor of Pharmacology, Oxford University. Your patient and precise research has brought new appreciation of the action of drugs on the nervous system. During the Second World War you strove to advance medical research through British and American collaboration. You furthered your diplomatic efforts by sending as ambassadors extraorddinary the children of your Oxford colleagues to reside among us in New Haven. For your varied contributions to medicine and society, Yale confers on you the degree of Doctor of Science.

KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE, of the Yale class of 1906, Sterling Professor Emeritus of Missions and Oriental History at Yale. Historian of Christianity's triumphant march through twenty centuries and many lands, author of ecclesiastical history in world perspective. Devoted servant of Yale for more than thirty years, in the College, the Divinity School, and the Graduate School, your scholarship has commanded attention around the world. Prodigious writer, master of personal discipline, quiet man of prayer, your Alma Mater rejoices that you belong to her as well as to Christendom, and confers on you the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

HALFORD EDWARD LUCCOCK, Professor Emeritus of at Yale. Preacher, teacher, author. Your contributions to the American pulpit have been legion. For twenty-five years you sent out from the Divinity School a brilliant procession of ministers both to indict and to make glad the churches of America, and your books and magazine columns have kept them inspirited and refreshed. Recognizing you as one of the most widely known members of the Yale faculty and most highly regarded minister of the Gospel in your generation, Yale proudly confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

HAMILTON FISH ARMSTRONG, editor of Foreign Affairs. Author and editor, you have enlightened the American public in their understanding of international relations. As a public servant, you have discharged with distinction important assignments entrusted to you by our Government both here and abroad. For about thirty years you have made Foreign Affairs the outstanding journal in its field. For a lifetime of dedication to high principle and sound policy, Yale University confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Letters.

STEPHEN C. CLARK of the Yale Class of 1903, collector and benefactor of art. By quiet example, you have taught two generations high standards of judgment, enjoyment and service in the cause of art and education. Your life and good works have borne out the truth that whatsoever things are beautiful are of good report. Your Alma Mater, which, through its gallery and school, was the first university in this country to wed the fine arts to higher learning, salutes you in the name of this tradition and confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

OMER CARMICHAEL, superintendent of schools, Lousville, Ky. You have faithfully served the youth of your native South as teacher and administrator in their public schools. Your statesmanship has been an example to the nation. You have shown how the ideals which have made this nation great may be translated into laws of the land when men of understanding and good will are the translators. Yale takes special pleasure in conferring on you the degree of Master of Arts.

Jackson College Instructor Gets Offer From Cornell University

Advocate Jackson, Miss. Sat. 6-15-57

Mrs. Cleopatra D. Thompson, Associate Professor of Education at Jackson State College, has been notified by Dr. Alfred L. Baldwin, Head of the Department of Child Development and Family Relationships at Cornell University, of an offer of a graduate assistantship for the academic year 1957-58. The assistantship offer is in the practice teaching program as an assistant to Miss Helen Wardeberg in the supervision of undergraduates. It is a policy of this department to renew the assistantship for students whose work and academic progress are satisfactory.

Mrs. Thompson finished undergraduate work at Alcorn A & M College, received the M. A. Degree from Atlanta University and has done further study at the University of Chicago and Cornell University. She has given many years of fruitful service to boys and girls as well as men and women of the state and nation. Teaching experiences include work at Okolona College, Alcorn College, Rust College, and for the past 11 years Jackson State College. The recipient holds membership in numerous professional, educational, civic, and lay organizations. Among these are memberships in the National Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development, and life membership in the National Education Association.

On the social side, Mrs. Thompson is a member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, and President of the Jackson Alumni Chapter. A few honors bestowed upon her are: recipient of General Education Board Scholarship, 1935-36; grants-in-aid from the Southern Fellowship Fund, summers of 1954 and 1955; and listed in Who's Who In American Education.

Texas School Has First Mixed Graduates

Negro Boy Is Class President

San Antonio, Tex., June 10—An integrated class of Negroes and Whites were graduated from a junior high school for the first time in the San Antonio public school system. One of the Negro graduates presided over the commencement exercises as president of the graduating class.

The class president was 15-year-old Robert Hasson, son of T/Sgt. and Mrs. Willie R. Hasson of Lackland Air Force Base here. Also in the graduating class was one other Negro boy, 15-year-old Don Hill.

Advocate 6-15-57

The school principal, George C. Vidrine, said young Hasson had been elected head of the class "because he is very popular and because he takes part in all athletics and school events."

Advocate 6-15-57

There were more than 100 students in the graduating class at the Longfellow Junior High School.

Negro Tenant Save Children From Fire

INVERNESS, Miss., March 3. —Herbert Franklin, 34-year-old Negro tenant on the Crosby Simmons plantation near Inverness, was badly burned Sunday afternoon when he rescued two Negro children from a burning house.

Franklin drove up to the home of Charlie Wallace on the Doyce Welch farm near here shortly after the fire began. Six of the eight Wallace children ran safely from the home, leaving Victor Ruth Wallace, 12, who is crippled, and Katie Lou Wallace, 6 months, behind.

Attendants at South Sunflower County Hospital said Franklin ran through flames at the front door of the home, grabbed up the two children and ran out a back door. The children were unhurt. A chimney at the home fell on Franklin's 1955 Pontiac, which also burned.

Parents of the children were away from home.

Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund at $700 Mark!

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sparked by a donation of $201.05 from 171 residents of East Chicago, Gary and Hammond, Ind., and with scattering donations from other sources, the Robert Cain Scholarship Fund passed the $700 mark this week.

Young Cain, who told The Courier that he prefers Tennessee A. and I. State University in his home state must now complete arrangements to enter that institution.

HIS MOTHER has returned to the family household following her latest hospital operation, and other members of the family are prepared to carry on.

Things are quiet in Clinton these days. Bobby Cain did the job asked of him. He faced jeering crowds, hostile groups.

He kept his head high and his mouth closed.

He took abuse and insults . . . to become the first Negro to be graduated from an integrated high school in his home state.

He's been widely acclaimed, and deservedly so.

OUR GOOD FRIEND, Edgar Nicholson of Jersey City, N. J., sent in another $10 from friends in Brooklyn and Washington, D. C., together with this information:

"I do not know which college young Cain wishes to enter, but with his I. Q., he should have no trouble getting into any of them."

(P. S.—Nicholson also sent in $2.50 for another Jersey City friend.)

A/2c Frank Jones, APO 328—"I'm mighty glad to help Robert, because indirectly, he's helping all of us. What you are doing for Robert raises a question in my mind. Why not try to get 200,000 Negroes to donate $1 each yearly . . . for a mammoth scholarship fund for deserving students?

"I can't give much, but you'd be sure of getting $2 or more each month from me."

DR. JAMES H. SAMPSON, pharmacist, New York. — "Enclosed please find my contribution . . . Since approximately 70 per cent or more of Negro college graduates have had to pursue their studies under adverse conditions, your paper certainly has set an example of his praise as the result of the interest shown in behalf of this young man.

"Your approach is one of twofold purpose, since it not only makes those of us who have received degrees cognizant of the plight of this family, it gives every reader a chance to do his share, as well as pass the word around. You can depend on my contacting my friends and associates."

THIS, DEAR READERS, is the $201.05 letter:

Edgar Holmes, 3622 Pulaski St., East Chicago, Ind.—"My first thought after reading your account of Robert Cain's predicament was 'What can I do to help?' I knew that my individual donation would be but a mere pittance, as compared to what I would like to do.

"It then occurred to me that others I knew probably felt the same way. That is when I hit upon the idea of asking them. As you see from this money order, I was right.

"I hope more people in more communities will do the same."

Bobby Cain Jr. At Tenn. State

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 10-5-57 P. 12

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Bobby Cain, with his education partially guaranteed with almost $1,000 from Courier readers and an additional $1,000 scholarship from the Education Commission of the Elks Grand Lodge, has enrolled at Tennessee A. and I. State University.

Bobby is remembered as one of the central figures in the disorders accompanying the integration of the high school in Clinton, Tenn., during 1956.

Bobby was graduated from the newly integrated school as one of the members of a class of 88.

His cousin, Betty Gadson, is a senior at A&I University.

Bobby has been housed in the newest of the men's dormitory at the Nashville institution.

BOBBIE IS ONE of six Cain offspring. His sister, Hattie, 13, is slated to enter the Clinton High School as a freshman next year.

Cain has chosen sociology as his major field of study.

Dr. Albert A. Thompson, who heads the A&I sociology department, said: "At my first meeting with Mr. Cain, I was impressed with his eagerness to learn, his ready responsiveness to suggestions and his warm personality.

"I look forward eagerly to our future association as student and teacher."

Scholarship Fund for Bobby Cain Nearing $1,000 Mark as Contributions Continue

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Oct. 8-17-57

An Ohio couple has sent a $100 donation to the Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund . . . and as of the end of last week, a total of $830.90 has been sent to send the Tennessee youth (Clinton) to the college of his choice.

With the fund nearing the $1,000 mark, officials of the fund have set their immediate goal for $1,500.

This amount, plus the $1,000 scholarship given by the Elks' educational department, will assure a total of $2,500 for the youngster.

NOW THAT SUCCESS is in sight for the fund, efforts are under way to have young Cain enter the school of his choice. Young Cain has his preferences, but details will not be divulged until final plans for his further education have been completed.

Here are some of the letters received from subscribers to the fund.

Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Nichols, Marion, Ohio—"Here is our contribution to a worthy cause. We want him (Bobby Cain) to know when he enters college that he can write us of his progress and his problems.

"We will be happy to send him little things like clothing and to remember him on holidays, the same as if he were our own son, since we don't have any children."

WILLIAM K. BELL, New York, N. Y.—"I have been reading The Courier for more than a quarter of a century. I have witnessed the many wonderful things your great newspaper has done over the years for the advancement of the race, but this Robert E. Cain Scholarship Fund is just about the climax of all your good deeds.

Any young man with the courage and stamina of Bobby Cain, to brave the storm of Clinton High School and to come through, needs the encouragement of us all. Also thank God for men like the Rev. Paul Turner. He not only preaches Christianity, he practices it."

Mrs. Addie May Galimore, Pueblo, Col. — "Enclosed please find money order for $8.00—six for a one-year subscription and two for Robert E. Cain."

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Saunders, Central YMCA, Philadelphia, Pa.—"Enclosed is a contribution to the Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund. Please credit same to Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, 1835 Centre Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa."

Capt. Albert L. Walker, U. S. Army—"Please accept this contribution for Bobby Cain. This is a very worthy cause and my best wishes go out to this fine young man."

C. Vernette Grimes, Pine Bluff, Ark.—"I am happy to add something to the Robert Cain Scholarship Fund. I think this young man deserves encouragement. I believe he has what it takes to succeed in college."

Cain Scholarship Fund Praised by Minister

Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 7-27-57

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—"That's a mighty wonderful thing for your paper to do! Bobby is a mighty deserving boy!" These were the enthusiastic words of the Rev. Paul Turner, 34, Arkansas-born martyr of the Clinton, terror last year. It was the Rev. Mr. Turner who personally marched down "Foley Hill," the Negro section of Clinton, along with two other heroic white men, to escort Bobby Cain and six schoolmates to their classes at embattled Clinton High School.

The Rev. Mr. Turner was speaking about The Courier's Bobby Cain Scholarship Fund drive, now in progress, to help the young lad who was the first Negro to graduate from the integrated high school.

FOR DOING what he did on Dec. 4, 1956, when he took the students to the school, the courageous white minister was attacked by a mob afterwards and brutally beaten on a Clinton street.

The Negro citizens of Clinton described him to The Courier as "that man God sent us."

The Courier's drive to raise funds to help Bobby Cain go to college is under way now, and everyone can help by sending a contribution to the fund.

Just as Rev. Turner faced a problem, so did Bobby Cain on the inside of that school. The young lad faced his problem, looked it squarely in the eye and then licked it. By grim perseverance, sacrifice and pure grit, he completed his courses and became the first Negro to graduate.

AS THE WEEK ended, another $152.02 sent the Scholarship Fund soaring near the $500 mark.

Sparked by Detroit, Mich., and Jersey City, N. J. . . . and with other sections of the country adding their share . . . the pulsating heart of America's Negro citizens continues to manifest itself.

Mrs. Lillie Thomas, Denever, Col.—"I think it's an honor to help this brave young man, even in a small way. I pray God's richest blessings for your success."

Anderson H. Brown, Charleston, W. Va. (outstanding realtor) —"I think any young man who has gone through as much as he (Robert Cain) did for a high school education deserves to have all the support needed to further continue his education.

"I am more than happy to contribute to such a worthy cause, and you should be commended for taking up such a worth-while project."

Catherine Lomax, Buffalo, N. Y. —"May God's blessings rest upon young Bobby Cain. I've been a subscriber to The Courier for over 20 years. The good you do is immeasurable. You are such a blessing to our race."

S. Alexander, Chicago, Ill.—"I am very proud to do my bit towards this most worthy cause, and I do pray God will bless your effort."

Virgil Clay, Houston, Tex.—"It is a source of deepest pleasure to contribute to the education of such a fine young man."

Edgar Nicholson, Jersey City, N. J.—"I've been noting with interest the way the public is responding to the scholarship fund, and I'm somewhat disappointed at the size of the contributions.

"My people hate to give. They have money for everything they THINK they want, but they have NOT learned how to help needy causes. They are donating like this is a penny ante game.

"I don't mean to cast aspersions on contributors if it is their 'Widow's Mite.' But I have a sneaky feeling they are cheating. What do you think of the idea of contacting some prominent people in different cities and asking them to ask their friends for donations to the fund?

"I showed The Courier to four friends of mine and requested donations from them. They responded in the following manner: James K. Knight, $25; Fred Martin, $25; J. E. White, $25; Charles Alston, $5."

Lucretia Blackstone, Washington, D. C.—This is my contribution to the Robert E. Cain scholarship fund. Lots of luck."

Scholarship Fund For Clinton Lad Beginning to Grow

Courier Sat. 6-29-57

Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 2

America is opening its heart . . . and its pocketbook . . . to Bobby Cain, the 17-year-old Tennessee youth, who is determined to complete what the U. S. Supreme Court started.

From far-off Bremerton, Washington, in the heart of the great Northwest . . . from the Nation's Capital . . . from Louisiana and Mississippi . . . from New Jersey and Virginia and Georgia, scattered reports indicate the general trend.

From a one-cent donor to a $50 money order, the funds are beginning to roll in. And accompanying the contributions are expressions which portray the spirit behind the donations.

Bobby

"I am pledging $5, or maybe more," writes Joseph Thomas of New Orleans, La.

"I am beginning with one cent, but a hope to boost my pledge to 600 or 700 pennies," a Louisiana mother writes. "How much depends on how my money comes in and how my bills come in."

A married woman and a single woman from Washington, D.C., combined their efforts to send in two dollars, with these encouraging words:

"In response to your appeal, enclosed please find check for two dollars for the Robert E. Cain Jr. Fund, in recognition of his outstanding courage and stamina. Much success to your good paper and this worth-while effort." Signed: Mrs. Olive M. Wesley and Miss F. Louise Madella.

And from Jersey City, N. J., this pointed message:

"I am pleased to contribute to this most deserving young man's scholarship. Enclosed you will find money order for

Captain Challenges Negro Groups to Aid Cain Scholarship Fund

A slow-down in scholarship donations for young Bobby Cain, plus a bristling letter from a retired Army officer, highlight the week's activities in the scholarship fund drive.

Young Cain, who became the central figure in the now-celebrated Clinton, Tenn., trials . . . which culminated in the conviction of seven whites last week . . . has told The Courier where he wants to go to college.

He's anxious to attend Tennessee A. and I. University in his own home state.

BUT WHILE contributions fell off, the tone of the letters received are strongly indicative of a growing criticism of donors.

Capt. W. J. Ayer, a retired Army officer, writes:

"If some of the Southern white people in Clinton, Tenn., tried so desperately to keep Robert Cain from entering and subsequently graduating from their high school, why can't all Negroes now meet this challenge by contributing to the Robert E. Cain Scholarship Fund and send this brave lad through college.

"Why do Negroes spend so much money giving parties, entertaining, buying swell cars, mink, etc. . . . yet appear so slow to rally to their own cause and help themselves. They are kidding nobody but themselves.

"Some people have always said that 'the Negro buys what he wants and begs for what he needs.' It's high time we began to disprove this. Therefore, let all organizations, clubs, Greek-letter fraternities and sororities and individuals as well, rally around and contribute abundantly to the scholarship fund. Negroes must answer this challenge by sending Bob to college."

RACHEL McMILLAN, Chicago, Ill.—"Here is a small token of my admiration for your courageous stand in advocating a scholarship fund for Robert Cain. May this token aid him in making great strides to higher honors."

MRS. JESSE ADAMS, Jasper, Tex.—"Here is my contribution to this wonderful cause. I hope every colored citizen will respond to the aid of this courageous young man."

CECIL M. SAMPLES, Denver, Col.—"It would be swell if 5,000 people would send in one dollar each. I hope this will help. Lots of luck."

MISS SANTIE M. BURKHEAD, Columbus, Ohio—"I believe this lad will succeed if given an opportunity. He has already shown much courage. I want him to know that I, as well as others, are praying for him."

WEBSTER MARTIN, Richmond, Calif.—"This is my first donation. I am wishing you a successful, speedy campaign. Will send more money later."

MARGARET ROGERS, Walhalla, S. C.—"Enclosed is my dollar. I wish I had more to send, to help such a brave boy. I know what he went through within the school, just any place down here. May God bless and keep him."

Baltimore, Md., was heard from through Roosevelt Hall, who sent $3.00 and wrote:

"Please accept this donation. If I had more, I would be glad to contribute to a young man who deserves more. I wish him the most progressive success."

Heartwarming and significant is the expression contained in a letter received from Clement Hawkins, Washington, D. C.

"This is my first money for the Robert Cain Fund," he writes. "I will send more later. If the colored people of America gave him a million dollars, they could never repay him for what he did for colored America."

And from Lewis T. Walker of Bremerton, Wash.:

"Let's all support the Robert E. Cain Jr. Fund by contributing our $$$'s for his education. I hope this $3.00 will help get him through any college he wants to attend. I hope to see The Pittsburgh Courier fill up its pages every week with names of those who are aiding in this worthy cause."

And so the letters run.

For the sake of the record, a college education is an expensive thing. The $1,000 Elk Scholarship . . . divided over a period of four years . . . is mighty helpful.

But a lot more money than that is needed.

Robert Cain and his parents agreed to The Courier Fund proposal only after they found out it was impossible to get what Robert wants so badly in any other way.

The family is poor . . . but very, very proud.

Young Cain's father told this newspaper, with a catch in his throat, that if there was any way he could earn the money himself to underwrite his son's education, he would work his fingers to the bone.

"I'm a carpenter, and a good one," he told us. "But when Robert went into that school, it became harder and harder for me to get steady work."

Equally as determined is young Robert's mother.

She's one of the finest women we've ever met . . . a typical mother, with the courage and saintliness which are the earmark of true wifehood and motherhood.

Despite her recurring illnesses, she meets problems with a fortitude and calm acceptance of adversities which which tear at your heartstrings.

Mrs. Cain wants no favors. She and her family . . . all of them . . . are ready to work for what they need.

But willingness to work is one thing . . . and finding the work is another.

Clinton, Tenn., will never forget Robert Cain.

And if Negro America responds to The Courier appeal . . . Clinton, Tenn., can well live to be proud of Robert Cain, the first Negro in that state to graduate from an integrated high school.

Philander Smith Professor Gets His Doctorate

LITTLE ROCK Ark. — Eugene Rone Arnold executive director of the Project for Improved Utilization of Teacher Resources at Philander Smith college received the Doctor of Education degree from the University of Pittsburgh, at its winter commencement exercises Feb. 1.

Mr. Arnold who has an extensive background as a social researcher came to Philander Smith in September 1952 as associate professor of education and coordinator of general education. He holds the M.Ed. from the University of Cincinnati where he served on a University Fellowship under Dr. Carter V. Good dean of Teachers' college at Cincinnati; studied toward the B.D. at Colgate-Rochester Divinity school and completed two years' work toward the Ph.D. at Ohio State university.

His varied research projects include the following:

Social research under Dr. Charles S. Johnson world-recognized sociologist and Dr. Robert E. Parks at Fisk university; special research with the Tennessee Valley Authority; work with the United States Public Health department during the war; special investigator for the California Welfare department at Los Angeles and a Survey of Religious Activities in Liberal Arts Colleges Composing the National Council of Churches.

The latter study which comprises his doctor's dissertation revealed that religious activities in these colleges is no less present than in former year; in fact they are more pronounced. The frequent comment that they are less vigorous comes from judging them in terms of traditional patterns. In these colleges, religious activities are expressed more in action and less in words.

Prior to coming to Philander Smith, he served as director of the Remedial Reading clinic for the public schools of Gary, Ind. He also taught at West Virginia State, Virginia State, Claflin (Orangesburg, S. C.), and Clark (Atlanta) colleges.

The special project, which he now heads is financed by a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Mr. Arnold is an ordained Methodist minister, as is his father, the Rev. Frank R. Arnold, who is pastor of Asbury Methodist church, Columbus, Ohio. Both father and son are affiliated with the Lexington Annual conference.

Morgan professor found dead in bed

BALTIMORE

Dr. Cleveland James Franks, 47, associate professor of science education at Morgan State College, was found dead in bed at his home, 2401 Mosher St. on Sunday morning.

His wife, Mrs. Mary Nash Franks, told the AFRO: "We were up together at six to give the baby a bottle. We ate grapefruit. I had one half, and he had the other.

"About nine o'clock when the boys got up to get ready for Sunday school, and a student called on the telephone. I went up to call him and couldn't rouse him. . . ."

The body was taken to the city morgue to await an autopsy.

Dr. Franks had not been ill, his wife said. College officials said he was in the classroom on Friday.

FUNERAL SERVICES are tentatively set for Friday at Enon Baptist Church. The Arlington Phillips Funeral Home is in charge. A native of Darlington, S.C., Franks was educated at Morehouse College where he received his A.B. degree; Nw York University where he earned an A.M., and Columbia University where he won another A.M. degree and his doctorate in education.

He has been a member of the Morgan faculty since 1947.

He and his wife would have celebrated their 15th wedding anniversary on March 22.

Quiz-Winning Girls Miss Only 2 Questions

News Queries About Haiti, Morse Stump Sacred Heart-Central Team

A team of girls answered 16 of 18 questions correctly yesterday in defeating a team of boys as the weekly quiz show, "Teens View The News," over WHAS-TV prepared to start semifinal competition.

Jo Ann Elder of Sacred Heart Academy and Jane Clay of Central High School won over James Hornback of Theodore Ahrens Trade High School and Richard Bizot of Trinity High School.

Only two teams competed yesterday instead of the usual three, but they wrestled with 18 questions instead of the 10 required before.

The teams stayed on even terms during the first three questions but the boys got only half credit on a question about actor Erich von Stroheim, who died last week. They lost another 5 points in Round 5 when they failed to name all the first four winners in the state track meet at Lexington.

The boys stumbled again and lost 10 points on Round 9 when they were unable to report on action against political posters along county-road rights of way. The girls pulled away steadily after that to win, 160 to 115.

The winners missed questions having to do with censorship in Haiti and Senator Wayne Morse's verbal attack on President Eisenhower last week.

The quizmaster was Bob Clark, Courier-Journal staff writer, who congratulated the girls at the end of the program and consoled the losers with a pen-and-pencil set. The winners will return later in a semifinal round.

The program is sponsored by The Courier-Journal and The Louisville Times to encourage young people to read newspapers carefully and consistently.

Danforth Teacher Grants Available

Wall Atlanta, Ga. Ai-Sat. 10-19-57

Dr. John H. Lewis, president of Morris Brown College, announced recently the availability of the Danforth Teacher Grants for 1957-59.

These grants will be offered in 1958 to approximately fifty men and women, without bar of race or color, who give promise of becoming college teachers of unusual strength and competence, and are prepared to engage upon a twelve-month program of graduate study including the academic year, 1958 or 1959. Those receiving the grants will be chosen on the basis of potential excellence as teachers, outstanding academic ability, personality congenial to the classroom, and integrity and character, including serious inquiry within the Christian tradition. Consideration will be given to applicants with deep rootage in some non-Christian faith and willingness to participate actively in a predominantly Christian program.

Those receiving Danforth Teacher Grants are free to enroll for study at the American university of their choice. They are expected to attend a Danforth Foundation Conference on Teaching (expenses cared for) August 18-24, 1958.

These appointments will allow the Danforth Teacher one-half his salary for the academic year (usually 9½ months) plus one-sixth of his salary for each dependent listed in his 1957 income tax return, up to a total of his full salary, or not exceeding $4,600.00. The minimum grant is $2,100.00. In addition, the Danforth Teacher is given tuition and official fees at the graduate school of his choice.

18 Nations to Share in Exchange Fellowships

Eighteen countries will take part in the 1958 program of Eisenhower Exchange Fellowships, Inc., it was announced yesterday by J. Hampton Barnes, executive director.

Countries participating include Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Ghana, Greece, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, Spain, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, Belgian Congo, Ceylon, Morocco, Rhodesia and Saudi Arabia, the latter five for the first time.

FOUNDED IN 1953

The fellowships were founded in 1953 to promote an exchange of mature national experts. The purpose of the program is to foster a better understanding between the United States and foreign countries. It is financed entirely by private contributions.

The fellows from the foreign countries, all experts in their fields, will be chosen by a binational committee in their own country and later approved by a fellowship board.

WILL START IN FALL

Those selected for next year's program will arrive in the United States this fall and spend from eight to 10 months studying activities of interest to them.

Currently, there are 14 fellows in this country while three Americans are visiting abroad, two of them in South America and the other in Europe.

According to Barnes, the fellow touring Europe, James A McCain, president of Kansas State College, is expected to visit Communist Poland during his 10-month stay. Barring an unforeseen development, McCain will be the first American fellow to visit a Communist country.

Thomas B. McCabe, president of the Scott Paper Co., Chester, is chairman of the fellowships, with national headquarters at 256 S. 16th st.

Six of this year's Eisenhower Exchange Fellowship appointees, accompanied by their wives, talk over their plans in the organization's offices at 256 S. 16th st. Standing are the fellows and seated in front of them, their wives. From the left are Mr. and Mrs. William Shepherd-Wilson, of Rhodesia; Mr. and Mrs. Omar Tusin, of Indonesia; Mr. and Mrs. Chitrabhanu M. Fernando, of Ceylon; Mr. and Mrs. George Contogeorgis, of Greece; Mr. and Mrs. Silas R. A. Dodu, of Ghana, and Mr. and Mrs. Abdullah Sulaiman, of Iraq.

McEwen, Cain to get Elk scholarships

Afro-American P. 14 Feb 6-8-57

PHILADELPHIA—Two of the approximately 50 scholarships to be given by the Elks this year will go to students who have been casualties in the fight of colored people in the United States for full civil rights.

George W. Lee, grand commissioner of education for the Elks, announced this week that scholarship awards would go to Ernest McEwen of Oxford, Miss., expelled from Alcorn College for leading a student protest against an anti-NAACP teacher, and Bobby Cain, of Clinton, Tenn., the first student to graduate from the high school integrated there last fall with some turmoil.

IN 1954 the Elks Department of Education presented scholarships to the five children who were plaintiffs in the Supreme Court case against segregation in the public schools.

Last year at the National Oratorical Contest in Los Angeles, in which both white and colored students participated, Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, who fought so valiantly against discrimination in the University of Alabama was granted a $1,000 scholarship.

The grand commissioner stated that the National Oratorical Contest this year, which will be held in Philadelphia on Aug. 26 to celebrate Booker T. Washington's Contennial, will be a highly contested affair between white and colored students.

WINS ELKS' $1,000—Alger Vernon Boswell Jr., 16-year-old Pearl High School senior, Nashville, Tenn., won first place and the $1,000 scholarship in the Elks' oratorical contest in Region 5, held last week in Memphis. He was vying with contestants from Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Arkansas and Alabama. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. A. V. Boswell. Dr. Boswell is vice president of Tenessee State University.

Each of the youngsters received a $1,000 scholarship from Elks' Educational Department, headed by Lieut. George Lee of Memphis.

Elks Give Scholarsh To 50 College Students

Journal Tribune

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The Elks Department of Education has completed its list of 50 students for its scholarship roll for 1957. These young men and women were sent checks last week representing partial payment for $1,000 scholarships granted to each of htem.

The announcement of the list of recipients of scholarships was made in Memphis by George W. Lee, Grand Commissioner of Education. Lee stated that, the new program provided scholarships for students of all races who suffer from the lack of opportunity or the blight of poverty.

"WE ought to watch, Lee stated, for our genius children and at the expense of all of us, if by no other way, we ought to develop those children and make them feel responsible to their own people so that they will not senselessly use what has been given them for selfish ends, but for the good of their people and their country.

Our country today faces a severe shortage of engineers and technically trained personnel. In the decade from 1950 to 1960 the Soviet Union will graduate 1,200,000 scientist and engineers compared to 900,000 in the United States, unless we move all the barries in education. "Russian scientific man power might well out number ours in many key areas."

Elks Scholarship Payments Sent To 50 Men, Women

To the beat of native drums, a Fulbright medical student was feted and praised yesterday before his return to 76,000 patients on a remote Nigerian plateau. Within a month, Dr. Xto Gbelokoto Okojie will be ministering to the needs of fellow Africans at the hospital he founded seven years ago.

Apprenticed to a primitive bush doctor in his youth, Dr. Okojie later studied at the Nigeria School of Medicine. Yesterday he and his hospital were the beneficiaries of a fund-raising program at the Hotel Theresa, West 125th Street and Seventh Avenue.

For the last year Dr. Okojie has been a postgraduate student of surgery at the New York University - Bellevue Medical Center. At his hospital in the thatched-hut village of Irrua, about 300 miles north of Lagos, the nation's capital, he will apply his newly learned skills to intestinal obstructions and obstetrics—the bulk of his practice.

Times 8-20-57

With the help of his wife, a trained nurse, Dr. Okojie wants to expand his facilities to care for the 33,000 outpatients and 1,200 inpatients who use his iron-roofed hospital each year. In addition, he is responsible for the well-being of 40,000 children in 251 government schools.

Miss Hill has chosen the University of Michigan for her advance studies in English and literature. Born in Rosebud, Texas, Miss Hill attended elementary and high school in Waco, Texas, where she resides with her mother at 705 Orman ave.

President of the Bishop YWCA, editor-in-chief of the college paper and active in other campus affairs, Miss Hill maintained a 2.9 average out of a possible 3-point maximum during her four years of undergraduate work.

A resident of Harlan, Ky., where she completed elementary school, Miss Wood attended high school in St. Paul, Minn. During her four years at Knoxville College, Miss Wood has maintained a consistently high scholastic record while working as clerk-typist in the office of the registrar. Her summer jobs have ranged from film splicing to serving as a counselor for 9-to-12-year-olds at a summer camp. Miss Wood plans to pursue graduate studies in psychiatric social work at the University of Chicago.

Miss Watkins, whose home is 177 Lemington ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., will study social group work at Western Reserve university. During her four years at Tuskegee, Miss Watkins consistently maintained a place at the top of her class.

Miss Watkins earned part of her college expenses as a student assistant in the Tuskegee Library. On campus she served as an officer of the Tuskegee Chapter of Kappa Alpha Mu, the honorary scholarship society.

The Florina Lasker Fellowships, initiated by the trustees of the late social worker's estate, have been awarded annually since 1951. The United Negro College Fund administers the $25,000 trust fund established to aid the education of Negro women. Prior to her death in 1949, Florina Lasker served as a sponsor of the College Fund's New York Women's Division.

SCHOLAR — Miss Nancy Randolph, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Randolph, Boston, Mass., has received a $1,800 Mental Health Scholarship to Smith College School of Social Work. Miss Randolph will do her field work placement in Rochester, N. Y. A Boston University graduate, she is a Delta soror.

$4 Million To Be Awarded

EVANSTON, Ill. — The most intensive talent hunt in America's history began Tuesday, Oct. 22, with the testing of 300,000 senior students in 14,000 high schools. The examination, called the "Scholarship Qualifying Test," was the first hurdle in the 1958 National Merit Scholarship Program. More than $4 million in Merit Scholarships, including those granted by some 70 business and industrial companies, was at stake.

Tuesday's test was a high level college aptitude-type examination, designed to measure the differences among students of high verbal and quantitative ability, and to predict their chances of success in college. Administration began at 9 a. m. and last for two hours.

The 7,500 seniors with the highest scores in the test will enter the Semi-finals of the Merit Program, where further selection will take place. The Semifinalists will be identified in early December, and the actual winners of Merit Scholarships, expected to exceed 800, will be announced about May 1, 1958.

The nationwide competition is conducted by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation of Evanston, Ill., on behalf of companies, foundations, professional societies, and even individuals who sponsor the awards.

Merit Scholarships are named after the companies and other private groups that provide them, the largest sponsor being the Sears-Roebuck Foundation, which awards 100 of these scholarships annually at a total investment of $500,000.

The sponsoring organizations include such nationally known names as International Business Machines, National Distillers and Chemical Corporation, F. W. Woolworth co., Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., McGraw-Hill, B. F. Goodrich, Time Inc., Gulf Oil and many others.

John M. Stalnaker president of NMSC. in congratulating the high school principals responsible for the enormous turnout for Tuesday's test, pointed out the ever-increasing need for identifying and helping able young people.

"Events of recent weeks on the international scene have simply reaccented the importance of identifying and educating our brightest people. The snowballing demands for able and highly trained experts in all phases of our society, and the need to seek them out, leads us, inevitably, to our schools. Here, under development, are the scientists engineers, and teachers who will determine what the future will be."

A Merit Scholarship provides its winner with the funds he needs to attend the college of his choice for four years. Family resources, summer earnings of the student, and college costs are all considered in determining the amount that accompanies each award. The grants to Merit Scholars vary from a minimum honorary award of $100 a yeor for the four college years to over $2,000 a year in case of great need. The average student's stipend is about $650 a year.

Each Merit Scholar selects the accredited college he prefers to attend. Since tuition does not cover the actual cost of educating a student, each Merit scholarship includes an educational supplement for the college to help it defray its costs in educating the Merit Scholar.

The National Merit Scholarship Program was begun in 1955, based on grants of $20 million for the Ford Foundation and $500 thousand from the Carnegie Corporation of New York. The program's nationwide search for students of high potential makes it possible for companies to devote their scholarship funds entirely to able students and colleges and avoid the overhead costs of holding separate competitions. About 1,400 Merit Scholars selected in the 1956 and 1957 programs are now in college.

Scholarship Grants To Help Negro Students This Fall

Dubuque P.1 Thurs. 7-18-57

Des Moines Iowa

New York, N. Y.—The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students has granted scholarship awards totalling $16,400 that will enable 53 outstanding Negro high school seniors to enter 45 interracial colleges this fall. The recipients come from 19 states, including 10 in the south, and the District of Columbia. Announcement of the awards was made by New York State Rent Commissioner Robert C. Weaver, NSSFNS Supplementary Scholarship Fund Trustees Chairman.

In addition, Mr. Weaver reported that 12 other Negro students entering non-segregated colleges will receive $4,000 in similar supplementary scholarships secured for them by NSSFNS from a cooperating Foundation. An announcement will be made next month of renewals of supplementary scholarships to Negro upperclassmen helped by NSSFNS since their freshman year.

Academic Promise

Because of their academic promise, the 65 new recipients of supplementary scholarships have also won $70,000 in scholarship aid this year from a representative cross-section of the nations colleges. These colleges include such institutions as the University of California, Colgate, Michigan, Oberlin, Radcliffe, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, St. Louis University and Swarthmore. The supplementary scholarships, however, are necessary to bridge the gap between college scholarships, modest parental resources, summer earnings, and the students' total financial needs.

Talented Seniors

The supplementary grants are a final step in the annual effort of NSSFNS to seek out and help talented Negro high school seniors who might not otherwise continue their education. In the course of this work, the organization also assists many hundreds of seniors through its advisory service which brings qualified students together with appropriate colleges.

As a result of its efforts, the National Scholarship Service and Fund has helped more than 4,600 Negro students to enter over 300 interracial colleges and universities during the past nine years. Total scholarship aid of over $1,600,000 was secured by NSSFNS for these students of which $1,300,000 came from college and other sources and $300,000 in direct supplementary grants. This year NSSFNS counselors screened more than 1,400 high school seniors of whom at least 600 will be attending interracial colleges in September.

Among the students is an Iowan, Constance L. Fox, 1402 South Seventh Street, Council Bluffs, now a student at Parsons College, Fairfield, Iowa.

57 Students Receive Scholarship Renewals

Courier-Post P.3 Sat 8-24

NEW YORK—Renewal by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students of $16,000 in supplementary grants to 57 Negro upperclassmen at 44 interracial colleges has been announced by New York State Rent Commissioner Robert C. Weaver, chairman of the NSSFNS Supplementary Scholarship Fund trustees.

Dr 8-23-5 Call P.5 Kansas City Mo

MELBA V. ZACHERY

Miss Zachery, a 1955 graduate of Lincoln high school, is now a junior at DePauw university. A pre-law major, she was recently elected to serve on the senate of the school's student governing body for two more years.

While at Lincoln Miss Zachery was active in many extra-curricular activities yet she maintained a high scholastic record. In 1953 she was elected mayor of Kansas City for the annual city-wide high school day.

She was judged first place winner of the school, area, city and regional American Legion oratorical contest in 1954. Last year she won first place in an oratorical contest held at DePauw and second place in the National College oratorical contest at Notre Dame.

Miss Zachery is also a member of the DePauw university choir and Orchesis, an honorary dance group at the university. Orchesis last year appeared on the Ed Sullivan show before leaving for a tour of Europe.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Zachery.

Wedgeworth, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wedgeworth Sr., is a junior at Wabash college, Crawfordsville, Ind., and an outstanding basketball player.

He was graduated in 1955 from Lincoln high school where he also played fine basketball.

Supplement School Aid

The renewed grants supplement funds in college scholarship aid which the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students orginally helped the students secure from their respective colleges. Since most of the students come from low income families, the annual supplementary scholarships are necessary to balance their total educational budgets.

The supplementary scholarships are part of an annual NSSFNS program to find and assist talented Negro students who might not otherwise go through college. During the last nine years the organization has helped some 4,700 Negro students in more than 300 leading interracial colleges with $1,600,000 in scholarship aid, according to Richard L. Plaut, executive vice-chairman.

A Ford Fund Effort

Many of the students receiving the renewed scholarship grants were tapped for college originally under the NSSFNS Southern project (1953-1955) made possible by the Ford fund for the Advancement of Education, in which 81 segregated high schools in 45 southern cities were combed for talented Negro students.

During these two years more Negro graduating seniors from segregated high schools were placed in non-segregated colleges and universities than in any previous ten-year period.

NSSFNS officials point out, however, that the nation is suffering a serious loss in trained human resources. There are still too few talented students from Negro and other deprived groups who are both prepared for and aspire to college when and if they reach their senior year in high school.

In an effort to correct this situation at an earlier age level, NSSFNS recently luanched its "Community Talent Search" project. This project is designed to help cities uncover and start developing deprived children with college potential regardless of race or creed, before they reach high school.

The pilot effort on this project is now underway at a New York City junior high school with a second scheduled to begin this fall in Hartford. Conn.

Negro Project To Assist Local Communities To Discover And Develop Hidden Resources Announced By National Scholarship Service And Fund For Negro Students

advocate Sat. 5-4-57 p.1

Seek Early Identification Of Promising Students

New York, N. Y., April 30—(Special) — The establishment of a new project to assist local communities to discover and develop their hidden human resources, was announced yesterday by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro students.

Known as "Community Self-Service in Talent Searching," the project will enable communities to help gifted youth from all culturally, economically and educationally deprived groups regardless of race, creed or sex. It is being made possible by a three year grant of $60,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation.

According to Richard L. Plaut, executive vice chairman of NSSFNS, the project represents an important new approach to talent searching on the local level.

"This approach," Mr. Plaut declared, "involves digging down deeper to spot talented youngsters in their early, formative years, and then providing the necessary follow-through services to make possible the maximum development of each individual."

Sat. 5-4-57 p.6

The project's approach differs from current talent searching programs conducted through nationally competitive scholarship examinations, Mr. Plaut said, observing:

"These scholarship programs, as commendable as they are, are not really adding to the nation's supply of trained manpower. In effect, they merely make it easier for students who would probably go to college anyway, to get there."

By the time many students from underprivileged groups reach the twelfth grade, the effects of low motivation, economic and cultural deprivation and poor academic preparation have already set in, Mr. Plaut said. In addition, many talented youngsters never reach the senior year because they have not received proper stimulation and guidance.

"The Community Self-Service Project," he stressed, "will enable communities to tap those underprivileged groups which—through no fault of their own — are not now contributing their fair share of superior students. In doing so, the project will help achieve the cherished American ideal of equality of opportunity for all citizens."

The over-all project will be conducted under the auspices of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, a nonprofit agency with headquarters at 6 East Eighty-second Street in New York City.

During the initial period of operation, the project will be limited to specific demonstration programs in four or five communities. One program, representing the pilot effort, is already underway in New York City and a second—in Hartford, Conn.—is in the advanced planning stage. The remaining communities will not be selected until all requests from individual localities have been received by NSSFNS.

The individual programs will be undertaken at the request and with the cooperation of local authorities. Each program will be community-centered, with project staff members going into the locality to provide consultation and technical assistance.

The staff members will be assisted by an advisory board of experts in education, guidance and related fields. The board is headed by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College of New York, and a member of the NSSFNS board of directors.

The other members of the advisory board for the Community Self-Service Project are:

NATIONAL SCHOLARSHIP SERVICE

Shildrick A. Kendrick, Associate Director, College Entrance Examination Board.

Dr. John B. King, Assistant Superintendent of Schools in charge of Districts 26 and 28 (Brooklyn), New York City.

Dr. Morris Krugman, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, in charge of guidance, New York City.

Daniel Schreiber, principal of Junior High School 43, Manhattan (project school).

Dr. J. Wayne Wrightstone, Director of Testing and Educational Research, Board of Education, New York City.

A staff director for the Community Self-Service Project will be appointed shortly.

While each program will be geared to the special needs of the different communities, all will follow, in general, a plan for comprehensive community talent searching developed by Mr. Plaut on the basis of NSSFNS experience gained in two previous projects. This plan, which attracted nationwide attention when it was first outlined in Mr. Plaut's recent report, "Blueprint for Talent Seaching," calls for:

Early indentification of promising students and discovery of their aptitudes, interests and aspirations.

Stimulation and motivation of promising students.

Increased awareness on the part of counseling and teaching staffs about college admission, as well as scholarship policies and practices, followed by transmisison of this information to students.

Enrichment of the curricula of promising students and remedial work, when necessary.

Application of the techniques of individual and group guidance, parent invelovement and education, plus clinical services where necessary.

Involvement of classroom teachers through workshops, in-service training courses and staff conferences.

Finding the necessary financial aid for the successful candidates so they may further their education.

The Community Self-Service Project, Mr. Plaut said, is in part an outgrowth of the highly successful Southern Project, conducted by NSSFNS under a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Ford Foundation.

Project will seek talented Negroes in formative years

Tribune Wed. 5-8-57 p.7

Los Angeles Calif.

NEW YORK — Scholarship programs do not really add to the nation's supply of trained manpower, but "merely make it easier for students who would probably go to college anyway, to get there", Richard L. Plaut, executive vice chairman of National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, declared here last week in announcing the establishment of a new project to help local communities discover and develop "hidden human resources".

Known as "Community Self-Service in Talent Searching", the project will enable communities to help gifted youth from all culturally, economically and educationally deprived groups regardless of race, creed, or sex. It is made possible by a three-year grant of $60,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation.

"This approach", Plaut declared, "involves digging down deeper to spot talented youngsters in their early, formative years, and then providing the necessary follow-through services to make possible the maximum development of each individual.

By the time many students from underprivileged groups reach 12th grade, the effects of low motivation, economic and cultural deprivation and poor academic preparation have already set in, Plaut said. Many talented youngsters never reach the senior year because they have not received proper stimulation and guidance, he added.

The over-all project will be conducted under the auspices of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, a nonprofit agency with headquarters at 6 E. 82nd st., New York.

At first, the project will be limited to demonstration programs in four or five communities. Pilot efforts are already underway in New York and in Hartford, Conn. Remaining communities will be selected when requests from individual localities have been received by NSSFNS.

PLAN FOR TALENT SEARCHING

While each program will be geared to the special needs of the communities using it, all will follow, in general, a plan for comprehensive community talent searching developed by Plaut. The plan calls for:

Early identification of promising students, their aptitudes, interests and aspirations.

Stimulation and motivation of promising students.

Increased awareness on the part of counselling and teaching staffs about college admission, as well as scholarship policies and practices, followed by transmission of this information to students.

Enrichment of the curricula of promising students and remedial work, when necessary.

Application of the techniques of individual and group guidance, parent involvement and education, plus clinical services where necessary.

Involvement of classroom teachers through workshops, in-service training courses and staff conferences.

Finding the necessary financial aid for the successful candidates so they may further their education.

The project is in part an outgrowth of the Southern Project, conducted by NSSFNS, which set up identification, counselling, referral and supplementary financial aid to enable deprived Negro students from segregated southern high schools to attend interracial colleges. From 1953 to 1955, more Negro students (523) from segregated high schools were placed in non-segregated colleges than in the previous 10-year period.

The Southern project, Plaut said, pointed up the need for early identification of gifted youngsters and demonstrated that the low yield of potential talent from deprived groups was a direct consequence of "waiting to tap the able after they have reached the 12th grade."

Noted Educator Appointed Director Student Talent Searching Project

Dr. Franklin Jefferson Keller, who will retire in June as principal of New York City's famed Metropolitan Vocational High School, has been appointed Staff Director of the new "Community Self-Service in Talent Searching" project of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. The announcement was made today by Richard L. Plaut, Executive vice-Chairman of the sponsoring organization.

As director of the Community Self - Service Project, Dr. Keller will help selected towns and cities launch programs to identify early and raise the educational sights of students with potential college ability from among their underprivileged groups, regardless of race and creed. The project, made possible by a three-year grant of $60,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation, will offer consultation and technical assistance to communities wishing to start their own programs. This plan for service to local communities stems directly from ideas and material in the recent MSSFNS publication, Blueprint for Talent Searching, written by Mr. Plaut.

Dr. Keller brings to his important new post a nation-wide reputation as a distinguished educator and writer. Starting as a teacher in the New York public schools, he rose to become principal of the city's unique "double purpose" high school. The school not only trains pupils for trades but provides college preparation as well. During summer months over the years Dr. Keller has given vocational guidance courses at universities throughout the United States and Canada, including Harvard, Cornell, Stanford and the University of New Brunswick.

During his early career Dr. Keller served as a full-time reporter for The New York Times. He has written five books on vocational and other educational subjects besides contributing numerous articles to magazines. He was a participant in the White House Conference on Child Health and protection and a member of several governors' commissions on various educational programs in New York State.

"We are fortunate indeed in having Dr. Keller undertake this assignment which will enable him to apply nationally his great knowledge in the educational administration and guidance fields," said Mr. Plaut. "The waste of vital manpower is not confined to the Negro alone. Deprived non-minority groups as well as Puerto Ricans, Mexican-Americans, American Indians and the children of migratory workers are traditionally under-educated and we are concerned with them all in this project. These groups have been virtually untapped for college opportunities despite the acute needs that exist throughout the country for many engineers, doctors, social workers, chemists, physicists, teachers and scientific farmers."

Working under the general direction of NSSFNS administration, Dr. Keller will also be able to call on the special technical skills of the Project's advisory board of consultants who are: Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, Chairman, associate professor of psychology at City College of New York and a member of NSSFNS board of directors; Shildrick A. Kendrick, Associate Director, College Entrance Examination Board; Dr. John B. King, Assitant Superintendent of Schools in charge of District 26 and (28) (Brooklyn), New York City; Dr. Morris Krugman, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, in charge of guidance, New York City; Daniel Schreiber, principal of Junior High School 43, Manhattan (project school); and Dr. J. Wayne Wrightstone, Director of Testing and Educational Research, Board of Education, New York City.

The individual local projects of "Community Self-Service in Talent Searching" of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students are being undertaken only at the request of and in cooperation with local authorities. During the initial period of the national project's operation, it will be limited to specific demonstration projects carried on by four or five different communities. Sponsored jointly by the New York City Board of Education, The College Entrance Board and NSSFNS, one project, representing the pilot effort to uncover the underprivileged talent school child in his formative years, already is underway at Junior High School No. 43 in New York City. A second—in Hartford, Connecticut—is in the advanced planning stage.

College Opportunities for Negroes

Great strides toward equal educational opportunities have been made under the direction of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. In its recent report the fund notes that a record number of Negro students were helped in the past year to enter interracial colleges.

The report, made public by Richard L. Plaut, executive vice chairman, states that during the last nine years the fund has helped 4,600 Negro students, including many from the Deep South, to achieve an interracial college education. It provided $1,550,000 in scholarship aid. It also found places for 200 students, mostly from the South, in Northern preparatory schools.

During the past year the organization helped enroll a record 549 freshmen in 258 colleges, with more than $287,000 in scholarship aid.

High Academic Standing

A study showes that students enrolled in colleges with the assistance of the Negro scholarship service were markedly above the national average in academic standing. Sixty per cent averaged B minus or better grades. Only 6 per cent withdrew from college for academic reasons and 9 per cent for other causes.

Three major developments that have extended the N. S. S. F. N. S. program were listed in the report:

1. Successful completion of the first year of a six-year demonstration project in Junior High School 43 in Manhattan. The project, cosponsored with the New York City Board of Education and the College Entrance Examination Board, is serving as a laboratory for developing methods of singling out and encouraging children of college potential before they reach the final years of high school.

Handbook Published

2. Publication of a handbook, "Blueprint for Talent Searching," written to assist communities in setting up their own talent-searching programs. This handbook, made possible by a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Ford Foundation, was distributed to 40,000 leaders in education, government, industry and labor. It has received nation-wide attention.

3. The institution of "Community Talent Search," a program aimed specifically at helping selected American communities to identify able children and develop them, regardless of race and creed.

The first talent-search project will start soon in Hartford, Conn. It is co-sponsored by the Hartford Board of Education, the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving and the N. S. S. F. N. S. Plans to extend the project in other localities are now being considered. B. F.

549 NEGROES SENT TO SCHOOL BY FUND

Placed in 258 Interracial Colleges or Universities—$287,240 Given in Year

New York

A program to help Negro students go to interracial colleges and universities has proved successful, it was reported last week.

During the last year the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, 6 East Eighty-second Street, has helped place 549 Negro high school seniors in 258 American institutions of higher learning. The organization, now in its ninth year, provided $287,240 in scholarships for these students.

Sun. 10-6-57

The organization, aided by foundation funds, has helped 4,600 Negro students, including many from the Deep South, achieve an interracial college education. These students received $1,550,000 in aid.

In his report Richard L. Plaut, executive vice chairman of the Negro Fund, said that during the last year "great strides toward equal educational opportunities" had been made. In addition to the Negro students who entered the interracial colleges the fund also found places for 200 students, mostly from the South, in northern preparatory schools.

Dr. Plaut said that half of the Negro students under the fund program were taking liberal arts courses. The rest are in pre-professional courses such as law, medicine, nursing, education and dentistry.

Among the students who have been in the fund program are a Phi Beta Kappa, a graduate from Dartmouth, one with a cum laude degree from Amherst, a Woodrow Wilson fellow who will study at Harvard a student body president and two student body vice presidents.

"Although a large number received aid," Dr. Plaut reports, "many who were eligible on the grounds of both merit and need did not because of lack of available funds. This has been the first of our nine years in which we were not able to grant supplementary scholarship awards to a significant number of final candidates."

BUT CATCH UP QUICKLY ONCE IN COLLEGE

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Report Shows Southern Negroes Fare Poorly On Aptitude Tests

Mon. 2-11-57

NEW YORK, Feb. 11 (AP)—A report of a scholarship project says Southern Negroes from segregated high schools show up poorly on college aptitude tests but catch up quickly once they get into college.

P. 5-A

The report was based on a two-year project in 45 Southern cities. It also included a follow-up study of 167 out of 523 Negro students who were helped by the project to go to colleges outside the South.

The project was carried out by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, under a $170,000 grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. The fund was set up by the Ford Foundation.

More than 3,000 high school seniors in 78 Negro high schools in the 45 cities were given the scholastic aptitude tests, the report said. They were chosen by their school officials from the top 10 per cent in high school grades.

Of some 1,700 qualifying for college in the test, the report said, some 1,100 expressed a desire to seek admission and scholarships at interracial colleges, and 578 carried through the effort.

Of the 578 who sought admission, 523, or nine out of 10, were accepted by nonsegregated colleges throughout the nation, with scholarship help from the colleges and the NSSFNS.

A majority of the others who qualified for college ultimately attend segregated schools.

Results of the project were made public today in a report by Richard L. Plaut, entitled "Blueprint for Talent Searching: America's Hidden Manpower."

The report estimates that planned "talent searching" among young people from "deprived" backgrounds could sent at least 250,000 more young people on to college each year.

The report said when the NSSFNS "Southern Project" introduced the scholastic aptitude tests in the Southern high schools, the qualifying score was set as low as was practical.

"In almost all of the schools, this was the first time that students had been asked to take such a test," the report said.

"Partly as a result of their inexperience with such tests, a large number of the students scored considerably below the national public school average. . .

"Within the top 10 per cent of the seniors in the very same schools, the scores ranged tremendously; students scored from below the lowest scores among all public high school students taking the regular college-board tests, all the way to the one-tenth ranking highest among the national group.

"This wide range of scores within a group whose actual high-school marks varied little showed that deep motivational and cultural differences were present . . ." the report said.

Reporting on the one-year survey of the college records of 167 students in the project, the report said:

"Educationally, almost all of the students studied were successful. And, strangely enough, than those from the higher social and economic level. . . further data revealed that the grades of students tended to improve between the freshman and sophomore years."

The report said the follow-up study also indicated that those students who took part in college activities and social life had better grades than those who did not, and that "those who, in addition, worked for pay, did best of all."

"There is strong evidence from the follow-up study of the college records of these students that those from culturally deprived groups are likely to do better in college than their aptitude tests predict," the report stated, adding:

"Furthermore, the evidence is equally strong that aptitude tests, for deprived students, tend to measure what they have learned rather than what they can learn."

The report estimates that planned "talent searching among young people from "deprived" backgrounds could send at least 250,000 more young people on to college each year.

The report said when the NSSFNS "southern project" introduced the scholastic aptitude tests in the Suthern high schools, the qualifying score was set as low as was practical.

"In almost all of the schools, this was the first time that students had been asked to take such a test," the report said.

"Partly as a result of their inexperience with such tests, a large number of the students scored considerably below the national public school average . . .

"Within the top 10 per cent of the seniors in the very same schools, the scores ranged tremendously; students scored from below the lowest scores among all public high school students taking the regular college board tests, all the way to the one tenth ranking highest among the national group.

"This wide range of scores within a group whose actual high school marks varied little showed that deep motivational and cultural experiences were present . . ." the report said.

Almost All Successful

Reporting on the one-year survey of the college records of 167 students in the project, the report said:

"Educationally, almost all of the students studied were successful. And, strangely enough, the students from deprived families did better on the average, than those from the higher social and economic level . . . further data revealed that the grades of students tended to improve between the freshman and sophomore years."

The report said the follow-up study also indicated that those students who took part in college activities and social life had better grades than those who did not, and that "those who, in addition, worked for pay, did best of all."

"There is strong evidence from the follow up study of the college records of these students that those from culturally deprived groups are likely to do better in collegé than their aptitude tests predict," the report stated, adding:

"Furthermore, the evidence is equally strong that aptitude tests, for deprived students, tend to measure what they have learned rather than what they can learn."

Nat'l Scholarship Service Blueprint For Talent Searching

Advocate Sat. 2-16-57 Jackson, Miss. P. 4

New York, N. Y. Feb. 11 — Much has been said and written in recent years about America's wealth of undiscovered student talent, its hidden and under-trained manpower. Little has been done to find and develop it. Now, for the first time, a working plan has been outlined in Blueprint for Talent Searching — America's Hidden Manpower, written by Richard L. Plaut, Executive vice-Chairman of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, to be published February 12, 1957. The publication and distribution of the book to leaders in education, government, industry and labor have been made possible by a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Ford Foundation.

BLUEPRINT offers a seven point program which will enable local communities themselves to spot and encourage those talented children, among the millions of deprived youngsters, who constitute "our most valuable human resource."

The program, unlike talent searching through nationally competitive scholarship awards, is "designed to be used by the community as a whole, in discovering talented youth who do not now aspire to college — because of low motivation and deprived home backgrounds — rather than to aid students of proven scholastic ability," Mr. Plaut explains. It is based on the findings of the Southern Project of the National Scholarship Service (a two-year experimental project (1933-55) also made possible by the Fund for the Advancement of Education), during which time more Negro students from segregated high schools were placed in non-segregated colleges than had made this move in any other ten year period.

Negroes, Mr. Plaut emphasizes, are not by any means the only source for talent searching. Puerto Ricans, Mexican - Americans, American Indians, and children of migratory workers, as well as deprived non-minority groups, are traditionally undereducated. These groups have been vitrually untapped, despite the acute needs for many more engineers, doctors, social workers, chemists, physicists, teachers and scientific farmers.

The task of finding and developing this potential talent, Mr. Plaut points out, requires identification in the early school years, followed by intensive guidance, enriched school curricula, and cultural stimulation, as well as the financial aid needed for the student to go on to college.

The first community project of the kind described in Blueprint for Talent Searching is already under way in New York City's Junior High School No. 43. Initiated by the Sub-Commission on Guidance and Educational Stimulation of the New York Board of Education's Commission on Integration, the experimental project is co-sponsored by the Board, the Commission, the College Entrance Examination Board, and the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

A variety of methods is being used to identify potentially able seventh, eighth, and ninth grade students in a mixed ethnic and socio-economic student body. They are getting extra guidance, remed-al work, and added courses, when the need is indicated. Parents are being involved in their children's planning and the students are being exposed to New York's many great cultural resources.

The success of the New York project, which continues from junior high school through the students' senior year in high school will be measured by the increase in the number of students going on to college, as well as the decrease in the number dropping out of high school before graduation.

"The measure of the success of Blueprint for Talent Searching," said Mr. Plaut, "will be the number of communities which are stimulated to discover and develop their own native talent."

No Bars Against Race, Creed, Sex

Defender Chicago Ill. Sat. 3-4-57

NEW YORK — The establishment of a new project to assist local communities to discover and develop their hidden human resources, has been announced by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

Known as "Community Self - Service in Talent Searching", the project will enable communities to help gifted youth from all culturally deprived groups regardless of race, creed or sex.

It is being made possible by a three-year grant of $60,000 from the Old Dominion Foundation.

According to Richard L. Plaut, executive vice chairman of N. S. S. F. N. S., the project represents an important new approach to talent searching on the local level.

DIGGING DEEP

"This approach," Plaut declared, "involves digging down deeper to spot talented youngsters in their early, formative years, and then providing the necessary follow-through services to make possible the maximum development of each individual."

The project's approach differs from current talent searching programs conducted through nationally competitive scholarship examinations, Plaut said, observing:

"These scholarship programs, as commendable as they are, are not really adding to the nation's supply of trained manpower. In effect, they merely make it easier for students who would probably go to college anyway, to get there."

GUIDANCE LACK

By the time many students from underprivileged groups reach the 12th grade, the effects of low motivation, economic and cultural deprivation and poor academic preparation have already set in, Plaut said.

In addition, many talented youngsters never reach the senior year because they haeve not received proper stimulation and guidance.

"The Community Self - Service Project," he stressed, will enable communities to tap those underprivileged groups which—thru no fault of their own — are not now contributing their fare share of superior students. In doing so, the project will help achieve the cherished American ideal of equality of opportunity for all citizens."

The over-all project will be conducted under the auspices of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, a non-profit agency with headquarters at 6 W. 82nd st., in New York City.

LIMITED PROGRAM

During the initial period of operation, the project will be limited to specific demonstration programs in four or five communities. One program, representing the pilot effort, is already underway in New York City and a second — in Hartford, Conn. — is in the advanced planning stage. The remaining commuities will not be selected until all requests from individual localities have been received by NSSFNS.

The individual programs will be undertaken at the request and with the cooperation of local authorities. Each program will be community-centered, with project staff members going into the locality to provide consultation and technical assistance.

The staff members will be assisted by an advisory board of experts in education, guidance and related fields. The board is headed by Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College of New York, and a member of the NSSFNS board of directors.

The other members of the advisory board for the Community Self-Service Project are:

Shildrick A. Kendrick, Associate Director, College Entrance Examination Board.

Dr. John B. King, Assistant Superintendent of Schools in charge of Districts 26 and 28 (Brooklyn), New York City.

Dr. Morris Krugman, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, in charge of guidance, New York City.

Daniel Schreiber, principal of Junior High school 43, Manhattan (project school).

Dr. J. Wayne Wrightstone, Director of Testing and Educational Research, Board of Education, New York City.

A staff director for the Community Self-Service Project will be appointed shortly.

While each program will be geared to the special needs of the different communities, all will follow, in general, a plan for comprehensive community talent searching developed by Mr. Plaut on the basis of NSSFNS experience gained in two previous projects. This plan, which attracted nationwide attention when it was first outlined in Mr. Plaut's recent report, 'Blueprint for Talent Searching", calls for:

Early identification of promising students and discovery of their aptitudes, interests and aspirations.

Stimulation and motivation of promising students.

Increased awareness on the part of counseling and teaching staffs about college admission, as well as scholarship policies and practices, followed by transmission of this information to students.

Enrichment of the curricula of promising students and remedial work, when necessary.

Application of the techniques of individual and group guidance, parent involvement and education, plus clinical services were necessary.

Involvement of classroom teachers through workshops, in-service training courses and staff conferences.

Finding the necessary financial aid for the successful candidates so they may further their education.

The Community Self - Service Project, Mr. Plaut said, is in part an outgrowth of the highly successful Southern Project, conducted by NSSFNS under a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Ford Foundation.

The Southern project set up identification, counselling, referral and supplementary financial aid services to enable deprived Negro students from segregated Southern high schools to attend interracial colleges. In the two years of operation, from 1953 to 1955, more Negro students (523) from segregated high schools were placed in non-segregated colleges than in the previous 10-year period.

The Southern Project, Mr. Plaut said, pointed up the need for early identification of gifted youngsters. It demonstrated that the low yield of potential talent from deprived groups was a direct consequence of "waiting to tap the able after they have reached the twelfth grade."

The New York City program, which was started last September at Junior High school 43 in Manhattan, involves a six - year program in the "early identification and educational stimulation of able students from low socio-economic homes." The program is jointly sponsored by the Board of Education, the College Entrance Examination Board and NSSFNS.

Catholic Award Given To National Scholarship Fund

Informer P.3 Sat. 6-15-57

CHICAGO, The 1957 Thomas J. Crowe national award of the Catholic Interracial Council of Chicago for "outstanding service to the cause of interracial justice and charity" was given yesterday to the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students. Archbishop William D. O'Brien made the presentation to Richard L. Plaut of New York, executive vice Chairman of the group, at the Council's annual Mass-Communion Breakfast in Chicago.

Local citations from the Council went to the Human Relations Club of Loyola University of Chicago, to Sister Mary Hortensia, school principal of the racially integrated Holy Angeles Grammar School, and to John L. Yancey, a former Commissioner of the Chicago Housing Authority.

In honoring the organization, the Council noted that it has helped place more than 4,000 Negro students in some 300 interracial colleges since 1948. It also cited the organization for recently launching "a bold and imaginative" community talent searching program. The new project is helping cities find and develop children with college potential from underprivileged groups of all races and creeds.

On receiving the award, Mr Plaut stressed the significance of the talent searching work. "Our urban centers rapidly are becoming two-class cities containing only the very privileged and the very deprived because the middle class people have moved to the suburbs," he said.

"In virtually every large city there remain huge blighted areas inhabited by educationally and culturally deprived groups. It is in these areas that we find de facto segregated schools, the school buildings, the largest number of inexperienced teachers, the lowest level of educational aspiration and achievement, and the highest rate of school 'drop out' rate.

"We owe the deprived children of each community not only equal educational opportunity with the culturally privileged, but twice as much educational opportunity to compensate for the educational and cultural advantages they do not get at home. This obligation is a present right, not a promissory note payable to the next generation of children."

Zulu Professor To Head African Studies At Conn. Theology School

Sat. 11-9-57

See Race Relations Leading To Disaster In South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Nov. 4.—A 42-year-old Zulu, once a herd boy on his father's small cattle farm in Natal, has been appointed Professor of African Studies at a theological seminary in Hartford, Conn.

He is Prof. Absolom Vilakazi, who, with his 35-year-old wife, their three sons and two daughters, is on his way by boat to the United States via Southampton, England. He is due to arrive in New York aboard the Greek liner New York Nov. 12.

Although acutely aware of the difficulties of readjusting to life in a strange country, Professor Vilazaki and his family are grateful for the chance of "a more satisfying way of life." They plan to settle in the United States.

Equality In Club

Before his departure, Professor Vilakazi was interviewed in the International Club in Durban. This is one of the few places in South Africa where all races may meet on equal social terms. Its existence is threatened by the Native Laws Amendment Act, the latest of the Government's apartheid laws, which aims to destroy this form of social contact.

Professor Vilakazi will join the faculty of the Kennedy School of Missions of the Hartford Seminary Foundation, an interdenominational Protestant institution. At the interview he had just received his passport permitting him to leave South Africa. He had applied for it in March and, like most Negroes who apply, was kept waiting for months without an explanation or even notification that it would be granted.

Sat. 11-9-57

"We are accustomed to this sort of thing and have learned to accept it," he said. Asked why he had decided to leave South Africa permanently, he said:

"The decision was pretty well made for me. Before granting my passport, the Government suggested that I leave my five children behind. My wife and I refused to do this. It sounded too much like a hostage idea, so we applied for permanent residence in the United States. That was the only way we could get our children to accompany us. Now I am glad we made that decision. We are going to a land where ability counts for something, perhaps everything. My children will have a future at least."

Making Second Trip

This will be the scholar's second trip to the United States. In 1954 he took a Master of Arts degree in anthropoliby at Hartford, and the following year received a Master's degree in education at Trinity College.

On his return to South Africa he accepted first a Nuffield Fellowship and then a scholarship from the Royal Anthropological Society. He has completed these at the University of Natal. His work took him to the Valley of 1,000 Hills outside Durban for 18 months in studying cultural changes among the Zulus. This work forms the subject of his final thesis for a doctorate in philosophy.

Professor Vilakazi comes of a modest family. His father and grandfather were peasant farmers on a small settlement in Danhauser. The professor and his three sisters were born on the farm. He remembers how his father went to school for the first time while the children were growing up.

Absolom was more fortunate and was allowed to go to school while still a boy. After having attended school at Danhauser, he went to a Roman Catholic training college at Marianhill, Natal, and then on to teaching.

Honors In Anthropology

Studying privately, he made his way eventually to the University of Natal, where in 1949 he took a Bachelor of Arts, majoring in anthropology. Two years later he won honors as a specialist in anthropology.

Of events in South Africa, Professor Vilakazi had this to say:

"If the Government continues as it is doing now, we are heading for disaster. The people in power support racial prejudice and I see no likelihood of their changing their tactics. They firmly believe in the things they are doing.

"I see the mood of the Africans changing and toughening. As more and more responsible leaders are being banned, so is leadership falling into the hands of irresponsible elements. Something is likely to happen."

First Negro Named To Faculty Of Famed Boys Prep School

Rev. John T. Walker Named To Post

Concord, N. H., Dec. 31—The appointment of the Rev. John T. Walker, rector of St. Mary's Episcopal Church of Detroit, to the teaching staff of St. Paul's School was announced here today by the Rev. Matthew Warren, headmaster.

Mr. Walker will assume his duties next fall and will teach Sacred Studies and Ancient History, Mr. Warren said. He said Mr. Walker was replacing an English Instructor who had been at the school on a temporary basis.

The 31-year-old clergyman will be the first Negro faculty member at St. Paul's, Mr. Warren said. The preparatory school for boys is celebrating its 100th anniversary.

Mr. Walker was elected rector of St. Mary's in 1955.

Mr. Walker was born in Detroit and served as head acolyte at St. Paul's Episcopal Cathedral while he was a student at Wayne State University from which he was graduated in 1951. The following year he entered the Virginia Theological School in Alexandria, from which he received his degree of Bachelor of Divinity in 1954.

Negro Minister To Teach At N. Y. University

Dr. Grant S. Shockley, minister of the Janes Methodist Church in Brooklyn, will teach the "Religious Education of Adults" course at New York University's School of Education, Dr. Lee A. Belford, chairman of the department of religious education, has announced.

Dr. Shockley, the author of numerous articles on religion and formerly a professor at Gammon Theological Seminary and Clark College (both in Atlanta, Georgia), assumes his duties at NYU with the beginning of the spring term.

The Brooklyn clergyman has had wide experience in the religious education field. He has taught in Methodist Church schools in Georgia, Delaware, and New York, and in 1947-48 he was director of the adult education curriculum and teaching research project for the Methodist Board of Missions. He lectured at Delaware State College in 1951 and was a visiting professor during the 1952 and 1956 summer sessions at Northwestern University.

Dr. Shockley has served as curriculum consultant, instructor, and guest speaker at Methodist youth summer camps in Delaware, Wyoming, and New York.

From 1951 to 1953 he was minister of the Whatcoat Methodist Church in Dover, Delaware.

The 38-year-old churchman was born in Philadelphia. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Lincoln University (Pennsylvania) in 1942, a bachelor of divinity from Drew University (Madison, New Jersey) in 1945, and a master of arts and a doctor of education from Columbia University in 1946 and 1952 respectively.

Dr. Shockley's church, the Janes Methodist Church, has the only all-Negro congregation in the New York East Conference of Methodist Churches.

He and his wife and children live at 268 Stuyvesant Avenue, Brooklyn.

DR. PIPES TO BECOME REGULAR MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY PROFESSOR

The State Board of Michigan State University, at its March 15 meeting, approved the appointment of Dr. William H. Pipes as a regular professor(English and Speech), effective September 1, 1957.

Dr. Pipes, formerly president of Alcorn College and dean of Philander Smith College, holds a M.A. degree in English from Atlanta University and a Ph.D. degree in Speech from the University of Michigan. He is spending the current school year as Guest Professor (English and Speech) at Wayne State University, Detroit, Michigan.

Dr. Pipes received the B. S. degree from Tuskegee Institute in 1935.

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa.—This country's oldest institution of higher learning for Negroes is looking for a new president after kicking its former chief executive upstairs, The Courier reliably learned this week.

Lincoln University, located here in Chester County between Baltimore, Md., and Philadelphia, Pa., has been headed for the past 12 years by Dr. Horace Mann Bond.

Dr. Bond, Lincoln's fifth president, was the first alumnus named to preside over the 103-year-old institution.

HIS RESIGNATION was tendered at Tuesday's (June 4) annual meeting of board of trustees. Dr. Bond's departure follows repeated efforts by a segment of the university's Alumni Association and faculty to oust him.

Under terms of the resignation, The Courier understands that Dr. Bond will go on a year's sabbatical leave and will be commissioned to complete a writing of the history of the university.

DR. HORACE MANN BOND . . . "kicked upstairs" to Harvard?

In addition, he has been offered an English lectureship at Harvard and will be joining with some of America's best educators in this highly significant lecture series.

WHILE LEWIS STEVENS of Philadelphia, chairman of the university's board of trustees, denies that the university has entered into any agreement with any prospective replacements, it has been reported that Dr. James H. Robinson of New York City, himself an alumnus, has been offered the presidency.

Mr. Robinson says that he has been offered the presidency and has been asked to give his decision within 30 days. Interestingly enough, he was the Alumni Association's principal speaker at the annual banquet held on the campus on Monday night, June 3.

Harvard has made available to the Wilsons living accommodations in the Harvard Botanic Gardens Apartments. Dr Wilson is Dean of the School of Business Administration at Texas Southern University.

In addition to presiding over her spacious home, Mrs Wilson has been active in cancer work by house-to-house distribution of literature in Harris County. She is a member of the Women's Missionary Society of Antioch Baptist Church in Houston.

Mrs Wilson is also active in the Grand Order of the Courts of Calanthe of Texas, and is a member of the TSU Dames, which is an organization made up of the wives of staff members and the women employees of Texas Southern University.

The Wilson children will enter school either in Cambridge or in nearby New England. Milton, Jr is now ready for high school and Rhea Ann is still in the elementary grades.

Integration at Work on Alabama Campus

Professor at Wayne U. Has Good Word for Talladega!

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-5-57

DETROIT — Teaching school at Talladega College in Alabama is not much different, integration-wise, than teaching school at Wayne State University, according to Dr. Broadus Butler.

Both the faculty and the student body are integrated at the Alabama school, Dr. Butler explained.

"Most people don't know," said the serious-looking, bespectacled, 36-year-old man, "that Talladega has had both mixed faculty and student body for years.

"There is even an integrated elementary school attached to the university. We had a high school attached to the school, too, but not now. And there's a story.

"The Negroes petitioned the city to build a high school and got it."

DR. BUTLER was dean of guidance at Talladega for three years — 1953-1956 — before he was appointed to the Wayne State University faculty here in September.

Of course, at Talladega the preponderance of students was Negro. At Wayne it's the other way around.

He also graduated from Talladega in 1941, but he got his master's and doctor's degrees in philosophy from the University of Michigan in 1947 and 1952, respectively.

AS A FORMER faculty member of a Deep Southern Negro college, The Courier wanted to know if he experienced any differences in teaching at the two schools of higher learning.

"We have had integration at Talladega for years," he commented. "True, none of the white families in the city (Talladega) sent their children to our college, but children of the white faculty members have been going there for years."

DR. AND MRS. BROADUS BUTLER

MARRIED TO the former Lillian Rutherford, daughter of the late Detective Lieut. George T. Rutherford, Dr. Butler is the father of two children, Bruce, 5, and Janet, 2.

Having such an "intellectual heavy" around the house can be kind of trying, said Mrs. Butler, who dabbles in oils, and is pretty good at it, too.

But Dr. Butler is not strictly the "egghead" type, "he just doesn't like for me to tell him to do anything when he's thinking," she explained. "It sorta breaks his train of thought.

"And when he makes up his mind to do something, he'll sit and think about it for a while, then do it. I call it the philosophical approach to labor," she smiled.

MRS. BUTLER is presently enrolled in art classes at Wayne. "Want to improve my technique,' she said.

"... a philosophical approach to labor."

She formerly attended the university before she was married.

Dr. Butler is a veteran of World War II, a member of the famed 332nd Fighter Group, and spent four years in the service, two in Italy.

The Butlers live at 6097 Scotten, but were making plans to move into their new home, 3010 Collingwood.

Dr. Shockley To Teach At New York University

Daily World Jan. 1-20-57 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK 2 Dr. Grant S. Shockley, minister of the James Methodist Church in Brooklyn, will teach the "Religious Education of Adults" course at New York University's School of Education, Dr. Bee A. Belford, chairman of the department of religious education, has announced.

Dr. Shockley, the author of numerous articles on religion and formerly a professor at Gammon Theological Seminary and Clark College (both in Atlanta, Georgia), assumes his duties at NYU with the beginning of the spring term.

The Brooklyn clergyman has had wide experience in the religious education field. He has taught in Methodist Church schools in Georgia, Delaware, and New York, and in 1947-48 he was director of the adult education curriculum and teaching research project for the Methodist Board of Missions. He lectured at Delaware State College in 1951 and was a visiting professor during the 1952 and 1956 summer sessions at Northwestern University.

Dr. Shockley has served as curriculum consultant, instructor, and guest speaker at Methodist youth summer camps in Delaware, Wyoming, and New York.

From 1951 to 1953 he was minister of the Whatcoat Methodist Church in Dover, Delaware.

The 38-year old churchman was born in Philadelphia. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Lincoln University (Pennsylvania) in 1952, a bachelor of divinity from Drew University (Madison, New Jersey) in 1945, and a master of arts and a doctor of education from Columbia University in 1946 and 1952 respectively.

Dr. Shockley's church, the Janes Methodist Church, has the only all-Negro congregation in the New York East Conference of Metrodist Churches.

He and his wife and children live at 268 Stuyvesant Avenue, Brooklyn.

Too Busy To Be A College President

Afro-American Sat. 5-2-57 P.5 Baltimore, Md.

The average college professor would give his right arm for a promotion to the presidency of his college.

But not Dr. John Hope Franklin, chairman of the Department of History at Brooklyn City College enrollment 24,000.

He directs the work of 30 professors and instructors in the History Department and would rather teach or write.

AN ALUMNUS of Fisk University, he is a member of the trustees committee to select a new president and has been reportedly mentioned for the alumna's number one choice to be president of Fisk, succeeding the late Dr. Charles F. Johnson.

He had one book published in September; the revised edition of another is on the press.

He has commitments with publishers for two or three more

STANDARDS are high at Brooklyn College. Of thousands of kids who finish high school, four city colleges can accept only those in the highest 5 or 10 per cent of the graduating classes. Over 100,000 others have to seek a college education outside the city.

* * *

DR. FRANKLIN teaches 5 hours a week. Calls it stimulating.

All the books to be read in his course are known to the student at the beginning of the year.

Classes are limited to 30 and a seminar to 7 students.

Often he will assign 2 books to a student who will say "I have read those, please give me 3 others."

In class, he does not lecture. Before he is finished calling the roll, 3 or 4 students will have hands raised indicating their desire to discuss the subject at hand.

TO DIFFER with the conclusions reached by the authors whose books he has read, or to criticize them is not going far enough.

For example in an English seminar on Jonathan Edwards, discussions ranged from St. Thomas Acquinas to the present day.

Competition is keen for scholarships and honors. Standards are unbelievably high.

Because teaching is stimulating, Dr. Franklin said he would rather teach than be an administrator.

Rev. George Sewell Gets Doctorate At Boston University

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Tues. 6-4-57

BOSTON, Mass. — The Rev. George A. Sewell, pastor of Steward Chapel AME Church in Macon, Ga., received the Ph. D. degree Sunday at Boston University.

Because of his concern with racial problems, the 46-year-old minister chose for his dissertation "Jesus Amidst The Tension of Palestinian-Judaism As Viewed in The Synoptic Gospel" according to Dr. Edwin P. Booth, his advisor at Boston University.

The Rev. Sewell was born in Newnan, and grew up at East Point, moved to Atlanta where he completed studies at Washington High School, and Morris Brown College. In 1944, he received the Bachelor of Sacred Theology degree from Boston University, and after receiving the Masters Degree two years later, he was ordained a minister.

He did graduate work at Columbia University in educational administration and Union Theological Seminary. He has worked as principal-teacher in Jackson County, Fla., public schools, as professor of theology at Turner Theological Seminary, and as minister at LeMoyne College in Memphis, Morris Brown and Arkansas State Colleges.

Last year he went to Europe on a mission for UNRA. His station assignments have taken him to Sneads, Greenwood, Bascom, Neal's Landing, all in Florida, St. Andrews Methodist Church at Worcester, Mass., Trinity AME Church, Atlanta, Gaines Chapel AME Church in Waycross, Ga.

Active in furthering inter-racial relations to help his people, he has come in contact with many influential Negro leaders. He is a friend of the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery bus boycott, who is also a graduate of Boston University.

"He is not active in political affairs at this moment, however," said Dr. Booth, "but it could happen any minute."

While in Atlanta, Rev. Sewell was a member of the Board of Directors of the NAACP and was on the Board of Directors of the Camp Fire Girls. He also worked as a columnist for the Atlanta Daily World.

He is presently active in the community life of Macon, being director of the Red Cross Campaign and a former chairman of Cotton Avenue USO Committee. He sponsored the interracial worship services on Race Relations Day and World Communion Day.

The noted minister holds membership in the National Society of Bible Instructors and other religious organizations. He served as a steward at the World Council of Churches' Second Assembly in Evanston, Ill., in 1954.

The Macon leader is married to the former Miss Lillie White, of Mariana, Fla., and they have one child.

Two Morehouse Teachers Receive Ph. D. Degree

Daily World Fri. 5-31-57

Atlanta Ga.

James E. Haines, assistant professor of physical education at Morehouse College, has satisfied all requirements for the Ph.D degree in physical education at Springfield College and the degree will be conferred formally at the June commencement of that institution. Dr. Haines holds the B. A. degree from Morehouse and the M. Ed. degree from Springfield College. He is the fifty-ninth graduate of Morehouse to earn the coveted doctorate at one of the great American or foreign universities (sixtieth is slated to receive his shortly also.) He is the first Negro to receive a Ph. d from Springfield College.

Dr. Haines' thesis subject is THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE KRAUS-WEBER TEST And Roger's Physical Fitness Index with Social Acceptance, Teacher Acceptance, and Emotional Stability in Selected Fifth Grade Pupils. (The Krau-Weber Test is a test for strength demanded for everyday basal requirements. Rogers' Physical Fitness Index is a test for functional physical ability to perform specific physical activities.)

All requirements for the Springfield College doctorate were met by Dr. Haines when he passed his oral examination on May 24, 1957. His degree will be conferred on June 9, 1957. His M. Ed. degree was awarded there in June, 1949; and his B. A. degree from Morehouse was earned in 1942.

CHICAGO DOCTORATE

Miss Geraldine Lari Clark, assistant porfessor of English at Morehouse, has satisfied all requirements for the Ph. A. degree, awarded in 1945. She is a specialist in remedial reading.

Doctors Haines and Clark raise to twenty the number of Morehouse faculty and staff members with earned doctorates, which means approximately one-half of them.

Professor Sweat At Clark College Given Doctorate

Edward F. Sweat, professor of history at Clark College has been granted the doctorate degree in history by Indiana University.

A native of Columbia, South Carolina, where he graduated from Allen University with the bachelor of arts degree, Dr. Sweat has been a teacher of American and European history at Clark since 1948.

His doctoral disseration "The Free Negro in Antebellum Georgia", is a revealing study based on old documents and public records in courthouses throughout Georgia and source material found both in the National Archieves in Washrington, D. C., and the Georgia De- in the National Archieves and History.

This study, which was partially financed through a Southern Fellowships Fund grant, sheds significant light on the status of the free Negro as a group and on the problems of adjustment and accommodation found by individual free persons of color.

Visiting such Georgia counties as Muscogee, Richmond and Chatham, Dr. Sweat was particularly interested in contacting the decendents of free Negroes who possessed certicates of freedom, letters, tax receipts and documents showing evidence of property ownership or general culture and social status of these free persons.

While studying for his masters, which also was awarded by Indiana Univerity, Dr. Sweat held a graduate assistantship in the Department of History there. His teaching experience includes work in the Columbia, S. C. Public School System prior to 1947. Since that time he has taught summer school classes in history at Livingston College and Hampton Institute. He is married to Mrs. Henriette L. Sweat of Columbia, S. C.

PROF. EDWARD SWEAT

Miss Gerldine L. Clark, assistant professor of English at Morehouse, has satisified all requirements for the Ph.D. degree in English from the University of Chicago, the degree also to be conferred June 9

Drs. Haines and Clark raise to 20 the number of Morehouse faculty and staff members with earned doctorates, which means approximately one half of them.

Dr. McDonald Receives Ph.D. From Mexican U.

Dr. Andrew E. McDonald, internationally known and prominent dentist of New Orleans received the Doctor of Philosophy degree in Clinical Psychology at the graduating expercises Aug. 30, 1957 from La Universidad Interamericana in Saltillo, Coahuila, Mexico with a major in the field of psychiatry.

Dr. McDonald has been studying Clinical Psychology in Mexico for the past four years and his candidacy for the degree comes as a surprise to his many friends and patients here. When he left New Orleans early this spring with Mrs. McDonald and his little granddaughters Fay and Rhonda, he told a representative of th press that "he thought it would be possible to acquire the degree by September since he had already completed his thesis."

Dr. McDonald is a native of New Orleans. In his youth, he attended Straight College, (now Dillard University) and Xavier. He is a graduate of Marquette University College of Dentistry, and received his Master of Arts Degree in the Spanish Language in 1954 from La Escuela Interamericana in Mexico. A few years ago he achieved national prominence by his use of Psychosomatics and Hypnotism in Dentistry. He has appeared before learned societies in many parts of America and Mexico to give demonstrations in Psychosomatics and Hypnotism for the control of dental patients.

He wrote the first book published in dentistry about Psychosomatics and Hypnotism. Today this book is required reading in dental schools all over the world. In 1956, this book was translated into Spanish by the World Publishing Company of Argentina. When asked, "why have you acquired another doctorate when you are already a doctor?" He answered, "the acquisition of the doctorate in psychology is the fulfillment of a life long ambition, I wanted to be a psychologist long before I studied dentistry. To acquire it the way I have has ursurped all the fortitude and virtue that I could muster. It is much easier for students to remain in school and work toward their doctorate than to try to return when they are in my age category."

"It was fourtimes as difficult for me to acquire the degree because I had to master the spanish language before I could study psychology. I could not attend school in the United States as there were no schools in New Orleans that offered the course to Negroes and at the same time would allow me to continue my practice. To receive a doctorate in Mexico calls for extreme vigilance and fortitude because the examinations are public. Over 500 people were present when I was examined and the entire course and the examination is under the direct supervision of the Federal Government of Mexico and by my passing the examination of the Federal Government I could practice in anyone of the thirty-two states in Mexico."

"So many people have been instrumental in assisting me during my long seige of study. I cannot mention them all but I would like to extend my thanks and appreciation to Dr. Garcia and Dr. Arana of the University of Mexico for the unselfish organization of my course of study and counsel in normal and abnormal psychology. My deep affection is entended to Dr. J. T. Johnson of Los Angeles who made it possible for me to do my residence work in Marital Relations at the World Famous American Institute of Family Relations in California. I send my sincere gratefulness to Dr. Henry Jenkins of Los Angeles who made it possible for me to use the Perineonmeter in the study of sex relations and sex problems, and without this instrument, I would not have been able to complete by thesis. I must not forget to thank Dr. C. Taylor of Tulane University who planned my research and made the source possible for me to do the research while I continued in my practice of dentistry. Also Dr. L.A. Fosberg, former professor of psychology at Tulane University and now Chief Psychologist of the Veterans Hospital in New Orleans, who gave me all of my training over a period of three years in projective techniques as well as the inspiration that I so sorely needed when the going was so tough. A word of thanks and sincere gratefulness is here expressed to all of my wonderful teachers and friends of La Universidad Interamericana de Saltillo and last of all but not the least, words cannot express my deep sense of obligation to Professor James Despinasse of Xavier University whose indefatigable patience and skill in his tutoring in the subjects of Educational Psychology and Statistics made it possible for me to pass the examination of the Mexican Government, and without such knowledge, I would not have been able to acquire the degree. May God Bless all of these wonderful people."

Dr. McDonald plans to open his new clinic at 2530 Gentilly Boulevard on or about the 1st of October.

RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA SCHOLARSHIP

Clark College To Share In RCA Scholarships

Daily World Jan. 2-10-57
Atlanta, Ga.

Radio Corporation of America has announced that an annual scholarship of $800 will be available to Clark College and nine other American colleges and universities in the fall.

P.5 1.4

The scholarship, which will be awarded to prospective teachers of science and mathematics, will be available to the student selected as recipient during his sophomore, junior and senior years at Clark.

Commenting on the scholarships, Brigadier General David Sarnoff, chairman of the board at RCA, said "The Radio Corporation of America plan, unique among corporate educational aid programs, is actually an extension of the long-established RCA Scholarship and Fellowship Program. It provides for thirty RCA Teacher Scholarships which will be awarded to 20 different teacher-training colleges throughout the country."

The General continued, "Greater cooperation with our schools in both a corporate and community responsibility. Many of RCA's 75,000 employees participate in various types of school and educational activities such as serving on school boards and school committees. I am urging all of them as citizens to increase their efforts, to be more aware of the contribution they can make to the school programs in their communities, and to generally increase their participation and support.

RCA Scholarships providing an annual grant of $800, will be granted to ten colleges and awarded to prospective teachers being trained in the fields of science and mathematics. These scholarships will be available to the student during the sophomore, junior and senior year at the following colleges and universities: Berea College, Berea, Ky.; Adelphi College, Garden City, N. Y.; Clark College, Atlanta, Ga.; Coucher College, Baltimore, Md.; Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del.; West Va. RHODES SCHOLARSHIP

Young Jamaican Chosen As Rhodes Scholar

By FRANCES T. MAYLOCK
For ANP

CHICAGO. — Rex Nettleford, 24, of Jamaica, recently named as this year's Rhodes scholar from Jamaica, paid a visit to Chicago this week while enroute to London where he will register at Oxford university for three years study. His field will be history of the West Indies.

The brilliant young scholar is the son of Mrs. Lebertha Palmer of Falmouth and is a graduate of Cronwall college of Montego Bay where he finished with honors and from the University college of the West Indies which is an affiliate with London university.

Honored At College

During his college career he received various recognitions. In 1955 he was named "male student of the year" on the basis of academic achievement, character and extra curricular activity. He won the BWI Airways award. In 1956 he was awarded the Issa scholarships established by Abe Issa, the legendary financier who owns or backs many Jamaican enterprises.

Nettleford, in winning a Rhodes scholarship follows some distinguished predecessors. Norman Manley, Chief Minister of Jamaica was the first Rhodes scholar from Jamaica, while one of the island's foremost attorneys, Barrister Nethercole was another.

Cecil Rhodes who made his fortunes in major exploitations of Africa, established the scholarships principally for England and willed support for about 200 students to study at Oxford for three years. Thirty four came from British Empire countries, 32 from the United States and four used to come from Germany until the first World War when they were cut off. One of these now goes to Jamaica. South Africa gets four but none has ever gone to a black African.

One American Negro Scholar

Only one American Negro has ever received a Rhodes scholarship. The late Alain Locke, brilliant teacher and writer, was awarded a Rhodes scholarship after he finished Harvard university in 1906.

Young Nettleford who gives quiet praise to Dr. H. L. Morris of Montego Bay who has been his sponsor through the years, was the house guest of close friends, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Morgan, 3546 South Parkway, during his stay in Chicago. He expects to sail from New York for England on October 4.

REX NETTLEFORD, young Jamaican who recently was named a Rhodes scholar, visits with his Chicago "parents" enroute to London, England, where he will enroll at Oxford university. A protege of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac T. Morgan of the American West Indian association, he chats in photo with Mrs. Morgan, revealing plans to major in the history of the West Indies.

DR. CHARLES S. JOHNSON
EBONY - HALL OF FAME

Dr. Charles S. Johnson, First Negro President Of Fisk To Be Honored

Nashville, Tenn.
Fri. 1-11-57
p. 9

Chicago—Dr. Charles S. Johnson, first Negro president of Fisk University in Nashville, Tenn., becomes the second person elected to the EBONY Hall of Fame by EBONY readers, announces the magazine in its February issue.

Dr. Johnson, who takes his place alongside eleven other great American Negroes in the gallery, located in EBONY's home office here, received 45 percent of the total votes cast.

Understanding people and interpreting them to each other was one of Charles Johnson's unique talents. Insatiably curious, his mind brimmed over with challenging questions about human beings. To find some of the answers, he became a sociologist, earning a B.A. with honors at Virginia Union University and a Ph. B. from the University of Chicago. He never got around to studying for a Master's or a Ph. D., but was awarded honorary doctorates by Howard, Columbia, Harvard, the University of Glasgow in Scotland, and Virginia Union.

The observation which he made about mankind and its institutions and problems now fill eighteen books. One of them, The Negro In Chicago, is considered a "landmark" in social research.

At Fisk University, Dr. Johnson headed the department of social sciences from 1928 until 1946 when he was named president. During his ten years as president, Fisk's endowment rose by 1 1-2 million. New buildings were erected. The institution was recognized by Phi Beta Kappa and the Rhodes Scholarship Fund.

Dr. Johnson served on presidential commissions under Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower. He was also a director of the Julius Rosenwald Fund. He died in October, 1956.

gress of the Negro people and to the American way of life.

Dr. Johnson is the twelfth person to be named to this gallery of immortals of the race, located in Ebony's home office in Chicago.

A man of varied talents and broad interests, Charles S. Johnson achieved national eminence before he was thirty years old with the publication of The Negro in Chicago, considered a landmark in social research.

During the 1920s, he edited Opportunity magazine, which became under his imaginative guidance, the leading medium of expression of the "Negro Renaissance" Many of the race's great creative artists first achieved recognition through this magazine, at a time when other publications were closed to them.

At Fisk University, Dr. Johnson headed the department of social sciences from 1928 until his election to the presidency in 1946. It was during this period that he published many of the standard reference works in the field of race relations. In all, he wrote 18 books and hundreds of articles and reviews.

Under President Johnson, Fisk took its place as one of the nation's foremost small liberalart s colleges, irrespective of race or region. During his incumbency, five major buildings were added to the institution's physical plant, and 1 1-2 million to the endowment.

He served his nation on various presidental commissions under Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower. In 1946 he went to Japan at the request of General Douglas MacArthur to help reorganize the educational system of Japan along democratic lines, and the same year was called by President Truman to serve as a delegate to the first session of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Dr. Johnson's election to Ebony's Hall of Fame will be announced in the February issue of the magazine.

MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP FUND (SPELIMAN COLLEGE)
VENICE SPRAGGS

Memorial Fund To Honor Noted Negro Woman Democrat

VENICE SPRAGGS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25.—An organization has been formed here to establish a memorial scholarship fund at Spelman College, Atlanta, Ga., in honor of Venice Tipton Spraggs, noted Negro woman Democrat, a one-time assistant to the chairman of the Women's Division of the Democrat National Comm. tee.

Listed among the growing number of the organization sponsors are such widely known persons as Cong. William L. Dawson, Cong. Charles C. Diggs, Jr., Mrs. Vivian Carter Mason, Dr. Marshall Shepherd, Gov. and Mrs. G. Mennen Williams, Mrs. Blair Moody and Mrs. India Edwards.

In a brief sketch of her life the organization says:

Venice Tipton Spraggs was a great humanitarian, a distinguished American, and a dedicated woman. A year ago on November 20, 1956 she died of a cerebral hemorrhage, less than two weeks after Election Day.

That campaign, as in all the other campaigns in which she took part, she sacrificed untiringly of her time and effort. She had a talent for teaching, encouraging others to do their best and then to do just one thing more. Time after time, when others were discouraged she renewed their faith in the Democratic Party and breathed new life into the campaign with the force of her own dynamic personality and her unwavering belief in people.

It is hard for any of us to believe that she can no longer help us shoulder our burdens and carry on the great work that she has always done. Her work will never die. Our love for her will remain, forever in our hearts. Venice has helped so many people that now, from all over the country, has come the plea—what can we do to keep her memory alive—how can we go on with the work Venice did?

And so it is that many of her friends and co-workers have come forward with the idea of a Memorial Fund to be established on the anniversary of her death to perpetuate her memory.

Venice Spraggs was many people: teacher, administrator, journalist, speaker and Democratic leader. Through establishment of the Venice Spraggs Memorial Fund, we join together in commemorating the dedication and the energy that she brought to bear on so many activities.

In establishing a revolving loan fund at her own school, Spellman College at Atlanta, Ga., others will be encouraged to continue the work she started.

If you would like to join with the sponsors in raising money for the Venice Spraggs Memorial Fund, contributions should be mailed to Neil Staebler, Chairman, 1801 Clydesdale Place, N. W., Washington 9, D. C. No contribution is too small to be of help. If among your friends and acquaintances there are people who would like to contribute to the Memorial Fund, either send their names and addresses to the above address, or, if you prefer, copies of this letter will be sent to you. Neil Staebler, Chairman.

20 Awarded '57 March Of Dimes Grants

NEW YORK — Twenty young scientists have been awarded the first 1957 March of Dimes postdoctoral fellowships for research and teaching, the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, announced last week.

The March of Dimes fellowships are unique in the voluntary health field in that they do not tie candidates to research relating to poliomyelitis alone. The new awardees will be training to attack many hazards of disease and injury.

Including compensation to the training institution together with stipends for living expenses, the new awards involve $195,820 in March of Dimes funds. They cover from one to three years of basic research and teaching.

To date more than 4,300 men and women have received varied March of Dimes fellowships and scholarships.

These awards are part of the March of Dimes program to support professional education. Since 1938, $25,000,000 has been allocated in this area by the National Foundation. It is the largest professional education program supported by any voluntary group.

Dr. Clifford Named Representative For Fellowship Group

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 9/13-57

Dr. Paul Clifford, Registrar at Atlanta University, has been named local representative for the Atlanta University Center by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. It has received significant grant from the Ford Foundation which will enable it to offer as many as 1000 fellowships for the 1958-59 academic year.

Nominations for the fellowships may be made by any member of the academic profession and should reach Dr. Clifford in time for him to turn them over to the chairman of the region by November 9.

The fellowships are designed primarily for those who have not yet begun graduate study and who wish to work in the humaniites, social sciences, the natural sciences or mathematics with the view of becoming college teachers, Dr. Clifford said. The fellowships may be used in any graduate school in the United States and Canada. Each fellow will be given a grant large enough to guarantee him an adequate living for the year of his incumbency. An unmarried fellow can expect a grant of $1400 in addition to tutiton.

Shuttlesworth Will Not Give Up; Tries Again Despite His Injuries

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(INS)— A Negro pro-integration leader, injured along with his wife and their 12-year-old daughter when he tried to enter Negro students in Birmingham's all-white Phillips high school, said he would try to enroll there again Tuesday.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, a veteran of the fight for equal bus seating in Birmingham, was cut and bruised when he was knocked down and kicked Monday. His wife was slashed and his daughter, Ruby, suffered a foot injury.

Three men were arrested and charged with intent to kill.

Shuttlesworth said he would attempt to lead the Negroes into the school again despite an order by Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh.

Not Afraid to Die

The commissioner ordered Birmingham police to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the school" from entering school grounds. The order would include Negroes who have not been registered. Call P.2

But Shuttlesworth said his second attempt would go forward "whether they kill us or not."

Lindbergh stated:

"The Negroes will not enter our schools. We will use police to keep them out. I am acting under the authority of Alabama law. We are going to maintain law and order."

Later the police commissioner told a mass meeting that "should Shuttlesworth attempt to enroll them (the Negro students) he will be stopped by police."

Three white men were arrested by police after the attack on the minister. The three battled a dozen or more men until Shuttlesworth was able to break away, enter his car and escape.

Several hours after the incident, a car containing four Negro men drove past Phillips high school and threw rocks into a window. No one was injured and the Negroes sped away.

Monday marked the first physical effort by Negroes this year to enter Alabama schools.

Last year Autherine Lucy, a coed from Birmingham, enrolled but was driven by a mob from the University of Alabama, 60 miles from Birmingham at Tuscaloosa. Later she was expelled.

Shuttlesworth's action was unexpected because registration had ended last week.

The three men arrested for assault with intent to murder were identified as W. H. Cash, 60; I. F. Gauldin, 42, and J. E. Breckenridge, 26, all of Birmingham.

Shuttlesworth's name recently figured in an outbreak of violence in Birmingham Sept. 2 when six white men, some of them wearing Ku Klux Klan regalia, mutilated a Negro.

The six are charged with mayhem for assaulting Judge Aaron, 33, reported in serious condition. Aaron was told by the men who mutilated him to "Tell Shuttlesworth this is what happens to any Negro" who tries to send his children to white schools.

Birmingham Integration Bid Halted

Wed. 9-11-57
Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 10 (AP)—A pro-integration leader today said Birmingham Negroes will cease "further attempts to enroll in white schools at this time."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 35, who was beaten by an angry white mob when he tried to enroll four Negro students at Phillips High School yesterday, issued the statement. He is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, active for more than a year in attacks on Birmingham's rigid segregation statutes.

Failure of Negroes to renew efforts to enroll at three all-white city schools, and firm police control of large crowds, had brought uneasy racial peace to the city during the day.

Phillips was evacuated because of a bomb threat during the morning. Students were readmitted 40 minutes later when a methodical search failed to uncover any explosives. Classes continued when another bomb report was received, although the basement of the school was searched by police.

Shuttlesworth is among a group of Negro parents which has petitioned for admittance of eight children to white schools.

The Negro minister said he had received a registered letter from city school superintendent Frazer Banks relative to applications to enroll the Negro children in three white schools. Advertiser

Shuttlesworth declined to reveal contents of the letter "in the interest of preventing unauthorized crowds." P.2-a

However, Banks said the letters, sent all of the Negro parents, told each of them when they could take aptitude and achievement tests in connection with their school applications.

Banks said the tests of the eight Negro children would be given next week by the guidance department of the city schools.

The procedure would be to determine facts for guidance of the board of education in placing the children. It is a part of recommendations made by the board last week, and will evidently be a test of Alabama's school placement law.

Although the law makes no mention of segregation, its sponsors have said it is a tool designed to preserve segregation in the state's schools.

Four Negroes Quit Petition On Schooling

Montgomery Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 23 (AP) — Four Negro signers of petitions asking racial integration in Birmingham public schools today withdrew, but another parent predicted the race-mixing effort will be pressed. Sat. 8-24-57

"Some will remain," said the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. He is one of the parents who asked the Birmingham Board of Education to admit Negroes to three white schools.

Those who said they wanted their names dropped from the petitions were William H. Todd Sr., Robert Hawkins, Mrs. Annie Marie Wilson and Mrs. Marie Armstrong.

Petitions had asked admittance at the school term beginning Sept. 6, of 13 Negro children to schools closest to their homes—identified as Phillips and Woodlawn high schools and Graymont elementary, all white.

Hawkins said he thought he was signing a survey of high school children when he was contacted by an agent of Shuttlesworth. The two mothers said they understood that they were signing an agreement that they would be willing for their children to attend an integrated school.

Todd said he "misunderstood" the petition.

Shuttlesworth said he was "sure they did understand" that they were signing a petition asking admittance of their children to white schools.

City officials have expressed uncompromising opposition to any change in Birmingham's rigid segregation laws.

Uneasy Racial Peace Settles on Birmingham

Courier-Journal P.2
Louisville Ky.

Birmingham, Sept. 10 (AP)—Failure of Negroes to renew efforts to enroll at three all-white City schools and firm police control brought uneasy racial peace to Birmingham Tuesday.

Phillips High School was evacuated because of a bomb threat, but students were readmitted 40 minutes later when a methodical search failed to uncover any explosives.

An angry white mob beat and drove back the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth when he attempted to enroll four Negro children at Phillips Monday. The Negro integration leader announced he was confined to bed by doctor's orders and would make no such attempt Tuesday. Wed. 9-11-57

White crowds gathered around Phillips, Woodlawn High, and Graymont Elementary schools before classes began Tuesday, but scores of police kept order except for a student demonstration at Woodlawn. These are the three schools to which eight Negro children have asked admittance.

Several hundred white persons waited in the hot September sun for the appearance of any Negro applicants for enrollment at Phillips. They were kept away from the block-square, four-story brick building.

Miss Snowell Anders, Phillips secretary, said a woman, apparently an adult, called the school with the bomb threat.

"She said, 'There is a bomb set to go off at 9:59 a.m.,'" Miss Anders related. "Then she hung up before I could ask her any questions."

BIRMINGHAM QUIET AS TENSION EASES

Courier-Journal P.2c

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 12 —Tension over attempts to end school segregation eased today. No incidents of violence were reported. New York

Five Negro students were charged with rock throwing. Three white men reported the incident yesterday. One said he had been struck in the face by rocks thrown from a bus carrying Negro high school youths. Another said his vehicle had been hit.

The police held one youth for malicious mischief and disorderly conduct and turned over the others to juvenile authorities.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro minister and integration leader, said he was calling off efforts to enroll Negro students in white schools until officials had acted on petitions of Negro parents for integration. Violence In Jefferson

Advertiser P.4-a
Thurs. 9-12-57
Montgomery, Ala.

The beating of Rev. Shuttlesworth in Birmingham was deplorable, even though the Negro minister has repeatedly sought martyrdom.

His precipitate action in appearing at the white school, after he had announced that he and other Negro parents who had petitioned for admission of their children to specific white schools would not attempt to enroll them, was calculated to incite a disturbance. It did.

Violence can never be excused, but Shuttlesworth has courted it. He seems convinced he is the earthly instrument of some divine plan and is obsessed with a messianic desire to be persecuted. He is not helping his race. Neither were the white thugs helping theirs who beat him. Unfortunately neither he nor they realize the harm they are doing.

Of an entirely different character was the sadistic mutilation of the Jefferson County Negro, described as a mental defective. By all accounts he had done nothing to antagonize the criminal idiots who butchered him. He was merely the chance victim of some subhuman craving for vengeance against a black man. The Shuttlesworth incident, though it cannot be condoned, was at least what might have been expected. Shuttlesworth himself expected it, obviously. But the horrible butchery of the demented Negro can only be explained by the psychopathology of sadism.

Phillips High.

School officials said yesterday the petitioning Negroes would be given aptitude tests before a decision was made on their applications. Alabama's Pupil Placement Act gives school officials broad authority in deciding where pupils must attend classes.

Alabama Stands Ready For Segregation Attack

Daily News Jackson, Miss.
Mon. 9-16-57

By WILLIAM O. TOME
United Press Staff Correspondent

When the legal attack on Alabama's public school system begins and it appears to be only a question of time—the state will put up a three - ply defense in depth.

The combination of three state laws aimed at preserving segregation could conceivably stretch the battle out for years, which, of course, is just what the opponents of racially - mixed schools want.

PRELIMINARIES

The preliminary steps to a possible courtroom battle will probably be launched next week when several Birmingham Negro school children undergo tests to determine their fitness to enter white schools.

Birmingham Schools Supt. L. Frazer Banks will supervise the tests under authority granted by a 1955 legislative act.

When it was disclosed that the children, whose parents had petitioned for admission to all-white schools, would take the tests, racial discord in Alabama's industrial center ended. Negro Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth said he would abandon attempts to integrate schools for the present.

Shuttlesworth was beaten by white men when he sought to take Negro children into an all-white school. The tension brought police guards to two high schools and anti-integration demonstrations by some students.

Although the Negro children will be examined for aptitude and intelligence, city education officials have no recourse under state law but to place them in all - Negro schools.

Alabama Leads Nation In Negro High Grads

Post-Herald Birm, Ala.
Wed. 8-28-57

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 27 (U.P.)—A. R. Meadows, state superintendent of education, said today Alabama had more Negro pupils graduating from high school than any other state in the union last year.

He said Georgia, Mississippi and North Carolina had a larger Negro population than Alabama but less high school graduates.

Meadows also said Alabama public school enrollment reached a new high last year. Total enrollment was 744,456 last year as compared to 733,-392 the previous year.

"Last year's enrollment was 95,571 more than the enrollment of 10 years ago," he said, "with 70,000 of the increase in high school—or 40,000 in the junior high school grades and 30,000 in the senior high school grades."

The enrollment in grades 1-4 ranged from 80,185 in the third grade to 87,961 in the first grade. The greatest decrease in enrollment from one grade to the next was from the eighth grade to the ninth grade, which showed a decrease of 12,862, Meadows said.

The smallest number enrolled was in the 12th grade, with 28,659. There were only 647 more in the pupils in the 12th grade last year than the previous year.

"It is estimated that the enrollment this year will be 755,000 in the public schools," Meadows said, with enrollmnet continuing to increase as long as the birth rate holds up.

Mob Arrives At School; No Negroes Show Up

Post-Herald Birm, Ala.
Tues. 9-17-57

About 50 carloads of parents showed up at Moody Junior High School in St. Clair County yesterday in anticipation of an attempt by Negroes to enroll.

H. L. Blocker, principal, said parents showed up about 8 a.m. as the result of a report which had been circulating in the county.

Lee O. Langston, St. Clair County superintendent of schools, also was there.

Mr. Blocker said no Negroes appeared and all parents had left the school grounds by 9 a.m.

"There was no trouble of any kind," he said. "Apparently somebody was trying to stir up trouble by starting the rumor."

The school is at Moody Cross Roads about five miles North of Leeds.

A total of 406 white students are enrolled.

Board Put On Notice—

Negroes Aiming At School Law Test

Nine Negro families, who have petitioned the Birmingham Board of Education for transfer of their children to white schools, appear to be aiming at a court test of Alabama's two-year-old school placement law.

By naming their children and the schools in which they want them entered, they took a more direct approach than the 49 Negroes who two years ago called on the Board of Education in a general petition to end segregation in city schools.

The board never acted on that first petition.

However, under the provisions of the school placement law, which was sponsored by Jefferson County's Sen. Albert Boutwell and which became law on Aug. 3, 1955, local boards of education must act within 30 days on requests of parents for placement of their children in a school different from the one they previously were attending.

Meanwhile, yesterday, Mayor James W. Morgan declared:

"I am certain that nothing good can come of this movement, but to the contrary, that the fruit thereof will be discord, discontent and unhappiness for many of our people."

The mayor said that in his opinion "this move is not sponsored by the forward thinking, civic minded, loyal citizens of all races in Birmingham."

The nine petitions were received by Dr. Frazer Banks, superintendent of education, shortly before 5 p.m. Tuesday, but were not made public until yesterday.

All were worded the same, with the original being signed by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, head of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, and his wife on behalf of their two children.

The Shuttlesworths, who live at 3191 29th-av, n, asked that their children, now attending Hudson School and Parker High School be transferred to Phillips High.

Signing carbon copies of the original petition were Nathaniel Ridley and his wife, 9030 Fifth-ct, n; William H. Todd Sr. and his wife, 8714 Ninth-ct, n; James Armstrong and his wife, 227 Ninth-ct, w; Arnie L. Horton 3703 First-st, w; Raymond Parker, 3201, 32nd-st, n; Robert Hawkins and his wife, 9112 Sixth-ct, n; Annie Marie Wilson, 4034 Sixth-av, n; and Walthan Avery Sr., 3441 33rd-ter, n.

The Ridleys asked that a son be transferred from Zion City to Woodlawn, the Todds a son from Hooper City to Woodlawn, the Armstrongs two children from W. C. Davis to Graymont, Arnie Horton a son from Parker to Phillips, Parker two children from Parker School to Phillips, the Hawkins two children from Hooper City and Zion City to Woodlawn, Annie Wilson a son to Phillips and Avery a son from Thomas to Phillips.

In their petitions the Negro parents said:

"In view of the May 17, 1954 decision of the U. S. Supreme Court that 'Segregation in Public Education is Unconstitutional,' and the subsequent May 31, 1955 decision placing direct responsibility upon the school boards, we the undersigned parents of school-age children in attendance at public schools within your jurisdiction, do hereby request that appropriate and necessary steps be taken to immediately reorganize the school system so as to provide accommodations for our children in schools of the closest proximity to their homes on a non-discriminatory basis during the 1957-58 term.

"We stand ready to work with you in making a prompt and reasonable start toward making the proper adjustments. An immediate reply stating your anticipated action will be appreciated."

The next regular meeting of the Birmingham Board of Education is scheduled for Sept. 6. Schools open Sept. 4.

Dr. Banks, who discussed the matter with three members of the board after receiving the petition, issued the following statement yesterday, although he emphasized that he was speaking only for himself and not for the board:

"The Birmingham Board of Education has received separate petitions from nine families requesting that their 13 children be allowed to attend schools 'of the closest proximity to' their homes on a non-discriminatory basis during the 1957-8 term.'

"All the petitions were mailed in one registered letter and reached the superintendent's desk in the late afternoon of Aug. 21, 1957. Signatures on each letter have been witnessed and notarized. Attorneys for the Birmingham Board of Education have been notified and will receive copies of the petition. They will advise with the board. Copies of recent state laws pertaining to the matter have not yet been received at the Administration Office."

Birmingham Police Divert Negro Bus, Detain 5 Pupils

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 11 (AP)—A bus load of Negro high school students was diverted to the police station here today in connection with rock-throwing incidents.

Later, all but five of the 76 students were released. One, who was 16 years old, was jailed on a charge of disorderly conduct and malicious mischief. Four others, all younger, were turned over to Juvenile Court on similar charges.

Lt. O. B. Wilson of the Juvenile Aid Division said Frank Coach, 16, is being held in city jail after the incident, linked to Birmingham's tense racial integration issue.

The students were detailed after police were told that rocks were being thrown from the bus. Three white men reported they were targets of the rock-throwing, and one automobile and a pickup truck were struck, officers said.

Wilson said two girls being held for action by Juvenile Court said they took the rocks on the bus in their umbrellas when they started to school today. The bus was en route to Parker High School, a Negro school.

The incident was one of several which police described as "antagonizing" since unsuccessful efforts to enroll four Negro children in a white high school here Monday.

Tarrant High School in nearby Tarrant was evacuated about 11 a.m. today after school officials said they were notified by telephone that a bomb had been planted in the building. Police called it another hoax.

Phillips High School was evacuated yesterday under similar circumstances.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 35, was beaten by a group of white men when he attempted to enroll the children in Phillips High School.

Since then, there have been numerous incidents such as cross-burnings, effigy hangings, rock-throwing and demonstrations by teen-agers.

Earlier today, a 15-year-old white girl reported to police that she was seized by three Negro youths while she was en route to school, but police later said the girl admitted it was a hoax.

Advertiser P. 2

Detective Sgt. M. H. House said the girl told him she scratched her shoulder and tore her clothing with a razor blade.

An uneasy quiet prevailed at the city's high schools today, as extra policemen remained on duty.

Police Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh said the officers would continue to patrol the school areas "as a precautionary measure."

Police have described the incidents so far as minor, and "intended to create excitement."

School officials have announced that eight Negro pupils seeking admittance to three white schools will be given achievement and aptitude tests next week.

The tests are part of the city school board's instructions to Dr. Frazer Banks, superintendent of Education, and are expected to lead to a court test of Alabama's school placement law.

The law, which doesn't mention segregation, gives school officials broad authority in placing children after aptitude tests and personal interviews. Sponsors of the law have said it is a legal way to preserve segregation in the state's schools.

Banks was instructed by the school board last Friday to make an extensive study and report his findings back to the board. Banks has given no indication when his report will be ready.

Birmingham Negro Student Gets 6 Months In Bus Row

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 13 (AP)—The first trial of Negro students accused of throwing objects from a chartered school bus at white persons resulted in a maximum six-month sentence and $100 fine today.

Sat. 9-14-57

The sentence imposed on Frank Coach, 16, one of five boys and girls taken in custody Wednesday, was the heaviest which Recorders Court Judge Oliver B. Hall could fix. The court tries only misdemeanors.

Coach has five days in which to appeal.

Police stopped the bus and removed 76 students following complaints of white persons that the occupants were throwing rocks and other objects at them. Investigators said Coach made a statement he threw a soft drink bottle at an automobile.

No action has been taken in the cases of two boys and two girls who were turned over to juvenile authorities.

The bus incident came a day after some students at all-white Woodlawn High School pelted buses and cars occupied by Negroes with rocks during an anti-integration demonstration.

There has been a series of minor clashes involving whites and Negroes since a Negro preacher was beaten by a mob of white men following his attempt to enroll four Negro students at Phillips High School Monday.

The chartered bus was carrying the students to Parker High School for Negroes at the time of the incident.

Police quoted one of the girls on the bus as saying she put rocks in her umbrella after her mother told her to throw back if anyone threw rocks at her.

'My Husband Is Not a Showoff' —Mrs. Shuttlesworth

Courier p4

By MRS. F. L. SHUTTLESWORTH as told to
TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—"Mama! He has a knife!" the child screamed.

I thought it was the car door that hit me. I didn't have any idea I was stabbed.

It was all supposed to have gone off as a routine thing.

Mrs. Shuttlesworth is the wife of the intrepid young Birmingham (Ala.) minister and segregation fighter who heads the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. Both Mrs. Shuttlesworth and her husband—pastor of the Bethel Baptist Church—were born in Birmingham. They were beaten Sept. 9 by a mob of whites as they sought to enroll their children and two others in white Phillips High School.

We only wanted to attempt to enroll our children in order to lay ground for a legal case.

Reverend (Rev. Shuttlesworth) had sent wires to the Police Commissioner, the Board of Education and others, before we went, to request protection from any violence or anything of that sort. But the wires were delayed. We now have proof that they were delayed.

Sat 9-28-57

THEY WERE sent in plenty of time to be delivered before we got there, but they were not delivered until later. Reverend had also asked that they be phoned out before being delivered.

Reverend spent $19.93 just to make sure that we had copies of the wires sent. They only had to go four and five blocks from the Western Union office.

But when we got to the school there were crowds on each corner. Our first impression was that it was a cool reception. Nothing out of the ordinary.. There. were. four cops there, one on each corner.

We pulled up, and as we attempted to get out crowds came from all sides as if by magic. It was a planned thing. Rev. Shuttlesworth stepped out first. Then I stepped out. We moved back to the back door of the car to open it for the child. Then the attacks began.

REVEREND MADE no attempt to fight them off, at first. Then he saw they really meant to hurt us. They had brass knuckles and iron chains with little knobs on them and they took them and broke out the windows of our car.

Then Reverend saw they really meant to hurt us and he led them away from us at the car, on purpose, so we would be safe. The crowd there was trying to get at us and we fought them off as best we could. I used my pocketbook.

The girl (Ruby Fredericka, 12) got hurt then getting back into the car. The other girl (Patricia, 14) and the two young men were still in the car.

It was then the child screamed, "Mama! He has a knife!" and I thought it was the car door that hit me and caused my hurt feeling. I did not have any idea I was stabbed.

WE FINALLY got into the car, and when we left no one followed us. They had booed and jeered the other car but did not attack it. Our original plan called for us to go to enroll the children and let the car leave. We had another car with us as witnesses to be able to testify that we had taken the children to enroll. They saw it all.

The crowds that came at us from each corner must have each consisted of from 10 to 15 persons. I must say that one cop did a swell job trying to stop it. The other cops who were there didn't even come up to the attack. It was between 10:30 and 11 A. M. on Sept. 9 when it happened.

Our two children, I must say, and the two young men with them were very cool.

As for our effort, it was one of those things that had to be done. It could be hanging around the courts for years and years. As for my husband, I must say he is doing what he is doing from his heart. He is not a grandstand player like some folks would like to make out.

FOR ME, if I'm going to be with him, I might as well be all the way.

The Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights has raised over $20,000 already and already spent it carrying on our fight in Birmingham. We have three cases in the courts right now: the Terminal Station case, the Negro police case, and the city ordinance on transit. Now we will also have the school case, which is going to be more expensive than we thought.

What we need is help to try to pay for these things. The folks here have been very faithful, but the load is very heavy now and getting heavier.

Negroes tested after application to white schools

Dr. L. Frazer Banks, superintendent of city schools, today said tests have been given the Negro children who have petitioned to enter white schools and the results are "under study."

The tests were given by the schools' guidance department which is under the direction of Clay Sheffield.

Under the Alabama School placement Act, Dr. Banks may consider such tests and also schools reports, personal interviews, and other factors in deciding on assignment or reassignment of pupils.

Thirteen Negro children from nine families petitioned for entrance to Phillips and Woodlawn High Schools and Graymont Elementary School in August. Three of the families subsequently withdrew their petitions.

Three Freed In Alabama Attack

Cleared

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Three men, who were arrested on charges of attempting to murder a Negro minister, have been cleared by a Jefferson County Grand Jury.

The jury dropped charges against the three men after they denied attacking the Rev. Shuttleworth was attacked by a crowd of white men when he attempted to enroll four Negro youths in the Phillips High School which was attended only by whites.

Date 10-6-57

Rev. Shuttlesworth was kicked and beaten until he managed to escape in his auto. The three suspects were picked up immediately after the attack on the minister.

They were identified as I. F. Gauldin, 42, W. H. Cash, 50, and J. E. Breckenridge, 26.

Meanwhile, the parents of six youths, including two daughters of the minister, have sought admission for their children to attend Phillips and Woodlawn High Schools and Grayson Elementary. Petitions are being processed by the City Board of Education under the Alabama School Placement Law.

Judge Orders Petition To Be Filed To Block Interference by Faubus; Birmingham Negro Pastor Beaten

3 White Men Are Arrested For Attack

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky. Tues. 9-10-57

By The Associated Press

Birmingham, Sept. 9.—A Negro minister was beaten Monday in an outbreak of mob violence set off by his attempt to enter Negro students at all-white Phillips High School.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 35, was knocked down several times and threatened with death by members of a white group that had gathered outside the downtown school. He was only slightly injured.

Mr. Shuttlesworth's daughter, Ruby Fredericka, 12, suffered a bruised ankle when a car door was slammed against it during the melee.

Rocks Thrown at School

Three white men were arrested by police, who battled a dozen or more men until the minister was able to break away and make his escape.

Two hours after the incident, a car containing four Negro men drove past the block-square high school building and threw rocks into a window. No one was hurt. The Negroes escaped.

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh ordered Birmingham police to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the schools" from entering school grounds. This would include Negroes who have not been registered.

Mr. Shuttlesworth said, after Lindbergh's order, that he would try to enroll the Negroes at Phillips again Tuesday, "whether they kill us or not."

Police also said the all-white Woodlawn High School, in the eastern section, had been notified by telegram that an attempt to enroll Negroes would be made there Tuesday.

A petition to register eight Negroes at three City schools, including Phillips, is pending. Monday's was the first physical effort by Negroes this year to enter Alabama schools. Several Negroes tried unsuccessfully to enroll at a Montgomery elementary school in 1955.

The Shuttlesworth effort Monday was unexpected, since registration had ended last week.

'Let's Get That Negro'

Lindbergh said a telegram from Mr. Shuttlesworth asking police protection at Phillips arrived after the minister had made the enrollment attempt.

This Deep South city of 326,000 has a Negro population of about 130,000. Another 70,000 or so live in its suburbs to make up about a third of a metropolitan community of 600,000.

Jim Atkins, news director of WBRC-TV, said that when Mr. Shuttlesworth drove to the school, about "15 men jumped on him and started slugging him."

The crowd yelled, "Let's get that Negro, let's kill him," Atkins said.

Police Lt. E. T. Rouse, who headed a detail of four officers at the scene, said he called Police Headquarters for help as soon as Mr. Shuttlesworth arrived at 10:35 a.m. They had been sent to the school on reports that around 50 men were lounging around just outside the school grounds.

The Shuttlesworth car contained the minister, his wife; two of his daughters, Ruby and Patricia Ann, 14; the Rev. J. S. Phifer; Nathaniel Lee, 17, and Walter Wilson, 12. The four children were to be entered in the Lee said the mob attacked the minister with "brass knuckles and large link chains about a foot long. Only Mr. Shuttlesworth left the car."

The three men arrested were identified as W. H. Cash, 50; I. F. Gauldin, 42, and J. E. Breckenridge, 26, all of Birmingham. They were booked for assault with intent to murder at City Jail, Warden A. E. Curl said.

Mr. Shuttlesworth is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, organized as a prointegration group in Birmingham shortly after Alabama courts outlawed the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

He was a leader in the attempt to end separate seating of the races on Birmingham buses last December. Negroes riding in white areas in a mass demonstration were arrested except for Mr. Shuttlesworth. Their test of the rigid Birmingham segregation laws still is pending in court.

Negro Beaten For Trying To Mix School

News P. 1 Jackson, Miss.

BIRMINGHAM (AP)—A Negro prointegration leader was attacked by a group of white men today as he sought to enter several Negro students in all-white Phillips High School here.

Tues. 9-9-57

The Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, one of a group of Negro parents who had sought to enroll their children in white schools earlier, was beaten about 10:30 a. m. when he drove to the school.

After Schuttlesworth was hit several times, he made his way back to his automobile and drove off. Three white men were taken into custody by police.

Shuttlesworth, who is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, told bystanders he had come "to enter these children in schools" as he parked in front of the downtown high school.

The children remained in the car as Shuttlesworth got out.

Jim Atkins, news director of television station WABT, said Shuttlesworth was "jumped by about 15 or 20 men" and knocked down several times.

Birmingham Posts Guard To Bar Mixing

Daily News Jackson, Miss. Tues. 9-10-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UP)—Police guards were set up at all-white schools today with instructions to keep out Negro pupils in the wake of an integration attempt marred by violence.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro clergyman and integration leader, was beaten Monday while trying to enroll his two children and two other Negroes during the first integration attempt tin Birmingham schools. Three of his assailants were arrested.

Rev. Shuttlesworth Beaten With Chains

Louisville Ky

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Hard on the heels of the defiance of a Federal desegregation order by Arkansas' governer Faubus, renewed resistance to school integration, mushroomed up all over the nation with overtones of violence in some cases.

One of the more serious cases developed in Birmingham, where Rev. F. Shuttlesworth was beaten by a mob of whites with brass knuckles and chain links when he attempted to enroll several Negro children in all-white Phillips High School.

The integration leader was knocked down several times when he drove up to the school with the youngsters, his wife, and Rev. J. S. Phifer.

Three Whites Arrested

Police, who battled a dozen men while Shuttlesworth made his escape, arrested three men and charged them with assault with intent to murder. "Let's get the Negro, let's kill him," had been the cry, according to witnesses.

Those arrested were W. H. Cash, 50; I. F. Gaudin, 42, and J. E. Breckenridge.

Two hours after the incident, an unidentified automobile drove past the school and threw bricks into a window.

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh gave orders for police to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the schools" from entering school grounds. This would include all who are not registered.

Negroes Thrown Back

Across the Arkansas River from Little Rock, North Little Rock saw it's first violence when six Negro students, attempting to enter the all-white school, were shoved and jostled by a gang of jeering white students.

Defender

The Negro students were passing the all-white school when suddenly they turned and went toward a doorway in the school. About 12 youths blocked the entrance, and when the Negroes climbed the steps, they were grabbed and thrown back.

Superintendent Wright attempted to get the Negro students into the school, but was blocked by the crowd. And one youngster planted himself in front of the superintendent and refused to move, even when threatened with expulsion.

Sent to Negro School

The Negro students were sent away from the school and Wright later told them that nothing could be gained by them presenting themselves to the school at that time. He instructed them to enroll at the all-Negro school.

North Little Rock had planned voluntary gradual integration, but it was abandoned when the Little Rock trouble began.

Police were on hand when the Negroes attempted to enter the North Little Rock School, but did not attempt to escort them into the building but they did stop the whites from molesting them further when they had been shoved into the street.

$500,000 Explosion

A dynamite explosion ripped a $500,000 Nashville school apart Monday night after a single Negro pupil had enrolled.

Authorities indicated that the school will be a total loss. The explosion was so powerful that buildings three blocks away were damaged.

The blast came a few hours after police had dispersed a crowd of about 500, who were smashing windshields and windows of Negroes' cars with bricks and bottles.

Three persons were arrested Monday. One white woman was charged with hurling a soft drink bottle at a Negro parent, another white woman was accused of throwing rocks and a Negro mother, who was stoned, by the white woman, was arrested for carrying a knife.

"This is no longer a matter of segregation or desegregation," said Assistant Superintendent W. H. Oliver. "This is a matter of sheer lawlessness. We're up against thugs. This is the result of a flame that has been fanned in Nashville by some local local and outside agitators.

"I hope this will at last waken the law-abiding citizens of this community to the problem we're up against."

Kasper On Scene

John Kasper, who has been in Nashville, seeking to stir up trouble for several weeks, toured the schools Monday, as 15 Negro first-gradeers began to go to class with white first graders.

Integration went off quietly at Sturgis—the scene of racial strife last year—as 18 Negroes enrolled at the Sturgis High School Monday. However, 15 white students walked out of the school after the Negroes arrived and were cheered by a small crowd outside.

Police had arrested four persons last week during demonstrations by crowds of 100 to 250 persons.

Faubus Waits It Out

In Little Rock, seemingly the focal point of this resistance, Gov. Orval Faubus awaits the service of a Federal notice, restraining him from further interfering with integration at Central High School.

Faubus is entrenched behind armed troops who guard his mansion and has not altered his orders to the National Guardsmen surrounding the school to turn away all Negroes seeking entrance.

Meanwhile, a proposal has been broached that would put the Little Rock dispute in the hands of five governors for study and recommendations.

Two would be from states having integration problems; two from states which have solved the problem and one from a state with no integration problem.

Mayor's Life Threatened

Little Rock's Mayor Woodrow Mann, who emphatically opposes the governor's action, revealed that his life has been threatened and that his wife has been insulted over the telephone.

Faubus stated that a fried had told him that a certain group taking off from a Northern city, was planning to make an attempt on his life.

It is reported that the President is putting the full prestige of his office behind the Federal Court order of integration, and that he is determined to throw the full power of the office into the showdown between the State and the Federal Government.

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh said that in the event he tries to enroll Negro children in any all-white school he will be restrained by the police.

The Negro minister was beaten by a crowd of about 20 men with chains and brass knuckles when he stepped from a car containing the children.

He managed to get back in the car, however, and was taken to a hospital where he was treated for lacerations of the head and released.

Last night, the minister begged a crowd of some 800 Negroes attending a meeting of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights not to make reprisals for the beating he received.

One of his daughters, 12-year-old Ruby Fredericka, received a foot injury when a white man slammed a car door on her foot. Mrs. Ruby Shuttlesworth found several hours after the incident that she had a two-inch knife cut on her back. She had not noticed it during the excitement.

Police arrested W. H. Cash, 50; I. F. Gauldin, 42, and J. E. Breckinridge, 26, all of Birmingham, in connection with the attack.

Minister Attacked By White Gang In Integration Attempt

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Times 9-10-57

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—(INS) — A Negro leader who said he got tired of "stalling" by school officials was beaten by a group of white men Monday when he attempted to enroll his daughter in an all-white school at Birmingham.

A group of about ten men pummeled the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, and his 13 year-old daughter Ruby was jostled when they approached the Phillips high school.

NIGHT RIDERS

The minister, vice chairman of the Alabama Christian movement for Human Rights which is sponsoring moves for integration of city buses and public schools at Birmingham, said after the attack:

"We're not going to let bloodthirsty night-riders stop us."

Shuttlesworth got out of an auto and took a few steps toward the school. His daughter was just behind him. As the group of white men approached, the minister began to run. The pursuers postled the child, who scampered back into the automobile.

The minister was overtaken speedily and hit several times and knocked to the ground. He struggled to his feet almost immediatedly, however and ran back to the automobile and drove off.

Shuttlesworth was not believed seriously injured.

He told newsmen after the attack that he decided to enroll his daughter in the school because a petition for an end to segregation in Birmingham was being "stalled by so called state channels.'

The petition was filed with the local school board, which referred it to a committee for study.

"All we are getting are lectures on Negroes (and) these children are how wonderful segregation is for being denied an education," Shuttlesworth said.

Police said the rock-throwing was staged by teen-agers it was reported.

Excluding the latest alleged rock-throwing, police kept the city under control Wednesday. The officers will continue to patrol the school areas as a "precautionary measure," according to Police Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh.

Birm. Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Birmingham police were holding 5 Negro students late Wednesday in connection with alleged rock-throwing incidents in which several white persons reported they were targets.

One youth, Frank Coach, 16, was arrested after being charged with disorderly conduct and malicious mischief, while the remaining four all reportedly younger were sent to juvenile court authorities.

The five were among 76 students corralled by police after three white men charged that a busload of Negro students threw rocks at them. The bus was enroute to Parker High School.

Police said the rock-throwing was one of several "antagonizing" incidents which followed unsuccessful attempts to enroll four Negro students in all-white schools Monday and the brutal beating of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, local Negro leader, also on Monday.

Other incidents described as bomb scares, mock hangings, cross burnings and demonstrations, have been

5 Negro Students Held In 'Rocking'

Post-Herald Bham, Ala. Thurs. 9-12-57 p. 1

BY BILL MOBLEY

A bus load of Parker High School students was held for more than two hours yesterday at City Hall before detectives learned the identity of five riders responsible for several rock throwing incidents.

A 16-year-old boy was jailed as a result of the incidents and charged with malicious mischief and disorderly conduct, and two other boys and two girls were taken to Juvenile Court.

Detective O. B. Wilson said the two girls, ages 13 and 14, said some white boys stoned their bus Tuesday afternoon as they passed Woodlawn High School.

One of them said her mother told her to take some rocks on the school bus and the next time their bus was stoned to return the fire.

The two girls admitted taking the rocks onto the bus in their umbrellas.

The boys also admitted throwing the rocks, detectives said.

The first rock tossing incident reported from the bus occurred in Woodlawn, across First-av, n, from Woodlawn High School. An unidentified white man told police he was missed by half a brick as he waited for a bus.

The next incident reported to police was on the Jimmie Jones Viaduct when Marvin Hancock, 5903 First-av, n, said rocks thrown from the bus struck the side of his auto.

He said they were thrown from the bus loaded with Negro children.

Another motorist, who identified himself as D. B. Moore, said he saw the rocks hit the side of Mr. Hancock's car. He said he got ahead of the bus and blocked it as the driver rolled off the west end of the viaduct.

S. R. Keith, Springville, who works in an Edgewood grocery store, said the Negro students shouted insults at him as he rode another Birmingham Transit Co. bus. He said they shouted "Tex" in insulting tones before a large rock struck the side of the bus in which he was riding. Keith was wearing a large white hat.

After Moore stopped the bus, Officers W. A. Parker and J. L. McCain were dispatched to the scene.

Superior officers from police headquarters and the transit company office were called to decide what action to take.

After several minutes of consultation, they decided to take the whole load to City Hall.

Five non-students on the bus also were taken to City Jail but released later without charges when the others admitted the misdemeanors.

Detectives Earl Heaton and E. L. Quinn, who aided Lt. Wilson in the investigation, said a big piece of concrete which hit the side of the car on the viaduct could not have been taken onto the bus in an umbrella.

Police Chief Jamie Moore said the bus incident was the only racial school trouble reported to him yesterday.

Principal R. C. Johnson said he had instructed his students on Tuesday concerning such disorderly outbreaks during the tenseness of the race situation in Birmingham.

He told Detective Capt. W. J. Haley he had instructed all students against taking canned soft drinks into the busses, as he had had complaints that students had been throwing the empties at vehicles.

Lt. Wilson said the 16-year-old boy, Frank Coach, 514 67th-st, n, would be tried in Recorder's Court later this week. The juveniles are to be tried in Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court.

Professor Johnson said the bus carrying the students starts loading at 86th-st, and First-av n, and picks up students on into Woodlawn.

It is one of three busses which are special for Negro students only.

VICTIM—Marvin Hancock said his car was struck by rocks thrown from a bus loaded with Negro students.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. Sept. 11 (AP)—Seventy-six Negro high school pupils were taken from a bus and questioned by police today after rock-throwing incidents.

Thurs. 9-12-57

They were on their way to Parker High School, an all-Negro institution, when complaints to police asserted that rocks were thrown at white persons on a viaduct.

Several rock-throwing incidents were reported earlier as an aftermath of racial tensions following Monday's effort to enroll Negro students at all-white Phillips High School.

In another incident a 15-year-old white girl told police she was seized by three Negro youths on her way to school and warned against attending.

One dummy was hung and another burned at separate white high schools earlier in the day in further demonstrations against integrating white and Negro schools.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 11 (AP)—A busload of Negro high school students was diverted to the police station here today in connection with rock-throwing incidents.

Later, all but five of the 76 students were released. One, who was 16 years old, was jailed on a charge of disorderly conduct and malicious mischief. Four others, all younger, were turned over to juvenile court on similar charges.

LINKED TO TENSION

Lt. O. B. Wilson of the juvenile aid division said Frank Coach, 16, is being held in city jail after the incident, linked to Birmingham's tense racial integration issue.

The students were detained after police were told that rocks were being thrown from the bus. Three white men reported they were targets of the rock-throwing, and one automobile and a pickup truck were struck, officers said.

Wilson said two girls being held for action by juvenile court said they took the rocks on the bus in their umbrellas when they started to school today. The bus was en route to Parker High School, a Negro school.

"ANTAGONIZING"

The incident was one of several which police described as "antagonizing" since unsuccessful efforts to enroll four Negro children in a white high school here Monday.

Tarrant High School in nearby Tarrant was evacuated about 11 a.m. today after school officials said they were notified by telephone that a bomb had been planted in the building. Police called it another hoax.

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 9-12-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Birmingham police were holding 5 Negro students late Wednesday in connection with alleged rock-throwing incidents in which several white persons reported they wer targets.

One youth, Frank Coach, 16, was arrested after being charged with disorderly conduct and malicious mischief, while the remaining four all reportedly younger were sent to juvenile court authorities.

The five were among 76 students coralled by police after three white men charged that a busload of Negro students threw rocks at them The bus was enroute to Parker High School.

Police said the rock-throwing was one of several "antagonizing" incidents which followed unsuccessful attempts to enroll four Negro students in all-white schools Monday and the brutal beating of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, local Negro leader, also on Monday.

Other incidents described as bomb scares, mock hangings, cross burnings and demonstrations, have been staged by teen-agers it was reported.

Thurs. 9-12-57

Excluding the latest alleged rock-throwing, police kept the city under control Wednesday. The officers will continue to patrol the school areas as a "precautionary measure," according to Police Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh.

Negroes Didn't Accost Her, White Girl Admits

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

Birmingham, Sept. 12 (AP)—Police Sgt. M. H. House said Thursday a 15-year-old white high-school girl has admitted her story that she was accosted by three Negro youths Wednesday was a hoax.

9-13-57

House said the girl, a pupil at Glenn Vocational High School, admitted she made up the story to keep from having to attend classes.

The girl said first she had been seized by the Negroes as she walked across a parking lot. A scratch on her shoulder and rips in her blouse were done by her with a safety-razor blade, House said.

Negro Minister Is Beaten in Alabama Mob Violence

Tries to Enter Students at Birmingham School

Tues, 9-10-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 9 (AP) —A Negro minister was beaten today in an outbreak of mob violence set off by his attempt to enter Negro students at all-white Phillips High School.

Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 35, was knocked down several times and threatened with death by members of a white group which had gathered outside the downtown school.

Shuttlesworth's daughter, Ruby Fredericka, 12, suffered a bruised ankle when a car door was slammed against it.

Three white men were arrested by police who battled a dozen or more men until the minister was able to break away and escape.

Two hours after the incident, a car containing four Negro men drove past the block-square Phillips building and threw rocks into a window. No one was hurt. The Negroes escaped.

TO TRY AGAIN

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh ordered Birmingham police to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the schools" from entering school grounds. This would include Negroes who have not been registered.

Shuttlesworth said, after Lindbergh's letter, that he would try to enroll the Negroes at Phillips again tomorrow, "whether they kill us or not."

Police also said the all-white Woodlawn High School, in the eastern section, had been notified by telegram that an attempt to enroll Negroes would be made tomorrow.

A petition to register eight Negroes at three city schools, including Phillips, is pending. Today's was the first physical effort by Negroes this year to enter Alabama schools. Several Negroes tried unsuccessfully to enroll at a Montgomery elementary in 1955. P. 9

Last year at the University o Alabama, located 60 miles from Birmingham at Tuscaloosa, Autherine Lucy, a Negro co-ed from Birmingham, tried to enroll but was driven from the campus by a mob.

Times, 9-10-57

EFFORT UNEXPECTED

The Shuttlesworth effort today was unexpected, since registration had ended last week.

Lindbergh said a telegram from Shuttlesworth asked police protection after the minister had made the enrollment attempt.

This deep South city of 326,000 has a Negro population of about 130,000. Another 70,000 or so live in its suburbs, making up about one-third of a metropolitan community of 600,000.

Jim Atkins, news director of WBRC-TV, said that when Shuttlesworth drove to the school about "15 men jumped on him and started slugging him."

The crowd yelled "let's get that Negro, let's kill him," Atkins said.

Police Lt. E. T. Rouse, who headed a detail of four officers at the scene, said he called headquarters for help as soon as Shuttlesworth arrived at 10:35 a. m.

"Shuttlesworth got out of the car and ran west along the street for about 100 yards, and the police ran toward him," Rouse said.

BRASS KNUCKLES

"Shuttlesworth was knocked down several times. We could not keep up with him and keep the crowd off at the same time."

The Shuttlesworth car contained the minister, his wife; two of his daughters, Ruby and Patricia Ann, 14; Rev. J. S. Phifer; Nathaniel Lee, 17, and Walter Wilson, 12. The four children were to be entered in the school.

Race tension lessens here, night quiet

News P. 1

Thurs. 9-12-57

B'ham, Ala.

Race tension over attempts to end segregation in schools had lessened today as "incidents" dwindled.

Police, still keeping a watchful eye on school areas, had a quiet night.

These developments, however, followed turmoil earlier in the week over efforts by Negroes to enroll in white schools:

1. Five Negro students were charged by police in connection with rock-throwing from a bus.

2. A 15-year-old white girl admitted her story of being seized by three Negroes was a hoax.

3. Tarrant City police searched the high school there for a bomb following an anonymous report but found none.

4. A small cross was burned at Jones Valley High School.

Police jailed five Negroes after taking 76 students from a bus for questioning.

A 16-year-old, Frank Coach of 514 67th-st, n, was charged with malicious mischief and disorderly conduct. Four other teenagers, two boys and two girls, were turned over to Juvenile Court.

The two girls told Det. Lt. O. B. Wilson white boys stoned their bus Tuesday afternoon as it passed Woodlawn High School. News

One said her mother told her to take rocks on the bus and return the fire the next time the bus was stoned. P. 3

Wilson, head of the police Juvenile Aid Division, said the two girls admitted concealing rocks in their umbrellas. The boys also admitted throwing rocks, he said.

A motorist who saw rocks hit a car stopped the bus by blocking it with his auto at First-av and 25th-st, n.

The students were en route to Parker High School.

Parker High Principal R. C. Johnson said he had instructed students not to take canned soft drinks aboard buses. He said he had reports the empties were thrown at vehicles.

Woodlawn High School students, noisily protesting school integration attempts Tuesday, tossed rocks and other objects at buses and autos containing Negroes.

The 15-year-old white girl who said she was attacked admitted to police last night the story was invented so she wouldn't have to go to school yesterday.

She had reported yesterday morning three Negro youths seized her in a parking lot at Five Points South as she was on her way to catch a bus for school.

She said the Negroes tore her blouse and cut her on the arm before she broke away and ran.

She later said she inflicted the minor cuts herself with a razor blade.

Tarrant City Police Chief Clyde Sellers said three officers and Tarrant High teachers searched lockers and classrooms after a caller reported a bomb had been placed in the school building.

Tarrant School Supt. George A. Mitchell declined comment except to say "we have had no scares."

Chief Sellers said the call came in about 9:45 a.m. yesterday from a man.

The cross burned at Jones Valley High last night was extinguished by police. It was believed set by students.

NEGRO INTEGRATION leader F. L. Shuttlesworth said he has called off efforts to enroll Negro children in white schools pending action on petitions for transfers now before the Birmingham school superintendent.

Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, said he is supervising enrollment of the children in Negro schools.

Petitions from six families are in the hands of Dr. Frazer Banks, school superintendent.

Dr. Banks has broad authority under the 1955 Alabama School Placement Act to decide whether the Negro children can be transferred to white schools.

Shuttlesworth and his wife were among the petitioners.

The Negro leader was beaten Monday when he attempted to enroll his two daughters in Phillips High School.

His wife and a daughter also were injured in the assault by a crowd of white men.

Bomb Threat Clears Birmingham School

Times-Union Wed 9-11-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 10 (AP)—Failure of Negroes to renew efforts to enroll at three all-white city schools and firm police control brought uneasy racial peace to Birmingham today.

Phillips High School was evacuated because of a bomb threat, but students were readmitted 40 minutes later when a search failed to uncover any explosives.

An angry white mob beat and drove back the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth when he attempted to enroll four Negro children at Phillips yesterday. The Negro integration leader announced he was confined to bed by his doctor's orders.

White crowds gathered around Phillips, Woodlawn High and Graymont Elementary before classes began today, but scores of police kept order except for a student demonstration at Woodlawn. These are the three schools to which eight Negro children have asked admittance.

Woodlawn students began gathering about 6:30 a.m. and raised two Confederate flags on the school flagpole. Some 75 to 100 yelled threats and threw rocks at passing cars and buses occupied by Negroes. Two figures were hung in effigy.

Driven from school property when police threatened to turn fire hoses on them, some of the Woodlawn students tried to launch a parade to Phillips.

A pickup truck and two cars with Woodlawn students reached Phillips, in the edge of the downtown retail district, but were turned back by police.

Woodlawn is Birmingham's largest school with 2,450 students.

Several hundred white persons waited in the hot September sun for the appearance of any Negro applicants for enrollment at Phillips. The crowd was kept away from the bloc-square, four-story brick building.

Miss Snowell Anders, Phillips secretary, said a woman, apparently an adult, called the school with the bomb threat.

"She said, 'there is a bomb set to go off at 9:59 a.m.'" Miss Anders related. "Then she hung up before I could ask her any questions."

Police quickly blocked off surrounding streets and the 1,850 students, laughing and talking, marched to an adjacent park.

Police Commissioner Robert Lindbergh warned yesterday that no Negroes would be permitted to enter any white school unless they had lawful business there.

Dr. Frazer Banks, city superintendent of education, said that none of the eight Negro applicants could be enrolled at white schools because their petitions are under study.

Negroes Admit Stoning Whites In Birmingham

Daily News Thurs. 9-12-57

Jackson, Miss.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UP)—Five Negro youths, including two girls, admitted stoning passing cars carrying whites Wednesday in the latest outbreak of racial conflict here. P. 1

But police said a 15-year-old white girl who claimed she was grabbed and threatened by three Negroes admitted the story was a hoax to enable her to skip school.

The Negroes accused of heaving rocks at automobiles admitted their guilt after police had held a busload of 70-odd Negro students at headquarters for more than two hours.

Frank Coach, 16, was charged with malicious mischief and disorderly conduct, and the other four were turned over to juvenile court due to their ages.

Detectives said the two girls admitted taking the stones in their umbrellas on the bus, bound for Parker Negro High School. The boys said they threw them at automobiles from the Windows of the bus.

The two girls said they had been stoned earlier this week by white youths while passing all-white Woodlawn High School, where students had demonstrated against racial integration.

The stoning incident was the first after two days of near-crisis touched off by the mob attack on Negro Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth when he sought to integrate Phillips High School.

Shuttlesworth has announced that he will await official action on petitions seeking admission of Negro students to white schools.

ST. JUDE EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE GRADUATES

Thirty-one candidates for senior high diplomas, above, became alumni members of St. Jude Educational Institute Wednesday night when they were pronounced graduates and awarded diplomas by the Most Rev. Joseph A. Durick, D.D.; Auxiliary Bishop of the Diocese of Mobile-Birmingham, during the 1957 graduation exercises. Father Paul Mullaney is principal.

Two effigies found at Montgomery high schools

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 5—(AP)—Two effigies, one obviously intended to look like a Negro and the other described by police as "looking like a scarecrow," were placed at a pair of Montgomery high schools last night.

An unidentified caller, police said, informed them—and apparently also notified newsmen—that a Negro was on the lawn of Sidney Lanier High School.

Investigating officers found a newspaper-stuffed dummy with a hangman's noose around its neck at the base of the school's flagpole. Dressed in blue denim trousers and a white shirt, the effigy had a black stocking for a head. Its features, formed of white cloth, appeared to have been fastened by a sewing machine rather than by hand stitching.

The second dummy was discovered by police hanging from the flagpole at Robert E. Lee High School about 11:15 p.m. It looked, officers said, as though someone might have removed it from a field somewhere.

Neither dummy bore any labels, police reported.

Enrollment starts today and classes begin Friday at these all-white schools. No Negroes have publicly announced an intention to enroll at either.

Four effigies, some of them labeled with signs, were hanged from flagpoles at Montgomery schools last year. Effigies of Negroes were discovered at both Lee and Lanier High Schools, and dummies representing a Negro and a National Guardsman were hanging from William Harrison Elementary School.

Negroes Apply to White Schools

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 7 (AP) — The Birmingham board of education Friday received applications of Negroes for admission to three white schools, and at the same time adopted new rules based on a law intended to preserve racial segregation.

The applications were turned over to Dr. Frazer Banks, city superintendent of education, for study.

The board adopted new rules of procedure based on the school placement law, designed as a barrier to racial integration of Alabama classrooms although race is not mentioned.

Under the law Banks may consider school reports, test results, personal interviews and other factors in deciding on assignment or reassignment of pupils.

Originally nine Negro families asked admission of their children to Phillips and Woodlawn High schools and Graymont Elementary.

Three families later withdrew their petitions. None of the parents was present at the board meeting.

Banks said he would want to get "other information" before acting on the petitions. He said he would report later to the board. Any decision he makes may be appealed to the board.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Race Separation Prevents Strife

Someone in this column took the position that Rev. Shuttlesworth, a preacher, is standing for Christian principles in his agitation against separation of races on street cars. in schools, etc.

Respect for this long established system of separation keeps peace between the races; whereas Shuttlesworth's agitation to have his race to cease to respect the custom has already caused much strife between Negroes and whites.

Now the New Testament Scriptures emphasize that the spirit that follows after "peace" is of god (Gal. 5:22; Heb. 12:14; Matt. 5:9), and that "strife" is of the devil (Gal. 5:20; James 3:16).

How, then, can Shuttlesworth's conduct be justified from Holy Writ?

The Supreme Court in Washington does not require that individuals cease to respect racial separation as a custom, but merely holds that such separation cannot be forced by law.

The practice of separating, so as to be with one's own racial kinship, is, in this section, an old-time custom sent down to us by the fathers in both races. It is as honorable for one race as it is for the other.

But Shuttlesworth has definitely committed himself so as to interfere with this long established custom. His attitude is directly opposite to that of Paul. Hear Paul: "I have committed nothing against the people, or customs" (Acts 28:17).

Public School Here Asked To End Discriminatory Acts

Officials o fthe Birmingham Bublic Schools have been asked "to end segregation and discriminatory practices in the public schools" in a petition forwarded Aug. 20.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, in a prepared statement issued for publication Aug. 21 revealed that the first step had been made toward securing "good faith compliance with the decree and directive of the United States Supreme Court."

While not revealing the identity of the petitioners, the Rev. Shuttlesworth said they included nine families representing about 15 children.

Meantime the Alabama State Legislature this week completed work on enabling bills to preserve segregation and sent them to Gov. James E. Folsom for his signature.

One bill would empower local boards to abolish schools which are threatened with integration, after a public hearing and pay students' tuition in private schools. A companion bill protects the retirement rights of teachers who because of integration would shift to private all-white schools. Alabama has a freedom of choice school plan and other segregation safeguards.

Here is the text of the Shuttlesworth statement issued for publication:

"In good faith the State and local Board of Education have been asked to end segregation and discriminatory practices in the Public Schools. It has been three years and three months since the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that all persons were entitled to identical or the same educational opportunities in public schools. Since that time nothing has been done in our educational systems to comply with the decree and direction of our highest Court. We are now and have always been willing and ready to sit down with our educational authorities to work out these matters consistent with the Supreme Court decision."

"We are again making that request; and time is of the essence. We will expect an immediate reply to our request. We cannot long as citizens delay the educational opportunities of our children by aiding the unnecessary wrongful and sinful evil known as Segregation in Public Schools, practiced by most of our Southern States. The future of our children must not forever be clouded by an eternity of negatives. We owe it to our children and to the future generations, to do everything possible to give them these fundamental guarantees of Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness, which include the right to enjoy, among other things, equal and identical educational opportunities, irrespective of their race, creed, or color. Since we are a country of laws, decent and God-fearing citizens—here and elsewhere—are duty bound to work conscientiously toward good faith compliance with the Constitutional decree and directive of the United States Supreme Court."

Negroes Seek Entry Into Birmingham System Schools

BIRMINGHAM (AP)— Nine Negro families have asked the Birmingham Board of Education to end racial segregation in the city's public schools.

One of the petitioning parents was the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. His group also is leading a Federal Court attack on Birmingham's bus segregation laws.

The parents asked the board for admission of their children, 13 in all, to schools nearest their homes "on a non - discriminatory basis during the 1957-58 term."

The petitions said the children lived nearest three white schools — Phillips and Woodlawn High Schools, and Graymont Elementary.

Dr. Frazer Banks, city superintendent of education, said the board had not had time to determine whether the Negro children actually live nearer to white than Negro schools.

However, he pointed out, school district lines generally are such that often children go to one school although they may live closer to another.

"We stand ready to work with you in making a prompt and reasonable start toward making the proper adjustments," the similar petitions said. "An immediate reply stating your anticipated action will be appreciated."

The petition were the first formal demand for elimination of segregation in city schools made in the names of specific children. A general petition was submitted two years ago, without results.

after registration in the city schools is scheduled, Dr. L. Frazier Banks, superintendent of schools, has notified Negro petitioners that their request will be presented at that time.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, one of the petitioners, had asked for immediate consideration of the petition, since registration is scheduled Sept. 4.

Banks said the petition would not get special attention.

Shuttlesworth demanded immediate action, since "We are concerned as to whether we are to present our children at these schools on the 4th, or whether they are to remain un-enrolled pending board action."

The petition seeks enrollment of Negro children in three white city schools, including Phillips and Woodlawn high schools.

Banks informed the petitioners that under existing school policy, the children of the petitioners should be enrolled in the school they normally would attend pending action of the school board.

Nine Negro parents signed the original petition, but three later asked that their names be withdrawn. They said they had misunderstood what they were signing.

Negro school petitioner asks to be put back on list

A Negro woman who petitioned the Birmingham Board of Education to admit her child to a white school, then later asked that her name be withdrawn from the request, today decided to stick by her original stand seeking race mixing in local schools.

Lee Armstrong, husband of Mrs. Marie Armstrong, said his wife has decided not to withdraw her name.

Four of the original nine petitioners, including Mrs. Armstrong, Friday requested that their names be dropped from the petition. All said they "misunderstood" the petition's intent.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, said Friday "some will remain" and efforts for integrated schools would be pressed.

SHUTTLEWORTH is one of nine parents who Thursday asked the school board to admit their children to three white schools—Woodlawn High, Phillips High and Graymont Elementary School.

Mrs. Armstrong was joined in her earlier request for withdrawal by William H. Todd Sr., Robert Hawkins and Mrs. Annie Marie Wilson. All said they misunderstood the intention of the petition they signed, but Shuttlesworth said he was "sure they understood" that they were signing a petition asking admission of their children to white schools.

Birmingham city officials have expressed uncompromising opposition to any change in local segregation laws.

Board to study petition—

'Keep children where they were,' Negro told

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth has been told to continue, at least temporarily, his children in the schools they have been attending.

Shuttlesworth and his wife are among the nine Negro families who Aug. 22 asked the City Board of Education to admit their children to three white city schools.

In a registered letter to Dr. Frazer Banks, superintendent of schools, Shuttlesworth has now asked directions "relative to the enrollment of our children in school at the proper time." This letter was dated last Monday.

In answer, Dr. Banks wrote, "It has been and is the policy of the board that, when an application for transfer is made, the child continues in the same school he has been attending or to which he has been promoted, pending a final decision on the request for transfer."

Dr. Banks further wrote that the petitions will be presented at the next board meeting scheduled for Sept. 6.

SHUTTLESWORTH'S letter said, "We understand that the school term begins on the 4th. In the absence of board action and policy, special or otherwise, before the date of school opening, we are compelled to ask your direction as superintendent relative to the enrollment of our children in school at the proper time.

Recognizing that our petitions are valid applications to the school named therein, we are concerned as to whether we are to present our children at these schools on the 4th, or whether they are to remain un-enrolled pending board action.

"The urgency of these matters would, we think, require immediate official direction."

Two of the nine Negro families have requested by letter that their petitions be withdrawn, according to Dr. Banks. They are William H. Todd Sr., and his wife and Robert Hawkins and his wife.

The petitions themselves were returned, Dr. Banks said, although only Hawkins specifically requested that that be done.

THREATS REPORTED BY NEGRO FAMILIES

Three Signed Public School Integration Petition

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 27— (UP)—Four Birmingham Negro families, including three who signed a public school integration petition, say they have received "threatening" telephone calls.

Raymond and Alice Parker said they received several "vile and ugly" telephone calls which "threatened" violence if they did not leave town and withdraw their names from the petition. They are childless and hod no connection with the petition which urged an end to segregation by the 1957-58 school year.

Raymond and Zolap arker did sign the petition seeking admission to Phillips High School for their two children. Parker said he has "withdrawn" his name from the petition because "I didn't understand what I was signing."

William and Josephine Todd said they received similar threatening telephone calls before they "withdrew" their names from the petition.

Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth and his wife also said they received telephoned threats for trying to get their two children enrolled in Phillips High. Rev. Shuttlesworth heads the Society for Human Rights, formed after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was outlawed in Alabama.

Progress, growth of Negro high schools reported

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 23 — State Supt. A. R. Meadows says Negro high schools in Alabama have made what he calls "almost unbelievable progress" in the past 20 years in the number of schools, enrollment and instructional programs.

In a prepared statement, Meadows said enrollment has increased from 28,078 students in 1936 to 87,634 last year and the number of accredited Negro public high schools has gone from nine to 94.

The superintendent said the number of Negro elementary and high school pupils transported to school increased from 3622 to 93,119 in the 20 years. This, along with building construction, has been a major factor in the increased enrollment, Meadows explained.

He said Negro high schools are better equipped and better staffed. Library and laboratory facilities have improved, he continued, "as teachers and other local leaders strive to improve the teaching and learning situation in these schools."

Principals to Hold Annual Gathering At College Here

By INEZ J. BASKIN

The annual meetinr of the Alabama High School Principals Association will be held Wednesday in Paterson Hall and the Campus Center of the Alabama State College, beginning at 1:30 p.m. with the president, Prof. S. J. Wilsenhunt, presiding.

"The Role of the Principal in Improving Instruction," will be the theme and will be discussed by Dr. F. D. DeCosta, professor of Education, at the host college. The three groups, their areas and consultants are: Group I: C. Peoples, chairman, with J. T. Smith, principal R. R. Moton High School, Leeds; A. C. Small, principal. Gregory High School, Collinsville, and T. M. Marsh, Choctaw County Training School, Lisman.

Group II: W. H. Lewis, chairman, with Dr. S. Q. Bryant, Alabama State College; Woodrow McCorvey, principal Escambia County Training School, Atmore and E. J. Oliver, principal, Fairfield Industrial High School, Fairfield.

Group III: Prof. W. E. Thompson, chairman, with J. D. Thompson, principal Coosa County Training School, Cottage Grove; C. M. Mitchell, principal Calhoun Training School, Oxford; A. J. Rowser, principal, U. S. Jones High School, Demopolis, and J. T. Porter, principal, Carver High School, Dothan.

Three areas of study will be on the agenda for the group study: (a) the need for, and some means of establishing closer articulation between the elementary and high school; (2) ways in which the guidance program can contribute to the improvement of instruction and (3) improving instruction through the development and use of an effective in-service study program.

The officers of the association are: H. C. Fields, vice president; J. W. Jenkins, executive secretary; Braynt Foster, treasurer, and McDonald Hughes, research ecretary.

gue's April meeting.

Miss Hawkins was crowned "Queen of the Civic League" on Jan. 1, 1957. She is a member of Shady Grove Baptist Church. Meantime she is president of the Current Events Club at Dunbar High School.

Miss Hawkins was a member of the recent "Radio Quiz 'Em Team" that won from Ullman High School on Feb. 28.

She was chosen from candidates nominated by her section, Class 11-B, which was approved by the Citizenship Committee and voted on by the entire faculty.

A spokesman for the Bessemer Voters League said "the league hopes that by choosing her because of her activities in church, community and school, other boys and girls will bceome active participators in civic service organizations."

The league was entertained with a panel discussion Wednesday night, March 13. Panelists discussed the topic, "What Type of City Government Will Provide the Best Possible Administration?"

Mrs. Elizabeth Stansel presented information on the Mayor-Council form of government; Mrs. Elizabeth Cleveland explained the Commission and the City-Manager patterns of government.

Both panelists are members of the Adult Class in Government at Dunbar High School.

A question period followed the panel speeches. Those in attendance were asked to study further the three types of city government.

At the May meeting, members of the panel will be asked to defend one of the three types of city government as the best possible administrative set-up for the city.

Chairman L. E. Arnold heads the program committee.

Western High and Olin Vocational High, newest Negro high schools in the city, are in the process of becoming accredited institutions.

The schools, located on the same campus in Ensley, have recently undergone extensive evaluation by both their own staffs and a state committee. This Fall application will be made to the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools for membership and accreditment.

About 13 per cent of the 221 Negro senior high schools in Alabama are accredited by the Southern association. Birmingham's other two Negro high schools, Parker and Ullman, have already been granted membership in this organization.

According to the Southern association, the first step in becoming accredited is that "the school should be evaluated in terms of its functions and purposes."

Included in the introduction of a report from a state evaluation committee, which recently inspected the schools, is the comment that "the combined faculty of Western and Olin have an opportunity to make a significant contribution to secondary education. They have the opportunity to develop one of the few really comprehensive high school programs in the state."

"They have the facilities and the personnel to develop an outstanding vocational program, a strong academic offering and a good program of education for life adjustment. All the ingredients are here," the report concludes.

Located at Avenue F and 12th st in Ensley, the two schools have an enrollment of 1079 pupils and a faculty of 46.

Western High, the two-story brick academic building, contains 24 classrooms, four science laboratories, a library and lunchroom. A larger lunchroom and a gymnasium are now under construction.

The $600,000 Olin Vocational High, a gift of the F. F. Olin Foundation, provides 18 rooms and shops for teaching skilled trades.

In addition to a variety of academic courses, 12 vocational courses are available to students.

After two years of required subjects, pupils are permitted to specialize. Some may choose a vocation, while needs and interests of others are met through electives.

Students are encouraged to participate in the student government, school newspaper activities, music clubs or any of the other 25 supervised special interest clubs, which provide a more well-rounded school life.

Commenting on the recent evaluation, the faculty believes "much progress can be noted at our school during the few short years of our existence. Yet we are as equally aware much more could have been done toward meeting the needs of our pupils."

"We know, too, that more should have been done, but our determination is even stronger for future progress," they said. "The professional staff realizes evaluation is of little value unless the pupils profit from it."

Seized on Bus After Cases of Rock-Hurling

Quizzed at City Hall In Birmingham; No Charges Filed

Wed. 9-11-57

By the Associated Press.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 11.—Seventy-six Negro high school pupils were taken from a bus and questioned by police today after rock-throwing incidents.

They were on their way to Parker High School, an all-Negro institution, when complaints to police asserted rocks were thrown at white persons on a viaduct.

One man, Marvin Hancock, told police he was hit by two rocks or bricks and his car was damaged.

No Charges Filed.

The Negro students were being questioned at city hall. No charges had been filed.

Several rock-throwing incidents were reported earlier as an aftermath of racial tensions following Monday's effort to enroll Negro students at all-white Phillips High School.

In another incident today, a 15-year-old white girl told police she was seized by three Negro youths on her way to school.

Detective R. A. McMurdo said the girl told him she was accosted as she crossed a parking lot and asked if she was on the way to school. One of the Negroes told her, Mr. McMurdo said, "You'd better not go. You'll be sorry if you do."

Scratch on Shoulder.

The officer said she had a scratch on the left shoulder but was not otherwise hurt.

One dummy was hung and another burned at separate white high schools earlier in the day in further demonstrations against integrating white and Negro schools in this city.

Heavy police guards dispersed small crowds which gathered during the night at several schools.

A dummy was burned at Phillips High, where the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro leader, was beaten Monday as he drove up to attempt to enroll four Negro children.

A dummy was hanged at Ensley High, in the steel mill area.

Mr. Shuttlesworth called off Negro efforts for immediate enrollment at white schools yesterday. He will await the result of tests which begin next week for the eight Negro children seeking admittance to three white schools.

The tests are part of a program to determine facts for school officials in placing the children. It is recognized as the first test of Alabama's school placement law, which gives local school boards unlimited power in placing school children.

Dr. Frazer Banks, school superintendent, described the tests as normal, routine achievement and aptitude tests which are given any child whose parents request them.

Birmingham Orders Negro Pupils Tested

Wed. 9-11-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 2 (AP)—Parents of eight Negro children seeking admission to white schools have been told to arrange for placement tests with the city schools' guidance department, a school official said today.

Dr. Frazer Banks, city superintendent of education, reported to the Birmingham Board of Education on developments since the Negroes filed petitions for admission to three all-white schools.

Banks told a reporter that the Negro children would be given both standard tests and some which are not standard, but declined to say what they are.

The school board is acting under Alabama's untested school placement law in handling the applications of the Negro children. Race or segregation isn't mentioned in the law, but its sponsors said it is intended as a barrier to school integration.

The law gives the school board broad authority in determining on the school to which to assign any pupil. These include the effect of enrolling in a new school, both upon the student and other pupils.

Police Enforce "Off Limits" In Birmingham

Daily Herald Wed. 9-11-57

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.— (INS))—Police at Birmingham enforced a strict "off limits" Tuesday to keep Negroes and white crowds away from city schools, and declined an offer of National guard help.

Gov. James Folsom offered to call out the Alabama National guard to preserve order at Birmingham, where a Negro minister was beaten yesterday. Folsom emphasized guard units would not be used unless requested by local officials.

SCHOOL EMPTIED

"We have the situation under control," Birmingham police commissioner R. E. Linbergh replied.

There was no violence Tuesday at Birmingham but the Phillips High School—largest in the city—was emptied while police searched for a bomb. None was found.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, who was beaten by a mob yesterday when he tried to enroll his daughter at the school, today obeyed a police order not to reappear.

EIGHT STUDENTS

Lindbergh ordered his police to keep all Negroes away from white schools, holding that since no Negro students are registered they have no proper" business at the schools. The school board has, in active, a pettiton for the admission of eight Negro Students to all-white schools.

Meanwhile, asixth man was taken into custody today for the "example" sex mutilation of a Birmingham Negro. Officers said the assault upon Judge Aaron was made so that one man might "qualify" for a high office in the Ku Klux Klan and to show Rev. Shuttlesworth "what would happen to any Negro who tried to put Negro children in a white school."

Aaron, who had not been involved in the integration movement at Birmingham, was picked up off a city street, beaten and slashed. He is in fair condition at a Veterans Hospital.

The six white men under arrest were charged with mayhem. Taken into custody Tuesday was Grover A. McCullough, 44, an unemployed carpenter.

High School For Negroes Is Planned

New Structure Due To Be Built By September '58

Birmingham

Working plans for Northern High School, a planned Negro high school in North Birmingham, are being drawn up.

The school will be built between 34th and 35th-sts and 33rd-ter and 34th-ct.

It should be ready for occupancy in September, 1958.

Architect's plans show space for an ultimate enrollment of 1200 but preliminary building probably will not carry that large a load.

The plans include playground area and athletic space.

It will be a one-story building.

Construction materials will be fire-resistive concrete, asphalt tile, flexicore roofing and steel or aluminum windows. Fluorescent lighting and hot water heating are planned.

The auditorium will have forced air heat and will be ventilated.

The plans provide for use of the school building for community functions after school hours.

Charles H. McCauley is the architect.

Squads Readied To Turn Back Negro Students

Post Herald

BY CLARKE STALLWORTH

Robert E. Lindbergh, Birmingham police commissioner, said yesterday he expected to use Birmingham policemen to keep Negroes out of white schools here.

Mr. Lindbergh made his statement after the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro pro-integration leader, was beaten by a white mob when he tried to enter his daughter as a student at Phillips High School.

Shortly after the scuffle at Phillips, Shuttlesworth indicated he will try again today. A Negro spokesman quoted him as saying he and other Negro parents will try to enter their children in white schools today—at Phillips High School, Woodlawn High School and Graymont School.

Tues 9-10-57

"The Negroes will not enter our schools, we will use police to keep them out," said Lindbergh.

He said he was prepared to put the police force on emergency 12-hour shifts, "if it becomes necessary, but we don't think it has become necessary yet."

He said there is "no parallel between this case and the one in Arkansas, although the results will be the same: The Negroes will not enter our schools."

In Arkansas, Gov. Orval Faubus has bucked a federal court order to enter Negro children in white schools by placing National Guardsmen around the schools with orders to keep the Negroes out.

Said Lindbergh:

"The governor of Arkansas is acting in direct conflict with a federal court order, we are acting under the authority of Alabama law. We are going to maintain law and order."

Lindbergh earlier said he would station Birmingham policemen around Birmingham schools—three in particular—to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the schools" from entering school grounds.

This would include Negro children who have not been registered at white schools. Since they have not been registered, Lindbergh said, they would not have a "lawful reason" to be at the schools.

Shuttlesworth, who received hospital treatment after the beating, went home yesterday afternoon. His wife said he was asleep late yesterday afternoon and she had doctor's orders not to awaken him.

But she said Shuttlesworth had told her that there would be efforts to enter Negroes at the three schools — Phillips High School, Woodlawn High School, and Graymont School — sometime today.

Parents of six Negro children have asked the Birmingham School Board to allow their children to enter the three white schools. The board has given Dr. L. Frazer Banks, city school superintendent, the right to investigate the children under the state's placement law.

The placement law, without mentioning race or color, gives school boards power to place children in schools on the basis of their backgrounds, training, mental ability and many other yardsticks.

Dr. Banks said yesterday he was mailing letters to the parents of the Negro children "telling them what to do so that I can get information about them, and also telling them what to do about their children in the meantime."

Dr. Banks would not disclose what was in the letters. And he said he did not know how long it would take him to get enough information to place the Negro children in school.

It was understood that the eight Negro children have not been enrolled at the Negro schools where they formerly attended.

Dr. Banks said he had explained a city school regulation to Shuttlesworth. The regulation says that a student must keep on attending the school he or she is enrolled in—until an actual transfer is made.

The superintendent said he didn't know if the Negroes had enrolled at their former schools. He said the enrollment lists do not arrive at the city school board office until Sept. 13.

Although Dr. Banks didn't say so, the inference was plain that he had advised the Negro parents to enter their childern in Negro schools until he gathers information about the children and makes a decision about their placement.

Shuttlesworth and the other Negro parents apparently are trying to get a direct refusal from school officials. If such a refusal is given, it could be the basis for a suit in federal court.

Petition Asks Admission On Non-Segregated Basis

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — The first formal move for integration of Alabama Public schools was made Thursday.

Petitions were filed in Birmingham to admit thirteen Negro children to the schools nearest their homes in September, on a non-segregated basis.

The petitions were filed in a registered letter to Jefferson county school superintendent, Dr. L. Frazer Banks, and included the signatures of 18 Negro parents.

One of the principle signers of the petition was the Rev. F. L. Shuttesworth, who with his wife requested his two daughters be admitted to an all white high school.

APPEAL CASE

Shuttlesworth is the alleged leader of a recent Negro integration march on Birmingham buses. A case is currently in appeal by 21 Negroes involved in the incident who were convicted of violating segregation laws.

Birmingham city officials said Thursday move came as a complete surprise. Most were certain the action would only "stir up trouble."

Police commissioner, Robert E. Lindbergh, a member of the school board said:

"The move is ill conceived. It can't add anything to good race relations. I can't conceive of the idea that our schools will be integrated. We would have to resist any such move in every legal and peaceful way at our command."

Eugene Connor, who defeated Lindbergh in a primary election and will take the commissioner's post in November, said flatly:

"We are not going to have integrated schools in Birmingham Alabama."

"If it means abolishing our schools that will be done." The prospective commissioner said:

"If shuttlesworth would tend to his preaching and stop trying to stir up trouble among the races, it would do his race a lot more good."

Mayor J. W. Morgan of Birmingham said his opinion was that the move was not sponsored by "forward thinking."

"We have built and do maintain facilities, "Morgan said, for Negro citizens in education, recreation and other civic enterprises. I am certain nothing good can come of this movement. To the contrary, the fruit therefore, will be discord."

3 Choose Trial In Negro Beating

Refuse To Pay Fines In Pastor Case

BY JANE ALDRIDGE

Three white defendants decided yesterday they would rather be tried by a Circuit Court jury for an alleged murder attempt on the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro minister, at Phillips High School recently than pay assault and battery fines.

At the conclusion of a preliminary trial in County Felony Court on assault with intent to murder charges, Judge Francis Thompson told the three defendants—I. F. Gauldin, 42, 1814 15th-av, n; W. W. Cash, 50, 920 Ninth-ct, w, and J. E. Breckinridge, 26, 1409 Woodward-rd, that he would reduce the charge to "assault and battery," a misdemeanor.

Before he could announce what the penalty would be, their lawyer, George Rogers, cut in. "Your Honor, if you are planning to fine them," he said, "we'd rather have you just send it upstairs and let us take it before a jury on the felony charge."

Judge Thompson quickly obliged, binding all three over to the grand jury under $300 bond.

Judge Thompson did not indicate what penalty he would have assessed. He could have given them any fine up to $500 and six months in jail.

If convicted in Circuit Court on the felony charge, they could draw from two to 20 years in prison.

Shuttlesworth was the first witness put on by Deputy Solicitor Joe Barnard to describe the events which took place in front of Phillips the morning of Sept. 9, when the Negro said he drove up to the school with several Negro children he wanted to try to enroll there.

Shuttlesworth said injuries which he suffered at the hands of the crowd required him to spend "several hours" at a hospital.

He said there were quite a few people "scattered around—some across the street—some in front of the high school" when he drove up.

"As I started to get out," he said, "they closed in . . . whistling and catcalling." He said several rushed toward the car and "that's when they assaulted me."

He was asked if he knew "positively" who hit him.

"Oh, yes sir," he replied, identifying the defendant Gauldin as the man who wielded a heavy chain, and Cash as the one who, he said, hit him on the head several himes with "brass knucks."

He said he knew the third man, Breckinridge was "there all right" and was "on me, all right," but he couldn't recollect what, if anything, he had in his hand.

Three White Men Bound Over To Grand Jury For Assault

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 19 — Three white men accused of beating a Negro preacher who attempted to enroll Negro students at all-white Phillips High School were bound over to the grand jury on assault with intent to murder charges today.

Jefferson County Judge Francis Thompson bound over the men when their attorney, George Rogers, objected to their being convicted on reduced charges of assault and battery.

Thompson set bonds of $300 for each for W. H. Cash, 50, I. F. Gauldin, 42, and J. E. Breckenridge, 26, all of Birmingham.

All were postively identified by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth as men who attacked him outside the school Sept. 9. He was rushed by a mob of angry white men when he stepped from the car in which he had brought four Negro students including his two daughters to the school.

The defendants denied that they had attacked Shuttlesworth.

The pro-integration Negro leader said Gauldin struck him with a chain and Cash hit him with brass knuckles. He said Breckenridge was on top on him in a melee when he was knocked to the ground.

Gauldin said that he saw the chain on the ground after the struggle and picked it up. He said that after he did so an officer grabbed him by the arm and told him he was under arrest.

Cash said he was passing the school when Shuttlesworth ran into him and knocked him down.

Breckenridge said he was watching the disturbance when he was "caught in the mob" and thrown upon Shuttlesworth.

The judge was preparing to convict the white men of the lesser charge of assault and battery, a misdemeanor, when Rogers objected. He said he would rather have the men tried on a felony charge than have them fined for a misdemeanor.

If the men are indicted by the grand jury they would be tried before a jury.

Shuttlesworth suffered minor injuries in the scuffle. His 1-year-old daughter, Ruby Fredericka, suffered a bruised leg when a car door was slammed against it.

Parents of the children are now awaiting action of the Birmingham Board of Education on their petitions for admission of eight Negro students to Phillips and two other all-white schools. The petitions were pending at the time that Shuttlesworth made the enrollment attempt.

L. Frazer Banks, city superintendent of education, said that the Phillips principal could not have done anything about the children because their applications already were under study.

Shuttlesworth denied in answering a question by Rogers that he was paid by the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People to attempt to enroll the Negro children in white schools.

"No, I have no connection with the NAACP," he replied.

Shuttlesworth is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which was organized last year when activities of the NAACP were outlawed in Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala. Minister Identifies Three At Hearing

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—The three white men accused of assaulting the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth near a white high school Saturday had elected to have a jury trial rather than have a judge possibly sentence and fine them. Juries in this area many times have failed to convict white defendants in cases involving Negro victims.

The trio, W. H. Cash, F. Gauldin and J. E. Brekinridge, were released under new $300 bonds each after making the request for a jury trial to Judge Francis Thompson of the Jefferson County Court of Misdemeanors and Felonies. The judge indicated he would reduce the charge from assault with intent to murder to assault and battery.

Defense Atty. George Rogers told the court the defendants would rather take the case "upstairs"—the sixth floor of the courthouse, where criminal cases are tried.

CONVICTION POSSIBLE

Judge Thompson could have convicted the defendants himself in the lower court if the men had not elected to be bound over to the grand jury.

Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth testified that he was attacked as he approached Phillips High School with four children Sept. 9 He said the crowd "closed in" on him when he left his automobile. The pastor identified Gauldin as the man who swung a bicycle chain and accused Cash of hitting him on the head several times with brass knucks. Brekinridge was also identified as being atop Shuttlesworth.

Police said they saw the Negro leader hit with chains and other weapons, but could not identify any of the defendants as assailants. The defendants denied hitting Shuttleworth, but admitted being in the vicinity of the mob attacking the minister.

Birmingham Sinks To New Low In Violence

Daily World Atlanta Ga.

When the history of 1957 Southern violence is completed, the recent sexual mutilation of Joe P. Pritchett, 31, in Birmingham, Ala., will be recorded as one of the lowest depths to which any American has sunk under the banner of racial supremacy.

Thurs 9-12-57

Here was a totally innocent citizen whom an ill-bent gang of white men picked up from the streets and proceeded to set up "as an example" to others engaged in the integration processes of our democracy. As the perpetrators later confessed, Pritchett was mutilated by Klansmen who were out to find "some damn Negro to scare hell out of" and as part of a ritual required in their advancement in KKK ranks. Their acts should prove obnoxious to every decent American.

P. 4

The South can never solve its problems if crimes of this nature are condoned through light handling and penalties. The accused white men, following arrest and confession, have been granted bond under light charges. Even under conviction for the charges as rendered, they could only receive minimum punishment. Within Birmingham's present climate of tension, conviction might be doubtful.

A few white men have brought shame to Birmingham's name. The least the decent citizens of Birmingham have a right to expect is that these men who have reportedly confessed to an inhuman and illegal act will be punished to the extent the law permits.

THROWN AT PHILLIPS HIGH—Mrs. O. D. Paterson, 2413 31st-av, n, holds a rock which she said a Negro man threw at Phillips High School from a parking lot across Eighth-av, n.

Tense Crowd Just Waits At Phillips

BY IVAN SWIFT

Tense, disorganized crowds stood around Phillips High School yesterday afternoon, awaiting but not expecting another attempt at enrollment of a Negro pupil.

Post Herald

And when the word got out that several Negro youths had thrown a rock at the school, new groups formed at each corner and across from the main entrance.

Mrs. O. D. Peterson, 2413 31st-av, n, said she was driving by the school, and saw a group of Negro youths throw a rock at the Eighth-av side.

Birmingham, Ala.

The rock missed and the youths drove off, she said.

Motorcycle police scouts and plainclothes officers covered the area, watching the crowds.

Mostly they were quiet. They stood in little clumps, talking among themselves. Occasionally, when a Negro man or woman walked by, they glanced up for a second, then went back to their talk.

A couple passing by stopped for a second to look.

Tues. 9-10-57

"You know, the woman said, "if they would have let them go in, the principal would have turned them down. Then there wouldn't have been any beating, any mobs or any fuss."

A misting drizzle started falling at about 1:30 p.m. and some of the onlookers, Central City residents, moved indoors.

But the little groups at the corners of the school maintained their watch.

"Yeah," we'll be here tomorrow," one man said. "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow. And we'll be waiting."

Shuttlesworth Planning Fight Of 'Prayer, Song'

BY WARREN MUSGROVE

Two hundred Negroes gathered Monday night at New Hope Baptist Church, 3421 Second-av, to hear a report from the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth on the Phillips High School fight in which the minister was injured.

"I told them that brutality won't solve anything," Shuttlesworth said as he stood on the church steps after the meeting. "I told them that I did not want any Negroes to go out from here and harm anybody."

Post Herald

P 3

When asked what his plans were, he said, "One step at a time—let every day take care of itself," phrases which he repeated often during the interview.

Birmingham

The Negro Leader said he regretted that Negroes had thrown rocks at Phillips High School. "That's not the way we plan to solve this thing. We are depending on prayer for our strength."

Wed 9-11-57

When asked why he took his children to Phillips he said, "My children want to go to school at Phillips because it is a good school."

"I respect Police Commissioner Lindbergh and I will follow the law and do what he says," Shuttlesworth said. He repeatedly emphasized his willingness to stay away from the schools if Mr. Lindberg asked him to.

"But," he said, "There will be no let-up in the fight. The people will be led if they will just follow."

When asked the nature of the fight he would lead, Shuttlesworth said, "It'll be a fight with prayer and song."

Members of the tightly-packed crowd about the steps sometimes rhythmically repeated words after him, and laughed at some of his retorts.

PASSING THE BASKET—A member of the congregation passed the basket for donations from latecomers after the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth spoke to a group at the New Hope Baptist Church Monday night.

Shuttlesworth hardly broke the rhythm of his quotations in the middle of the interview when he raised his head and said: "You boys who got in late go on around there and put some money in the basket."

p. 1

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, minister and vice-chairman of the Alabama Christian movement for Human Rights, was "promised action" last week by the Birmingham school superintendent, Dr. L. F. Banks, after he was beaten by a group of white men when he tried to enroll his daughter in an all white school.

Post 9-21-57

Three white men were arrested later by police, and officers said other arrests are expected.

The promise of "action" from the school board followed a petition which Shuttlesworth sent asking that Negro children be permitted to enter integrated schools.

Following receipt of the superintendent's letter, Shuttlesworth said there will be no more attempts to integrate at this time. He said he would register his two children in Negro schools and would advise other petitioning parents to do likewise.

Shuttlesworth was pummeled by a group of about ten white men when he approached the all-white Phillips high school with his 13-year-old daughter, Ruby.

He had just driven up to the school and gotten out of his car with his daughter following close behind. As the group of men approached the minister began to run.

Leader

The pursuers jostled the child who scampered back into the auto. Shuttlesworth was overtaken, hit several times and knocked to the ground. He struggled to his feet almost immediately and ran back to his auto and drove off. He was not believed seriously injured.

Sat 9-21-57

He told newsmen following the attack that he had decided to enroll his daughter in the school because his petition was being "stalled" by so-called state channels.

He said, "all we are getting is lectures on how wonderful segregation is for Negroes. . . (and) these children are being denied an education."

Birmingham police, however, said they would continue to enforce a strict "off limits" order to keep both Negro and white crowds away from the school.

REV. F. L. SHUTTLESWORTH YOUTHFUL BIRMINGHAM CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER BEATEN BY MOB IN SCHOOL INTEGRATION MOVE

Twelve-Year-Old Daughter Is Injured During The Affray

POLICE ARREST THREE WHITE MEN

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 10—Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, 35, local Negro minister, whose reputation as a Civil Rights leader almost equals that of Rev. Martin Luther King, the Montgomery Bus boycott leader was beaten by a group of white men here Monday in an outbreak of mob violence over the school integration issue, set off by his attempt to enter Negro students in all-white Phillip High School.

It was the second incident of its kind here during the past few days. Last Wednesday, a group of white men abducted, beat and emasculated 34 year old Judge Aaron. At the local veterans hospital where his condition was last reported as good, attendants said he is 100 percent emasculated and was severely beaten and stabbed.

Three white men, members of the Ku Klux Klan have been arrested in connection with the Aaron case.

Rev. Shuttlesworth, was knocked down several times and threatened with death by members of the white group which gathered at the downtown school located a considerable distance from the nearest Negro residential section.

Rev. Shuttlesworth's daughter Ruby Fredericka suffered a bruised ankle when a car door was slammed against it.

Advocate

Police battled a crowd of white men until the minister was able to break away and escape. The intervention of the police is believed to have kept the minister from being beaten to death.

P 2

Three white men were arrested at the scene.

Two hours after the incident, a car containing four Negro men drove past the block-square Phillips building and threw rocks into a window. No one was hurt. The Negroes escaped.

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh ordered Birmingham police to prevent persons "who have no lawful reason to be at the schools" from entering school grounds. This would include Negroes who have not been registered.

Sat. 9-14-57

Shuttlesworth said that he would try to enroll the Negroes at Phillips again tomorrow, "whether they will us or not."

Police also said the all-white Woodlawn High School, in the eastern section, had been notified by telegram that an attempt to enroll Negroes would be made tomorrow.

Petition Pending

A pettiion to register eight Negroes at three city school, including Phillips, is pending. Today's was the first physical effort by Negroes this year to enter Alabama schools. Several Negroes tried unsuccessfully to enroll at a Montgomery elemenetary school in 1955.

Last year at the University of Alabama, located 60 miles from Birmingham at Tuscaloosa, Autherine Lucy, a Negro co-ed from Birmingham, tried to enroll but was driven from the campus by a mob.

The Shuttlesworth effort was unexpected since registration had ended last week.

Lindbergh said a telegram from Shuttlesworth asking police protection after the minister had made the enrollment attempt.

This deep South city of 326,000 has a Negro population of about 130,000. Another 70,000 or so live in its suburbs, making up about one-third of a metropolitan community of 600,000.

Two TV Newsmen Describe Struggle In Birmingham

Advertiser Tue. 9-10-57 P.5-L

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 9 (AP)—The struggle outside Phillips High when an attempt was made to enroll Negroes in the all-white school was witnessed by two television station news directors. Here is their account.

Jim Atkins, WBRC-TV:

I heard from a tipster that the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth was going to enter his children in the school and immediately went there. As I drove up about 50 white men were milling around.

They threatened all the photographers and told us not to make any pictures.

Shuttlesworth's car arrived and stopped directly in front of the main entrance. The crowd started cat-calling.

They said: "Let's get that Negro. We're not going to have them going to white schools here . . . Let's kill him."

Then he got out of the car. About 15 men immediately jumped him and started slugging him. A policeman jumped into the melee but was beaten, too.

Finally Shuttlesworth got away and ran. Several men chased him, hit him in the back and knocked him down. While he was on the ground three men kicked him in the face and body.

Finally he struggled to his feet again, pushing with his hands and ducking his head. Several other policemen arrived and grabbed the men, trying to protect Shuttlesworth.

At last he got to his car and rode off with the mob running behind, chanting, "go on home."

I was hit in the back and one man rushed me but I backed off, taking movies.

Charles Davis, WABT-TV:

Members of the crowd warned Shuttlesworth when the car drove up to "Keep going—you're not going to enroll your children in the school."

The trouble began when he reached to open the door to the rear seat where the children were sitting.

The all-male crowd was shouting.

The children got out of the car at one point, but members of the crowd put them back. It looked to me like they were just trying to get them back in the car, without harming them.

I would estimate that the struggle lasted four to five minutes.

Post-Herald Birmingham, Ala.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16 (AP) — The Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth said here Southern segregationists have been strengthened by what he called the federal government's failure to take positive action.

The Negro Baptist minister, beaten by a Birmingham mob last week when he tried to enroll his two daughters and two other Negro girls in a "white" high school, told a news conference:

"The White Citizens' Council and the Ku Klux Klan have grown much stronger as a result of the federal government not taking a positive stand."

The Rev. Shuttlesworth did not cite specific instances of federal inaction in the school integration crisis.

He later addressed a mass meeting at the State Theater, from where San Francisco Radio Station KSAN broadcasts sessions of a revival meeting. It wasn't known whether the meeting was a religious service or an integration conference.

MOB VICTIM—The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth leaves a Baptist Church where a meeting was held after he lead an integration attempt on Birmingham's second largest high school. recently.

Mob beats minister

'Tried to kill me,' says Rev. Shuttlesworth

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—"They were actually trying to kill me. I was in a semi-conscious state, dazed from the beating, but I managed to get up and knock one of them down.

"God only knows how I got back to the car."

A badly bruised and beaten minister, the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, used those statements to describe to the AFRO a vicious and brutal beating he sustained Monday at the hands of some 15 or 20 white men.

He was assaulted as he attempted to enroll his children in the all-white Phillips High School here.

"I'M NOT able," the minister said "to take the children back to the school today, but don't let anybody tell you that we're not doubly determined now to carry this thing through," he said this morning (Tuesday.)

The noted clergyman is resting at home recuperating from the beating which damaged one of his kidneys, badly bruised his wrist, lacerated his head and caused multiple bruises about his body.

He said stitches were required to close wounds he sustained from the attack. The militant 35-year-old cleric spoke solemnly as he revealed that his wife too had been injured in the assault.

He said Mrs. Shuttlesworth was stabbed in the hip with a switch blade knife by one of the attackers, and five stitches were necessary to close the wound.

The Birmingham Baptist minister said his daughter, Fredericka, suffered a badly lacerated foot when the attackers slammed shut a car door on her foot.

"Actually, I can't do much getting around," he stated, adding:

"If I could I would march right back up there with more colored children."

* * *

THE REV. MR. SHUTTLESWORTH, according to Jim Atkins, news editor of TV station WABT, was knocked down a number of times by a group of about 20 white men.

A police officer who attempted to stop the assault also was struck, according to Atkins.

Three men have been arrested and charged with intent to kill the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth. They are J. E. Breckenridge, 26; W. H. Cash, 50, and I. S. Gauldin, 42.

One of the men, the minister said, wielded the steel chain used to beat him.

The Rev. Edward Gardner, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist Church here, told the AFRO, Monday; that the noted minister was attacked and brutally beaten.

THE REV. MR. GARDNER said that an emergency mass rally was being called immediately and more details of the incident would be released at the conclusion of the meeting.

The rally was held at New Hope Baptist Church, Monday night.

A Birmingham Baptist minister since 1953, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth, during much of that time, has fought relentlessly for an end to this city's racial segregation.

Committees on which he has served have asked for colored policemen; an end to segregated railroad terminals, integrated public facilities and better jobs for colored persons.

BORN IN A RURAL Montgomery County, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth grew up near Birmingham and was the eldest of nine children. He completed high school, married and was preaching and working in Mobile, Ala., when he completed his higher education.

He plunged into the civil rights struggle of Birmingham quickly and formed the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights two years ago when the NAACP was ordered to suspend operations in Alabama.

He was elected president of the group by acclamation.

* * *

AS LEADER OF THE movement, he has urged a fighting campaign for full racial integration, in the South. In advocating integration, he also is a proponent of non-violent resistance.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth attended the recent ministers conference and the Prayer Pilgrimmage in Washington.

The Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights currently has pending a Federal court suit seeking an end to segregation on Birmingham buses.

THE GROUP HAS ALSO brought litigation in Federal court against segregation in railroad terminals here.

The Rev. Shuttlesworth has been very staunch in his efforts to bring about integration in the city police department, also.

Last year, he led 21 persons to city buses here in defiance of segregation laws and directed them to sit in sections reserved for white persons.

SHOWDOWN IN BIRMINGHAM

They call Rev. Shuttlesworth 'A voice crying in wilderness'

By BAKER E. MORTEN
AFRO STAFF WRITER

"A prejudiced man has the best ability I know of smiling like he means 'yes' and saying 'hell no.' It makes us know that we must move forward positively on our own and do it now."

"The time is now. I'm not mad at anybody about the beating, even those who attacked me. I only wish I were able to take more children up to the school."

What manner of man is the Rev. Fred Lee Shuttlesworth that civic leaders in Birmingham, Ala., are inspired at the mere mention of his name and the segregationists are driven to violence, mayhem, threats and intimidation?

WHAT MANNER of love does this 35 - year - old Baptist minister of the gospel possess that would send him dauntlessly into a frenzied and snarling mob?

THESE ARE but a few of the questions that could be asked about the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, and one of the top news figures of the week.

A lover of life and righteousness, Mr. Shuttlesworth lies today in his bed at his Birmingham home.

He is recuperating from a severe beating he sustained last Monday, when he marched his children to the all - white Phillips High School to enroll them.

THERE WITH HIM is his wife, the victim of a stab wound in the hip when she and her husband were attacked by 20 white men. There also is Fredericka Shuttlesworth, the minister's 12-year-old daughter.

She ponders the future as she looks at her foot, smashed in a car door by irate mobsters.

Does he make the personal sacrifices for glory? No, that's not the word.

Self - aggrandizement? That doesn't fit either.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth seeks neither glory nor self-aggrandizement. His purpose is bigger.

Rather, the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth has a long record of fighting segregation.

The flame which spurs him on, first was ignited in Mobile, Ala., after he finished at Selma University and Alabama State Teachers College in Montgomery.

PREACHING wasn't enough. He dreamed of teaching his people—of helping them. The pulpit was the best way to do it.

Greater impetus was given to his desire when he grew up witnessing the deplorable conditions which resulted from segregation.

He observed the "evil angles" of segregation and vowed a life - time fight against it.

His dream began to manifest itself when he was elected head of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights in 1955 after the state successfully ousted the NAACP.

THE ATTACK was on. Soon the name Shuttlesworth became a household word in the homes of white and colored persons alike. Unrelentingly, the organization axed away at the foundations of segregation.

Court cases began to loom. Colored people, united in the common purpose of freedom, began challenging segregation.

In retaliation, some white persons took to violence.

The noted minister's home was dynamited on Christmas night, 1956. His two children, Fred and Fredericka, and another minister, the Rev. Charles Robinson, were injured in the blast.

Mr. and Mrs. Shuttlesworth escaped injury, but the clergyman became more determined. The following day, he led 21 colored persons to seats on city buses reserved, under Alabama law, for white passengers.

* * *

CITY OFFICIALS turned deaf ears to the cries of injustices from colored persons.

In desperation, the defenders of segregation resorted to one delaying tactics after another.

Where the federal courts began knocking down, the jim-crow laws, the outlaw element took the law into their own hands.

City officials and law agencies stood idly by while communities ran rampant with violence.

In the midst of the battle stood the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth, segregation's Public Enemy No. 1 in Birmingham.

Last Monday, a situation that had been building up through a long series of incidents exploded.

Mr. Shuttlesworth and his family got the brunt of the attack from 20 white men. The minister was beaten with a steel chain and brass knuckles.

His wife was stabbed and his daughter's foot was crushed in a car door.

What manner of man is the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth?

HE IS this type of man. In a speech delivered last January in Washington, the nation's capital, he said:

"I know not what course others in the South will follow, but as for me and my family, I said 'Give me liberty, or give me death.'"

NAACP asks Ike to take over guard

Afro American P. 8

NEW YORK — The NAACP has asked President Eisenhower to take over command of the National Guard in Arkansas and "to instruct the U.S. Attorney General forthwith to proceed with the necessary legal action to halt the open defiance of constituted authority by the Governor of Arkansas." 9-21-57

The request was set forth in a telegram, dispatched yesterday to the President over the signature of Dr. Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the Association's national board of directors. The meeting on Sept. 9 was the first of the board since last June in Detroit.

The full text of the wire to the President follows:

"In view of the continuing constitutional crisis in Arkansas with the outbreak of violence precipitated by Governor Faubus' rash action in ordering state troops to prevent implementation of a federal court order, the board of directors of the NAACP urges you to take immediate steps to federalize the Arkansas National Guard bringing it under your direct command as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the United States. Further the board urges you to instruct the United States Attorney General forthwith to proceed with the necessary legal action to halt the open defiance of constituted authority by the Governor of Arkansas."

Calls on Eisenhower to Take Firm Steps in Arkansas

Sat 4-7-57

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People Thursday called on President Eisenhower to take "forthright steps" to bring about racial integration in the schools of Little Rock, Ark.

In a telegram to the President, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the association, stated: New York

"It has been demonstrated clearly that Gov. Orval E. Faubus is deliberately provoking a test of the authority of the Federal Government by using state troops to prevent the Little Rock School Board from obeying the order to admit Negro students to the high school."

"Significantly," Mr. Wilkins added, "this action has been applauded by the Governor of Georgia. If allowed to stand unchallenged and unclarified, this doctrine threatens the entire concept of a Federal union and endangers a wide category of rights and privileges of citizens of the United States wherever they may live."

School Report Termed 'Good'

Advertiser P.4-6, Mon. 1-14-57

By ALEXANDER BARNES

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Dr. J. W. Eichelberger, secretary, Chrstian Education, AME Zion Church, told the Board of Christian Education in its final session, held here, Tuesday night, that the reports of the presidents of the secondary schools and colleges were highly encouraging and that much progress had been amde in that field.

Reports were heard from Dr. B. F. Martinez, Johnson Memorial Institute, Batesville, Miss., where a new sewerage plant is to be installed, Rev. Stephen Paul Spottswood, Walters Institute, which was recently relocated in Warren. Spottswood outlined an extensive program for the rebuilding of the school. He also assured them of the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Sallie V. Moreland, Rock Hill, S.C., told of the vast improvements that had been made during the year. Six of the class rooms have been equipped with all modern furniture, at a cost of more than $3,000. The presidents' office was recently equipped with new furniture and ornaments, to the tune of more than $450. The library has been reclaimed and 56 new volumes added. The student body has increased tremendously.

Prof. T. M. Patton, Greenville, Ala., reported that four rooms of the Alstork Administration Building had been recently equipped and that high school classes are now being taught in them. His office has been completed and $1,000 worth of officer furniture, donated by a white friend has been put in.

The fact that there are 70 high school students had thrilled the board. He took pride in the fact that the school had emphasied its athletic program to the extent that it had two of the best basketball teams in the state.

All of the presidents were highly grateful to the bishops, the general officers, the ministers and the laymen for making it possible for the progress made. They reported greater cooperation this year than at any previous time.

"Screening" Students; "Conferencing" Parents For Admittance to Cen. Hi

State Press P.1, Little Rock, Ark. Fri. 6-7-57

"I know it is undemocratic, and I know it is wrong, but I am doing it," stated Virgil Blosson, superintendent of the Little Rock school district to a delegation of Negro citizens. This statement was Blossom's reply when a delegation of Negroes met with him in the office of the school board last week and questioned the motive of the superintendent in screening Negro children who had expressed a desire to attend Central hi school this fall.

The United States court of appeals in St. Louis recently upheld the gradual plan of integration on the hi school level this fall.

Preparatory to the closing of schools last month, hi school students were interrogated as to the number who planned to attend Central hi school this fall. Approximately thirty-two students who are living in the Central hi school district at Horace Mann expressed a desire to attend the all-white hi school, and about thirty-eight living in the district attending Dunbar junior hi also expressed a desire to attend Central. These students were instructed to write their names, addresses, telephone numbers on slips of paper and turn them in.

The principals, L. M. Christophe, at Horace Mann, and Edwin L. Hawkins, at Dunbar junior hi. immediately started "Screening the students. Conferences were held with the students and their parents

Christophe of Horace Mann, when querid by the delegation, stated that he pointed out to the parents and the students some scholastic deficiencies of the students, as indicated by their school records.

After the "conference" with the parents, Christophe stated that from 12 to 15 students withdrew their applications to attend Central hi.

The delegation asked the principal, by what standards were the children being "selected" to attend the school in their district? The answer was, citizenship, scholarship and social stability. The principal further stated that a student could have an IQ of 100 or over, perfect grades and still could be emotionally unstable. He finally stated that he had encouraged three to attend the all-white school.

State Press

Hawkins, principal of Dunbar junior hi, stated that 38 students signed at his school to attend Central this fall, and that he did not remove any names from the list. In a conference with the parents, he stated that he explained to them that the children had expressed a desire to attend Central hi, and that he did not know how many would be selected. Hawkins also stated that there were two students from his school who expressed a desire to attend Technical hi school.

The delegation that was made up for a cross-section of the city, representing Negro citizens in all phases of the community, including officials of the local NAACP and representatives of the State Press, after hearing the principals relate their activities in the screening process and under whose direction they were carrying out orders, made it clear as to what they thought of the program.

PASTOR QUESTIONS INTEGRATION EXTENT

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn.

Queries Directed To Little Rock School Board

Press 7-9-57

LITTLE ROCK, July 8. —(AP) — The Little Rock School Board was asked Monday how far afield it planned to extend the gradual classroom integration which will begin here this fall at the high school level.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, a Baptist minister, asked several questions in a letter to the board and Supt. Virgil Blossom. Among the questions:

Will the P-TA be integrated? Will whites and Negroes use the same shower and rest room facilities? Will Negro students be allowed to join school-sponsored clubs? Will racial mixing occur in dramatic plays at school? Will "Negro boys be permitted to solicit the white girls at dances?"

Board Chairman Dr. William G. Cooper has indicated the board will try to answer the questions at its July meeting.

Six seeking admission are forced away

News Mon. 9-9-57, B'ham, Ala. P.1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 9 —(AP)—White students threw back six Negro youths who tried to enter North Little Rock High School today—the first actual violence of Arkansas' turbulent racial crisis.

North Little Rock, a separate city, is immediately across the Arkansas River from the integration-torn city of Little Rock.

About 10 white students met the six Negroes at the top of the steps leading into the school.

They grabbed the six, hustled and shoved them down the steps and across the campus almost to the street before police broke up the trouble.

None of the Negroes suffered injury.

The National Guardsmen were on duty, but six policemen guarded the school, which opened today for the Fall term.

THE NORTH LITTLE ROCK school board once ordered limited desegregation, then postponed the action after the National Guard was called up and kept Negroes out of Little Rock's Central High School last week.

North Little Rock is a city of about 50,000, about half the size of Little Rock.

The North Little Rock police immediately called for reinforcements from the state police. Policemen at the scene said no National Guard help was sought.

EARLIER Gov. Orval Faubus backed his challenge to federal school racial integration orders with fresh troops today and dug in for what appeared to be the most serious state-federal crisis since Civil War days.

He said the only way he knew to break the stalemate between himself and the federal government would be for United States authorities to recede from their integration stand.

And, he said in a televised interview, the Guard still operates with the same orders he issued, after calling it up Monday night on the eve of the opening of 2000-pupil Central High School.

THESE ORDERS, he said, are to keep Negroes out and to prevent violence.

Wednesday the Guard turned back nine Negro students. None has sought entry since. Negro leaders say they have no immediate plans to send students of their race back to face the Guard.

With the governor's renewed challenge last night, no compromise was in sight.

President Eisenhower has said, referring directly to the Little Rock crisis, that his aim is to uphold the United States Constitution. The Supreme Court in 1954 ruled that the Constitution does not permit forced school segregation.

THE PRESIDENT also has said he does not favor use of federal force to implement integration orders.

This leaves Gov. Faubus with the only considerable physical force on the grounds, except for a number of U. S. marshals and FBI agents in Little Rock and city police.

Following the interview Little Rock Mayor Woodrow Mann issued a statement that Faubus' words spelled sedition and the action in remaining resolute against federal authority amounted to rebellion.

This obviously calls for federal action, he added.

MANN DENIED reports that he has considered sending city police into the school area.

A newsman asked Faubus last night:

"If the FBI agents took a kid by the arm tomorrow and attempted to escort him through the lines, would he be shot or would they be shot?"

Mon 9-9-57

The governor answered:

"I sincerely hope that no one is shot or that violence or harm comes to no one. Those are eventualities which must be met as they come. I don't think it would be proper for me to comment on what could or what would happen."

A NEWSMAN asked Faubus if there is "any authority in your opinion, besides your own, that can remove those Guardsmen from around the high school?"

"None that I know of," he replied.

Asked if he would have another source of troops if the National Guard were federalized and taken from under his power, as has been suggested, Faubus said:

"If you would like to look through this immense stack of telegrams, you will find offers to volunteer from half the states of the Union."

THE GOVERNOR repeated earlier statements that he called up the Arkansas Guard only to prevent violence, although he also gave it orders, he said, to keep Negroes out.

But in an interview after the nationwide televised interview, the governor usd stronger language:

"I have been the most liberal governor in the South, but they can't come in and cram it (integration) down their throats"—referring to the people of Little Rock.

However, shortly before Faubus began his TV interview, a statement supporting the governor's action was signed by seven of Little Rock's 10 aldermen. The statement said Faubus took the proper course in calling out the guard and commended him for the prompt action.

Some observers advanced the idea that U. S. District Court Judge Ronald Davies might issue an injunction against Faubus to prevent him from interferring with the federal court's integration order.

Legal experts question whether any injunction would be effective if the governor acted solely to prevent violence, as he claims.

REPORTS circulated last night that the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People was preparing a petition asking a contempt of court citation against Faubus.

This was denied by Thurgood Marshall, New York, top NAACP attorney, and Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff, Ark., NAACP attorney spearheading the Little Rock NAACP integration legal actions.

GOV. FAUBUS GETS ENCOURAGEMENT

. . . Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus, left, is shown holding a list of more than 300 unsolicited names backing his action in the Little Rock school dispute

A newsman asked Faubus last night, "In your opinion, are you in contempt of court now?" and he answered, "No, sir. I am fulfilling my obligations as governor of a state to maintain peace and order. That is paramount to all other issues."

Also asked was, "Would you duck a federal subpoena if an attempt was made to serve it on you", and the governor replied, "That is an eventuality which I must decide if and when it should come."

ANYONE SEEKING to serve a subpoena would be required to get through National Guardsmen stationed at the governor's mansion since Wednesday night—the night Faubus claimed in a telegram to President Eisenhower that he had information federal authorities planned to arrest him.

The White House said no plans for such an arrest had been discussed. Nevertheless, the governor apparently has remained behind the mansion walls since. Last night's interview originally was scheduled for a downtown studio but was switched to the mansion at the governor's request.

Eisenhower has informed himself daily of the Little Rock situation through Atty. Gen. Brownell.

THE FBI TODAY was expected to report to Federal Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies on a probe the judge ordered into the integration situation. The judge asked the FBI to investigate so he can determine whether there was "interference with or non-compliance with" his orders that Central High integration be carried out at once.

Judge Davies Saturday turned down a petition for a compromise which would have delayed integration. The Little Rock school board asked the postponement.

The governor last night said that if Negroes had entered Central High Caravans of people planned to converge upon Little Rock the day school opened, and that widespread sale of weapons had been verified. He declined to specify further.

The governor was asked the question, "there has been some suggestion you are the person chosen by several Southern governors to make a test case of this. Do you care to comment on it?"

ANSWERED THE GOVERNOR, ". . . there is no vestige of truth whatever to it. I have not conferred with any other Southern governor or members of any organization anywhere in the South with relation to the problems of Arkansas or to this problem."

He said specifically he had not conferred with Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia when Griffin was here recently to address a pro-segregation rally.

The governor professed to see it the duty of the federal government to "bend," as he put it, before a state. He said in answer to a question on the point, "the implication of President Eisenhower's address to the governors' conference was perhaps it was more expedient or compulsory for them (the federal government) to bend than the states, and he made a very, very strong speech for individual states rights of the individual states."

The four newsmen participating were Keith Fuller, chief of bureau of the Associated Press in Little Rock; William Hines of the Washington Star; Bob Considine, International News Service; and Kenneth L. Johnson, Little Rock correspondent for the (Memphis) Commercial Appeal. John Secondari, chief of the Washington Bureau of the American Broadcasting Co. was panel moderator.

Faubus offers cooperation to U. S. in Little Rock case

Fri. 9-6-57 B'ham Ala.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 6—(AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus today offered to show the FBI what he termed "certain evidence upon which I acted to preserve the public peace" by surrounding Central High School with armed National Guardsmen.

Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell shortly afterwards directed the FBI to receive from Faubus any information he cares to present on the tense matter.

A short statement handed to newsmen by an administrative aid ended with this sentence:

"I shall cooperate in upholding the constitution of Arkansas and the nation."

Faubus himself has not been seen by newsmen since his last news conference Wednesday morning here.

Presumably Faubus was answering President Eisenhower's request earlier this week that the governor cooperate with federal authorities.

MEANWHILE, the smoldering integration crisis appeared today to be in the hands of a diminutive federal judge as heavily armed National Guardsmen still ringed Central High School.

A momentary lull developed yesterday in the battle over racial mixing. The Little Rock school board offered the possibility of a temporary solution by asking Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies to allow an indefinite legal postponement of integration.

Judge Davies will hear the school board's petition at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. Twice within a week he has ordered immediate racial mixing.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who ordered out the Guardsmen last Tuesday to keep nine Negro students from entering the high school, yesterday got President Eisenhower's answer to an appeal for intervention in the clash of federal and state authority.

EISENHOWER told Faubus that he would use all legal means at his command to uphold the federal Constitution in the dissension.

The president will interrupt his vacation at Newport, R. I., to return to Washington tomorrow for a conference with Atty. Gen. Brownell on the Little Rock problem.

The governor wired Eisenhower Wednesday that he had information that federal agents in Little Rock had discussed the possibility of taking him into custody, and said he suspected federal men of tapping his telephone lines.

GUARDSMEN took four white men from Minneapolis into custody this morning and released them a short time later. They were college students on a vacation trip.

State Police Capt. Alan Templeton said the four were ordered released. Other state troopers who escorted the youths from the school said all four had been told to get out of the city.

One youth, identified by Guardsmen as Murray Gallinson, about 20, carried a sheath knife four to five inches long, Col. Marion Johnson of the Guard said.

News

The other three were identified as Marion Segal, Robert Milavetz and Mike Goldman. They appeared in their early 20s.

P. 8

A DOZEN NEWSMEN tried unsuccessfully to question Gallinson as two Guardsmen took him rapidly down the street. The reporters heard Gallinson describe the knife as a "souvenir" and tell the Guardsmen he was on a "sightseeing tour."

Gallinson, who had a camera slung around his neck, was mistaken for a news photographer for a time.

FAUBUS ASKED the president for cooperation in trying to settle the crisis peacably.

The governor contends that he ordered out the guardsmen to avert violence.

Crowds ranging from 300 to 700 persons have formed every day in front of Central High School since classes started. They jeered the nine Negro students who were turned away by soldiers Wednesday morning. But there has been no violence.

Eisenhower, in his reply to Faubus, said "there is no basis of fact to the statements you make in your telegram that federal authorities have been considering taking you into custody or that telephone lines to your executive mansion have been tapped by any agency of the federal government."

NEITHER THE PRESIDENT nor any of his aids indicated what, if any, action might be contemplated by the federal government in the Little Rock question.

Eisenhower expressed his hope that Faubus, other state officials, and the guard, will "give full cooperation to the United States district court."

In his statement released last night, Faubus ignored the petition of the school board for a postponement but struck back at Little Rock Mayor Woodrow Mann who had bitterly criticized the governor.

Referring to Mann's remark Wednesday night that the governor's reports of impending violence were a "hoax," Faubus said:

"As to Mayor Woodrow Mann's statement in reference to my action to preserve the peace, I am just as disappointed with him as were the people of Little Rock when they repudiated him in a recent election by a vote of more than 3 to 1.

"He is running true to form by popping off without knowing the facts."

LITTLE ROCK VOTERS last year approved a change from the mayor-council system to the city manager form of government despite Mann's opposition. The mayor will be out of a job when the switch is made late this year.

Faubus also said in his statement—apparently directed to well-wishers—last night that "we have the support of millions of citizens in other states." He said uncounted thousands of letters, telephone calls and telegrams had come from "three fourths of the states of the union," and that "many offer assistance in any way that we have need."

Mann yesterday renewed his attack on Faubus, saying the federal government must "slap down" the governor to preserve national unity.

MEANWHILE, praise and condemnation of Faubus for his handling of the integration issue came from public officials outside Arkansas. Most of the compliments were by Southerners, including Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., of South Carolina, former South Carolina Gov. James F. Byrnes and Sen. Russell (D., Ga.).

Among the critics was U. S. Interior Secretary Fred A. Seaton, in Hawaii on an inspection trip, who termed the Little Rock situation "disgusting and unpardonable."

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, telegraphed President Eisenhower asking him to "take forthright steps to preserve the authority of your national government in the Little Rock and any other similar situations."

Wilkins said that "instead of federal troops being used in the South as pictured in the horror speech of Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia on July 2, state troops . . . are defying the government of their country."

Elsewhere in the race-conscious South, integration attempts met with varying success yesterday. Negro pupils applying for admission to all-white schools in Arlington, Va., and Maryville, Tenn., were turned away without incident. Catcalls and heckling from a small crowd greeted 18 Negroes who attended classes for the third day at Sturgis, Ky.

THREE PERSONS were arrested during mild demonstrations at Easton, Md., where Talbot County schools opened for their second year on an integrated basis.

Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina told newsmen he was "proud of the way his state has handled its school integration problems." Eleven Negro children have entered previously all-white schools in three North Carolina cities without major incident.

AP wirephoto

Little Rock mayor—Little rock, Ark., Sept. 6—Woodrow Mann, mayor of Little Rock, smiled at newsmen as he issued a statement deploring Gov. Orval Faubus's action of calling out National Guard in integration crisis. Mann said Faubus did not consult him and that no one had asked for aid.

Text of President's telegram to Faubus

Text of the Eisenhower reply to Faubus:

"Your telegram received, requesting my assurance of, understanding of, and cooperation in the course of action you have taken on school integration recommended by the Little Rock school board and ordered by the United States District Court pursuant to the mandate of the United States Supreme Court.

"When I became president, I took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. The only assurance I can give you is that the federal Constitution will be upheld by me by every legal means at my command.

"There is no basis of fact to the statements you make in your telegram that federal authorities have been considering taking you into custody or that telephone lines to your executive mansion have been tapped by any agency of the federal government.

"At the request of Judge Davies, the Department of Justice is presently collecting facts as to interference with or failure to comply with the district court's order. You and other state officials—as well as the National Guard which is, of course, uniformed, armed and partially sustained by the federal government—will I am sure, give full cooperation to the United States District Court."

Negro paper attacks Faubus as 'awful'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 6—(AP)—A Negro publication today denounced Gov. Orval Faubus as "Awful" Faubus and decried the support given the governor by Negroes in the 1954 election.

In a front page editorial, the Arkansas State Press said, in part:

"It is unfortunate that Negroes put Faubus in office in 1954's election. But a lot more has happened since then, and it is believed that the Negro will be more careful in selling his vote in the future. . . ."

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 6 (AP) —President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell will confer in Washington tomorrow on Arkansas' school racial troubles, and a federal judge at about the same time will hear a plea here for a delay in integrating Central High School.

New Orleans

Out of the two critical sessions could come a solution to the segregation strife. Or they could result in continued conflict in this city of 110,000 where the National Guardsmen still patrol the school grounds and guard the governor's mansion.

Fresh Troops Called

Late Friday Maj. Gen. Sherman Clinger, commanding the soldiers, disclosed he had ordered a fresh company of guardsmen from nearby Morrilton to take posts at the high school Monday morning as replacements for the air guard troops.

Meanwhile, Gov. Orval Faubus offered to have his representatives lay before federal authorities the specific evidence which he says caused him to call out the National Guard. The governor always has said he acted to prevent violence.

Atty. Gen. Brownell immediately accepted the offer.

The guard was stationed at 2,000-pupil Central High School Monday night. Wednesday it turned away nine Negro teen-agers who sought to enroll. No Negroes have sought entrance since.

Minnesoteans Hustled Off

The guard and state police today hustled six young white University of Minneapolis vacationing students away from the Central High campus after guardsmen discovered one wore a sheath knife.

A state police spokesman said the men convinced officers they were not in Little Rock to make trouble.

One of them, Murray Gallinson, 20, told the Minneapolis Star by telephone that, "We were actually relieved when the state police came along and escorted us to headquarters. People in the crowd shouted 'damyankee' and 'Communists' as we were being taken away."

President Eisenhower planned to interrupt his Newport, R. I., vacation to return to Washington for the conference with Brownell. He received an "all quiet" report from Brownell on the integration controversy this morning.

Board Asks Postponement

The President also will confer tomorrow on the Communist menace in the Middle East.

The court session will be in Little Rock before U. S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies. Twice in two weeks Davies ordered Central High integrated immediately.

The petition for the hearing came from the Little Rock School Board, which had favored carrying out Davies' integration order.

The board asked for a postponement of integration, because, it said, pupils are divided on the question, creating tensions which might disrupt education.

The school board did not say how long it thought integration should be delayed, but there were reports that it sought only a few weeks—no prolonged delay.

Little Rock Mayor Woodrow Mann, who split with Gov. Faubus over integration, said he found a cross burning on his front lawn early today.

Cross on Mayor's Lawn

A burning cross is the symbol of the Ku Klux Klan, a once-powerful white supremacy group. More recently it has been a symbol of protest against integration, used by any group. The Klan has disappeared here as a significant organization.

Mann said the cross-burning "in itself was nothing. But it clearly shows the effect of mob psychology which could grow worse."

Mann again charged the governor with inciting what the mayor termed "mob rule, terrorism and violence" by calling out the National Guard.

Gov. Faubus said in his telegram to Eisenhower today that he has notified U.S. Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb and the FBI that his personal attorney, William J. Smith, and the director of the Arkansas State Police, Herman Lindsey, "are available to discuss certain evidence upon which I acted to preserve the public peace."

The telegram was announced by Claude Carpenter, governor's aide, who said he could not comment further. The governor has secluded himself from newsmen since a press conference Wednesday.

Brownell replied to the governor's offer by saying he had instructed representatives of the FBI to meet with Faubus' representatives "and receive such information so that we may incorporate it in the report we are making to Judge Davies."

Judge Davies earlier asked the federal district attorney to determine responsibility for interference with his order for immediate Central High integration.

The crowd of white demonstrators across the street from the high school was considerably smaller today than yesterday, when an estimated 700 were present at one time.

2000 Telegrams Sent from Ssreveport

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

SHREVEPORT, La., Sept. 6 —Joe Warner, superintendent of the local Western Union office said Friday that "at least 2000" telegrams have been sent through the local office during the past two days to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

Warner said that without exception every one of the telegrams commended Faubus for his use of National Guard troops to block integration in the Little Rock Central High school. Warner said that the telegrams first started going out of here Wednesday and gained momentum Thursday and that by Thursday night had reached the proportions of a deluge.

ONE OF SIX youths taken into custody then later released Friday by National Guardsmen at Little Rock, Ark., is escorted from the vicinity of the city's Central High school, focal point of integration tension. The youth, identified as Murray Gallinson, 25, of Minneapolis, Minn., had a knife in his possession, the guard reported.

Arkansas Governor Says Troops to Stay On Duty

News + Observer Mon. 9-9-57 P.1

Raleigh, N.C.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 8 (AP) —Gov. Orval Faubus tonight declared he will not send the National Guard home from the Central High School campus, where the guard's presence for a week has thrown this city into a racial crisis.

The governor declared, "I sincerely hope no one is shot," in answer to a question of what would happen if federal marshals tried to escort Negro students through National Guard lines at the school.

Asked, in a television interview, "Will you have Guardsmen at Central High School tomorrow under the same orders as before?" the governor replied:

No Changes.

"There are no changes at the present moment."

The governor's determination left the struggle between the state of Arkansas and the federal government just where it was a week ago.

Faubus' National Guard troops remain at the campus with orders to turn back any Negro students who try to enter. The federal government remained determined to uphold court orders for immediate integration of the 2,000 - pupil school.

The governor, in tonight's interview, indicated he felt the federal government might be planning to back down.

The governor asserted, "My actions were proper and prudent under the circumstances that existed" in calling out the Guard. He always has said and repeated tonight that he called out the Guard only to preserve peace and prevent violence.

To requests that he produce evidence that violence was imminent, Faubus said, "We have no time here to try a law suit," and said he was not ready to divulge specific evidence.

But he did say that an unidentified organization planned to converge on Little Rock at the opening of school, "and this has resulted in the culmination of events. I had no alternative."

Another Source.

One interviewer wanted to know if the governor had another source of troops if the federal government were able to call the National Guard into federal service and thereby take it away from Gov. Faubus' control.

News + Observer

"You'll find offers to volunteer on my desk," the governor replied sharply.

P. 3

Again and again he said he was not opposing school integration as such. He acknowledged the federal government's authority to order integration. His sole reason for calling out the Guard and keeping it on the campus was to prevent violence, he said.

He further said that his son attends an integrated college in Arkansas.

Asked if he planned to call out the guard at North Little Rock, a city across the river from Little Rock, when school opens tomorrow, he said the school board there has suspended plans for integration, indicating he expected no trouble there.

A newsman asked him, "Does this mean the federal government will have to recede from its demand for immediate integration?"

"I can see no alternative," he answered.

Another newsman asked: Would the governor accept a federal subpoena if an attempt was made to serve one on him?

"That eventuality I will decide if and when it comes. That depends on a number of things."

If the constitution of Arkansas and the Constitution of the United States were at loggerheads, which would the governor upheld, he was asked.

By The Courts.

He answered that the proper way to resolve it would be by the courts.

"Then we in Arkansas will abide by the decision, as we always have and as we are now."

Meanwhile, this city warily watched the Pentagon for possible moves there to take over the Arkansas National Guard and remove it from Faubus' control.

Federal authorities gave no signs of surrender tonight.

The federal government stuck by its determination that court orders demanding immediate integration of Central High must be obeyed.

Faubus, behind the high, militia-guarded wall of his mansion, called up more National Guardsmen for tomorrow to relieve troops which have been on duty since Monday night at the high school.

Chance Denied.

The one big chance for a face-saving compromise for both sides was thrown out yesterday when U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies refused to back down and temporarily delay integration.

One solution, from the federal government's viewpoint, would be to order the Arkansas National Guard into federal service. This would take them from under Faubus' control, although such an action might be disputed by the state.

President Eisenhower conferred today with Atty. Gen. Brownell by telephone about the Little Rock case. White House press secretary James Hagerty said Brownell informed Eisenhower that an FBI report on the facts almost certainly will be filed with the federal court in Little Rock tomorrow. Hagerty called this the "next phase" in carrying out Eisenhower's determination to uphold the Constitution. The press secretary said he has no way of knowing what Davies will decide on the basis of the FBI report. The judge had asked the Justice Department to determine who is responsible for blocking his integration orders.

ARKANSAS

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE RONALD DAVIES

Segregation Judge Calm

Has A Tiger By The Tail

Courier-Journal Louisville Sun. 9-5-57 p. 3

Crisp-Spoken North Dakotan Calls Himself Humdrum Lawyer

By SY RAMSEY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Little Rock, Sept. 4.—Slight, crisp-spoken United States District Judge Ronald Davies of Fargo, N. D., who describes his career as humdrum, has landed in the middle of a racial battle that may have repercussions for the entire South.

Davies, who stands 5-1 and once ran 100 yards in 10 seconds at the University of North Dakota, came here two weeks ago to clean up a backlog of cases in the Eastern District of Arkansas.

Judge Thomas C. Trimble retired last June and no one has been named to succeed him yet.

Twice in the past five days Davies has had to bypass the routine log-jam to rule on scheduled high-school integration, an issue of such momentum that the former college sprinter has been hard-pressed to keep pace.

But if Davies realizes he has a tiger by the tail, he is not publicly showing it.

Tuesday night the judge heard a Little Rock School Board attorney plead for another decision by the Federal Court on whether it could go ahead with integration despite the presence of National Guard troops around Central High School in conflict with a previous Federal Court order.

Almost casually Davies disposed of the matter in a few minutes with an order to "proceed forthwith" to carry out integration.

A newsman commented later to Davies that he sounded a bit testy.

"I'm afraid I sound brusque sometimes when I don't mean to," the judge said.

Actually Davies gives the appearance of mildness and curiosity. He also seems to have boundless energy stuffed inside his short frame.

"I wish I could brag about something in my career," Davies said. "I guess I was a humdrum lawyer."

The 52-year-old jurist said reading and listening to folk music are practically his only hobbies. He prefers biographical and historical novels.

Davies has not had a chance to listen to Arkansas folk music. He hopes to visit the Ozarks when "these trying circumstances" are over.

Born in Crookston, Minn., Davies lived in Grand Forks, N. D., most of his life. He and Mrs. Davies have five children.

A daughter will be married next week in Fargo and Davies said he "surely will attend that" despite the swelling racial turmoil.

JUDGE RONALD N. DAVIES
Calm—at least outwardly

Davies said he "never entertained delusions" about what he calls the myth that Arkansans are a backward hill people.

The judge added:

"I've found nothing but kindness and hospitality in Arkansas. I know these times are difficult for citizens here."

Text Of Ruling By U.S. Judge At Little Rock

Commercial Appeal Sun. 9-8-57 p. 16

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 7.—(AP)—Here is United States District Judge Ronald N. Davies' ruling on the school board's request that integration be delayed:

Memphis Sun

Gentlemen, in this matter let us first re-examine prior events which have culminated today in the petition of the Little Rock school directors and the school superintendent for an order temporarily suspending enforcement of the plan of integration approved by a judge of this court on Aug. 15, 1956.

That plan was originated and conceived by the citizens of Little Rock acting by and through their own school directors. That plan was approved by this court and by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

That plan is not and never was anything other than the plan of the duly authorized representatives of the people of Little Rock.

What did the testimony this morning disclose? Beyond the bald and unsupported statements in the petition, only the testimony of the Little Rock superintendent of schools was offered, and that bore upon the desirability of the proper education of children in the Little Rock schools with which sentiments we all must agree.

The testimony and arguments this morning were, in my judgment, as anemic as the petition itself; and the position taken by the school directors does violence to my concept of the duty of the petitioners to adhere with resolution to its own approved plan of gradual integration in the Little Rock public schools.

It must never be thought that this court has not given careful consideration to this problem and all that it entails, but it must never be forgotten that I have a constitutional duty and obligation from which I shall not shrink. This court is not persuaded that upon the tenuous showing made by the petitioners this morning that it should suspend enforcement of the petitioners' plan of integration.

The chief executive of Little Rock has stated that the Little Rock police have not had a single case of inter-racial violence reported to them and that there has been no indication from sources available to him that there would be violence in regard to this situation.

In an organized society there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flouted, whatever the pretext.

That we, and each of us, has a duty to conform to the law of the land and the decrees of its duly constituted tribunals is too elementary to require elaboration.

The petition of the Little Rock school district directors and of the superintendent of the Little Rock public schools for an order temporarily suspending enforcement of its plan of integration heretofore approved by this court is in all things denied.

EISENHOWER MAY SPEAK

By BOB CONSIDINE
International News Service Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 7.—Federal District Judge Ronald Norwood Davies Saturday bitingly removed the final barrier separating defiant Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus from a head-on collision with President Eisenhower over school integration.

The stern-faced, 52-year-old judge, addressing a hushed courtroom of whites and Negroes, sternly rejected a petition by the Little Rock School Board that he temporarily reverse his week-old ruling that nine Negroes must be admitted to the all white Central High School.

Judge Davies described the arguments for a stay of his order as "anemic" and declared:

"In an organized society, there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flaunted, whatever the pretext."

The petitioners had asked for a "cooling off" period, after which they hoped to proceed with a publicly endorsed integration plan.

Governor Faubus, incommunicado for the past 48 hours, made no immediate comment and neither did the President.

School Board Bows

An hour after Judge Davies' decision, the school board issued a statement which read in part:

"The Federal Court has again ordered the school board to proceed with its (integration) plan. The plan is still in effect and Little Rock Central High School will be opened Monday for all students."

This aligned the school board, however reluctantly, with the Federal Government and some observers wondered whether National Guardsmen could or would halt school board members in the event they wished to escort the Negro students through the armed line.

At the school itself, a handsome brown brick building that covers two city blocks and houses 2,100, a token force of hardly a dozen armed National Guardsmen stood vigil under cloudy skies. The remainder of the approximately 200 Guardsmen who on the Governor's order had turned back the Negro youngsters at gunpoint earlier in the week were back at their civilian jobs.

But Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, adjutant general of the state, is currently under orders from Governor Faubus to bring his forces up to nominal strength Monday morning.

General Clinger has stated that he and his men will refuse to admit the Negro students and will resist all efforts by any "outsiders" to convoy the youths through the line. The "outsiders" specifically include United States marshals, FBI agents and all other representatives of the Federal Government, he has indicated.

May Talk Sunday

The White House had no comment on Judge Davies' reiterated decision, but indications are that the President, or perhaps Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., will have something to say Sunday as the showdown at the school campus nears.

The President, who interrupted his Newport, R. I., vacation to fly to Washington in this case—and for the matter of communist aid to Syria—has stated that he does not wish to use force to get the nine Negroes into their classes.

But if Governor Faubus keeps his troops at the school, flanked by two Army half-tracks equipped with machineguns, and the troops again refuse to let the children pass, the President must act instantly.

Judge Davies removed the last legal obstacle today. From here out, most observers agree, only direct action is in order.

Governor acts after threats reach deluge

News Birm, Ala, Tues. 9-3-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3—(AP)—Central High School's Fall term opened today on a segregated basis, with National Guard troops surrounding the campus. An orderly crowd of about 400 dwindled by noon to less than 50 without incident.

None of the nine Negroes scheduled to enter the 2000-pupil high school tried to attend classes today after the school board asked them to stay away until the "dilemma can be legally resolved."

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS, whose order last night for the National Guard to occupy the school ground halted the planned integration, steadfastly refused to say that he sent the Guardsmen out to keep the Negro students away.

Pressed by reporters to clarify his action, Faubus would not go beyond his previous statement that he called out the Guardsmen to maintain order.

He did say he doubted that a Guardsman would escort a Negro student into the school if one showed up.

But he said, "I deny categorically that I have sold out to the segregationists."

Faubus said he did not consider his action as an effort to interpose the sovereignty of the state upon federal authority.

"This doesn't go far enough for interposition—it is not open defiance."

THERE WERE ONLY two quiet demonstrations from the crowd, composed of about 200 students and as many adults. There were no Negroes in sight although a truckload of young Negroes drove to within a block of the school and then left.

There was loud handclapping and a few rebel yells when a teen-aged boy unfurled a Confederate flag. "This is no gag," he soberly told a newsman.

Members of the Capital Citizens Council distributed leaflets among the spectators. The leaflets were entitled "What Lincoln said About Segregation," and a "P. S." at the end included this sentence: "We can and will abolish tax schools if necessary."

Faubus had mentioned in his speech that a massive telephone campaign was under way to enlist white mothers for an assembly on the high school grounds today and that motor caravans were converging on the capital city from other sections of the state. The Rev. Corbett Mask of Benton, some 20 miles to the southwest said that he had brought "about a dozen" segregationists with him to the school.

ABOUT A DOZEN National Guard jeeps and trucks were parked bumper to bumper in front of the school and a half-track weapons carrier—with the weapons recoved—blocked one street. A few Guardsmen congregated across the street from the crowd and others were strung out along the two-block-long front of the building and two or more were stationed at each of the numerous entrances.

The crowd stood quietly most of the time. A National Guard lieutenant colonel told the boy with the flag not to display it again. However, he brought the flag out again a few minutes later and there was another burst of applause.

News

Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Arkansas adjutant general, arrived a few minutes before the start of classes and said that he was pleased to see the crowd so orderly. He estimated the number of Guardsmen at 250. He added that he would report to Faubus later today.

News 9-3-57

The governor said he was taking the drastic step "arrived at prayerfully" as the chief executive of the state sworn to preserve peace and protect property.

His action could provide the basis for the first clear test of state police power versus federal law.

Faubus' action appeared to be in direct conflict with the order of U. S. Dist. Judge Ronald Davies, a Fargo, N. D., jurist, temporarily filling a vacant Arkansas bench, who Friday instructed the Integration to proceed. Davies also issued a broad injunction forbidding any and all persons from interfering with the peaceful integration.

Faubus made clear his intent, however, in two separate statements in his speech. He first said he sent the Guardsmen to the school to preserve peace and order. Then he said it was his conviction that peace and order could not be maintained if forcible integration proceeded.

GOV. FAUBUS

In support of his action, Faubus said "this problem gives every evidence and indication that the attempt to forcibly integrate will bring about widespread disorder and violence." He said the sale of guns and knives to Negroes and whites had recently jumped alarmingly.

He said Arkansans had expressed themselves on the question of integration by voting for a number of anti-integration resolutions and these measures "are the law of the land at the present time."

The governor said litigation to determine the validity of the anti-integration measures—pupil assignment law, interposition resolution and others—should have been had before forcible integration was ordered.

"NOW THAT a federal court has ruled that no further litigation is possible before the forcible integration of Negroes and whites in Central High School tomorrow, the evidence of discord, anger and resentment has come to me from so many sources as to become a deluge.

"One store reported that a gang of Negro youths came as a group and each and all purchased knives while another group waited outside. . . . Then came in for the same purpose."

Faubus slapped at Little Rock Supt. Virgil Blossom saying Blossom asked orally for help to quell possible violence but when asked to put it in writing, never responded.

THE GOVERNOR waited until the end of his 30-minute address to give the key to his action. He said, "The mission of the state militia is to maintain or restore order and to protect lives and property. They will not act as segregationists or integrationists but as soldiers . . . to carry out assigned tasks.

"But I must state here in all sincerity, that it is my opinion—yes, even a conviction, that it will not be possible to restore or to maintain order and protect lives. . . . If forcible integration is carried out tomorrow in the schools of this community. The inevitable conclusion therefore, must be that the schools in Pulaski County (Little Rock), for the time being, must be operated on the same basis as they have been operated in the past. . . . The public peace will be preserved."

Under the school board's court-approved plan, integration was to be accomplished at the high school level this year and extend downward through the school system at the rate of one grade per year.

The entire process was expected to take 10 years.

N. C. and Tennessee schedule race-mixing

While Arkansas thus for the moment stood front-stage in the taut, tense drama of integration other areas of the South moved spottily toward race mixing in the lower classrooms.

IN NORTH CAROLINA, Negro and white children today attended the same public school classes for the first time in history, and with little fuss.

Some parents gathered anxiously to observe the proceedings and there were a few hecklers as five Negro children entered the Gillespie Elementary and Junior High Schools at Greensboro.

Chief of Police Paul Calhoun quieted the Hecklers by escorting them off the school grounds.

Newsmen identified one of the hecklers as C. A. Webster, who was designated as temporary chairman of a White Citizens Council formed at Greensboro over the week-end by Segregationist John Kasper.

The Gillespie school principal's secretary said the five Negro children did not appear nervous as they entered the school. She said, "everyone went in quietly."

Another Negro child is scheduled to enter the Greensboro High School when classes start there tomorrow. Four Negroes are scheduled to enter mixed classes at Charlotte tomorrow, and one at Winston-Salem.

In Mecklenburg County near Charlotte, however, 16 Negro children denied admission to white schools voiced the possibility of a court test. In turning down the Negroes' applications for assignment to white schools, the county school board said it was aware of the U. S. Supreme Court ruling which outlawed school segregation, but added that it also was aware of the crowded conditions of the schools under its jurisdiction.

AT CLINTON, TENN., five Negroes walked together down the hill leading from Clinton's small Negro settlement, passing a lone city police car standing guard near Clinton High School. Two others arrived by bus from the Claxton community near here. All were admitted without incident.

An eighth Negro, Ronnie Hayden, 15-year-old sophomore, arrived late and was told to return tomorrow for processing the principal explained that the boy had not registered previously and school officials would not have time today to sign him up.

Four of the Negroes are newcomers to Clinton High. Three are freshmen and the fourth, Henrietta Thomas, 16, attended Detroit's Durfree Junior High last year.

Over-all attendance figures were not immediately available, but school officials earlier had said they expected about 750 pupils.

NEXT WEEK—and also under court order — Nashville, Tenn., begins integrated classes. Thirteen Negro first graders have been registered in schools that heretofore have been all-white. The 13 Negroes will be among 272 white first graders in five schools. The city's total first grade enrollment is expected to reach about 2000.

Seven of the 17 Southern states so far have avoided integration in their public schools—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia. In Virginia is one of the five school districts against which the original integration ruling was directed.

THE WIDE STRETCHES of Texas offer a contrast. Eastward, the big cities of Houston, Fort Worth and Dallas continue to maintain segregated schools; in the west and south, schools are fully or partly integrated. In San Antonio, integration began three years ago.

Elsewhere in the South and along the South's borders, varying speeds mark the progress being made toward integration. Except in such border states as Kentucky, Missouri, Maryland, Oklahoma, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, the total number of Negroes admitted to formerly all-white schools remains small.

AT STRUGIS, KY., At least 17 negroes, irgnoring a series of week-end incidents, enrolled today at the previously all-white Strugis High School.

Two state police cruisers patrolled the street as a crowd of 100-150 gathered to watch them enter Sturgis High, scene of integration disorders last September. The school was ordered to integrate this year under terms of a federal court order.

STATE POLICE said several teen-agers, riding in a passing auto, tossed pebbles at the Negroes as they entered the school grounds but there were no other disturbances.

Tenn-agers also were blamed for Saturday night's incident when a black-faced dummy, put together with rags and wire, was strung up in front of a main street store.

A dynamite charge was exploded at Camp No. 1, a Negro section here, Sunday night but there were no reports of injuries.

The National Assn. for the advancement of Colored People filed suit to open Sturgis High to Negroes after Negroes were turned back from the school last September.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN were called in to preserve order and were removed when Kentuck's attorney general ruled they were enrolled illegally since Union County had announced no integration program.

National Guardsmen also were sent to Clay, Webster county, last year when Negroes tried to enroll.

A Clay teacher, who declined to be identified, said today no Negroes showed up to enroll at the school, located in the heart of a coal mining area.

A federal judge recently approved a voluntary desegregation program for Clay and the rest of Webster County. The voluntary basis was defined as meaning that all public schools in the county would be open to children of any race or color at the discretion of the pupils or parents.

AT MANSFIELD Tex., Mansfield High School, scene of a demonstration against threatened desegregation last September, opened this morning without incident.

Negro students were sent by bus to another high school in Fort Worth, as in the past.

WHITE STUDENTS ATTEND LITTLE ROCK'S CENTRAL HIGH UNDER EYES OF GUARD

. . . No Negroes show up after school board asks them to stay away secretary, said no Negroes were seen on the campus this morning.

The school was under federal court order to integrate last year, but Negroes gave up the attempt to attend when mobs, sometimes unruly, appeared daily at the school. The mobs dispersed when Texas Rangers were sent to the scene under orders to stop any act which would disturb the peace.

'Mob' Weapons Found By Police In School Area

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 7.—Capt. Alan Templeton of the Arkansas State Police disclosed Saturday that his men had confiscated a collection of weapons in the vicinity of Central High School, where National Guardsmen have been called to preserve order.

The weapons, mostly knives, but including brass knuckles and a long leather whip, were found mainly on the school grounds, cached in shrubbery and on the parking lot.

The weapons have been taken to the State Police headquarters in Little Rock, but only one arrest has been made. That was of Murray Gallinson, 20, one of six University of Minnesota students told to leave town after they taunted an angry crowd at the school Friday.

Mr. Gallinson brought a hunting knife into the crowd on the school grounds.

"They were weapons that a mob would use," Captain Templeton said.

Legal Angles

Hurdles Might Delay Citation of Faubus

By ANTHONY LEWIS

© New York Times News Service

Washington, Sept. 4.—Unless Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas withdraws the National Guard troops who have prevented Negro children from entering the Little Rock high school, the feeling here is that he may eventually be cited for contempt himself.

But a number of legal steps may stand in the way.

For one thing, a person can be held in contempt of a court order only upon proof that he knew the order was directed at him.

Officials Hope There's No Showdown

Some lawyers here think that before proceeding against Faubus, it would be necessary for Judge Ronald N. Davies to issue a new injunction naming him and specifically forbidding him to interfere with the scheduled school integration.

In any case, Justice Department officials fervently hope that there will be no such showdown with the Governor. The fear is that a contempt action against him would only stir new resentment in the South.

Thus the next move—for a further injunction, for example, or contempt citations—is up to Judge Davies and the official parties of the lawsuit, a group of Negro parents and the Little Rock School Board.

Should the impasse remain and Faubus defy an injunction directed against him, there are a number of steps the Justice Department could take. But they are all of such an extreme nature that their use would appear to be improbable.

First, the Governor could in theory be prosecuted for a federal crime.

Section 242 of Title 18 in the United States Code makes it a crime for a State official willfully to subject any person to "the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution. . . ." The calculated exclusion of Negroes from a school in defiance of a court order seems to fit this statute.

Second, the Federal Government could withhold money from the Arkansas National Guard. But, again, no such step is being seriously considered now.

Third, the President could use federal troops or the National Guard units of any state to enforce the court order. A Civil War statute still on the books—50 U.S.C. Section 202—says:

"Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any state or territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the states, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws. . . ."

PRESIDENT URGES PATIENCE IN CRISIS

James 9-25-C

Firm on Utilizing Full Legal Powers to Back Integration Decree in Little Rock

Wed, 9-11-57

By W. H. LAWRENCE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 10—President Eisenhower counseled "patience" today in dealing with the tense school integration dispute in Little Rock, Ark.

He urged this before a group of Rhode Island Republican leaders, who came to talk about political gains they hoped to make in this traditionally Democratic state.

New York

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said there had been no change in the President's determination to use his full legal powers to uphold the court decision requiring integration at Little Rock's Central High School.

The court order is being defied by Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who is using the Arkansas National Guard to keep order by preventing Negroes from entering the school.

No Fund Withdrawal Seen

Mr. Hagerty, responding to questions, said he knew of no plans to withdraw Federal funds being used to equip and partly pay Arkansas Guardsmen.

He would not answer directly a questoin whether the President was considering the use of his powers as Commander in Chief to "federalize" the Arkansas Guard by putting it in the Regular Army and thus subject to his rather than Governor Faubus's orders.

The President talked about the Little Rock situation before he went to play golf. On his return, he received a telephone report from Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., saying that the Government's petition for an injunction against Governor Faubus had been filed in court in Little Rock.

Mr. Brownell also informed the President that a Nashville school had been dynamited. Mr. Hagerty said the President's reaction to this had been "the same as anyone's would be—he thought this was a terrible thing."

Told that Governor Faubus, in a television interview, had expressed willingness to meet the President or anyone else to discuss a solution, Mr. Hagerty said he knew of no plans for such a meeting.

Broadcast Not Considered

He added that he had not heard of any consideration being given for a nation-wide television or radio broadcast by the President to discuss the integration problem.

The Rhode Island group that called on the President was led by Christopher Del Sesto, who narrowly missed election as Governor last year. He promised that the Republicans would win a Senate and two House seats next year.

The President has scheduled a conference tomorrow afternoon with Ezra Taft Benson, Secretary of Agriculture. Mr Benson is attending a conference at West Point, N. Y.

Governor Expresses a 'Desire to Comply' on Integration

New York

Thurs. 9-12-57

By W. H. LAWRENCE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 11—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas asked President Eisenhower today to confer with him on racial integration of Central High School in Little Rock.

The President promptly suggested a meeting here either Friday afternoon or Saturday morning.

Governor Faubus had called out the National Guard after a Federal court ordered integration of the high school. The Guard has barred entry of Negro students on the ground that their presence would provoke disorder and violence.

Governor Faubus said in his telegram to the President:

"All good citizens must, of course, obey all proper orders of our courts and it is certainly my desire to comply with the order that has been issued by the District Court in this case, consistent with my responsibilities under the Constitution of the United States and that of Arkansas."

Reply Dictated on Links

The Governor's message reached the temporary White House here about 3 P. M. James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, delivered it to the President on the grounds of the Newport Country Club.

Mr. Hagerty said the President had just completed playing the first hole of his afternoon round of golf when he caught up with him. The President dictated his reply before teeing off on the second hole.

Mr. Hagerty said that the Governor's telegram had reached the White House without advance notice. He denied reports that White House staff members, including Sherman Adams, the President's principal deputy, had been in touch with Governor Faubus by telephone in advance of the Governor's message.

The Arkansas Governor seemed reluctant yesterday to talk to the President about the Arkansas school situation. He said then it would be "unseemly" for him to refuse a meeting with the President. But that language hardly suggested he would ask for a conference, and include in his request a statement of willingness to comply with Federal Court decrees.

Governor Faubus earlier had said that the only peaceful solution to the school dispute would be for the Federal Government to retreat on the integration issue.

Times p. 25 C

The Governor's message reached the temporary White House shortly after the President had finished an afternoon conference with Ezra Taft Benson, Secretary of Agriculture.

There was a heavy, but brief, rainfall this morning about the time the President normally would have started playing golf. So instead, the President stayed in his office, working on correspondence.

Thurs 9-5-57

After the meeting with Secretary eBnson, he boarded the Presidential ninety-two-foot cabin cruiser, the Barbara Anne, on his way to the Newport Country Club. The cruiser landed him at Fort Adams and he then motored to the golf club.

Hagerty Drives to Club

When the telegram came to Mr. Hagerty's attention, he drove to the golf club, about five and one-half miles away by land. While he was on the way, other White House employes notified the Secret Service detachment at the club that Mr. Hagerty was rushing there with an important message.

While the President was holing out his putt on the first hole, his electric golf cart was sent back to the club house to pick up Mr. Hagerty.

Near the first green, the press secretary delivered the message from Governor Faubus and General Eisenhower dictated his reply while the two men sat in the golf cart. Then a police car drove out on the course and took Mr. Hagerty back to the club house.

The President went on with his golf game and Mr. Hagerty drove back to the temporary White House press room to make the news public.

Telegram From Governor

The telegram from Governor Faubus said:

"Dear Mr. President:

I have accepted summons from the United States District Court, Eastern District of Arkansas, to appear before that court on Sept. 20 to answer certain allegations in litigations affecting the high school in Little Rock. Recognizing that we jointly share great responsibility under the Federal Constitution I feel that is advisable for us to counsel together in determining my course of action as Chief Executive of the State of Arkansas with reference to the responsibility placed upon me by the State and Federal Constitutions.

"The United States District Court has already entered an order relative to the integration of the high school in Little Rock and this order has been affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

"All good citizens must, of course, obey all proper orders of our courts and it is certainly my desire to comply with the order that has been issued by the district court in this case, consistent with my responsibilities under the Constitution of the United States and that of Arkansas.

"May I confer with you on this matter at your earliest convenience."

The President replied:

"I have your telegram in which you request a meeting with me. Would it suit your convenience to come to my office

Nice on the naval base at Newport either Friday afternoon, Sept. 13, at 3 P. M. or Saturday morning, the fourteenth, at 9 o'clock. If you would let my office know your method of any advance communication be-transportation to the Newport area, my staff will arrange to have you met and brought to the base."

twten th White House and Governor Faubus concerning the meeting, it was learned that White House staff members had discussed with the President his reaction if the Arkansas Governor were to ask to see him.

"I'll see him, of course," the President replied, according to one staff member.

This conversation took place yesterday.

14k 1957 ARKANSAS MRS. GRACE LORCH
LITTLE ROCK

Is Human Kindness Subversive?

A heart-breaking picture will be etched forever in the minds of freedom-loving people everywhere.

It is that of 15-year-old Elizabeth Eckford braving the bayonets of Governor Faubus' guardsmen and the taunts and jeers of a Little Rock mob as she attempted to exercise her constitutional right to enter Central High School.

Of the hundreds of hate-filled faces which surrounded the school that memorable September 4, only one woman showed sufficient compassionto step forward, wrap her arms around the frightened youngster's shoulders and shield her from the mob.

That woman was Mrs. Lee Lorch, wife of a college mathematics professor.

With that one gesture of human kindness, Mrs. Lorch made herself the target of every embittered hoodlum, White Citizens Council member and Klansman not only in Arkansas but in neighboring Tennessee and Texas as well.

TO THE SOUTH in Mississippi, one James O. Eastland is in serious trouble.

He's up for re-election and he's having a tough time because he was unable to deliver on his pledge that as long as he sat in the U.S. Senate no civil rights bill would be passed.

By the grace of seniority and the charity of fellow Democrats, Senator Eastland serves as chairman of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee.

That committee was created to keep an eye on subversive activities.

Since the Supreme Court handed down its 1954 school decision Southern subversives have openly conspired to defy the law, undermine the Constitution and overthrow the Supreme Court.

They have not hesitated to resort to cross burning, bombings and mob violence to further their lawless cause.

One of the most vocal leaders of this conspiracy is James O. Eastland.

IT WAS THEREFORE no surprise when scheduled hearings of the Senate committee were set for Memphis that the first witness to be summoned by Eastland was Mrs. Lee Lorch.

It was not surprising, but it was indeed shocking that an agency of the United States Senate could be so diverted in purpose that it would appear to be persecuting an advocate of decency while aiding and abetting the forces of evil and lawlessness.

* * *

DO FELLOW senators share Eastland's belief that it is a subversive act for a Southern white woman to treat a colored child with kindness?

That in simple terms is the issue.

If Eastland is permitted to get away with this brazen piece of political chicanery, no matter how loudly the Democratic Advisory Committee professes its adherence to civil rights, we predict its voice will not be heard next November when millions of Americans enter the polling booths to elect the 86th Congress.

Mrs. Lorch is match for Eastland

(See photo on Page 9)

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — "Is it subversive to be human?"

That is the question that Mrs. Grace Lorch, wife of a professor at a Little Rock college for colored pupils, might well have asked the Senate Relations subcommittee Tuesday.

Summoned to its projected three-day probe of Communist infiltration in the area, she threw the hearing into an uproar by answering every question with a statement which began: I am here under protest..."

Sen. William E. Jenner (Rep. Ind.) said the group would decide later whether to cite Mrs. Lorch for contempt, along with any possible action against witnesses who failed to appear.

AS MRS. LORCH tried to read her prepared statement he pounded on the table with his gavel and shouted:

"You're a troublemaker, aren't you? Saying this committee investigated you because you protected a colored girl in Little Rock's integration struggle. We are not concerned with integration.

"We don't care what you did in Little Rock. We are concerned with the threat of communism to this nation. We want to know if you were a member of the Community Party in Boston..."

* * *

MRS. LORCH again began: "I am here under protest..." Senator Jenner's pounding gavel drowned out a sentence...

"That is my answer."

"This woman came here to try to disrupt the proceedings," Jenner thundered. "If she's not going to answer questions, I think she should be excused and cited for contempt."

Mrs. Lorch, a small gray-haired woman, appeared recently in the nation's newspapers when she defied an angry crowd of whites to offer sympathy to weeping Elizabeth Eckford, 15, on the first day of integration at Central High School, where Governor Faubus had ordered out the National Guard to prevent colored students from attending classes.

MRS. LORCH sat with Elizabeth on a bench until her bus arrived.

Mrs. Lorch, a native of Connecticut, taught school in Boston and in 1950 moved to Nashville with her husband, Lee Lorch, when he joined Fisk University as a mathematics teacher.

In 1955 they moved to Little Rock, where her husband teaches at Philander Smith College, a colored school.

The year before Lorch was cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions about possible Communist ties before a House Un-American Activities subcommittee. The case still is pending.

THE HEARING here was cut short Tuesday because of "uncooperation from witnesses summoned" and the fact that many witnesses obtained excuses not to attend.

The explosive session began when Mrs. Lorch, who earlier had refused to testify at a closed session of the committee, took the stand and tried to read her statement.

Mrs. Lorch said: "I can't think of anything in my past to link me with Communism. The only subversive activities I know about are the ones Senator Eastland and his crowd are engaging in."

THE INTERRUPTED statement set forth:

"To concede the right of Senator Eastland to ask questions at his pleasure concerning associations and beliefs would only strengthen the hands of segregationists in their Southwide efforts to force disclosure of names of members of anti-segregation organizations for purposes of intimidation and persecution....

"Senator Eastland's record with respect to colored people and those who support their demands for first - class citizenship is well known.

"At the height of World War II, and from the privileged sanctuary of the United States Senate, he denounced colored soldiers as dismal failures.

"More recently he has denounced the United States Supreme Court as being under Communist influence.

"What he has done and said over the years has encouraged the serious threat to our internal security which developed in Arkansas."

"AT MY home in Little Rock, I was served a subpoena on Saturday, Oct. 26 to appear before Senator Eastland's Internal Security subcommittee at 10 a.m. Monday, Oct. 28, in Memphis, where I have never resided. "The subject of the inquiry was not stated and no indication was given as to the matters concerning which my testimony was desired. It is plain that no legitimate legislative purpose is intended for these hearings, that I was summoned away from my home and family in this last-minute vindictive manner as a smear and a diversion in Senator Eastland's usual fashion.

"I am even deprived, against my will, of my constitutional right to counsel...

"It is indeed ironic that a subcommittee on Internal Security has chosen to subpoena me from Little Rock, where Gov. Faubus's use of the National Guard to flout the orders of a Federal Court so gravely threatened the internal security of our country that the President was obliged to use federal troops to protect our internal security.

"IT IS ALSO revealing that Eastland timed this subpoena to arrive a few weeks after my name appeared in the national press. To intimidate those Southern whites who are on the side of democracy, or even just decency — and not for any legislative purpose— Senator Eastland is now, as always, attempting to use the United States Senate.

"This is the second such experience for my family. When, following the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, my husband and I attempted to enroll our daughter in the only public school within walking distance of our home in Nashville, a colored school, the House Un-American Activities Committee hastily handed him a last minute subpoena to testify in a city where he had never been and thus tried to harrass him and intimidate others."

Officials Fear Governor Dims Hopes of Peaceful Solution to Integration Problem

Wed. 9-11-57

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10—How severe will be the lasting impact of the last week's crisis in Little Rock, Ark., on the progress of peaceful school integration in the South?

That was the question being weighed in the capital today as the next legal test in Little Rock was put off for ten days.

That next step will be a Federal court hearing Sept. 20 on a petition to enjoin Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas from using troops to prevent school integration.

The feeling here is that Governor Faubus's show of defiance has already done severe damage to hopes for peaceful implementation of the Supreme Court's school decision — the worst damage since the decision was handed down in 1954.

Administration officials are confident that in the end Federal authority will be vindicated in Little Rock and Governor Faubus will be forced to withdraw. But how far such an eventual victory will go to undo the first effects of the Governor's defiance is a subject of dispute.

Center of Concern

It is the psychological effect on the mood of resistance in the South that concerns officials primarily. Physical resistance to integration has now been practiced not by irresponsible elements but by the Governor of a state. What is more, it has worked at least temporarily.

One view is that a careful proceeding leading to a clear decision against Governor Faubus will restore the pattern of gradual compliance that prevailed until last week. This is, of course, the hope of the Justice Department.

The department faces an unusually difficult problem in deciding how fast to press for a court decision that will force Governor Faubus's hand. Many interests are at stake.

First, the Negro pupils who are entitled by Federal court order to enter Little Rock high school must be considered. Every day of delay unquestionably injures their interest.

Unfairness Is Avoided

Second, there is an interest in allowing Governor Faubus ample time to prepare and present his case in court—to avoid even the appearance of unfairness.

Third, there is the conflicting aim of not letting the actual integration of schools in Little Rock be delayed so long that the Governor can claim to have accomplished a substantial delay.

Finally, the Federal Government must worry about the real possibility of violence in Little Rock now that emotions are running high. The fear is that there might be attacks on the Negro pupils if too hasty a move is made to force withdrawal of the National Guard troops and admission of the Negroes.

The Justice Department has already made one decision against haste. Its petition filed today, at the order of Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies, did not seek a temporary restraining order against Governor Faubus.

A temporary restraining order is usually issued immediately, without hearing, and it is good for up to ten days. Instead the department's petition sought a permanent injunction, for which a formal hearing is required.

On the other hand, the department did not suggest a delay in the hearing until Sept. 20. That date was picked by Judge Davies entirely on his own, a Justice official said today.

If Judge Davies does issue an injunction after the Sept. 20 hearing, the Justice Department will face a critical decision on timing.

Governor Faubus could ask Judge Davies, and then the United States Cour of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit Court, to stay the effect of the injunction while he appealed. Whether the stay is granted or not may well depend on the position taken by the United States.

Grant of a stay while the appeal process went on would mean in all likelihood no school integration in Little Rock this semester, and very possibly none this year.

Politically, Governor Faubus' actions are regarded here as essentially harmful to moderates in both North and South.

In the South, any delay in integration that does eventuate in Little Rock will bring demands on other Governors for similar physical resistance.

In the North, the Little Rock dispute is certain to stir new calls for tougher civil rights legislation than the bill enacted by Congress this year.

Governor Faubus' moves have upset the plan carried off so successfully by the Senate Democratic Leader, Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas— to pass a moderate civil rights bill that would bury the issue for years and enable the Democratic party to forget its bitter division over the issue.

The worst nightmare for the Democrats these days is the realization that school opens every year just before Election Day.

Faubus Integration Stand Laid To 3rd Term Pressure

FROM PRESS REPORTS

NEW YORK—Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas was quoted in Time magazine yesterday as saying he had to block integration of Little Rock schools for political reasons because he intends to run for a third term.

Post Herald

The quotation was attributed by Time to a close associate of Winthrop Rockefeller, The associate was not otherwise identifed. P. 2

Rockefeller has a large farm in Arkansas and is chairman of the Araknsas Industrial Development Commission.

The magazine said Rockefeller, on the Sunday before schools, were to open, heard of Faubus' intention to order National Guard troops to prevent Negroes from attending Little Rock schools.

Herald: 9-19-57

The magazine said:

"Rockefeller rushed to the executive mansion, pleaded against the move for more than two hours, argued that it would give the state a bad name with industry. It was no use. A close Rockefeller associate quotes Faubus as saying: 'I'm sorry, but I'm already committed. I'm going to run for a third term, and if I don't do this, Jim Johnson and Bruce Bennett (segregationists who are his probable opponents for governor next year) will tear me to shreds."

Rockefeller, who was in New York last night, would neither deny nor confirm that he made the statement quoted in the magazine.

Birmingham Ala.

At Little Rock, Faubus had this to say of the article:

"I think it is unfortunate because it is absolutely incorrect."

Mrs. Faubus Stays Calm Amid the Fuss and Fury

Constitution p. 16

Atlanta, Ga.

By ELIZABETH MORGAN
Constitution Staff Writer

SEA ISLAND, Sept. 24—Mrs. Orval Eugene Faubus—the pleasant, neighborly first lady of the State of Arkansas—chuckled wryly and said, "I haven't been getting much sleep lately."

But the 45-year-old wife and mother didn't look tired or harassed from all the fuss and fury that has surrounded Gov. Faubus in the past 22 days. Bright and early Tuesday she and her rugged, stocky husband waved a cheery goodby as they boarded a National Guard plane for their Little Rock home—and more worries.

FIRST LADY
Mrs. Orval Faubus

PRETTY FAST

Wed. 9-25-57

As for her sleep, she's been traveling pretty fast since Saturday to get to Atlanta and then here for the Southern Governors Conference. But most of the black-haired, brown-eyed wife's extra duties lately have meant evenings devoted to answering telephones, opening telegrams and letters, and looking after the governor.

And what has been her chief concern lately? Mrs. Faubus answered soberly, "My husband's welfare and the welfare of our state." She said the governor, contrary to some reports, is in good health and follows no special diet.

The 47-year-old politician married Alta Haskins on Nov. 21, 1931. They have an 18-year-old son, Farrell Eugene, who is a freshman this year at Arkansas Tech in Russellville.

Depression times hit Arkansas hard in the early years of their marriage. Gov. Faubus was teaching school in a rural community and attending high school, too, a common practice in some parts of Arkansas at that time. He was graduated when he was 23.

PITCHED IN

Mrs. Faubus pitched in to help. She taught school, worked in the employment security division of the state, and became a postmistress.

Both she and her husband are proud of their backwoods childhood, she declared. "It has given us a better way to understand the people and their problems," she added.

Mrs. Faubus didn't pound pavements during her husband's campaign for the 1955 election. But she pulled for him at home, she said, and now her duties are "the same as any other governor's wife." With poise and charm she manages the affairs of the $200,000 mansion. Completed in 1949, the old brick Georgian style structure is decorated in Williamsburg furnishings.

HAS KEPT UP

The governor usually doesn't discuss business with her, she said, but when he called out the National Guard to ring Little Rock's Central High School, she "thought that he should do it." He hasn't discussed the integration problem with her at all, she added.

The poised Mrs. Faubus apparently has kept up with the printed matter written about her husband after his historic action, for she said that unfavorable articles bother her "not in the least." But she got a little riled when she added that many of the stories have been untrue.

When 35,000 football fans gave Gov. Faubus a standing ovation at Grant Field Saturday night, Mrs. Faubus described her reaction this way: "One of the most wonderful feelings I have experienced."

Tuesday, as she was talking loud and clear to be heard above the crowd around her, Mrs. Faubus spotted her husband sweeping along through newsmen and photographers. "Hurry," she said as he grabbed for her arm, "the governor's got to go."

Ike Returns From Vacation

President Eisenhower returned to Washington late yesterday after a 27-day vacation in Newport, R. I. He will grapple anew today with the Little Rock integration crisis that has plagued him almost from the moment he started his vacation Sept. 4. Post & Times Herald

The Chief Executive has an appointment with five southern governors for 2:30 this afternoon. They want to talk to him about "withdrawal of troops from Little Rock at the earliest possible moment."

General Eisenhower, in agreeing to meet with them, made it clear that he wanted to talk about much more than Little Rock. He stated in a telegram that he wanted the discussion to deal with the broad problem of "school integration." P. A2

Talks to Brownell

The President was in his office at the Newport Naval Base yesterday morning at 7:44 o'clock. He talked to Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. about the Little Rock situation and the whole integration problem. Brownell will sit in with him and the five governors this afternoon.

The President headed for the Newport County Club before 9 a. m. He played 18 holes of golf with White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty, Howard Cushing, president of the club, and Norman Palmer, the pro. Tues. 10-1-57

On his return to the naval base he made a little speech to thank the Navy and the people of Newport for their cordiality and hospitality to him and Mrs. Eisenhower.

'One of Finest Vacations'

Despite the harrassment he had experienced from the Little Rock crisis, he said it had been "one of the finest vacations that it has ever been our privilege to enjoy."

The President and Mrs. Eisenhower left the naval base on Coasters Harbor Island, site of the vacation White House, at 2:30 p. m. They traveled across Narragansett Bay in the presidential yacht Barbara Anne and then took off for Washington in the Columbia III at 3:20 p. m.

Mrs. Eisenhower, who still is convalescing from an operation she underwent in August, looked serene and well rested.

She was wearing a black silk suit, with a wide pleated skirt, and a pink and mulberry felt hat that was given to her by a Newport milliner

Gov. Faubus Encouraged Mob Action

Pittsburgh, Pa.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—President Eisenhower was being hailed throughout the world over the week-end for his stand in ordering troops into this city to enforce school integration. At the same time, he pointed a finger at Arkansas Governor Faubus and blamed him for encouraging mob violence. Rather meekly, Faubus hit back with feeble threats of seeking state legislation to close the schools and bringing a Federal Court injunction against the President. Even Arkansas paid little attention to these mutterings.

(Special to The Courier)

NEWPORT, R. I.—President Eisenhower has answered the bleating South's cries against the use of Federal troops in Little Rock, Ark. with a flat, unequivocal charge that Gov. Orval Faubus is to blame for the entire mess which has given the U. S. a black eye all around the world.

• The Eisenhower pronouncements, contained in a letter to Georgia's Senator Richard B. Russell, in effect made it plain that the Government was not retreating one step from its position that the mandates of Federal Court orders should be carried out to the letter.

The President asserted that the Arkansas State Administration had encouraged mob violence in Arkansas in answering Russell's charge that the Government was using "strong-arm, totalitarian police-state methods."

IRONICALLY, THIS SAME Senator Russell had not condemned the use of the National Guard when it was employed to keep the Negro children of Little Rock out of the school.

In the meantime, Governor Faubus has made certain pronouncements which have served to make him extremely popular among the "wool hat" elements of rural areas such as Yell County. Orval was seemingly enjoying the whole thing for he had been grinning ever since the fateful day that he stepped down from a plane which had flown him home from the Dixie Governors Conference at Sea Island, Ga.

• Orval capped off the fantastic week's activities by getting aboard a white horse and waving the American flag at the Yell County free fair amid the rebel shrieks of his rural pals.

The rip-roaring greeting given Orval at the Yell County shennanigans was in marked contrast to the quiet atmosphere that has marked the area around Central High School since Uncle Sam moved in. It's downright peaceful in Little Rock and the entrance of Negro students has not resulted in any wholesale boycott of the school despite the pleas of Confederate-minded adults who still think in 1860 terms.

DAVID LAWRENCE Says:

Hope of Letting Each State Handle School Problem Rests With The People

Courier Journal

WASHINGTON—Words of wisdom born of a sad experience by the American people a generation ago prompted President Eisenhower to say at Newport the other day:

"You cannot legislate morality where human beings are involved—it must come from within."

Louisville Ky.

This can be construed as a lesson to be learned in connection with the controversy over integration in the public schools. But back of the comment was the knowledge—which so few Americans have today but which is evidently vivid in Eisenhower's own recollection—of the way almost the entire nation dealt with the Prohibition question.

THE PRESIDENT
'Must come from within'

The people themselves by the millions joined in nullifying the Constitution in the 1920's. Enforcement became impractical. Then, by actual repeal of the 18th Amendment, under which Prohibition had been proclaimed, the problem was turned back to the local communities.

Bad 9-18-57

Strangely enough, as one reads of the surprised attitude of so many persons today concerning the concept of "nullification," it might be thought that this never had occurred in America.

Former President Harry Truman, who violated the Constitution when he seized the steel industry in the spring of 1952, talked glibly the other day of the importance of obeying the Constitution as he reprimanded Eisenhower for not taking more forceful measures in Arkansas.

Yet almost everyone forgets that nullification is a procedure adopted by a people who resent any arbitrary imposition of a law or rule of law by a minority or by an oligarchy.

Today, it is a Supreme Court decision, and neither a constitutional amendment nor a law of Congress dealing solely with desegregation which is specifically at issue.

In the 1920's, on the other hand, there actually was in the Constitution itself an unequivocally phrased amendment that forbade the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors anywhere in the United States.

Gave 'Concurrent Power'

This amendment raised no conflict between the States and the Federal Government, for it gave "concurrent power" to both the States and the Congress to enforce it "by appropriate legislation." Congress passed the Volstead Act, spelling out in detail "the law of the land" on Prohibition.

While the controversy about enforcement lasted 13 years, the actual process of putting through a repeal amendment took less than 10 months in 1933.

The widely expressed reaction at the time was epitomized in the oft-heard remark of those days: "You cannot legislate morals."

How many people are alive today who are familiar with what happened during the Prohibition epoch?

A glance at the census statistics shows that, of the 102,750,000 persons of voting age today, 73,500,000 were 18 years old or younger in 1920. To put it another way, only 28 per cent know from first-hand experience how the American people, by individual nullification, made a dead letter of the 18th Amendment, notwithstanding the fact that the entire State and federal police machinery of enforcement was available for the purpose. The jails were full of violators—the "bootleggers" in prison who had sold liquor illegally averaged 53,000 a year.

Legacy Still Remains

Worst of all was the birth of gangsterism in the big cities. This evil—a legacy from Prohibition—is still with us in many localities.

The issue of Prohibition, of course, had been argued for many decades. State after State, each in its own way, had been going "dry." But, not satisfied to let each State of community handle the problem, the extremists forced through a federal Prohibition amendment. It was termed by President Herbert Hoover in his acceptance speech of 1928 "an experiment, noble in purpose." While he himself had serious doubts about trying to effect a reform by national constitutional amendment, he was sincere in his efforts at enforcement.

When repeal came in 1933, the 21st Amendment gave the problem back to the States, where it is now—some states being "dry" or partly "dry" and some being "wet."

Local option—to let each State or community handle moral questions—is the only way that has proved successful in dealing with social problems in America. The integration controversy is today in its infancy. It may take years to solve it.

To anyone who lived through the tragic era of Prohibition and saw crime and vice on the rise, it was obvious that the American people came to believe the "cure"—enforced abstinence—was worse than the disease itself. As President Eisenhower says, "You cannot legislate morality."

Maybe history will repeat itself, and some day the people may adopt a constitutional amendment specifically overriding the Supreme Court decision of three years ago and giving to each State the right to handle its own school problems. It seemed improbable in 1922—three years after the 18th Amendment was proclaimed—that it would ever be repealed. It seemed improbable as late as the 1928 presidential campaign, when a "wet" was defeated. But it happened four years later just the same.

By ED CREAGH

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 12 (AP)—The White House announced today President Eisenhower has called two top aides here for his Saturday morning conference with Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus on the Little Rock, Ark., school integration crisis.

P. 1

Presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty said Atty. Gen. Brownell and chief White House assistant Sherman Adams will fly here from Washington in connection with the Eisenhower-Faubus meeting, which could effect the future of integration in the South.

Word came from Little Rock, meanwhile, that Faubus will be accompanied by Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark), a personal friend of the President.

WOULD END DEADLOCK

Hays, who has been praised by the President in the past though they are of opposing political parties, represents the district which includes Little Rock. It was Hays who let the White House know Faubus would come here Saturday for the conference which the Arkansas governor sought with Eisenhower.

Indications were the President would talk privately at first with Faubus at their 9 a. m. meeting Saturday. Then Brownell and the others were expected to join in the talk, which is aimed at ending the federal-state deadlock over Faubus' use of troops to block school integration.

White House press secretary James C. Hagerty took sharp exception to a broadcast report quoting White House aides as saying Faubus had "thrown in the sponge" in the federal-state deadlock by seeking the appointment with the President and saying he would go as far as he could toward resolving the impasse.

UNTRUE, SAYS HAGERTY

"Completely untrue," Hagerty said.

He added that the President had instructed him to say Eisenhower denied "radio and television comment" to the effect that the White House thought Faubus has given up.

Charles von Fremd, CBS White House correspondent, said he had attributed the phrase "throw in the sponge" to a White House aide in the broadcast this morning. He said he stood by his report.

The White House plainly hoped Faubus could be induced to withdraw the National Guard troops be ordered out to block a federal court-ordered start of mixing white and Negro pupils at Little Rock's Central High School, current focal point of the controversy.

P. 3

U. S. Dist. Judge Ronald Davies has ordered the governor and National Guard officials to show cause Sept. 20 why the troops should not be pulled out.

The White House has stressed its intention to work through "legal procedures" to carry out the Supreme Court's ban against segregation in public schools.

NOT CLAIMING VICTORY

But with violence erupting in Nashville, Tenn., and some other Southern communities, Eisenhower and his aides were known to be hopeful that friendly persuasion—as in the meeting between the President and the Arkansas governor—would help calm the unrest.

The President and his aides, far from claiming a victory, were going out of their way to avoid saying anything that might inflame the situation or put Faubus out on a limb.

The relationship between Newport and Little Rock was so delicate, in fact, that negotiations about the Saturday conference were conducted through a third party.

Hagerty said Faubus' decision to come here was communicated to the White House by Hays in a telephone call to Eisenhower's chief aide, Sherman Adams, in Washington.

HOPE FULFILLED

Faubus started the whole exchange yesterday by telegraphing the President that, in the light of their joint responsibility under the federal Constitution, he thought they should counsel together.

Nobody at the President's vacation headquarters was saying so, but unquestionably this was exactly the sort of development for which the White House had hoped.

The White House said it hadn't approached Faubus before his request for a talk with the President. In Washington, Hay's office said it could throw no light on the lawmaker's role as an intermediary.

Travel arrangements were incomplete but the White House planned to bring him here by helicopter from whatever nearby airfield he reached in his own plane. The nearest fields are the Quonset, R.I. Naval Air Station and the Providence Municipal Airport.

NO INTERVENTION SEEN

Hagerty told a news conference in late afternoon he had been discussing arrangements by telephone with Paul Carpenter of the governor's staff. This was the first announced direct contact between Faubus and the White House since the segregation conflict developed.

The press secretary said he did not know yet whether Eisenhower or Faubus or both would talk with newsmen after the conference.

Hagerty said he knew of no intervention by Hays in the Washington-Little Rock dispute before today, but added it wouldn't surprise him if Hays had been talking to people in Arkansas about it. Little Rock is in Hays' district, Hagerty noted.

Eisenhower played 18 holes of golf today at the Newport Country Club. He and the club pro, Norman Palmer, defeated the club president, Howard Cushing, and William E. Robinson, president of Coca-Cola. The scores were not announced.

Faubus 'to Confer, Not Capitulate'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. Sept. 12 (AP)—A source close to Gov. Orval Faubus, reacting sharply to telecast comments on Faubus' forthcoming meeting with President Eisenhower, said today the governor is going to Newport, R.I., "to confer, not capitulate."

"He doesn't have to go all the way to Newport to throw in the sponge," an official at the state capital said. "He can do that sitting right here in Little Rock."

Faubus himself has not heard of the "throw in the sponge" statement.

It was made by CBS correspondend Charles Von Fremd, who said White House aides believe Faubas is ready to "throw in the sponge" in his dispute with the federal government over integrating Central High School in Little Rock.

Faubus could not be reached for comment.

CONFERS WITH ADVISORS

Officials at the capital said yesterday he was "worn out" by the strain of the past week, since he surrounded Central High School with National Guardsmen and ordered them to keep Negroes from enrolling.

The federal government has ordered him to appear in court Sept. 20 for a hearing on an injunction that would stop him from further interference with the court ordered integration.

Faubus was in conference with his advisors today, working out the details of his meeting with the President.

It appeared likely that Faubus would leave Little Rock by air on Friday and stay overnight in the vicinity of Newport. The flight is expected to take approximately five hours or more.

In Newport, Hagerty announced that Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) told the White House a formal telegram from Faubus was on the way, stating his plans.

HAYS INTERMEDIARY

Hays, it was disclosed, was the intermediary between the White House and Faubus in the efforts to dissolve the impasse between them.

Reports of an unidentified "emissary" have been current in Little Rock for nearly a week.

Whether Hays actually came to Little Rock or conducted negotiations for a truce over the telephone was not known.

Almost total quiet prevailed today both at Central High School in Little Rock and at North Little Rock High School, across the Arkansas River.

Crowds dwindled to less than a dozen, police and state officers at North Little Rock were reduced. The National Guard at Central High was cut down two days ago.

Negroes have not attempted to enroll in either school since the disturbances at North Little Rock last Monday.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
TEXT OF GOV,ORVAL E. FAUBUS'
SPEECH ON CONTROVERSY

Text of Faubus Speech on Controversy

Following is the television-radio address of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas in Little Rock last night, as recorded by The New York Times:

My fellow citizens:

On Tuesday, Sept. 24, while I was still absent from the state, attending the Southern Governors Conference at Sea Island, Ga., the cleverly conceived plans of the Justice Department under [Attorney General] Herbert Brownell for the military occupation of Arkansas were placed in execution.

One thousand two hundred troops of the 101st Airborne Division were flown into the Jacksonville Air Base by air transport from Fort Campbell, Ky. Immediately thereafter these troops occupied in force the grounds of Central High School.

At the same time, the entire Arkansas National Guard and Air Guard were federalized and are now part of the United States Army and the United States Air Force.

We are now an occupied territory. Evidence of the naked force of the Federal Government is here apparent in these unsheathed bayonets in the backs of schoolgirls, in the backs of students and in the bloody face of this railroad worker who was bayoneted and then felled by the butt of a rifle in the hands of a sergeant of the United States 101st Airborne Division [showing photographs].

This man on private property as a guest in a home two blocks from the school has been hospitalized. Others have suffered bayonet wounds from the hands of United States Army soldiers. Your New York papers all show the scenes.

Use of Bayonets Noted

Up until the time the injunction was issued against me by the imported Federal judge, the peace had been kept in Little Rock by as few as thirty National Guardsmen. Not a blow was struck, no injury was inflicted on any person and no property damage sustained. Neither was it necessary to make wholesale arrests of Arkansas citizens; no bayonets were used and the weapons of guardsmen were never loaded.

This is quite a contrast to the present situation, when some 12,000 United States Army troops are on duty mobilized; are standing ready for use. It is in stark contrast also to the use of sharpened naked bayonets on schoolgirls and other Arkansas citizens, the bludgeoning of others with rifle butts and the wholesale arrests made by these United States military forces.

I wish also to point out that no violence broke out in the city until after the injunction was issued by the imported Federal judge and the guard forces were withdrawn.

It might be well to mention briefly the actions of this imported judge in the first three hearings.

An injunction was issued by a state court presided over by Chancery Judge Murray Reid, staying the execution date of the integration order in order to preserve the peace. And I might add here all we have ever asked for is a little time and patience and understanding, as so often expressed by the President himself in solving this problem.

Judge Reid's order was issued after taking sworn testimony in open court with cross-examination of all witnesses. The first hearing in Federal Court before the imported judge last one hour and five minutes. No testimony whatsoever was taken—only the argument of counsel was heard, after which the judge made his order nullifying the order of the state court.

The typewritten order of the Federal Court was then distributed which had already been drawn up and ready before the hearing was held.

The second hearing took a total of four minutes. No testimony was taken and the order to integrate forthwith was issued.

The third hearing consumed a total of fifteen minutes. Some testimony was taken—you can judge how much—but the imported judge stated that no cross-examination was necessary and then his order was issued. The total time consumed in all three hearings was one hour and twenty-four minutes.

On litigation pertaining to a matter of such great import, not only was the matter of integration-segregation involved but also the matter of jurisdiction of state courts to maintain the peace and the all-important matter of state rights—if there are any such rights remaining at this time.

Recalls War Role

During World II my division, the Thirty-fifth Infantry, pushed up on the right of the Fourth Armored Division to relieve the 101st Airborne and my division occupied the embattled city of Bastogne.

Today we find the members of the same division which I helped to rescue, in Little Rock, Ark., bludgeoning innocent bystanders with bayonets in the backs of schoolgirls and the warm red blood of American citizens staining the cold, naked, unsheathed knives.

In the name of God whom we all revere; in the name of liberty we hold so dear; in the name of decency which we all cherish, what is happening to America?

Is every right reserved to the state by the Federal Constitution now lost?

Does the will of the people—that basic precept of democracy—no longer matter?

Must the will of the majority now yield under Federal force to the will of the minority regardless of the consequences?

If the answers to these questions are in the affirmative then the basic principles of democracy are destroyed. And we no longer have a union of states under a republican form of government.

If this be true, then the states are mere subdivisions of an all-powerful Federal Government, these subdivisions being nothing more than districts for the operation of Federal agents and Federal military forces—forces which operate without any regard for the rights of a sovereign state or its elected officials and without due regard to personal and property rights.

Faubus Scores Foes

In addition to the Federal and military forces, we have—as I have stated—in Arkansas a Federal judge from a state a thousand miles away. He has no understanding whatsoever of the difficulties of our problem in the field of race relations.

During periods of military occupation of areas by outside forces, there can also always be found those who for one reason or another take sides with the outside forces. Of the mere handful of such individuals here, I would like to mention theee.

Harry Ashmore, editor of The Arkansas Gazette, the ardent integrationist, and he has a right to his views, in addition to his slanted and distorted reporting of the news in his own paper, has also sought—successfully in many cases—to indoctrinate visiting newsmen with his biased and prejudiced attitude.

To give you an idea of a personal influence, I relate that he was a member of the staff of Adlai Stevenson in both of his campaigns for the Presidency. It is well known here that in 1952, when he was working in Stevenson's campaign group, his own wife here in Little Rock voted for the Republican candidate until the county was lost by the Democrats.

Woodrow Wilson Mann, the lame duck Mayor of Little Rock. In his campaign to defeat the city manager form of government for Little Rock, in order to hold his office, he was defeated by the people of his own city by a vote of more than 3 to 1. His stand on this matter now at issue is repudiated by his own partner in the insurance business as evidenced by a telegram to me.

His own City Council repudiated his stand by unanimous vote.

And what of Sid McMath, the former Governor of Arkansas. In seeking re-election to the Governor's office in 1952 he suffered the most disastrous defeat ever inflicted upon a candidate seeking re-election to any state office.

Again in 1954, seeking the nomination for United States Senator, he failed even to get to the run-off primary. He and other opponents went down before Senator John L. McClellan in the first contest. MacMath was supported by Mr. Ashmore in both campaigns.

Now, I mention these men and a few of their views because they are the ones who have sought to advise the President's palace guard about the Little Rock situation. They bear a heavy responsibility for the unhappy events of the past few days.

Would it not have been better for the President's advisers to listen to officials who have the people's confidence as shown by that greatest of all democratic processes, the free exercise of the franchise at the ballot box?

F. B. I. Activities Cited

Still further in Arkansas, literally swarms of F. B. I. agents have been operating throughout the city. Also agents of the Counter Intelligence Corps and criminal investigative divisions have been combing the area for days. Teen-age schoolgirls have been taken by the F. B. I. and held incommunicado for hours of questioning while their frantic parents knew nothing of their whereabouts.

To those who know the facts of the Little Rock situation, these combined actions on the part of the judicial, executive and military departments of the Federal Government are police-state methods in a form never before seen in America.

The news commentators and press reports of the day may proclaim the comparative calm of the Little Rock area. You will recall that it was quiet in Paris during the German occupation and it is quiet in Budapest today.

It always becomes quiet under military rule.

Prior to this time in Arkansas, the hand of fellowship and mutual self-respect has everywhere been extended between the races.

Much progress has been made in this field and in others pertaining to the progress of the state and the human welfare of all citizens.

Under my administration all transportation systems have been integrated and without serious incidents.

Integration of Colleges

Six of the seven state-supported colleges now have Negro students. In the other there were no applicants.

I was the first Democratic Governor of the South to place Negroes on the Democratic State Central Committee. Negroes also serve on the Republican committee.

Some years ago I was a member of the Resolutions Committee, which recommended to the Democratic State Convention that the so-called white primary be abolished, opening the Democratic primaries to the members of all races.

The convention adopted the resolution and this was accomplished without any ruling by any Federal court.

Negroes have been appointed on boards and commissions during my administration and have been appointed to administration positions never before held by members of their race.

Eight public schools have been peacefully integrated during my administration—more than in any other Southern state outside the border area.

The first Negro to graduate from law school in a Southern college previously all-white was in Arkansas and the first Negro doctor to graduate from a previously all-white Southern college was in Arkansas. All this adds up to greater progress in Arkansas than in any other state of the Deep South.

We have had some few letters and telegrams saying we must let Negroes go to school.

Well, here are pictures of the most modern schools in this city which had been constructed for members of the Negro race. They are much finer, ladies and gentlemen, and any of you can check. These schools are more modern with more modern facilities than the one at Central High where Negroes now seek to enroll with white students.

I am not in this fight either as a segregationist or an integrationist. My only child—a son—is now attending classes in a state-supported integrated college.

Recounts Background

This is more than can be said by many of the high officials of the national administration who are responsible for the military occupation of Arkansas.

This whole situation arose when I exercised my constitutional power and discretion as Governor to preserve the peace and good order of this community.

Basically, the story I laid before the President at the Newport conference was the story of progress and good race relations in this state.

Since Little Rock had become the focal point of contest between contending forces which have very strong feelings on the matter, my plea was for time. Only a little time—if it could be given—in order that I, as Governor, and the people of the area could have an opportunity to work out the problem in a peaceful manner.

The tragedy of the whole situation is that the imported judge, by exercising a little patience and understanding, or by the taking of testimony to gain the facts could have averted the whole development.

The Federal Government has made a grave and grievious error in the federalizing of the Guard and the use of Federal troops.

The troops are even inside the school building, accompanying the Negro students from class to class.

This constitutes a serious danger.

The impetuous or thoughtless act of a white student could result in his penetration by a bayonet just as has occurred on the outside of the building.

But what is of greater importance, by the use of Federal troops without proper request, rights just as precious, if not more so, than integration have been trampled into the dust under the boots of the paratroopers or cut to pieces by their shiny, unsheathed bayonets.

Aside from this, another great harm has been done. The hand of fellowship, heretofore extended everywhere in Arkansas, between the races has been largely withdrawn. Neither Negro or white now knows whether the hand will be friendly or unfriendly.

This is a grievious setback to the cause of progress, justice and Christian charity but never the less it is true.

While we are thus an occupied area, [Major] General [Edwin A.] Walker says his area of jurisdiction has no perimeter. We must endure as best we can.

Remember that all law and individual rights give way to military power when that power is strong enough to enforme its will.

No Question of Supremacy

There can be no question of the supremacy of the United States Army, when used against a defenseless state.

Therefore, we must continue our peaceful pursuit of life, being good citizens, as the overwhelming majority of our people have always been. I have been working and fighting for the right of my people to solve those problems peacefully. This, as we know, requires time and patience.

I shall continue unrelentlessly on this course.

The Constitution, the traditions of uor Republic and the will of the people uphold me in this course. Our cause is just and will ultimately prevail.

I am subject to the will of my people within the framework of the Constitution and Federal laws. We are not now enjoying those full rights, but the inherent decency and good judgment of the people of America will eventually restore those rights to us. For if we are permanently deprived of those rights, then the people of other states will likewise be so deprived.

Today the excuse for use of Federal troops is said to be racial—tomorrow, in any state, the excuse could be a labor dispute, or any number of other things.

The Supreme Court ruled that the President could not take over the steel industry, but they have taken over our schools in Little Rock.

To the people of my state, I now ask again for calmness and a law-abiding approach to all our problems. The Federal authorities — including Federal troops—are in control. They are handling the situation and there is nothing we can do about it.

I appreciate the upwards of 100,000 letters and telegrams from every state in the union which I have received and which have ranged from 95 to 98 per cent in support of my efforts to maintain the peace and good order of my home state.

We have had no opportunity at all to answer any of them but the yare none the less appreciated. I know that when the American people have had time to think and to learn more of the facts of this situation they, in their good judgement, will rebuke the national administration for the ill-advised and unwarranted use of Federal troops.

School attendance at bayonet point is not compatible with the American way of life. Let us, my fellow citizens of Arkansas, let us go about our normal pursuits in a friendly, peaceful manner, obeying all laws and orders, including those of General Walker and his troops.

I received by wire a moment ago this announcement, that the Army had selected regular units throughout the Southern states and placed on special alert for use in outbreaks in connection with school segregation.

[Wilber M. Brucker, Secretary of the Army, revealed about four hours before Governor Faubus spoke that he had revoked an Army order stressing the training in riot duty for some units in the South.]

I ask you: Is that the pledge that was made that Federal troops would not be used? And if this be patience then the word has a new meaning.

Yet it was said here in Little Rock there was no imminence of disorder when I called out the Guards to keep the peace. All in contrast to what I said and what has transpired.

My fellow citizens of Arkansas and of the nation, this cross we here now must bear but, as the poet said "Even this shall pass away.'

Good evening, God bles you, fellow-citizens.

Writer For Methodist Denomination Releases Story Complimentary of Mrs. Grace Lorch; Gives Interesting Details of What White Lady Did For Colored Girl Who Was Reviled And Spit Upon, As She Sought to Enter Little Rock High School, Reporter Refers to Lorch Family When They Were Here

BY CLARENCE T. R. NELSON

Little Rock, Ark.—One Wednesday, in September, in this southern town, one white woman walked unflinchingly up and grabbed plucky little Elizabeth Eckford to her bosom when the 15-year old girl was being cursed, spit at and otherwise reviled by people calling themselves humans.

Breathlessly relieved at getting any hand of friendship after walking a figurative mile with head proudly high—Elizabeth Eckford collapsed in tears on a bench at a bus stop.

The courageous white woman, the principal subject of this story is Mrs. Grace Lorch, wife of a white professor in the local Methodist institution of higher education for Negroes, Philander Smith College.

Buddy Lonesome, a crack reporter for The St. Louis Argus, a leading Negro weekly, has written as follows about the incident.

"Much has been written, and deservedly so, about the courageous Miss Eckford--but what of the white woman who drew the ire and venomous attack of the frothing whites in going to the Negro girl's aid."

"The white woman, herself mother of a teen-age girl, is Mrs. Grace Lorch. Mrs. Lorch is no stranger to championing the Negro cause."

Because while her husband, Lee, was a member of [illegible] Fisk University, the Lorches attempted to enroll their daughter in a Negro school. This was in May, 1954, the same month of the historic Supreme Court decision on school segregation."

"In addition to the Lorches, another Fisk family, that of Doctor Robert and Gertrude Rempfer, also attempted to enroll their child in the Negro Pearl Elementary School, in Nashville, Tenn."

"Both families were attacked for their action by bigoted whites and "moderate" southern Negroes. Professor Lorch and Drs. Robert and Gertrude Rempfer were dismissed from the faculty at Fisk."

"Now Professor Lorch is a member of the faculty at Philander Smith College in Little Rock. And again the Lorch family finds itself propelled into the thick of a racial controversy."

Several periodicals including Time and News Week of Sept. 16 have carried stories about Mrs. Lorch. Editorals have appeared in The Milwaukee Journal, New York Times, Toronto (Canada) Daily Star and other newspapers praising Mrs. Lorch and Elizabeth Eckford. They have received countless letters from all over the United States and from a number of foreign countries including New Zealand.

A paragraph from editoral that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star and written by J. E. Belliveau, reads as follows:

"Little Rock, Ark., and Charlotte, N. C., are a long way from Toronto but neither the vileness of rooted prejuidice nor the greatness of individual heroism is a thing easily isolated. It seems to me that what was done by Grace Lorch, the white woman, and the Negro youngsters who were barred and spat upon in their effort to go to school, is a far bigger thing than the incidents of the headlines. . . No, Little Rock is not really so far away and none of us who is called white can be proud, save of Grace Lorch."

Historians of contemporary events will not fail to mention President Eisenhower and the fact that he ordered troops to Little Rock to see that integration is made effective at Central High School. The historians will likewise mention Governor Faubus and how he triggered the situation in your correspondent's home town (that is, where he was born and lived for several years). But, the historians are not likely to mention Mrs. Lorch's heroic act and other lesser incidents and yet the writer of this story believes that the Great Recorder has already made an entry of Mrs. Lorch's unselfish deed in the "Lamb's Book of Life."

Philander Smith College, which has had an interracial faculty throughout practically all of its 89 years, does not have a white student enrolled this term. This is the first term in several years that no white students have been enrolled in the College.

In a letter to this correspondent, Dr. M. L. Harris, president of Philander Smith College since 1936, wrote as follows:

"Strangely enough for the first time in the last several years, there are no white students enrolled with us. It is clear that what took place in connection with the Senior High School had some bearing on the situation."

Philander Smith College, which is the only Negro church-related college accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary School has an excellent working relationship with the University of Arkansas where Negro students have been integrated in the graduate schools for nine years.

The President's Historic Pronouncement And Action

President Eisenhower on Tuesday night registered upon the forum of this nation another immortal document in an appeal to the South to condition itself for a resolve that "Law and not men" would be supreme in our national pattern. World

The President went at length in defending his reasons for sending troops into strife-ridden Little Rock, Arkansas. He said in his address to the nation, that not until the mob gathered again for the second day to defy the court order, that he found he had no alternative except calling troops to uphold law. Atlanta, Ga

He fully expressed his sincere hope that Little Rock would handle its own affairs, but when mobs intervened and local police powers were insufficient, then "both the law and the national interests demand the President take action." P. 4 - Tharo - 9-26-57

The President's utterances rang true to his former position and it could be seen in his address there was to be no retreat from his firm determination to uphold the Constitution of the United States and decisions of the federal court.

The American people would be satisfied with nothing less than the position taken by the President in this crisis in which a Supreme Court decision had been thwarted under Governor Faubus and defied by a mob.

Now, a great wrong is well on the way to be righted; with his action, millions of Americans and people everywhere who believe in human rights, will take renewed faith in our form of government of law.

We accept the President's position and action with humility and gratitude. The forthright courage and the vigorous stand taken in behalf of upholding the Constitutional rights of Negro Americans will go a long way in affirming the American doctrine of human rights.

Such a stand has been noted before in regards to the enforcement of court orders, but where the constitutional rights of Negroes were concerned, the action taken by President Eisenhower is unprecedented.

Such a stroke would inure in behalf of not only Negro Americans, but all Americans.

Thusly, the integration of the school system has reched its crisis and both sides should now resolve around conference tables upon the measures of bringing compliance into a reality. The atmosphere should be clear to all now.

The President in his address not only has driven home a logical and sane explanation, but in the firmness of his bold character, he has in no uncertain terms shown that the federal court is to be respected. But there is no mistake about this, the nation owes to their great leader loyal support in the action he took to restore order and uphold the law.

While it is inescapable that a blot has been thrust upon the nation, it cannot be said that it was without a firm leader of its choice in this unfortunate emergency, who measured up fully to the test of the occasion.

Faubus' Stand Unjustified, Untenable And Unsavory

This generation has seen another measley encounter of a small vision not well thought out, go down in inglorious eclipse in the antics of the Governor of Arkansas. B'ham World P. 6

In the first place his maneuver was not pitched on state's rights, because the supreme law plainly spells out that no state can pass laws in contradiction to the laws of the United States Constitution; and besides that, there is a living precedent laid down in history as to what a state can and cannot do.

It was not pitched on reason because Governor Faubus admitted himself that the basic underlying cause was something hidden; something he dared not reveal; something so bad that it became necessary to "keep Negro children out of school rather than enlist the full force of the State and Federal authorities to challenge any who would violently obstruct a court decision.

It had no soundness because, when the injunctive proceedings started rather than face some 200 pages of evidence carefully catalogued by the FBI, which would not sustain the truth of what he claimed that was hidden, his lawyers chose to "take a walk." World 9-25-57 B'ham, Ala

Governor Faubus was provided with an opportunity Friday to state in court his reasons for calling the guard but he refused to give it. So it is logical to conclude he had no justifiable reason. White citizens who could not scent that something of which the governor complained testified in court there was no evidence they would find to indicate violence if the Negro children entered the Little Rock High School.

The firm hand of President Eisenhower may be seen from the very first beginning.

In the first place he held on to that sanity and calm, to which all law is entitled for its atmosphere; he was never jumpy and flippant at statements when some of the hysteria order tried to blow the matter up to secession proportions. He went on with his golf at Newport, relying upon the fundamental principles upon which his position was founded. He gave the Department of Justice firm instructions to back the district court in carrying out its ruling.

The President remains the chief of the nation; the court still occupies its place as Supreme; Governor Faubus' troops have been withdrawn from the Little Rock Central High School campus and the integration ordered to go forward with Governor Faubus tied up in an injunction which forbids his interference.

The net results of Arkansas debacle reflects the powerful character, wisdom, courage and patience of the President of the United States; that a decision of a Federal District Judge cannot be circumvented nor nullified by any power of a governor of a state, and that the federal court is Supreme as long as it has the backing of the President. History will ascribe the successful routing of the Arkansas attempt at circumvention to a wise judge and a courageous President.

Disgraceful Action At Little Rock

P. 6 uncovered

The action of a mob of several hundred white persons at Little Rock, Arkansas Monday which resulted in the school officials asking the nine Negro students who had entered the high school there to leave, presents a spectacle to the nation and the world which may be considered a disgrace to put it mildly. Some of the students, adult Negro citizens and representatives of the northern press were attacked violently.

Tues. 9-24-57

We can appreciate the action by the school officials in asking the students to leave, because that was the wise course under the circumstances which apparently had not been anticipated by the local police. Of course, it was generally believed there would be some opposition to the entrance of the Negro students as a result of what Governor Faubus had done in calling out troops to bar the race children on September 3rd.

On the basis of all developments since that date, we reluctantly come to the conclusion that this roudy opposition by the mob on Monday regarding the integration at the Little Rock school was just what the segregation extremists wanted in an effort to prove that the people will not permit it.

Atlanta, Ga.

We place squarely at the door of the Arkansas governor the great share of responsibility for what has happened.

President Eisenhower has promptly issued a proclamation to all the people of Little Rock "to cease and desist" in interferring with the orderly integration of the school. This means the President will take necessary action to stop the disorder and permit the carrying out of the order of the federal court.

We deplore what has happened at Ltttle Rock, because boiled down, it is a challenge to the federal law and; of course, this challenge must be met. If a surrender is made in this case a pattern will be established for other areas. This pattern must not be permitted to prevail.

Let The Governors Face Up To This Issue

Down at Sea Island Beach the conference of Southern Governors is in session. Coming together as chief executives of Deep South and border states, there are problems in the offing in which the governors have an enviable opportunity of resolving.

Among the group, only three are Republicans and it stands to reason that the others, all Democrats meeting in a solid Democratic South, are up against a powerful responsibility.

While some have alluded that integration be kept out of discussions, we go along with Republican Governor McKeldin, of Maryland, when he says this is hardly possible.

Uncovered P. 6

We all know with the present temperature of the atmosphere that integration will not remain an outcast at this session of the governors conference; that the quarrel about Chairman Butler's reprimanding Governor Faubus of Arkansas National Guard fame will be as much discussable as the main topic for the occasion — "Can a Southerner Be Elected President?"

Tues. 9-24-57

The Governor's Conference meeting on Georgia soil has within its possibilities the exhortation of that body to take a saving face in this critical situation. The governors have at their fingers' tip already one sample of a governor attempting to come from cover in thwarting an order from a federal judge.

It is hoped that this conference will highly establish the broad principle of voluntary compliance, which is bound to come anyway. Well did Gov. Gary of Oklahoma put his finger on this.

The governors of North Carolina, Kentucky and Virginia and the governor of Arkansas himself, all intimate that integration is on its way.

Atlanta, Ga.

Georgia soil and the salt flavor from the Sea Island Beach should furnish that tempering aroma for a new conversion to a newer order in a newer South.

We conclude that if the discussion of integration is not on the agenda, it should be there in an effort for the governors to face-up and give rational counsel in this an hour of unrest; that this nation under God might exert its best influences in laying down wholesome examples just now for the benefit of the whole of our civilization.

Yes, let the governors face up and harmonize in a great cause from the high prestige of their offices.

The South has the opportunity of its entire existence!

Faubus Withdraws Troops But Pledges Fight in Courts

9 Negroes Expected At School Monday

By KEITH FULLER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus tonight ordered the National Guard troops away from Central High School a few hours after a federal court ordered him to stop interference with the school's integration plan. Constitution

But Faubus pledged to continue the battle through the courts. P/ Atlanta, Ga

The guard left at 6:25 p.m.

Faced with the injunction, Faubus said, "I will comply."

Presumably the nine Negro students who have been barred from the school by the troops since they attempted to enter Sept. 4, will attend classes Monday. Several had said they would go if guardsmen would not bar their way.

PROMISE APPEAL

The action of the governor apparently closes one chapter of the historic struggle between state and federal power but Faubus said he would exhaust all avenues of appeal to overturn the injunction.

Faubus spelled out his stand on a three-station television hookup in Little Rock at 6:30 p.m., five minutes after Lt. Col. Marion Johnson had appeared at the high school and called out the guard.

It was a dramatic climax to a swift moving chain of events which started with U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies' injunction against Faubus following a five-hour hearing during which the governor's attorneys walked out saying, "We're through."

RULED ORDER THWARTED

They had challenged the federal government's right to question Faubus' actions and then left. The hearing continued and at the end the judge ruled that Faubus had thwarted the order of the court for integration by his use of the troops and directed him to stop.

Faubus in his speech said Judge Davies "ignored the law" in refusing some of the motions made by the governor's attorneys today. He did not say specifically which ones.

He said, "I have instructed my attorneys to exhaust every legal remedy to appeal this order. However, so long as this order is in effect an duntil its certain reversal on appeal, I will comply. . ."

APPEAL FOR ORDER

The governor then said even as he talked the guards were leaving. He appealed for order and peace in Little Rock and said, "Now is the time for the utmost precaution and forebearance on the part of all persons."

He said he hoped the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would "not be so reckless as to push integration . . . until a colling off period has passed." Constitution

Faubus sai dit was his firm belief that integration in Little Rock can be successful only if it is accomplished in a peaceful manner "which means acceptance by a majority of the people."

HEARS FORCE

"To be achieved otherwise is to do untold harm to the members of both races and immeasurable harm to any community where it is forcibly accomplished."

Neither state police nor city police would comment on whether officers from their ranks would take up stations at the school Monday to see that peace prevailed.

At the court hearing today Faubus' attorneys laid down a broad legal challenge on the right of the federal government to question Faubus' action.

The governor's challenge to federal authorirty was dramatically pronounced in court today by his attorneys, who then filed out of the courtroom saying, "We're through."

The governor's position was powerfully simple: that the federal government either in this court or any other place could not question his "judgment and discretion" while acting as head of the sovereign State of Arkansas.

Later, Judge Ronald N. Davies, asked by the governor to remove himself because of his "prejudices and bias," handed down a broad injunction directing the governor and his National Guard commanders by name to desist from further interference in Little Rock's integration plan.

Attorney Tom Harper, acting for the governor, nailed down the big issue in his final remarks before walkout.

GOVERNOR'S POSITION

"May I state our position to the court. . . . That is, that the position of Gov. Faubus and his military commanders must be firmly, unequivocally, and unalterably that the governor of the State of Arkansas cannot and will not concede that the U.S. government in this court or anywhere else can question his judgment and discretion acting as the chief executive officer of the sovereign State of Arkansas in the performance of his duties, or question his acts under the constitution and laws of the state."

Thus, denying the right of the government to question the governor's actions, the four attorneys representing Faubus picked up their briefcases and filed out after the formality of asking the court's permission.

FAUBUS COMMENTS

Faubus, at the executive mansion, advised that the attorneys had walked out on the hearing, smiled and said: "Now begins the crucifixion."

He commented that since his side would not now be represented in the courtroom that "by the use of carefully selected witnesses without cross-examination the Justice Department can sustain its case."

Moments after the attorneys had left the jammed courtroom and pushed their way through a battery of reporters and newsreel crews in the corridor, U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies ordered the Justice Department attorneys to continue the hearing and called for testimony. He had earlier denied two motions by Faubus' attorneys—one that he remove himself from the hearing because of alleged bias and prejudice and the other to dismiss the injunction request entirely.

CAN DISMISS PLEA

Faubus said his attorneys would appeal the rejection of the motion to dismiss the injunction petition.

Dr. William C. Cooper, president of the Little Rock School Board, the first government witness, testified that he knew of no reason to believe that the Litle Rock integration plan would cause violence and bloodshed in this community. He said it was the Board's opinion that the "great majority of the people approve the plan."

Q. Doctor, during the years that you have lived in Little Rock have you learned of any incidents of racial violence between adult citizens of this community? A. No.

Q. Have you learned of any racial violence involving children of public schools? A. No.

Q. Have you heard of any difficulty, violence, etc., that have attended the integration of the general public on the buses of our city? A. No.

STICKS TO CONTENTION

It was Faubus' contention that he had not stationed National Guardsmen at Central High School to prevent integration as such.

He maintained that the threat of violence was his reason for action and that the troops blocked the Negro children from the school to preserve peace and order.

School Supt. Virgil Blossom, who formulated Little Rock's plan for gradual integration, testified that he had explained the plan to more than 200 groups.

In answer to a question he said that he had received no suggestions for improvements.

Asked whether he meant to imply that people in Little Rock favor integration, he replied: "They do not."

THOUGHT ACCEPTABLE

Like Cooper he said that he had received no reports of actual or threatened violence in school integration and added that he believed the plan he had devised for gradual integration over a seven year period would have been accepted by the Little Rock public.

As court resumed for the afternoon after a luncheon recess, Davies, at the request of U.S. attorneys, dismissed all but 17 of the estimated 200 witnesses who had been summoned at request of the government.

The witnesses who were not released included nine Negro students whom guards had kept from entering the high school.

Others not released were Dr. Cooper; Blossom; Central High Principal J. W. Matthews; Little Rock Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann; Police Chief Marvin Potts;

Arkansas Adj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger; Lt. Col. Marion Johnson, and George Douthit, a reporter for the Arkansas Democrat.

Mann has criticized Faubus for calling out the guard, declaring that no violence was threatened here and that local authorities were in full command of the situation.

Clinger and Johnson, in direct charge of the guard troops, were named as codefendants with Faubus in the injunction suit, and earlier today Davies declined to cancel services of summonses against them. He rejected their contention that, being on military duty, they were not subject to civil court processes.

Douthit has written several copyrighted news stories for the Democrat on the situation here.

Judge From North Dakota In Midst Of Historic Battle

Commercial Appeal p. 29
Memphis Tenn.

By SY RAMSEY
Associated Press Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 4.—Slight, crisp-spoken United States Dist. Judge Ronald Davies of Fargo, N. D., who describes his career as "humdrum," has landed in the middle of a racial battle that may have repercussions for the entire south.

Judge Davies, who stands 5 feet, 1 inch tall and once ran 100 yards in 10 seconds at the University of North Dakota, came here two weeks ago to clean up a backlog of cases in the Eastern District of Arkansas.

Judge Thomas C. Trimble retired last June and no one has been named to succeed him yet.

"I've been preety well pinned down," Judge Davies said Wednesday.

Twice in the past five days he has had to by-pass the routine logjam to rule on scheduled high school integration, an issue of such momentum that the former college sprinter has been hard-pressed to keep pace.

Casual Approach

But if Judge Davies realizes he has a tiger by the tail, he is not publicly showing it.

Tuesday night the judge heard a Little Rock School Board attorney plead fo ranother decision by the Federal court on whether it could go ahead with integration despite the presence of National Guard troops around Central High School in conflict with a previous Federal court order.

Almost casually Judge Davies disposed of the matter in a few minutes with an order to "proceed forthwith" to carry out integration.

A newsman commented later to Judge Davies that he sounded a bit testy.

"I'm afraid I sound brusque sometimes when I don't mean to," the judge said.

Actually Judge Davies gives the appearance of mildness and curosity. He also seems to have boundless energy stuffed inside his short frame.

'A Humdrum Lawyer'

"I wish I could brag about something in my career," Judge Davies said. "I guess I was a humdrum lawyer."

The 52-year-old jurist said reading and listening to folk music are practically his only hobbies. He prefers biographical and historical novels.

Judge Davies has not had a chance to listen to Arkansas folk music. He hopes to visit the Ozarks when "these trying circumstances" are over.

Judge Davies has lived in Grand Forks, N. D., most of his life. He and Mrs. Davies have five children.

A daughter will be married next week in Fargo and Judge Davies said he "surely will attend that" despite the swelling racial turmoil.

Judge Davies said he "never entertained delusions" about what he calls the myth that Arkansas are a backward hill people.

The judge added:

"I've found nothing but kindness and hospitality in Arkansas. I know these times are difficult for citizens here."

Decisions May Be History

Beyond that mild expression of brotherliness there is no comment from the bespectacled little man whose decisions in the near future may turn up in history texts—of both integrated and segregated schools.

Judge Davies comes from an area that has no Negro problem. Grand Forks, N.D., which in 1950 had a population of 26,836, including nine Negroes. North Dakota itself had a 1950 population of 608,448, including 257 Negroes.

Born in Crookston, Minn., he later moved to North Dakota and got a bachelor of art degree from the University of North Dakota in 1927.

He went to Washington for his law degree, receiving it in 1930 from Georgetown University. In the interim, apparently while attending Georgetown, he worked slightly more than a year as a policeman. Then, for three months in 1929, he was a clerk for the Senate Indian Affairs Committee.

After he got his law degree, from 1932 to 1940, he served as a police magistrate. Justice Department records do not show where.

Later he established a law firm in Grand Forks. He was appointed a Federal judge by President Eisenhower, July 27, 1955.

Faubus' Little Rock Action Brings Praise From Griffin

Commercial Appeal
Memphis Tenn.
p. 29

By International News Service

ATLANTA, Sept. 4.—Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin said Wednesday that Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus' action in calling out the National Guard troops in the school integration controversy "is exactly what I would have done in Georgia."

On the other hand, Tennessee Gov. Frank Clement took the position that a governor should not call out the guard in "anticipation of trouble."

Thurs. 9-5-57

Leaders in Southern pro-segregation states, generally, reserved comment on the action of the Arkansas Governor, which puts squarely into focus the long-smoldering controversy of Federal vs. state control of school affairs. The attitude of Southern leaders seemed to be that of waiting for clarification.

No Comment

Three Southern governors — George Bell Timmerman of South Carolina, Luther Hodges of North Carolina and Leroy Collins of Florida—had no comment on the controversial Arkansas situation.

Governor Hodges referred questioners to an earlier expression that the decision or not to integrate should be made on the local community level.

Senator James Eastland, (D., Miss.) said the "paramount obligation of the state, acting through its governor, is to preserve peace within the state," and endorsed Governor Faubus action if he was following that principle.

Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson said Governor Faubus was acting "wisely and legally" within the "prerogatives of his office."

Stand Is 'American'

Governor Griffin, who addressed a White Citizens Council at Little Rock, Ark., just prior to the planned gradual integration, earlier complimented Governor Faubus and said: "I believe his stand is sound—it is American."

On the direct Federal-vs-state controversy which arises from use of state guard troops in Arkansas to halt Federal Court-ordered integration, Governor Griffin asked:

"Who is preservator of the peace and who shall judge in that field? A governor elected by the people, or Federal judges appointed for life . . . and particularly one sent down from North Dakota."

No Disorder

Federal Dist. Judge Ronald Davies, of North Dakota, is handling the Little Rock integration case in temporary assignment.

Tennessee Governor Clement, in taking an opposite viewpoint, emphasized that he was not judging Governor Faubus' action in Arkans but expressing thoughts which would control his own course in Tennessee.

Governor Clement called out the National Guard last year after a series of riots during the integration of Clinton, Tenn., high school. The effect was that the Guardsmen kept down interference, and acted to accomplish integration which had been ordered by the Federal courts. Seven Clinton Negroes are now attending school for the second year, on an integrated basis, without disorder.

Governor Clement said as far as he knew Nashville—which begins gradual integration next week in its first grade classes—has not asked for state aid. He added, however:

"I could not act on a request from Nashville unless law and order breaks down first."

Praised Faubus

In Brookhaven, Miss., Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady, ardent foe of integration, said the current school dispute in Little Rock may determine whether the states "will become satellites of an all-powerful Federal judiciary."

He praised Governor Faubus for his action.

The New Orleans Citizens Council wired Governor Faubus:

"Should all chief executives in the Southern states take your courageous stand there would never be any racial strife in the South . . ."

Olney Steps Out

Portland Times Herald

Warren Olney's reference to the organization of a separate civil rights division in the Department of Justice in his letter of resignation as head of the Department's criminal division has caused some puzzlement. It could be interpreted as meaning that, since the responsibility of enforcing the civil rights laws (including the right-to-vote act passed by Congress last month) will be lifted out of his division, he is no longer interested in heading it. Friends of Mr. Olney insist, however, that for a long time he has been eager to return to private life and that he has chosen the present moment to resign so that the necessary readjustments can be made by new chiefs in both divisions.

P A 16

The warm praise accorded Mr. Olney by President Eisenhower and Attorney General Brownell discourage any speculation about a forced resignation. So far as can be determined, Mr. Olney's colleagues are loath to see him go and many citizens share that feeling. Any man who acts as chief prosecutor for the Government is certain to make enemies, but Mr. Olney's general performance has been highly creditable. He has found special satisfaction in upholding civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution. His management of the criminal division has been both conscientious and efficient.

Mon, 9-23-57

One case especially emphasizes Mr. Olney's devotion to the concept that the Government wins its case when justice is done. An attorney in his division had obtained an indictment on shaky evidence by alluding to nonexistent FBI informants and discouraging the appearance of the defendant before the grand jury. Corrective action was risky because the Federal employe involved had been accused of stating falsely that he had never been a Communist, and the case was caught up in the hysteria of McCarthyism. Nevertheless, Mr. Olney went personally before the court and asked that the indictment be dismissed, and then fired the attorney responsible.

Mr. Olney had previously served the State of California in admirable fashion as counsel for its Special Crime Study Commission. As he is still far from retirement age, we hope that his forthcoming departure from Washington will not mean an end of his public service.

Fighting Southern Mayor

Times Mon. 9-9-57

Woodrow Wilson Mann

New York

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 8—Woodrow Wilson Mann has had many rough battles in his short political life, but the one he has tackled now is the biggest. It is a modern version of David and Goliath—and the winner is still uncertain. When Gov. Orval E. Faubus ordered out the state militia last Monday to "preserve the peace" in Little Rock he did not consult the Mayor—Mr. Mann. Some 300 Guardsmen surrounded the all-white Central High School, with instructions to keep order by keeping the Negroes out.

P. 19-C

Man in the News

The Governor apparently did not know the nature of the man he had by-passed. For if one trait is outstanding in the Mayor, it is that of courage. Sometimes the courage may be foolhardy, the kind that gets one into trouble.

But it is certain, as the Mayor has shown in two years in office, he never runs away from a fight. He demonstrated t is again today when he announced he was prepared, if necessary, to send his entire police force of 175 men to disperse crowds on the schoolgrounds tomorrow.

Six feet one inch tall and weighing 165 pounds, the 40-year-old Mayor is considered quite a "charmer." With his reddish-black wavy hair, his blue eyes, and jaunty manner, he looks younger than he is.

The Manns have two boys, Woodrow Wilson Jr., who is 17 years old, and Rickey Burnett, 9. The older boy is attending Central High, scene of the present integration conflict. Mr. Mann was graduated from Central High in 1934.

"Would your son go to Central if Negroes are admitted?" he was asked.

Would Obey the Law

"He most certainly would," the Mayor answered quickly. "He would obey the law of the land the way the rest of us would."

The Manns live in a ranch-type house in the city. The Mayor married the former Miss Beverly Blanche Burnett in 1938. He is a member of the Shrine and is a Mason.

Associated Press

Not lacking in courage

In his college days, he recalls with a smile, he was quite a musician. He played the slide trombone in the University of Illinois band, he notes, and played in dance bands to help pay his way through the college.

Mr. Mann, who was born in Little Rock on Nov. 13, 1916, learned to know the city block by block in his boyhood. He did this while trudging the streets delivering ice for his father's business.

Mr. Mann did not major in music as he had thought he might. Instead, he took business administration at the University of Illinois.

Upon leaving college he joined an insurance company. During the war he was in the Navy, being discharged as an ensign in 1945. A year later he formed the Woodrow Mann Insurance Agency.

In 1955, Mr. Mann, now a successful insurance broker, decided to run for Mayor in an effort to recapture City Hall for the Democrats. He says he felt that much needed to be done to improve operation of the city.

He campaigned like a seasoned politician, vigorously combining hand-shaking and baby-kissing.

"I lost fifteen pounds during the race," he recalls. "I guess I shook hands with 20,000 people."

Plunges Into Battle

Soon after winning the election handily in November, Mr. Mann became involved in several controversies. He conducted feuds with the Police Department, the City Council, the school officials—or anyone else who challenged his views.

Within six months he had installed a new city bus system, tried to cancel all the city's insurance, condemned the city purchasing system, and appointed numerous investigating committees.

"I would rather do something and be wrong than not do anything at all," he said at the time.

Mr. Mann, whose term expires at the end of the year, will be the last Mayor of Little Rock. Last November the people voted to adopt the city manager type of government.

His friends call the Mayor a good mixer and a "good fellow."

"I think he's all wet on his fight with the Governor," one of them said, "but he's sure got a lot of guts. When he picks a fight he goes all the way."

Despite the heat and pressure of the dramatic struggle in which he is embroiled, Mr. Mann appears calm. He always looks well-groomed. He favors single-breasted charcoal gray suits, four-in-hand ties to match, and a large gray hat.

"I think the Governor should be stopped or we will face anarchy," the Mayor says.

"I'm a business man. Arkansas has spent considerable money to attract industry. But industry will not come to a state where Federal law is flouted."

The crux of the controversy, the Mayor believes, is the question whether the state or the Federal Government is to be the law of the land.

"As far as I'm concerned," he says with a grin, "I'd rather have Arkansas remain in the United States."

If he has his way, it will.

FAUBUS VS. UNITED STATES

The refusal of Governor Faubus to recognize the right of the Federal Government to question his decisions or his acts as Chief Executive of Arkansas, even though they may contravene the laws of the United States, is a piece of bravado that he cannot hope to sustain.

Times

P. 8C

The Governor's latest position undermines the effect of his recent conference with President Eisenhower at Newport, and it only reinforces our previous conclusion that the President has seriously erred in not showing stronger leadership throughout this controversy. Had he done so, it is difficult to believe that things would have reached their present stage. For more than two weeks the Governor in disregard of a Federal court order has maintained troops around Little Rock's Central High School, not to enforce compliance with the law but to prevent any attempt at compliance.

And now he says, through his attorneys, that he "cannot and will not concede" that the United States Government has the right to question his "judgment and discretion" as Governor, or "question his acts under the Constitution and laws of the state." Mr. Faubus seems to forget that Arkansas is still part of the United States and that he has also sworn to uphold the Federal Constitution, which we had always thought took precedence over that of any of the forty-eight states, whether its name be Arkansas or New York.

However, Governor Faubus has left a wide opening to permit him to escape the dilemma in which he has placed himself. "This is not to say," his attorney told the court, "that the respondent will not comply, until they can be set aside, with orders even though they may be made here." This is a hint that the Governor may recede now that the Federal District Judge has again decreed an end to interference with the integration process. In thus complying with orders of the court while denying that it has the right to give such orders, the Governor would avoid a situation even uglier than that already existing, while at the same time enjoying the fruits of his self-imposed martyrdom. And martyrdom he must conceive it to be, judging from his comments yesterday.

"Now begins the crucifixion," he said, adding that the result of his hearing were "a foregone conclusion."

The Governor has thus far not sustained his contention that he acted in good faith to preserve peace. He has ducked his first opportunity to prove such a claim—a claim that well-informed residents of Little Rock, including the Mayor, totally reject as without foundation. By his tactics, however, the Governor may have succeeded in stirring up all the extremist elements in North and South. With or without the effective voice of President Eisenhower, the Federal Government will prevail. Meanwhile, Governor Faubus is playing a dangerous game, and doing a disservice to his community, his state and his country.

RENDEZVOUS AT NEWPORT

Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas convinced President Eisenhower yesterday, in the words of the Presidential statement, that he intended "to respect the decisions of the United States District Court, and to give his full cooperation in carrying out his responsibilities in respect to these decisions." It is a pity he did not think of this sooner. Court decisions and orders ought not to have been regarded, as Mr. Faubus does seem to have regarded them, as matter for horse-trading between a State Governor and the President of the United States.

The Little Rock school integration case, which may be regarded as a test case for the entire South, had gone far enough to hurt us at home and abroad. It had injured our good relations with some countries who in general stand with us in the fight against the ideals and influence of communism. It had given aid and comfort to our enemies.

Governor Faubus went to Newport after neglecting one court order and still pondering a further mandamus issued by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies that he and his associates cease their "interference with and obstruction to the carrying out of the orders hitherto entered by this court in this case." Mr. Faubus went to Newport at his own suggestion. He went in what almost might be called a magnanimous mood, recognizing, as he said in his telegram to the President, "that we jointly share great responsibility under the Federal Constitution." The Arkansas of Governor Faubus is apparently back in the Union. The Arkansas of Mayor Mann of Little Rock and, we believe, of the majority of calm and law-abiding citizens in that commonwealth has never been out of the Union since 1868.

It is of little importance whether or not Governor Faubus' visit to Newport meant that "he was throwing in the sponge." In this controversy over the relative powers of the United States Supreme Court and the Government of the United States versus the State of Arkansas that verbal issue is ridiculous. The principles of the Constitution and of laws passed in accordance with the Constitution cannot be held in debate. There are questions of prudence, of public order, of psychology, but there is no question of what laws and what powers are paramount.

We may assume that this meeting between the President and the Governor has resulted in some increase of goodwill between the two men. Mr. Eisenhower is, among other things, a superb diplomat. His career as a soldier taught him the folly of using force or threats when they are not necessary. But it must be clear now that the President of the United States could not give way when the alternative to firmness was chaos.

Governor Faubus and his stanchest supporters must now realize that if they defied the law in this case for a temporary advantage, they might themselves be the losers in some future defiance of law. There are a few overgrown adolescents of various calendar ages roaring about the South and making trouble, but we must assume that most Southerners are good Americans and reasonable people.

Integration in Arkansas, much more in the deep South, will take time. Nevertheless, as the President should have made more clearly evident before Governor Faubus got out of hand, it is manifestly the meaning of our Constitution and the intent of our people that progress toward this degree of justice should be made. We cannot let ourselves be intimidated by the violent, hateful and stupid outbursts that have occurred in Little Rock and in one or two other places. We must stand by the children of all America and of all races in their desire for an education.

LATE BUT NOT TOO LATE

President Eisenhower was late, but not too late, in his appeal on Saturday to the people of Little Rock to "demonstrate that in their city and in their state proper orders of a United States court will be executed promptly and without disorder."

He was late, but not too late, in his further appeal for "a sympathetic understanding of the ordeal to which the nine Negro children who have been prevented from attending Central High School have been subjected." He was late, but not too late, in his testimony that these children "and their parents have conducted themselves with dignity and with restraint."

In situations such as this the President of the United States, whoever he may be, speaks with a voice that must be listened to. There is persuasiveness in the office he holds, and his influence runs beyond any grant of constitutional power. But he must know when conciliation is no longer useful and when firmness is necessary. The good people of Little Rock, of both races, will surely be glad to infer that the President does not mean to compromise with those who put unlawful obstacles in the way of executing the "proper orders of a United States court."

Support for this faith lies in the offer of the Little Rock School Board to enroll Negro students in accordance with the orders of Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies. It lies in the position taken by Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, who has promised to "deal firmly" with persons trying to create trouble. It lies in the courageous attitude of such spokesmen as The Arkansas Gazette, which declared editorially: "The people of Little Rock will not, we are confident, allow a tiny, militant minority to take over the Central High School and run it under mob rule."

We detect in Little Rock a law-abiding and patriotic majority that sees more danger in lawlessness than in any possible result of integration. We are convinced that this majority exists in all the border states and that ultimately its views will be harmoniously accepted by the whole South—by which we mean all states and both races, and not merely that white South which is too often spoken of as though it were all the South there was.

But this is a national, not a sectional, issue. The eyes of the whole country will be on Little Rock this week, because it is there—by chance or by conspiracy—that a question important to the whole country has to be decided.

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The statements made by the President and the Governor of Arkansas after their Newport conference moved back into perspective the issue of their official responsibilities.

Governor Faubus once again accepted the power of the Federal courts to order racial integration in the public schools, and pledged he would continue to do nothing to obstruct compliance whenever that course, in his judgment, was consonant with the maintenance of general law and order in the community. President Eisenhower reiterated his duty and intention to enforce such Federal court orders, but by a patient policy that recognized "the inescapable responsibility resting on the Governor to preserve law and order in his state."

To those citizens who evaluate the establishment of racially integrated schools, on the hour set by any Federal court, as paramount over all individual rights and sworn official obligations it may displace, the positions of the President and the Governor beg the basic question. To those who agree with both statements in fundamental law and principle, but accept as facts the contentions that the high school integration would have been peacefully accomplished, that Governor Faubus knew this, and that his only purpose in calling out the Arkansas National Guard was to prevent compliance with the Federal court order, the President's concession was unjustified and hence a retreat from a duty plainly imposed on him.

Even if and when the Governor withdraws the troops, on the assertion they are no longer required to enable him to carry out his "inescapable responsibility * * * to preserve law and order in the state," these two groups will hold to their present viewpoint. Nor will they feel that what they conceive to be the paramount law in the situation has been sustained until or unless the Federal courts find that Faubus did not act "in good faith," "transgressed the limits" of his "executive authority" and sought to make "the fiat of a state Governor, and not the Constitution * * *, the supreme law of the land."

The quotes above are from two Supreme Court decisions. (Moyer v. Peabody (1909) firmly asserted the power of a Governor to employ state troops to preserve law and order when he acts "in good faith." Sterling v. Constantin (1932) supplemented this by ruling that such acts of Governors are subject to Federal court determination whether they "transgressed the limits of executive authority"—by, for example, calling out the troops to "nullify, not to maintain * * *, the Federal court in the exercise of its jurisdiction.")

Another Body of Opinion

These two groups by which Governor Faubus is denounced and the President criticized are unquestionably large and very articulate. They may amount to a national majority. But there must be another and large section of the public that recognizes the problem of dual and differing responsibility as it was stated by the Newport conferees. There must be, and not confined to the South, a great number of thoughtful and patriotic Americans who strongly feel that an exceedingly grave constitutional and social crisis will arise if:

A Federal court sets its judgment over that of a Governor on the point whether, in this new and inflammable social situation, state troops were needed to "preserve the law and order" he is sworn to maintain. And particularly if the Federal court brands as false that reason, which Faubus has given for his action, and imputes to him instead the purpose of nullifying the Constitution as construed by the Supreme Court.

The Federal-state conflict of authority and responsibility, which is embedded in the deliberate constitutional system of checks and balances, may not come to that pass in Arkansas. But it is probable that its manifestation there is only a mild beginning of what may come in other states that were members of the Confederacy. An order issued Saturday by Federal Judge Bryan in Arlington County, Va., can lead to a calamitous showdown of state resistance—through procedures Faubus has abjured—to school integration by the Federal judicial power.

Judge Bryan ordered the integration of seven Negro children in the county schools on Sept. 23 and is expected to refuse requests for a further stay. If the ruling is sustained on appeal, and an Arlington school is integrated in conformity, the Virginia law provides that the Governor shall close that school. Governor Stanley has told friends he will go to jail rather than disobey this command of the state law. And if the controversy reaches this stage, not only will integration be sharply set back in Virginia and other states, but there is no visible marshal to take him in custody. It legal means wherewith the Legislature can be compelled by the Federal court to appropriate school funds. The Federal courts can fine the Governor—as much as $10,000 a day—as well as order a United States marshal to take him in custody. It is prospects like these, carrying the seeds of disaster to the general welfare, that justify the President's refusal to use force in a deep social and legal controversy where force can beget only force on the other side.

Faubus Says Soldiers Looked at Girls' Legs

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct 9 (U) — Gov. Orval E. Faubus complained today that three Army officers, including a major general, indiscreetly looked at the legs of shorts-clad girls on the Central High School athletic field.

He also said he could prove his charge that Federal troops enforcing integration at the school entered girls' dressing rooms.

Faubus told a news conference he had names, addresses and telephone numbers of persons who could back up his charge, but he would not disclose them for fear of possible recriminations against them.

The Governor canceled a speech because he is suffering from influenza, but he held a news conference shortly after President Eisenhower's regular weekly news conference in Washington. Among the points Faubus made were:

• The nine Negroes attending Central must be withdrawn for a "cooling off period" so tranquility can be restored.

• To Mr. Eisenhower's expression of hope for an early withdrawal of troops, Faubus said the "indication at the moment" is that the soldiers will have to stay at the school as long as the Negroes do.

At his press conference President Eisenhower said he was "very hopeful" that Federal troops could be withdrawn soon.

He also indicated he believed there would have been no violence at the school if Gov. Faubus had not called out the National Guard to block integration. He said the races were mingled elsewhere in the state without disturbances.

• He is willing to resume negotiations with the White House, which were broken off eight days ago, on the matter of withdrawing troops.

"I don't want to appear adamant or arbitrary about this thing," the Governor said. "I think the situation should be left where negotiations can be resumed. But I know of no plans or developments that would warrant a reopening of discussions with the Government."

• There still is a likelihood he will call a special session of the Arkansas Legislature to determine whether there is a constitutional way to close Central High.

• He has no definate plans to take part in a city-wide Day of Prayer Saturday for a peaceful solution of the integration crisis.

"Faith without works is dead," Faubus said. "Prayers are no good unless you are willing to work for it."

GOV. ORVAL FAUBUS

. . . a new complaint

The nine Negro students arrived as usual for classes in an Army station wagon escorted by National Guardsmen in two jeeps. An officer and five soldiers accompanied them to the door and two paratroopers escorted them inside the building.

Faubus held up a photograph of three Army officers walking through a crowd of girls in making his accusation of indiscretion. The incident took place yesterday.

The major general was Thomas L. Sherburne, commander of the 101st Airborne Division. He was accompanied by Col. William A. Kuhn, commander of the 1000 troops of the 101st stationed in Little Rock, and an unidentified aide on his first inspection of troops assigned to the high school.

With a grin, Faubus said he wondered what the Army thought about its "high command" walking through the athletic field looking at girls' bare legs. The officers were "indiscreet, to say the least," he said.

After Faubus complained Monday to Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, Federal troop commander here, that soldiers had accompanied Negro girls into dressing rooms, the White House replied that his charges were "completely untrue and completely vulgar."

Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker demanded yesterday that Faubus either prove his charges or back down.

Faubus replied today that tung.

The drought is also reported threatening wheat crops in six other provinces.

Move To Withdraw Troops Approved By Eisenhower

WASHINGTON — The decision to withdraw 500 paratroopers from Little Rock, Ark., and return 8,500 federalized National Guardsmen to the control of Gov. Orval Faubus was approved in advance by President Eisenhower, the White House disclosed Tuesday.

Presidential News Secretary James C. Hagerty said the withdrawal indicates that "we sincerely hope a solution on this can be reached and can be reached as soon as possible."

RELATIVELY CALM

The current relative calm in the the city of Little Rock and in Central High School where nine Negro students are in attendance prompted Secretary of the Army Wilber Brucker to prepare to cut in half the number of 101st Airborne soldiers stationed in Little Rock.

Seven of the Negro students attended their 15th day of classes under troop protection Tuesday. Two were reported ill with influenza.

As troop withdrawal was planned by Washington officials, a segregationist group in Little Rock was seeking court action in a Constitutional injunction test suit aimed at the removal of the federal troops. The injunction is being sought by the mother of two Central High white girls and is expected to be heard by three judges "sometime this week."

MAIN POINT

Kenneth Coffelt, attorney for the group, said the main point to be settled is whether the federal Government has the right to send troops into Arkansas without a specific request from the Governor.

LITTLE ROCK CRISIS

Arkansas Gov. Faubus, whose initial handling of integration at Central High is believed to have precipitated what is now called the "Little Rock crisis," is not satisfied with partial withdrawal of federal troops. "We are still in occupied territory," he claimed.

Faubus called out the Arkansas National Guard at the beginning of the school year to "preserve the peace" by blocking integration at Central High. The troops later were taken from under his command when President Eisenhower ordered the Guardsmen federalized and then sent paratroopers into Little Rock to disperse a mob which had prevented court-ordered integration.

Ike Aide Sees Early Removal Of Troops From Little Rock

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 10-3-57

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 2 (AP)—Presidential assistant Sherman Adams today predicted a bisis will be found soon for early withdrawal of federal troops from Little Rock and expressed "belief and hope" that armed force never will be used again in such a manner.

The top advisor to President Eisenhower, here to cement party relations with a pep talk and to study means of party financing, also told newsmen two things should be considered concerning the Little Rock trouble:

"First, the executive department did not originate the plan (for integration of the city's schools; and secondly, the administration is not responsible for the decision of the Supreme Court in this matter."

No planned "protest" movement against Adams' visit by segregationists was noted. Reports had been published that advocates of segregation would post heavy picket lines at the hotel where he spoke.

About 75 spectators were in the vicinity of the hotel entrance when Adams arrived. One carried a small furled Confederate flag.

Adams' trip here was the first into a Southern state by a high administration official since Eisenhower ordered troops to Little Rock to enforce integration.

Eleven policement were assigned to handle traffic and any crowd that might develop in the downtown section but not in any expectation of disorder, Asst. Police Chief E. E. William reported. One policeman was posted at the hotel entrance as Adams spoke inside.

MUST FORM RANKS

Adams, speaking to Republican leaders from 10 Southeastern states, warned that the GOP must "form ranks side-by-side instead of face-to-face." He said it is not "helpful to use folks on our own side for target practice."

In apparent reference to reports of growing party dissension in the South, Adams said "the time is here for Republicans and like-minded citizens to stand together, to work together, to fight as one—or it's Wisconsin all over again." The Democrats recently succeeded in getting their candidate for U.S. Senate elected in that state.

"Scratches we get from family scuffles are literally nothing compared to the gaping wound that cleaves the Democratic party in two. . ." he said.

Adams called "our opponents" leaders of "a political monstrosity that has two heads, two hearts and two souls."

Compared with "our opponents' frustration from trying to coax a steady gait from a two-headed creature with crossed eyes, crossed lags and crossed reins," he said, "our family troubles are trivial indeed."

Adams departed from his text at one place to assure his listeners that the administration "is not out to disestablish or auction off" the Tennessee Valley Authority.

After an executive session concerning party finances, Adams flew back to Washington.

Among those taking part in the money talks were Charles Thomas, Republican national finance chairman and former secretary of the navy, and finance committeemen from the 10 states.

ONE INCIDENT

Adams' visit was marked by cordiality on the part of nearly all those attending the luncheon, with but one incident marring the proceedings.

Charles B. Coleman, an attorney here and a supporter of Eisenhower in 1956, walked up to Adams just before the luncheon and told the former New Hampshire governor:

"I just wanted to say you've put me back in the Democratic party for good.

"If you had been as tough on the Commies as you were the little girls in Little Rock, none of our GI's would still be in Red prisons."

Coleman, however, walked on into the banquet room and listened to Adams' speech.

Troop Withdrawal Held In Deadlock: Tension Swelling

Next Action In Race Row Left To Ike

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 10-3-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 2 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus stood fast today on terms of a school integration compromise already firmly rejected by President Eisenhower. The governor left the next move up to the White House.

"I've given until it hurts," Faubus maintained.

Although neither the governor nor Eisenhower budged an inch, Sherman Adams, the President's top assistant, said in Chattanooga:

"In our opinion a basis will be found for an early withdrawal of federal forces from Little Rock."

Federalized National Guard troops again patroled Central High School, where tension rose again over the classroom presence of the first nine Negroes ever admitted to a white school in Little Rock.

WON'T CONTINUE

Two white pupils spoke of a plan to make school life so miserable for the six Negro girls and three boys that they won't want to continue in Central.

Two of the Negro boys were shoved about and kicked by white male pupils in the school corridors. However, the two, with their seven Negro classmates, emerged at the end of the day with no visible marks from the encounter.

The nine laughed and talked as usual when they left school. They were driven away in a military station wagon.

A court effort to rid Little Rock of federal troops was launched during the day by Mrs. Margaret Jackson, vice president of the pro-segregationist League of Central High School Mothers. She has two teen-aged daughters in the school.

In U. S. District Court here, Mrs. Jackson sought an injunction against the presence of the troops at the high school. She said they were here unconstitutionally, since neither Gov. Faubus nor the State Legislature asked Eisenhower to send them in.

INTIMIDATE, MUTILATE

She claimed the troops "did . . . intimidate, mutilate, bayonet and bludgeon private citizens."

Frank Bane, an aide to the Southern governors, flew in from Washington during the afternoon and conferred with Faubus. Neither man would reveal the nature of the discussion.

Faubus denied any double-cross of the governors in a press conference in which he also said heatedly:

"I've given until it hurts...all that double talk in Washington means is this—they want me to take troops and put bayonets in the backs of students in my state and bludgeon and bayonet my people. I never felt the necessity for this action."

Meanwhile two white students, junior boys, said they were expelled from Central High School today after a crowd of from 50 to 150 white students roughed up two Negro boys—two of the nine whose integration touched off the historic struggle.

MAKING IT MISERABLE

The white boys, who refused to give their names, said they did not hurt the Negro boys but: "We wanted to make it so miserable they wouldn't want to go to school."

Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the Arkansas National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro "kids said there was a little ruckus and school officials took care of it. They did not appear to be scared or worried."

Thurs. 10-3-57

The white boys said the attackers were aroused because the Negroes this morning bypassed the main entrance where plans had been made to block their entry. They said school books were knocked from the Negroes' hands and they were struck at by other white boys. A school official rescued the Negro boys.

The incident occurred while the Arkansas National Guard, under federal command, stood the watch at the school. A military spokesman, Lt. Col. Tom Matthews, said he had heard reports of the alleged incident but he saw no reason "why National Guardsmen, couldn't handle" problems inside the school and knew of no change to bring paratroopers back to the campus.

3 STUDENTS SUSPENDED

Supt. Virgil Blossom said, "There was some crowding, pushing, jeering and kicking of the Negro students and three white students were suspended. They (the white students) will be dealt with like any other normal disciplinary case."

Blossom mentioned two specific incidents. "I understand that two Negro boys were kicked while at their lockers on the second floor," Blossom said and added that there was some crowding and pushing on the first floor. He said that both incidents occurred just after the Negroes arrived at school.

NO PHYSICAL HARM

"There was no serious physical harm to anyone," he said.

In reply to a question, Blossom said that as far as he knew no students received medical attention.

"I feel that I would have been notified if they had received medical treatment," he said.

In reply to another question, Blossom said that he did not know of any organized attempt by white pupils to harass the Negroes. He also said that as far as he knew the three suspended pupils were the only ones who were involved in the two incidents.

"There were several other white students who were spectators," he said.

The three suspended pupils may apply to Blossom for readmission. He said that a suspension usually lasts three days to two weeks.

Blossom said in reply to a question that he had "heard a rumor of a possibility of a walkout tomorrow. I hope it is not true."

The school buzzed with reports of plans for a mass walkout tomorrow in retaliation for today's incident. Students openly told reporters there was a walkout planned for 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Mrs. Bates of the NAACP claimed tension has been mounting inside the school again. She said the Negroes had a "terrible day" yesterday.

Blossom reported attendance at the school climbed to 1,783 today. It has an enrollment of 2,000. At first it had been reported by the school that absenteeism had shot up slightly for the day but Blossom said a school employe had been in error on the figure.

The attendance, as reported by Blossom, was the highest yet since federal troops took over patrol duty at the school Sept. 24. That day attendance fell to 1,250. It has been climbing steadily since.

Faubus told reporters he would stand firm on his assurance to President Eisenhower that he would accept responsibility for peace and order in Little Rock and not personally obstruct integration ordered by a federal court.

The President had rejected the assurance on the ground it was not strong enough. He said federal troops would stay on at Little Rock.

Faubus Says Deadlock Will Hold All Year

Hot Springs, Ark. — According to Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus, only the voluntarily withdrawal of the nine Negro students in Little Rock's Central High School can break the deadlock that now exists.

Pointing out that feeling in Little Rock is still running high, Faubus stated that there are boycotts and counterboycotts around the state between Negroes and whites and that in some sections of the state, Negroes had been fired.

The governor expressed the belief that the NAACP picked Little Rock to use as an example for the rest of Arkansas and the South.

"But I'm afraid Mrs. Bates pushed too far too fast," he said.

"I have always believed, and still do, that you have to create a climate of community acceptance before integration can be successful."

Revealing that he has approached the problem from all angles, Faubus said that the Federal Government will have to keep troops guarding Central High until the end of the school year because opposition is stronger now than when the troops came in.

Little Rock Is Eased By Prayer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 13 (AP). The concerted prayers of thousands and a University of Arkansas football victory served to blunt the bitterness of the Little Rock integration struggle today.

Groups of people clustered around church entrances, hotel lobbies and the post office talked of Arkansas' important Southwest Conference win over Baylor University at Waco last night.

Churches across the state, taking a cue from Little Rock, scheduled prayer sessions this morning called for divine help in eliminating the burning social problem.

Gov. Orval Faubus said he is expecting "a contact" early this week from a Southern governors committee on another attempt to solve the integration crisis at Central High School.

Troops of the 101st Airborne Division, sent here by President Eisenhower, remain billeted in the city sharing with the federalized Arkansas National Guard the duty of protecting nine Negro students attending integrated classes.

The nine students will begin the fourth week of school at Central High tomorrow.

Faubus said he did not know what, if anything, the Southern governors committee had in mind to end the deadlock which the Arkansas governor has said can only be solved by withdrawing the Negro students from the previously all-white high school.

But he said "in my last conversation with the committee it was indicated I would be contacted" early this week.

Faubus said he is always "willing to listen to any proposals to end the present situation" but had not changed his position on yielding what he called his discretionary powers.

Clerics Pray For Ouster Of Negroes

Baptist Ministers In Arkansas Press Segregation Move

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 11 (AP) —A group of segregationist Baptist ministers invited persons of all faiths to pray tonight for the removal of nine Negro students from Central High School.

In issuing a call for the 15-minute prayer meeting to be held at the Central Baptist Church in downtown Little Rock, the 24 ministers said in a joint statement that the only solution to the city's racial crisis "is for the nine Negro children to return to Horace Mann High School where they legally and morally belong."

Horace Mann is a Negro high school which the nine attended prior to this year. They now are going to Central High classes under the protection of federal troops ordered into Little Rock by President Eisenhower.

WITHDREW GUARD

The Baptist ministers' position is akin to that of Gov. Orval Faubus, who told a news conference Wednesday he thinks the only solution to the crisis is withdrawal of the Negroes from Central High.

Faubus called out the National Guard at the opening of school, saying he did so to preserve order. He ordered the guard to prevent the nine Negroes from entering the school.

Later, Faubus withdrew the guard under federal court orders not to interfere with a court-approved plan for gradual integration. Rioting by adult white mobs followed. Eisenhower then sent in regular Army troops and state guardsmen whom he called into federal service.

OTHER SERVICES

Other prayer services will be held tomorrow under sponsorship of 85 or more churches of all faiths. Other churches throughout the state and nation will take part.

The Rt. Rev. Robert R. Brown, Eipscopal bishop of Arkansas, said of tomorrow's service:

"We are trying to emphasize that this is nonpolitical and we are not taking any position on that nature. We are simply trying to start on our knees."

Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden Jr., president of the Greater Little Rock Ministerial Assn., said most of the city's large churches will take part. He said the approximately 85 participating include 15 to 20 Negro congregations.

Asked about the avowedly segregation prayer meeting tonight, Bishop Brown said: "We're glad they're having it. We have no protest. In fact we're delighted."

The Baptist ministers sponsoring it belong to various branches of Baptist Church.

The scene at the school remained serene today, as it has been all week.

The attendance was 1,761; absentees numbered 202. The latter figure was slightly higher than yesterday's, but much below the peak of about 750 during the height of the tension.

Those absent today included one of the six Negro girls, Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the missing girl was Melba Pattillo, 15. She said the girl has the flu.

Another influenza victim is Gov. Faubus. He has remained at the executive mansion since his news conference Wednesday. Faubus canceled plans to fly to Waco, Tex., for tomorrow night's Arkansas-Baylor football game.

The relatively few white students strolling the Central High campus paid little attention when soldiers escorted five Negro girls and three boys into the building today.

A carload of teen-age white girls hooted "niggers" as they drove by the school. Reporters recognized the girl driver as one of the active anti-integrationists in the student body.

INSIDE DUTY

Stationed inside the school today were 13 paratroopers and 10 federalized guardsmen. guardsmen were on duty in two-man patrols outside the school, too.

Copies of a bit of doggerel which has been circulated around Little Rock in recent days showed up in the hands of some white students today.

The crude verse ridicules Eisenhower and the federal troops and praises Faubus. It ends: "But God help the niggers when those troops start leaving."

There was no word from Washington when that would be.

84 Arkansas Churches Pray For Divine Aid

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 12 (AP) —Prayers were raised in four-score churches here today invoking divine aid in solving this tension-torn city's racial crisis.

Thousands turned out. The day was bright and sunny, with the temperature in the mid-60s.

The 84 participating churches were of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths. More than a dozen Negro churches took part. Most of the 84 were in Little Rock; a few were in neighboring North Little Rock or elsewhere in the state.

Churchmen of all faiths had joined in arranging the prayer services. They said the purpose was to seek divine help for the preservation of law and order, the casting out of rancor and prejudice and resistance "against unthinking agitators."

6,000 TO 7,000

An unofficial estimate by the sponsors said 6,000 to 7,000 turned out in response to the sound of church bells in the clear crisp air.

A spokesman for the Roman Catholic diocese said 2,053 attended prayer services at 11 churches of that faith in Pulaski County, which surrounds Little Rock. He described that as about one-third of the aggregate membership.

But if thousands turned out, many more thousands went about their normal secular pursuits.

In the downtown business area, some establishments observed a minute of silent prayer at 11 a.m., the hour set for the services. Many stores offered their employes time off to go to church.

SHOPPERS BUSY

But a reporter who was in one of Little Rock's bigger department stores at 11 o'clock saw no one in the crowd of shoppers and sales persons who took any outward note of the time.

On the streets outside, hundreds were walking, also without taking any apparent notice.

The idea of the prayer services had been endorsed by President Eisenhower, Gov. Orval Faubus and the Little Rock School Board.

All are directly involved in the crisis growing out of the federally enforced integration of nine Negro pupils in previously all-white Central High School.

Faubus, said by aides to be suffering from influenza, did not attend any of the prayer services today. Eisenhower drove from Washington to Ft. Meade, Md., to play golf.

Members of the 101st Airborne Division, in integration duty in the city, attended their own service at nearby Camp Robinson.

The service was conducted by the division chaplain. Among those taking part was Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commander of all federal troops on integration duty in the area.

Dr. W. O. Vaught Jr., pastor of Immaneul Baptist church and former president of the Arkansas (Southern) Baptist Convention, said the service at his church was "the most genuine meeting I have ever been to in my whole life." The attendance there was estimated at 75 to 100.

Most of the city's larger Baptist churches participated in the prayer services.

Twenty-four ministers of other Baptist congregations, most of them affiliated with smaller branches of the Baptist church, sponsored another prayer meeting last night. It was avowedly segregationist.

The call for that service said the only solution to the crisis is removal of the nine Negroes from Central High. Sponsors of today's citywide services said, "We are simply trying to start on our knees."

The governor has remained at home since Wednesday morning. At a news conference then he said he thinks the only way to solve the integration crisis is to have the six Negro girls and three boys withdrawn from Central High.

TROOPS REMAIN

There has been no indication when federal troops may be withdrawn. Eisenhower expressed hope this week that the time will soon arrive.

He has maintained that the troops cannot be pulled out until there are assurances satisfactory to him that the state and local authorities will maintain order and that the integration decree of the federal courts will not be obstructed.

Faubus said last night he thinks it will be necessary to keep the federalized guardsmen at Central High at least for the remainder of the school term. He estimated that would cost U. S. taxpayers about 24 million dollars. The Army has estimated the cost at only a fraction of that amount.

Paratroopers patrolled the campus of Central High, empty of students for the weekend.

400 JEER AT SCHOOL

Crowd Gathers Near Little Rock Building—Rejected Youths Will Try Again

By BENJAMIN FINE
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 4—The state militia barred nine Negro students from the white high school here today.

Fully armed, the troops kept the Negroes from the school grounds while an angry crowd of 400 white men and women jeered, booed and shouted, "go home, niggers." Several hundred militiamen, with guns slung over their shoulders, carrying gas masks and billy clubs, surrounded the school.

The nine Negro students said that they would again attempt to enter the all-white Central High School tomorrow morning.

The troops acted under direct orders of Gov. Orval E. Faubus. In a news conference in his office, Governor Faubus said he would not permit Negroes to enter white schools in this city, despite the order from the Federal District Court. He insisted that he was not flouting the court's orders, but acting to preserve peace and to prevent bloodshed.

Judge Orders Study

The open defiance of a Federal Court order by the Governor is the first time that the issue of Federal versus state authority has been reached on the integration problem.

Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies acted as soon as he learned that his order to integrate the school had been flouted. He asked the Assistant United States District Attorney, Osro Cobb, to study the case. He also met with R. Beal Kidd, United States marshal, to discuss the situation.

The judge asked Mr. Cobb to make an immediate study.

"You are requested to begin at once a full, thorough and complete investigation," Judge Davies said, "to determine the responsibility for interference with the integration order, or responsibility for failure to comply with the order of the court, and to report your findings to me with the least practicable delay."

Day Begins Quietly

Schools opened here yesterday. The school board, when informed that troops would surround the school, had asked the Negro students not to enter. They did not attempt to enter. However, when Judge Davies last night ordered the board to integrate the school the students were told they could come this morning.

The day began quietly. At 6 A. M. only a handful of men and women had gathered in front of the school. About 100 troops were on duty. Many sat at the edge of the sidewalk; some sprawled on the hard cement, their rifles lying beside them.

"It looks kinda quiet," a guardsman said.

"I sure hope it stays that way," another said.

"Just think," one of them said, "we're making history."

"Not me," his khaki-clad companion retorted. "I'd rather go fishing than make history in this hot sun."

Times

Slowly the crowd gathered. By 8 o'clock about 100 men and women were standing quietly across the street from the school. They seemed to be in a jovial mood.

P. 20-C

"We sure kept the niggers out," one said. "They won't dare show their faces here."

Slowly the crowd grew until 400 were standing in front of the school. The sun now shown brightly. It would be another hot day.

'Here They Come'

Suddenly a cry came from one end of the street. "A nigger, they're coming, here they come."

A frightened 15-year-old Negro girl had sought admission to the school. The troops barred her way and now she had to go through the blocked-off street to the other exit, some 100 yards.

As the girl walked slowly toward the exit, the crowd surrounded her, jeered and yelled. From time to time several troops used their clubs to push the crowd back to prevent anyone from molesting her.

"Don't let her in, go back where you came from," the crowd yelled.

A 15-year-old high school student tried to reach the frightened girl. The troops prevented the Negro girl from being harmed.

A 15-year-old Negro boy, Terrence Roberts, advanced to the school ground. This time the guards formed a human fence and did not let him pass.

"Keep away from our school, you burr head," someone shouted.

The boy had a shiney new yellow pencil over his left ear and he wore an open sports shirt.

He told the guards:

"I was told if there is any resistance and if I'm not permitted to go in not to try to force my way."

"Are you scared?" a reporter asked.

"Yes, I am," he answered. Then he said:

"I think the students would like me okay once I got in and they got to know me."

Says He Had A Average

He said he had attended the all-Negro Horace Mann high school where he has an A average.

"I guess they're not going to let me through," he said, as the militiamen continued to block his path.

The Negro girl who had come earlier, sat on a bus bench. She seemed in a state of shock. A white woman, Mrs. Grace Lorch, walked over to comfort her.

A JEERING STUDENT follows Elizabeth Echford as she walks down a line of National Guardsmen who barred her from entering the Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

"What are you doing, you nigger lover," Mrs. Lorch was asked. "You stay away from that girl."

"She's scared," Mrs. Lorch said. "She's just a little girl." She appeale dto the men and women around her.

"Why don't you calm down?" she asked. "I'm with you. Six months from now you'll be ashamed at what you're doing."

"Go home, you're just one of them," Mrs. Lorch was told.

She escorted the Negro student to the other side of the street, but the crowd followed.

"Won't somebody please call a taxi?" she pleaded. She was met with hoot calls and jeers.

Finally, after being joustled by the crowd, she worked her way to the street corner, and the two boarded a bus.

Seven other Negro students tried to get into the school. They came together, accompanied by four white ministers. Dunbar Ogden, president of the greater Little Rock Ministerial Association acted as spokesman for the group.

"Sorry, we cannot admit Negro students," the officers of the militia told them.

The crowd began to disperse slowly. Many of the students who had waited outside the school building to see whether the Negroes would enter, statrted to go into school. They had said if the Negroes went in they would go out.

At his interview Governor Faubus said that the troops, under the direction of Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, had been instructed to keep Negroes out of the white school. He did this, the Governor said, to preserve order and prevent violence. He did not consider himself in contempt of court.

The guards will remain on duty until all danger of violence has ended, he said. Just how long that would be could not be determined, he added.

Governor Faubus belittled the prospect of a state-Federal conflict over authority.

"I'm not defying the Federal court order," he insisted. "I'm merely carrying out my obligation to preserve the peace."

Integration can take place in Little Rock, he said, when and if a majority of the people want mixed classes. He said he was seeking "the most peace for the most people."

Governor Faubus said that his order to keep Negroes out was based on the situation as it now existed.

Two truck loads of National Guardsmen surrounded the Governor's Mansion late this afternoon. The immediate reason for this move was not apparent. The Governor was not available for comment.

The "77 Fabulous Fall Days" Are Near

Every year at this season the Good Neighbor Committee of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce promotes what have become known as the "77 Fabulous Fall Days." It's a series of cultural events, shows, games and other activities for the entertainment and edification of visitors and native citizenry alike. News

This year the "77 Fabulous Fall Days" start with the Alabama State Fair at the Fairgrounds, Sept. 30 through Oct. 5, and wind up with the Birmingham Symphony Christmas Concert on Dec. 17, at which the guest artist will be The Birmingham News audition winner. All together over the period there will be four college football games, six fine musical concerts, ballet, opera, basketball, the State Fair, a dog show and other events. Besides these attractions, there are Vulcan, the Birmingham Zoo, and Arlington, which are open every day.

The committee furnishes a little pamphlet, widely distributed over the state, listing the major activities, and visitors are invited to call at the Chamber of Commerce for a Vulcan Tour Map for a tour of the town in their own automobiles. Local people might well take a look at the listing and tour map so they can tell their friends elsewhere more about what's happening and what there is to see and do in Birmingham. Many of our own people indeed might be pleasantly surprised to learn what a lively and interesting program of events there is coming up in the Autumn weeks ahead. Sun. 9-22-57

In our busy modern lives, many things compete for our leisure time and attention—television, books, magazines, papers, hobbies, social functions in homes. But there's nothing like going to some living, sparkling affair—a big game, a good concert. Birmingham will have plenty to offer during the "77 Fabulous Fall Days." Take in some of the events—as many as you can. You'll likely find yourself richly rewarded.

What The Constitution Means

Without A Test Case In The Courts, There Is No Way Of Finding Out

BY DAVID LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON

HOW MANY PERSONS who have been reading lately about the legal troubles in Arkansas know that, without a test case in the courts, there is actually no way of finding out what the Constitution means? How many know that every citizen has an inherent right to dispute a court ruling and that this does not necessarily mean "defiance" but an orderly attempt to establish what the "law of the land" really is? News

Yet, judging from the harsh criticisms hurled at the governor of Arkansas, there is a popular belief that the federal government exercises some sort of dictatorship and that anyone who challenges its action in the normal course is guilty of "insurrection." P. 10

No ruling as to what is or is not constitutional has ever been rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States at any time except when the workings of a particular statute of Congress or of a state law have been disputed in court proceeding. There is no such thing as an advisory opinion in advance by the Supreme Court of the United States. Somebody in the first instance has had to disregard the application of the statute or the decision of a lower court so as to bring about the issuance of an injuction decree and the making of a case that the highest court could receive for decision. Whenever the Supreme Court refuses to review a case, the lower court ruling stands.

'All Persons In The Public Service Are Exempt . . .'

AGAIN AND AGAIN the Supreme Court has ruled that neither a governor nor the commander of state troops can be arrested nor intefered with by a court order when discharging normal duties and when there is no criminal charge of a personal nature involved. The Supreme Court of the United States once said:

"All persons in the public service are exempt, as a matter of public policy, from arrest upon civil process while thus engaged." Birmingham

So the Arkansas case today raises some novel questions and the only way to resolve them is by court proceedings. The governor has promptly complied with the lower court's decree and has filed an appeal to a higher federal court. The attorneys for Gov. Faubus were well within their rights in refusing to remain in the courroom last Friday after they had forthrightly stated the issue. They declared, as attorneys for the governor, that Gov. Faubus and his military officers "cannot and will not concede that the United States government in this court or anywhere else can question his (the governor's) judgment and discretion acting as chief executive officer of the sovereign state of Arkansas in the performance of his duties, or question his acts under the Constitution and laws of the state."

No Violence In Little Rock?

Unfortunately for the American people this very case may never be decided either way by the highest court. It is the habit of the Supreme Court to avoid making any rulings on constitutional questions whenever it can refrain from doing so. The probabilities are that the highest court will dismiss the appeal as "moot" because the withdrawal of the National Guard will have removed the issue from the actual to the academic. Some other case involving a suit against the federal government by a citizen for damages incurred might possibly force a decision on the constitutional question.

It is too bad that the American people may never know—and that the governors of all states may never learn from this episode—just where a state's obligation to preserve order and prevent bloodshed within its borders begins and ends. Certainly one passage in the ruling by Judge Davies in Federal Court last Friday in Little Rock will stand for many years as a classic example of the absurdity of legalisms. He wrote:

"It is equally demonstrable from the testimony here today that there would have been no violence in carrying out the plan of integration, and that there has been no violence."

Plainly There Was No Violence, But . . .

PLAINLY THERE was no violence. But is this proof there would have been none without the presence of troops Monday? Why, it may be asked, did the mayor of Little Rock—after the state troops were withdrawn on Friday—order the city police, armed with riot guns and tear gas, to surround the school on the following? How can any judge fathom the minds of the youths inside the school or of the tens of thousands of citizens—in an area where race friction has been engendered—and say flatly it is "demonstrable" that "there would have been no violence?"

It may be that the infectious spirit of sociological research which the Supreme Court of the United States lately has been exhibiting in its decisions is reaching down now to the lower court judges in the federal system. Maybe federal judges who hitherto have been concerned only with the "intent of the law" now will feel themselves to be expert psychiatrists—able to define and determine beforehand "the intent of the human mind" in a strife-torn community.—©

Southern editorial reaction to Arkansas strife varied

By the Associated Press

ONE SOUTHERN NEWSPAPER said today that "This is the gravest hour in the nation's domestic affairs" in a generation, in commenting editorially on President Eisenhower's proclamation clearing the way for possible use of federal troops to prevent further violence at Little Rock.

Two other papers published editorials blaming U. S. Supreme Court integration decisions for the disorders in the South since the start of this school year.

P. 27

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION said that "Under his oath to uphold the Constitution . . . the president had no choice but to take the action he did.

News

"This is the gravest hour in the nation's domestic affairs which this generation has known," the Constitution continued. "Our country and its integrity under the law must come first. If law and order are not superior to lawlessness and defiance, then anarchy replaces government.

"But, every American of sentitive heart and mind will pray that order may be restored and maintained without resort to troops.

"Not since 1914 when Woodrow Wilson issued such a proclamation and found it necessary to send troops into an Arkansas mine dispute, has such a document been issued.

"There has yet time for reason to prevail in Little Rock. The president earnestly hopes troops will not be needed. But, he also wishes the people to understand that law must be supreme.

"We join millions of Americans in the prayer that the available troops never will be needed in Arkansas—or any other state."

THE RICHMOND TIMES-DISPATCH said in part:

"We are now confronted with a situation in Little Rock which calls for the utmost in wisdom, forbearance and statesmanship.

"Over the long pull, the nation is looking to the Appellate Federal Court to decide the far-reaching question whether the governor of a state has the right to use his judgment and call out the Guard, if he thinks internal peace is threatened.

"Meanwhile the inexcusable brutalities of which white mobs have been guilty in Little Rock, the dynamiting in Nashville, and similar disorders have given the South some of the worst global publicity it has ever had.

"Let us remember that these things never would have happened if nine justices had not consulted sociologists and psychologists, instead of lawyers, in 1954, and attempted to legislate through judicial decrees."

THE BIRMINGHAM POST-HERALD said in part:

"What the country witnessed in front of Central High School at Little Rock yesterday was a frightening demonstration of determined resistance that is deep-rooted and widespread throughout the South.

Birmingham

"What happened in Little Rock will happen elsewhere when pressure is applied and force resorted. . . .

"Definite progress was being made until the Supreme Court stepped in. It was slow to be sure, but it was far better than what we have seen since and, with political considerations shoved into the background, it could be resumed."

THE COLUMBIA STATE (South Carolina) said in part:

"Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann of Little Rock talked 'awfully big' when the responsibility for law and order was not his, but was on the shoulders of Gov. Faubus. But when the tables turned, and Mayor Mann had to face-up the responsibility of violence, what did he do? Did he just let things take their course, as he would have had Gov. Faubus do? He did not. He began to holler for help. . . . There were officers on hand to do exactly the thing Faubus has used troops to do—to try to avoid violence.

"We doubt that he will (apologize to Faubus) but the public knows that Mann looks pretty weak. . . . Suppose Mann had not had police officers on hand yesterday?"

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN commented:

"We do not think President Eisenhower can be charged with failure to cooperate with Gov. Faubus. On the other hand, it becomes quite clear that cooperation with the president was not one of the governor's intentions."

THE CHATTANOOGA NEWS-FREE PRESS said the use "of a federal army of occupation as suggested by President Eisenhower is highly dangerous in concept and could establish a precedent that could destroy this nation.

"Dictatorship never rides into power on Spring winds, but on the whirlwinds of emergencies. Hitler rose from the ashes of the Reichstag fire. Lenin's Communist dictatorship was born in the flames and turmoil of World War I and the deposition of the czarist government by non-Communist forces . . .

"Federal withdrawal, not new federal intervention, is the way to restore peace in Arkansas."

THE CHATTANOOGA TIMES said the president's proclamation, "if ignored in Little Rock, could lead to the use of federal troops. But it is Little Rock's duty to solve this crisis. No Southern city can surrender to a mob."

News, 9-27-57

THE NASHVILLE Banner:

"The avowed readiness of President Eisenhower to send federal troops into Arkansas—and there, in effect, to take over the law enforcement of a state, unasked—is an incredible departure from the dictates of reason, prudence and precedent."

THE ARKANSAS GAZETTE, Little Rock, said Tuesday morning:

We can hope that we may yet escape the tragic spectacle of federal soldiers deployed on the streets of Little Rock for the first time since the post-Civil War period of Reconstruction.

The decision is up to the members of the riotous mob which assembled yesterday at Central High School and finally passed beyond the control of the local police—who did their duty and did it well.

If these reckless men force the issue again this morning, the federal troops will march—as they must march to restore order and end the intolerable situation in which the city now finds itself.

THE ARKANSAS DEMOCRAT, Little Rock, [illegible] day afternoon:

It (the school trou[illegible] day) was a tragic fu[illegible] challenge to law and order which no government would dare ignore. For without law and order, we can have no peace, no security, no life worth the living.

And we can have law and order only when we obey a law we dislike as well as the ones we approve, unless and until we can get the law that irritates us modified or repealed. For this, legal processes exist.

Think of the dark vista opened by defiance of a law or court ruling. If one community can get away with this, another community can. . . . That road leads to anarchy and disaster. . .

Few of them (persons not in the crowd at the school) want integration. Many feel as strongly against it as members of that throng about the high school do. But they know that violence is not the way out.

Army To Cut Little Rock Troop Force

Brucker Announces Plans To Relieve Half Of Regulars

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 (AP)—Secretary of the Army Brucker today announced plans to cut in half the number of regular Army paratroopers at Little Rock Central High School. He also said the Army will dismiss from federal control the bulk of Arkansas National Guardsmen who were federalized Sept. 24.

President Eisenhower ordered the Army to take control at Little Rock to enforce a court order for admittance of Negro pupils to the high school. At the same time he ordered the Arkansas National Guard into federal service.

Within hours, 500 men of the 327th Battle Group of the 101st Airborne Division had landed there. A second contingent of about 500 followed.

TROOP REDUCTION

The airborne troopers were later reinforced with a transportation unit from Camp Chaffee, also in Arkansas.

Brucker said the reduction in federal troop strength in Arkansas will start immediately and will return about 500 of the 1,000 members of the 101st Airborne Division to their regular post at Ft. Campbell, Ky.

The Army said that only 1,800 Arkansas National Guardmen will be retained on federal duty and that the remaining 8,500 members of the Guard will be released.

Brucker said also that Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, commander of the federal force organized to enforce court integration orders at the high school, has been ordered to use the 153rd Regiment of the Arkansas National Guard as "the major operational force" to carry out his mission.

TO USE GUARD

Brucker said the decision to reduce the number of federal troops and guardsmen on duty was "in recognition of the generally orderly situation" which has prevailed in Little Rock since the National Guard of that state was federalized and the airborne troopers were sent to Little Rock Sept. 24.

The Army said the Arkansas guardsmen to be kept in federal service will be selected on an individual basis from the entire membership of the Army and Air Force Guard of the state.

The Army said the exact time the troops will leave Little Rock will be determined later and will depend on how soon the Air Force provides transports to fly them back to Kentucky.

Meanwhile, at Little Rock, Gov. Orval Faubus today announced that he expects to call a special session of the Arkansas Legislature for the purpose of seeking a solution to the racial integration crisis at Little Rock Central High School.

NOT CERTAIN

However, after making the statement at a press conference, satemtnt at a press conference, the governor later said that any session would not be called "for at least three weeks," and still was not an absolute certainty.

"Are we any closer to a special session," he was asked at the news conference.

"Yes, I would say that we are closer because of the passage of time," the governor replied.

Only seven Negroes went to classes at Central High, where U.S. Army and National Guard troops have been on guard to enforce court-ordered racial integration since Sept. 24.

Of the nine Negroes originally integrated in the previously all-white school, two were reported ill with influenza by L. C. Bates, Negro newspaper publisher. Overall attendance remained at a steady level with 1,725 present out of an enrollment of 1,963.

Bates, whose wife is president of the Arkansas conference of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, remarked that he was concerned because the general atmosphere is "too calm."

He revealed that he now has an armed guard at his house every night.

Suit To Halt Troop Use Thrown Out

Arkansas Attorney Calls For Congress To Impeach Judge

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 17 (AP)—A lawsuit seeking to stop United States troops from enforcing integration at Central High School was thrown out today by U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies.

The Fargo, N.D., judge's action brought a rebuke from Gov. Orval Faubus who last month called Davies "prejudiced and biased" in the integration dispute.

The attorney who filed the suit in U.S. District Court released a blistering condemnation of the action and said the judge's "impeachment" should "be the first order of business of the next Congress."

Faubus said the judge's action in dismissing the suit was in keeping with his Davies—former methods, but is more far-reaching than anything he has done in the past."

The suit asked for appointment of a special three-judge court and a ruling for Mrs. Margaret Jackson and her two teen-aged daughters that federal troops were being used unconstitutionally in enforcing court-ordered integration at Little Rock eCntal High School. An injunction against the use of the troops was asked.

If a three-member court had been named, it would have been appointed by Judge Archibald K. Gardner, chief judge of the 8th U.S. Court of Appeals, which includes Akansas.

Yesterday Judge Gardner said at Huron, S.D., that he had just received a copy of the suit, but indiated that he planned to name the special court later.

Today the U.S. district clerk's office here received a copy of Judge Davies' order dismissing the Jackson suit on grounds that it raised "no substantial constitutional issue."

Attorney Kenneth Coffelt issued this statement: "Judge Davies' action in dismissing the Jackson case without notice to anyone and without a hearing and while the chief judge of the Court of Appeals was in the process of naming a three-judge court to hear and decide the case . . . is ample grounds for his impeachment, and this should be the first order of business of the next Congress."

Coffelt said he would appeal the dismissal order to the Court of Appeals.

Davies came here in August to temporarily fill a vacancy, and before returning to Fargo on Oct. 1 he ruled on several phases of the integration situation. He ordered the Little Rock School Board to go ahead immediately with a previously approved plan for gradual racial integration. And he issued an injunction against Faubus enjoining him from further interference with integration at Central High, where Arkansas National Guards troops had kept nine Negro students from enrolling.

Faubus withdrew the guard—although he was not required under the court order to do so—and rioting erupted outside the school when the Negroes entered. On Sept. 24 federal troops were sent to Little Rock and the National Guard was federalized. The soldiers have since protected the Negroes in their attendance at the school.

When Davies left here he said he would retain jurisdiction of integration matters. The Jackson suit was filed the day after his departure.

A meeting of a committee of 25 businessmen seeking a solution to the racial controversy was called off this afternoon a few hours before it was to have been held.

Little Rock Troops Halved

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 16 (AP)—The Army today cut in half the number of paratroopers stationed here to enforce court-ordered integration at Little Rock Central High School and sent 500 troopers back to their home base by plane and truck.

Eight C123 troop carrier planes, each carrying about 40 men of the 101st Airborne Dvision, took off from nearby Little Rock Air Force Base for Ft. Campbell, Ky. Other men made the trip in motor vehciles.

Secretary of the Army Wilber Brucker had ordered the reduction Monday "in recognition of the generally orderly situation."

Seven Negro children attended integrated classes without incident.

There were no new efforts to seek a solution of the six-week-old racial dispute, although Gov. Orval Faubus said that he had been in contact with a "representative" of four Southern governors who tried to effect a compromise between Faubus and President Eisenhower two weeks ago. He said the unidentified "representative" was only checking to see if anything had developed.

Two Negro children who have been absent with influenza this week indicated that they plan to return to Central tomorrow or Friday.

Brucker has ordered 8,500 Arkansas Guadsmen defederalized—with some 1,800 to remain on duty. However, no guardsmen have been released.

Little Rock Central attendance was at 1,724 with 239 absent. School officials attributed some of the absenses to influenza.

A spokesman in the office of Supt. Virgil Blossom said that all but eight of the 65 white students who were suspended for walking out in a protest demonstration against Negroes in the school last guardsmen paced in front of the huge buff brick building. An army spokesman said that there had been no reduction in the number of paratroopers who have been patrolling the halls.

Blossom, was the highest yet since federal troops took over patrol duty at the school Sept. 24. That day attendance fell to 1,250. It has been climbing steadily since.

Faubus told reporters he would stand firm on his assurance to President Eisenhower that he would accept responsibility for peace and order in Little Rock and not personally obstruct integration ordered by a federal court. The President had rejected the assurance on the ground it was not strong enough. He said federal troops would stay on at Little Rock.

Ike Aide Sees Early Removal Of Troops From Little Rock

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Times 10-3-57

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 2 (AP)—Presidential assistant Sherman Adams predicted today a basis will be found soon for early withdrawal of federal troops from Little Rock and expressed "belief and hope" that armed force never will be used again in such a manner.

The top advisor to President Eisenhower, here to cement party relations with a pep talk and to study means of party financing, also told newsmen two things should be considered concerning the Little Rock trouble:

"First, the executive department did not originate the plan (for integratios of the city's schools) and secondly, the administration is not responsible for the decision of the Supreme Court in this matter."

No planned "protest" movement against Adams' visit by segregationists was noted. Reports had been published that advocates of segregation would post heavy picket lines at the hotel where he spoke.

About 75 spectators were in the vicinity of the hotel entrance when Adams arrived. One carried a small furled Confederate flag.

Adams' trip here was the first into a Southern state by a high administration official since Eisenhower ordered troops to Little Rock to enforce integration.

Eleven policemen were assigned to handle traffic and any crowd that might develop in the downtown section but not in any expectation of disorder, Asst. Police Chief E. E. William reported. One policeman was posted at the hotel entrance as Adams spoke inside.

MUST FORM RANKS

Adams, speaking to Republican leaders from 10 Southeastern states, warned that the GOP must "form ranks side-by-side instead of face-to-face." He said it is not "helpful to use folks on our own side for target practice."

In apparent reference to reports of growing party dissension in the South, Adams said "the time is here for Republicans and like minded citizens to stand together to work together, to fight as one—or it's Wisconsin all over again." The Democrats recently succeeded in getting their candidate for U.S Senate elected in that state.

"Scratches we get from family scuffles are literally nothing compared to the gaping wound that cleaves the Democratic party in two. . ." he said.

Adams called "our opponents" leaders of "a political monstrosity that has two heads, two hearts and two souls."

Compared with "our opponents' frustration from trying to coax a steady gait from a two-headed creature with crossed eyes, crossed lags and crossed reins." he said "our family troubles are trivial indeed."

Adams departed from his text at one place to assure his listeners that the administration "is not out to disestablish or auction off" the Tennessee Valley Authority.

After an executive session concerning party finances, Adams flew back to Washington.

Among those taking part in the money talks were Charles Thomas, Republican national finance chairman and former secretary of the navy, and finance committeemen from the 10 states.

ONE INCIDENT

Adams' visit was marked by cordiality on the part of nearly all those attending the luncheon, with but one incident marring the proceedings.

Charles B. Coleman, an attorney here and a supporter of Eisenhower in 1956, walked up to Adams just before the luncheon and told the former New Hampshire governor:

"I just wanted to say you've put me back in the Democratic party for good.

"If you had been as tough on the Commies as you were the little girls in Little Rock, none of our GI's would still be in Red prisons."

Coleman, however, walked on into the banquet room and listened to Adams' speech.

Pullout Of Troops Held In Deadlock: Tension Swelling

GUARD COSTS $95,000 DAY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2 (AP)—The Army estimated today it costs $95,000 a day to maintain the federalized National Guard in Arkansas.

Secretary of the Army Brucker gave the estimate in a statement saying that "these federal funds are being paid to the citizen soldiers of Arkansas in order to carry out the presidential order inforcing the order of the U.S. District Court to prevent the willful obstruction of law by mob violence."

The Army statement included no cost figures for the 1,100 men of the 101st Airborne Division flown to Little Rock last week.

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Times 10-3-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 2 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus stood fast today on terms of a school integration compromise already firmly rejected by President Eisenhower. The governor left the next move up to the White House.

"I've given until it hurts," Faubus maintained.

Although neither the governor nor Eisenhower budged an inch, Sherman Adams, the President's top assistant, said in Chattanooga:

"In our opinion a basis will be found for an early withdrawal of federal forces from Little Rock."

Federalized National Guard troops again patroled Central High School, where tension rose again over the classroom presence of the first nine Negroes ever admitted to a white school in Little Rock.

WON'T CONTINUE

Two white pupils spoke of a plan to make school life so miserable for the six Negro girls and three boys that they won't want to continue in Central.

Two of the Negro boys were shoved about and kicked by white male pupils in the school corridors. However, the two, with their seven Negro classmates, emerged at the end of the day with no visible marks from the encounter.

The nine laughed and talked as usual when they left school. They were driven away in a military station wagon.

A court effort to rid Little Rock of federal troops was launched during the day by Mrs. Margaret Jackson, vice president of the pro-segregationist League of Central High School Mothers. She has two teen-aged daughters in the school.

In U. S. District Court here, Mrs. Jackson sought an injunction against the presence of the troops at the high school. She said they were here unconstitutionally, since neither Gov. Faubus nor the State Legislature asked Eisenhower to send them in.

INTIMIDATE, MUTILATE

She claimed the troops "did . . . intimidate, mutilate, bayonet and bludgeon private citizens."

Frank Bane, an aide to the Southern governors, flew in from Washington during the afternoon and conferred with Faubus. Neither man would reveal the nature of the discussion.

Faubus denied any double-cross of the governors in a press conference in which he also said heatedly:

"I've given until it hurts...all that double talk in Washington means is this—they want me to take troops and put bayonets in the backs of students in my state and bludgeon and bayonet my people. I never felt the necessity for this action."

Meanwhile two white students, junior boys, said they were expelled from Central High School today after a crowd of from 50 to 150 white students roughed up two Negro boys—two of the nine whose integration touched off the historic struggle.

MAKING IT MISERABLE

The white boys, who refused to give their names, said they did not hurt the Negro boys but: "We wanted to make it so miserable they wouldn't want to go to school."

Times 10-3-57

Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the Arkansas National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro "kids said there was a little ruckus and school officials took care of it. They did not appear to be scared or worried."

The white boys said the attackers were aroused because the Negroes this morning bypassed the main entrance where plans had been made to block their entry. They said school books were knocked from the Negroes' hands and they were struck at by other white boys. A school official rescued the Negro boys.

The incident occurred while the Arkansas National Guard, under federal command, stood the watch at the school. A military spokesman, Lt. Col. Tom Matthews, said he had heard reports of the alleged incident but he saw no reason "why National Guardsmen couldn't handle" problems inside the school and knew of no change to bring paratroopers back to the campus.

3 STUDENTS SUSPENDED

Supt. Virgil Blossom said, "There was some crowding, pushing, jeering and kicking of the Negro students and three white students were suspended. They (the white students) will be dealt with like any other normal disciplinary case."

Blossom mentioned two specific incidents. "I understand that two Negro boys were kicked while at their lockers on the second floor," Blossom said and added that there was some crowding and pushing on the first floor. He said that both incidents occurred just after the Negroes arrived at school.

NO PHYSICAL HARM

"There was no serious physical harm to anyone," he said.

In reply to a question, Blossom said that as far as he knew no students received medical attention.

"I feel that I would have been notified if they had received medical treatment," he said.

In reply to another question, Blossom said that he did not know of any organized attempt by white pupils to harass the Negroes. He also said that as far as he knew the three suspended pupils were the only ones who were involved in the two incidents.

"There were several other white students who were spectators," he said.

The three suspended pupils may apply to Blossom for readmission. He said that a suspension usually lasts three days.

Blossom said in reply to a question that he had "heard a rumor of a possibility of a walkout today. It is not true."

It has an enrollment of 2,000. At first it had been reported by the school that absenteeism had shot up slightly for the day but Blossom said a school employe had been in error on the figure.

The attendance, as reported by Mrs. Bates of the NAACP, claimed tension has been mounting inside the school again. She said the Negroes had a "terrible day" yesterday.

Blossom reported attendance at the school climbed to 1,783 today. At morrow. I hope it is not true. The school buzzed with reports of plans for a mass walkout tomorrow in retaliation for today's incident. Students openly told reporters there was planned for 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Soldiers Oust Group Burning Straw Dummy

Faubus Bars Any 'Unconditional Surrenders'

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 3 — It looked like a small football rally until you got close enough to see that the straw-filled dummy hanging from a tree was supposed to be a Negro, not the other team.

Then a solid line of National Guardsmen with rifles at high port moved across the lawn and swept the group of yelling teen-agers down the block and out of sight.

This was the much ballyhooed student walkout at Central High School, organized as a protest against the presence of eight Negro students inside.

As a show of strength it was a tremendous flop. Fewer than 50 of the 1651 present today walked out. Some were children of fiercely anti-integration parents whose weekend campaign for a school boycott also flopped.

The kids defiantly went to their home rooms for attendance check and then ran out as the 9 a. m. bell rang for the first class. They gathered on the sidewalk across Park ave. from the school with other students who had not bothered to go in and some adults who had come to watch.

A girl shrieked: "Come on, you chickens" to those still in school and others took up the cry. No one else came.

Wants Dumb Nephew

Jean Lawson, fortyish, proudly announced that her nephew had walked out. "He can stay home and be dumb like me," she said. Another woman said, "I wish everyone would walk out and leave those niggers all alone."

Suddenly a dummy dressed in dungarees and orange football shirt and with a black topknot was hanging from a limb of a tree on the lawn of a house directly across from the school entrance.

A boy intight blue jeans kicked it and set it swinging like a punching bag. Others kicked and punched it with their fists.

Larry Larue, 17-year-old senior, leaped up over a wall from the sidewalk and plunged a knife into its middle. Others set fire to the arms and legs.

As the straw started to blaze, Jim Eison, another senior, said: "Oh, if that was only a real one."

Lt. Col. Ernest Bowden, commanding the National Guard unit patrolling the school gave orders to clear the group out.

Guardsmen marched elbow to elbow across the lawn and ordered them around the corner and a block away from school. They did such an efficient job that four reporters telephoning stories from portable sidewalk booths were swept along in mid-sentence.

Jibes From the Crowd

Guardsmen cut down the effigy and Larue hurled it, still burning, onto the sidewalk in front of the school.

"Nigger lovers," shouted a boy at the Arkansas guardsmen. "I wonder why they don't put on their bayonets," sneered a woman as the crowd walked down the street.

"It failed," sighed a girl," as though the team had just lost the homecoming game.

"Let's all go down to the livestock show and buy confederate hats," said a boy. The group drifted off about 9:30 a. m. The price of their spree will be a conference with the formidable schol superintendent, Virgil T. Blossom, and such suspension or other discipline as he thinks suitable.

Soldiers seized eVrnon H. Duncan, 47, near the school and turned him over to Little Rock Police on a charge of disturbing the peace. Duncan protested that he was "on private property" and keeping quiet.

"You're making a mistake," he told a soldier. "I'm standing on my constitutional rights. You're not going to push a southern gentleman."

Soldiers also grabbed student Annete Harper, 14, for creating a disturbance, and escorted her tot he principal's office.

She was the unnamed girl whom Gov. Orval Faubus spotlighted in a speech last week as having ben held incommunicado by the FBI. She told newsmen they questioned her for three hours. did not abuse her but broket heir promise to notify her parents of her whereabouts. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover has denied that his men held any one incommunicado.

Later, Annette's mother, a plump adult replica of the daughter, came to the area and tok her home. The mother said she was against integration but had not encouraged Annette's walkout. Said Mrs. Kenneth Harper, wife of a foundry worker and mother of two other children:

"She's all mixed up. I'm not going to let nine little Negro students keep her out of school."

Later Gov. Faubus held a press conference. Asked if he thought a few words from him might settle down the students, Faubus said:

"It's possible, but as long as the Federal government is in control let them step in and say the words."

As a result of incidents at the school since the National Guard took over patrol duty Tuesday, the military did step in today with its strongest show of force in a week.

The 101st Airborne Division was on duty again inside the school to prevent student trouble. When the eight Negro students drove up in a military station wagon, 42 Guardsmen formed a ring around them and marched halfway to the school entrance.

From there seven paratroopers escorted them inside through the group of students always waiting on the school steps. The ninth Negro, Minnie Brown, was absent today. Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, said she was sick.

Faubus indicated no retreat from his position that has caused a Federal-State stalemate on the issue of withdrawing the Army from Little Rock. It has been here since last Wednesday, enforcing court-ordered school integration which Faubus had used the National Guard to block.

Faubus said the President wanted "unconditional surrender" and stated that he was "not going to completely give up my powers a Governor of a State.

The Governor said he was willing to negotiate with Washington "on the basis of mutual trust and self respect." He said he did not believe those conditions were now present.

Private attorneys for Faubus filed notice of appeal in Federal Court here from Judge Ronald N. Davis' Sept. 20 injunction ordering Faubus to stop interfering with the school integration order. The Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis will consider it. Faubus appealed on grounds that Davies should have disqualified himself, should have convened a three judge court and Government's request for an injunction.

Little Rock church leaders met with ministers of white churches at Trinity Episcopal Cathedral this afternoon to urge city wide church services Saturday, Oct. 12 to pray for support of law and order and resistance to "unthinking agitators."

The Rt. Rev. Robert R. Brown, Episcopal Bishop of Arkansas and former minister in Richmond, Va., set up the meeting. Little Rock churchmen have passed judgment on the situation here from the pulpit, he said, now it is time for the church to work for reconciliation in the community.

Ministers were urged to call in their "intelligent, thinking" laymen to help mobilize the community behind law and compassion. Bishop Brown released a letter he had received Monday from President Eisenhower urging the churches to take on this job. Bishop Brown had offered to do what he could through his friend, Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson. Bishop Brown had also obtained a letter from Faubus backing his efforts.

Matter of Fact

Faubus Plumbed a Historic Well

By Stewart Alsop

THE POLICY of the Eisenhower Administration, as of this writing, seems to depend on the passage of time and local pressures for reason and moderation to heal the crisis in Little Rock. In White House circles, Orval Faubus is often compared to Joseph R. McCarthy, and it is said: "We'll give Faubus enough rope to hang himself."

Perhaps there is nothing else to do. But it may take a lot of time and a lot of rope. And it is at least possible that the situation in Little Rock and throughout the South may get a lot worse instead of better, the longer Federal troops remain there.

Sometimes a small episode, which seems insignificant at the time, takes on a certain meaning in retrospect. Such an episode was a conversation this reporter had in Little Rock with a big, shirt-sleeved man on the fringes of a crowd around the schoolhouse. He had a very Southern accent, and he talked like a great many other people in Little Rock. "Would you want your kids being forced by Federal bayonets into a school with a bunch of half-savages?" he asked.

Then he suddenly let down his guard, as sometimes happens in a conversation between strangers who are unlikely to meet again. "Look," he said, and his accent changed; "I came here from Wisconsin eight years ago, and hell, I went to school with a couple of Negroes and it didn't bother me. But down here, brother, you talk like the rest of the people about this thing, and you think like them, too, or one day you wake up dead."

THIS SMALL EPISODE serves to suggest something of the dangers involved if the crisis in Little Rock drags on indefinitely. The extraordinary depth of feeling on the racial issue in the South is consistently underestimated outside the South. In a way, this is natural.

Consider a few statistics. The proportion of Negroes in Washington, D. C., which has integrated without major trouble, is more than 35 per cent. The proportion in Gary, Ind., which has been integrated for years, is almost 30 per cent. The proportion of Negroes in Little Rock is only 23 per cent. So why do the people of Little Rock feel so much more passionately about racial issues than the people of Washington, D. C., or Gary, Ind.?

There are many reasons, of course, psychological and economic, but the historical reasons must not be overlooked. The preoccupation with the Civil War and the Reconstruction era in the South tends to astonish or amuse Northern visitors. Yet, it is an important political fact, one which must be reckoned with.

Gary, Ind., after all, was never occupied by Federal troops who used force to put uneducated Negroes and unscrupulous Northern adventurers into positions of power. In the Reconstruction era, the slogan of the Little Rock Republican, the organ of the occupation forces, was: "We'll make Arkansas Republican or a waste of howling wilderness." Read the history of Reconstruction, and you will find the phrase "Federal bayonets" used in 1870 in precisely the same bitterly symbolic way as it is used today in Little Rock. Such phrases ("Northern press" is another) have much the same instinctive, emotional connotations as the old "Boche" has to many Frenchmen.

ALL THIS is not to suggest that President Eisenhower was wrong to do what he did, or that he should now surrender to the slippery Faubus. But it does suggest that the President's action in sending Federal troops into a Southern state was very much more dangerous in terms of national unity than is generally recognized outside the South.

The longer Federal troops remain in Arkansas, the more dangerous will the feeling in the South become. The social pressures which this feeling creates forces a recent Wisconsonite to talk like an extremist Southerner. But these social pressures are duplicated by political pressures, so that, in the wake of Little Rock, a respected Southern leader like Georgia's Sen. Richard Russell can seriously compare American soldiers to Hitler's storm troopers.

One of the moderate political leaders in Arkansas remarked to this reporter: "Spiritually and morally, the South is about ready to secede already." If the South does secede, morally and spiritually, all Southern politicians may have to sound like demagogues if, politically, they are not to "wake up dead."

That is why some, at least, of President Eisenhower's advisers are coming to the view that he must make a truly heroic effort, using all the means of communication at his command, to explain the inescapable reasons for his action, to reassure and strengthen the reasonable majority in the South, and to quiet the passions which are endangering national unity. This kind of effort might also increase the pressure on Faubus to agree to a rational settlement, thus permitting the withdrawal of Federal troops and an end to the most dangerous domestic crisis in many generations.

LIGHT BREAKING THROUGH

Ever since the Little Rock crisis began a month ago it has been our conviction that the thoughtful, responsible citizens of Arkansas' capital strongly disapproved of Governor Faubus' actions in subtly inciting the rabble to racist violence and in openly preventing enforcement of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Times, P.16

A number of concrete incidents within the last two or three days have occurred to give substance to this thesis. In referring to them we do not forget the fact that from the very beginning there has been much evidence supporting the same view, ranging from the courageous editorials of The Arkansas Gazette to individual expressions of local residents. But this week these additional events have taken place:

(1) Twenty-four leading citizens of Little Rock, mostly prominent business men, signed a statement emphasizing their belief in "government by law and order," and asking their fellow-citizens to "uphold those who enforce laws * * *" and to "condemn violence and the threat of violence or the encouragement of violence." New York Times

(2) The student newspaper of Central High School, focal point of Little Rock's desegregation troubles, reminded its readers that "less than 1 per cent of the population of Little Rock was in the crowd of people" whose rioting on Sept. 23 forced the Negro students to be withdrawn from school. The editorial continued: "Again, it is the case where a minority group controlled the actions and even the thoughts of the majority. Wouldn't it be better for the parents, townsmen and strangers to let the law take its course * * *?" Sat. 10-5-57

(3) With the encouragement of President Eisenhower and under sponsorship of the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Little Rock, the city's leading clergymen of all denominations are endeavoring to bring about a spirit of reconciliation within the community through discussions among "groups of intelligent, thinking laymen."

(4) Perhaps most important of all the encouraging developments, amidst so much that is discouraging, was the abject failure of efforts to induce white students to walk out in protest against the presence of the handful of Negroes who have been attending school under protection of Federal troops. Not more than sixty of the school's total enrollment of 2,000 participated in Thursday's demonstration; and our reporter on the scene noted that as they emerged from the building "most of them headed straight for television cameras" set up opposite the school, where they were "egged on by one television crew" to shout at the enormous majority of their fellow-students who remained in class.

The people of Little Rock are like people everywhere else; they are not lawbreakers or ruffians or racists by nature. Their good sense and goodwill are sure to emerge from the present wreckage, and are sure eventually to prevail.

Lives Of Little Rock Nine Follow Pattern

By ADREN COOPER

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 14 (AP) — Now that the first flames of student resentment have subsided, the day-to-day lives of the integrated Little Rock Nine have settled into a pattern.

It is classes under guard each school day for the nine Negro youngsters whose enrollment at previously all-white Central High touched off violence, federal intervention and constitutional controversy.

Their relations with more than 11,900 white classmates after three months of school range from open hostility to furtive friendliness. There is no socializing.

They experience threats, social pressure and, most of all, the loneliness of being in a crowd yet not of it. But none of them has given any indication of withdrawing.

Twenty-seven white students have dropped out, transferred or been expelled since the Negroes started classes under the eyes of federal troops last September.

One school source estimates "there are fewer than 50 students actively hostile to the Negroes." But there might be more were it not for the presence of the now federalized National Guardsmen in the school corridors.

Apparently, there was more social contact between Negro and white students for a brief period after the federal troops—who have since been withdrawn—moved in.

"They (the white students) are anxious to find out what we are like," said Minnie Jean Brown, one of the Negroes, at the time. "They are torn between their parents and their own minds."

"A few of the (white) kids used to sit with them in the cafeteria," a white boy says. "But hardly anybody does anymore."

There were a number of "incompletes" on the Negro students' report cards for the first six weeks of school but most of the work has been made up. One boy flunked a subject.

"We couldn't get much work done during the days of the excitement," explained a teacher, "but things have settled down some.

"The Negro children seem very studious and they are eager to make up the work they have missed. Like any students who come in late, they don't take much part in answering questions in class."

The youngsters and their parents are reluctant to talk for publication. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has thrown a protective curtain around them.

Some of the parents deny they are members of the NAACP. Other sources say all are members. But it is obvious they work closely with the association.

Recently, there has been some heckling by telephone outside the school. Some of the Negro families take their telephones off the hooks at night in order to sleep.

"Please don't print the address," one Negro mother told a newsman. "I wouldn't be able to get work. Just use her father's name; don't even mention that she has a mother."

Most of the Negro youngsters say they want to attend Central because it is closer to their homes than Horace Mann, Little Rock's Negro high school. Many of them live within a few blocks of Central and several miles from Horace Mann.

Elizabeth Eckford, however, says she enrolled at Central to take a speech course which is not offered at Horace Mann. She wants to be a lawyer. She lives 25 blocks from Central, farthest of the nine.

Elizabeth was the first Negro to try to pass Arkansas National Guardsmen stationed in front of the high school Sept. 3. She was turned back. She returned when federal troops took over.

After withdrawal of the U. S. troops, soldiers of the federalized Arkansas National Guard were assigned to stand watch over the nine Negroes.

What will happen when the last soldier is withdrawn? Jefferson Thomas, one of the Negro youngsters, sums it up for all of them: "I'll just wait," he says. "I'll just wait and see what happens."

All the nine Negroes are above average in intelligence. They are the survivors of 60 Negroes who applied to enroll in Central. One has an I.Q. of 130. All had good scholarship records in their Negro schools.

They all come from homes that seem to be financially a notch or two above the average Arkansas Negro family. And their parents are well above the average in education.

All are natives of Little Rock except Thelma Mothershed, a diminutive bespectacled girl with a heart condition, who was born in Bloomberg, Tex. The Mothersheds moved to Little Rock when Thelma was 3 years old.

Here are brief sketches of the Little Rock Nine and their families.

Jefferson Thomas, 15, 10th grade. Last year he was named the outstanding boy at Dunbar (Negro) Junior High School and was president of the student council. His father, Ellis, a railroad worker. He has a sister who is a nurse and four brothers, one an Air Force sergeant, another a student at Arkansas A.M. & N. (Negro) College, and a third a senior in a Negro high school.

Ernest Green, 16, 12th grade. His mother, a widow, is an elementary school teacher. He has a brother and a sister, Treopia, 21, who is a kindergarten teacher in Baltimore. He plays basketball but has agreed not to go out for the Central team.

Minnie Jean Brown, 16, 11th grade. Her father is a stone mason and general construction worker.

Gloria Ray, 15, 11th grade, She is a straight A student who has ambitions to become a mathematician or an atomic scientist. Her father, Harvey, 68, is a retired agricultural agent who studied at Tuskegee Institute, a Negro school in Alabama, under the famed agricultural scientist, George Washington Carver.

Carlotta Walls, 14, 10th grade. Her father, Cartelyou Walls, attended college for a year and a half before serving a three year hitch in the Army. He is a bricklayer. Her mother went to college for three years.

Thelma Mothershed, 16, 11th grade. Her father is a psychiatric aide at the North Little Rock Veterans Administration Hospital. Two sisters are attending college, Lois, 20, at Phillips University in Enid, Okla., and Grace, a nursing major at the University of Arkansas.

Terrance Roberts, 15, 11th grade. His father is employed in the dietetic service at the North Little Rock VA Hospital. His mother, he says, "is a cateress; she doesn't have a regular job." One of his four sisters is a student at Oakwood College, Huntsville, Ala. He says Elizabeth Eckford "used to be my girl friend."

Melba Pattillo, 15, 11th grade. She has show business ambitions, takes glee club as a regular course at Central; has written and copyrighted two songs, "Teen Age Dreams" and "Let's Make Up or Break Up." Her mother, a school teacher, is divorced from her father. "He has had no influence on my life. Let's leave him out of it," says Melba.

Elizabeth Eckford, 16, 11th grade. Her father is a railroad employe. Her mother teaches 60 Negroes at a blind and deaf center "how to wash and iron for themselves." She has three brothers and two sisters.

Melba Pattillo is, at 15, already something of a legend at Central High School. Well, if not a legend, a myth ,anyway.

And the Capital White Citizens Council and spokes-women for the Mother's League of Central High School cite the myth as one of their principal arguments against the court-ordered integration of the once all-white high school.

"Them ain't local Little Rock niggers they put in that school," one of the racist orators charged at a meeting. "They imported them smart niggers from somewhere up North. Why, you only have to listen to that plump one. You can see that she talks just like a damyankee.'

Fri. 12-6-57

Yes, the myth began with Melba's speech. Her enunciation is perfect and there is not a trace of the Southern drawl or accent.

And before the flu forced her temporary absence from Central, she was annoyed each day by an incredulous white student who accosted her every time she came into a hall.

"Is you sho you was bone down here?" he asked each time. "Now say something so these people can see you was bone up Nawth."

And when the pretty young girl would murmur, 'Pardon me, I'm late for class, or "I'm sure I don't know what you're talking about," her interrogator would nod his head in confirmation to anyone present, and say: "Didn't Ah tell you so? Ain't that Yankee Talk?'

Mrs. Lois Patillo, who both in face and form is an older edition of Melba, was highly amused when the myth was dicussed the other night in her well-appointed home at 1121 Cross St.

Melba was up and around but still unable to return to Central. But her younger brother, Conrad, 13, a student at the Negro Dunbar HS, was still bedded with flu.

As Melba went into the music room right off the entrance lobby to put some albums on her new hi-fi set, Mrs. Patitllo tried to talk above the 21-inch TV which her daughter had forgotten to turn off.

State Press P.3

"I guess I should regard it as a compliment," she said. "You see, I teach English over at the (Negro) Jones High School in North Little Rock. I once taught French also.

"But I have never gone along with the much-publicized popularity of the Southern drawl. There is no reason why anyone shouldn't speak properly, and I've impressed this on Melba from the moment she learned to talk."

She hesitated and laughed again.

"Well, if they want to say she was 'bone' in the North, they may be correct. She was born right accross the river in 'North' Little Rock, and we've lived in this corner house here for 12 of her 15 years."

Melba and her Mother, Mrs. Lois Pattillo, Melba relaxes at the piano while her mother looks on.

And Melba yelled from the music room:

"Well, this shift to Central is making it pretty tough. Don't get me wrong; I love my new classmates. But some of the accents I have to hear over there daily makes it pretty hard to remember all you've taught me.'

And then she called out:

"They can say I came here from the North. I did do that on Labor Day. We'd been way up North to Cincinatti where we spent our summer vacation."

But there was little levity later when Lois Pattillo relived the ordeal of a Negro mother whose child was inside Central on the day that a mob rioted outside and radio announcers mistakenly broadcast that the Negro children were being bloodied up inside.

Fri. 12-6-57

For Lois and Melba Patillo are unusually close, even for mother and daughter.

"We never get enough of talking to each other," the mother confided at one point. "We always seem to be like we are visiting."

So there was strain on the mother's face when Melba rather laughingly recalled that first morning when white mothers were milling in Central's hallways, taking their children out and yelling at the colored ones:

"Why don't you niggers go back to your own high school?"

It was then that a small, enraged white girl slapped Melba in the face, and the larger Negro girl smiled and said:

"Thank you, I can take that too."

Melba doesn't recall now what the girl looked like so she hasn't recognized her since among her white schoolmates.

(But another white girl, whose hate-contorted features were captured by photographers as she yelled obscenities at little Elizabeth Ann Eckford on the opening day of school, is now a classmaae of Ernest Green, 16, the only Negro senior in the group.

("I think that seeing her picture like that in the papers the next day must have done something to her," Ernest remarked the other day. "For she is unusually quiet in class. I turn and find her staring at me occasionally and she always

Rome endured as long as there were Romans. America will endure as long as we remain Americans in spirit and in thought.

—David Starr Jordan

Because of the unusual family name, the Pattillos were easily spotted in the telephone book and have been one of the main targets of the anonymous racists who ring their phone at all hours of the day and night.

"I admit that the early obscene calls used to frighten me at first," Mrs. Pattillo said, "but finally I got over it.

"Now they just make me angry but even anger fades when you realize that such things are only symbolic of the ignorance of the caller."

Last week, while Melba was out of school with flu, the phone rang and her grandmother answered.

"This is the principal of Central High School," the caller said. "You'd better come over here right away. They're killing that uppity little granddaughter of yours."

The grandparent hung up the phone without comment.

But Lois Pattillo remembers most vividly that day when the racists rioted outside Central, beat and kicked Negro newspaper men and forced panicky city officials to spirit the nine Negro students out of the school.

"I had kept my portable radio on my desk over at Jones all that morning," she recalled, "and then I heard the announcer say that the Negro children were being bloodied up inside Central.

"I could just see Melba hurt or being chased down the halls all bloody and maybe fatally injured. Finally I couldn't take it any longer.

"I tried to get the rest of the day off. But my friends knew that I was planning to get into my car and drive right straight to Central to bring my child out of there. So they persuaded the principal not to let me go. I then tried to get off on sick leave—and I really was sick by that time—but they dissuaded me."

A shadow moves fleetingly across Melba's face as she recalls that day also.

"I was in class and trying to concentrate on my lesson," she said, "when I heard the crowd yelling outside. There seemed to be an animal quality in the voices. I tried to look out of the window but I couldn't see them.

"But after a while I just put it out of my mind. It didn't affect me much. I just went on with my lesson.

"But in a few minutes the assistant principal came in and took me to the principal's office where the rest of the kids were. They told us they were going to take us home. And they took us out the side door away from the mob."

Melba also recalls another bad day—that morning when members of the federalized National Guard replaced the tough members of the 101st Airborne Division who had been maintaining order inside the school's hallways.

"I was changing classes," she said, 'and one of the boys came up behind me and pushed me so hard I almost fell on my face. One of the Arkansas Guardsmen was standing right there and saw it all, and he didn't do a thing but turn his back as they shoved me again."

(Jefferson Thomas, 15, another of the nine Negro kids, recalls that same day that the young white hoodlums were yelling loudly: 'Two, four, six, eight. We ain't going to integrate.'

("But we were saying just as determinedly under our breath," Jefferson recalled, "that 'eight, six, four, two. Ten to one, we bet you do.")

The petty persecutions continue daily, even though the 101st has again replaced the local Guardsmen in the hallways. And Melba is not at all sanguine about what will happen when the federal troopt are finally withdrawn.

Asked what she thought would happen if the troops were withdrawn today, she smiled mischievously and said:

"For publication, I should say that I know that the good people of Little Rock would see that nothing happened; that we all believe in law and order; that I pray each night for those who persecute me, and that everything will be all right."

And then she stopped smiling and looked soberly at her visitor.

"If you want to know what I really think about it, it's this—they'll kill us.'

But like the eight other Negro kids, Melba has not let this dreary prospect alter her teen-age life and her overweening desire to be an actress or professional entertainer—a desire which is warmly nurtured by her mother.

"From the time she could think of things," the mother said, "we've both known that was what she wanted to do. So I saw to it that she got ballet lessons, singing lessons, music lessons, and anything she wanted in that line.

"Maybe as a mother I shouldn't say it. But you are going to be reading about this child. She's really going places.'

Melba not only sings, dances and plays the piano, but she also composes. She is now waiting for a copyright on two numbers, "Teen-Age Dreams," and "Lets Make Up Our Break-Up," and hopes to record one of the songs for a Kansas City company.

Her brother, Conrad, plays the clarinet, but he has no aspirations in that direction. He wants to be a doctor.

"And he'll be a good one,' says Lois Pattillo.

But back to Cetnral:

Melba knows that she made a number of casual white friends there, but none that she would call "bosom friends."

"But the first Saturday after she'd entered Central," Mrs. Pattillo recalls, "one of her little white classmates called me and asked if she and her boy friends couldn't come by and drive Melba to the bootball game that night.

"I thanked her, but decided against it. Maybe, when things are more normal, I'll let her do it.'.

Melba observed:

"Most of the kids are all right. But there's a hard core out there that's really making it tough for us. It is bad enough transferring to a new school anyway, to any school. But when you have to put up with that bunch, well it's rough."

But, in spite of her apprehensions, Melba is sure of one thing.

"The only way they'll get me out of Central now,' she says firmly, "it to take me out—feet first. And I intend to keep on standing on my feeet."

Flat Guarantee Of Negro Safety Is Vital, Ike Says

By Edward T. Folliard
Staff Reporter

President Eisenhower told reporters yesterday that he would "do a lot" to clear the atmosphere of the deplorable episode at Little Rock.

He emphasized, however, that he would not withdraw Army regulars from the Arkansas capital until he has absolute guarantees of safety for the Negro students integrated in a high school there.

In his judgment, no such guarantees have come from Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas. He said he thought Gov. Faubus "is mistaken" in what he is doing, and is doing a disservice to the city (Little Rock) and to his state.

It was the first time that Gen. Eisenhower had held a news conference since the Little Rock crisis exploded after Gov. Faubus called out National Guardsmen to bar Negro students from Central High School.

The Chief Executive was ruddy-faced after 27 days in Newport, R. I. He was wearing a light gray suit, a blue shirt and a deeper blue tie. The reporters—243 turned out for the conference—were impressed by his poise and the calm way in which he dealt with the barrage of questions, nearly all of which had to do with the Little Rock controversy.

Talks Philosophically

Much of what the President had to say was in a philosophical vein. The big issue confronting the country, he said, was not the racial issue at all, but support of the Federal Courts "in whose hands are all our freedoms and our liberties, our protection against autocratic government."

"That is why they (the troops) are there, and for no other purpose," he said. "And it is merely incidental that the problem grew out of the segregation problem."

A reporter asked what the next step would be in working for an agreement that would lead to withdrawal of the troops.

The President said that there were two different situations that could justify a withdrawal of the Army regulars:

"One, the satisfactory and unequivocal assurances (presumably from Gov. Faubus) that the orders of the Federal Court would not be obstructed, and that peace and order would be maintained in connection therewith.

"The second would be an actual factual development of peaceful conditions to the extent (that the local city police would say, 'There will be no difficulty that we can't control in the carrying out of this Court's orders.'"

Suppose, a reporter said, that Gov. Faubus does not change his stand, and suppose the present situation continues: did the President have any method in mind for safeguarding the Negro children in the integrated high school—that is, beyond using Federal troops?

Gen. Eisenhower said that he didn't know of any method that could be used. He said he wanted to interfere in local situations as little as possible, but added:

"No one can deplore more than I do the sending of Federal troops anywhere. It is not good for the troops; it is not good for the locality; it is not really American, except as it becomes absolutely necessary for the support of institutions that are vital to our form of government."

A reported noted that Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee had said that, if all negotiations broke down, then perhaps the President and Gov. Faubus should have another face-to-face conference. Would the Preisdent comment:

"No," he said "I don't think I would comment on it at this time.

"I have met with him. I thought we had an understanding. I know that the four governors thought that they had an understanding.

"But I will say this: To bring back respect for the law, to clear our whole present scene of this unpleasant incident, I would do a lot; I will tell you that."

A reporter who was at Newport recalled that, after the much-publicized meeting of the two men there, the President wished Gov. Faubus good ulck.

"What was it you thought then that he was going to do?" the reporter asked.

Gen. Eisenhower said that he wasn't going to repeat what was said in the private conference between himself and Gov. Faubus.

"But," he added, "You did read his statement that he issued immediately thereafter or within the hour up at Providence, and I certainly thought that, at the very least, the orders to the Guard to prevent the carrying out of the Court's orders were going to be modified.

'What Was Unsatisfactory?'

He was asked about what happened Tuesday after four Southern governors had told him at the White House that they had assurances from Faubus that he would see that the Federal Court's order would be carried out in Little Rock. What was it in Faubus' subsequent declaration, a reporter wanted to know, that the President found unsatisfactory?

Said the President:

"The message that came back from Faubus) must be read as an entire whole, and you will find that all the way through it says, 'As I have intended from the beginning,' meaning that anything stated in that telegram merely took the situation back to where it was before the Federal troops arrived.

"Now, under that situation, there was no revocation of the orders to the Guard already issued that the Guard would prevent the entry of those Negro children into the high school."

A reporter, who from time to time has asked the President some sharp questions, put this one to him:

"Sir, you probably are aware that some of your critics feel you were too slow in asserting a vigorous leadership in this integration crisis. Do you feel, sir, that the results would be any different if you had acted sooner instead of, as your critics say, letting the thing drift?"

The other newsmen leaned forward, wondering how the Chief Executive would react. There was no flashing of the blue eyes, no angry flush.

Replies With Quip

"I am astonished," he said, "how many people know exactly what the President of the United States should do."

Laughter swept the room, and the President himself joined in.

He went on to say that he had been studying the problem from the day that the Supreme Court ordered integration in the public schools back in 1954.

"Now," he continued, "you will recall that I have stated here a belief that is the very core of my political thinking, which is that it has got to be the sentiment, the good will, the good sense of the whole citizenry that enforces law. In other words, you have got to win the hearts and minds of men to the logic and the decency of a situation before you are finally going to get real compliance.

"Law alone, as we found out in the prohibition experiment, does not cure some of the things it sets out to cure.

"So I believed and I have preached patience, tolerance, the purpose of understanding both sides before you move, and I think that to use troops, to send them in or to attempt to dictate to any portion of the South as to what they should not do before compulsion arose, would be the greatest mistake you could make.

"Now, I realize when the plan—remember, these plans are all local plans, and that is where they must be solved—but when this local plan in Little Rock was put before the Court to get his approval of it, I was besieged by people who argued that it was too lenient a plan, and that I should move in with . . . anything available, and protest and try to get it made a more abrupt, a more drastic plan.

"The Court found that it was made in good faith, and it represented a good start, even though completion of the plan was not to be until 1963 . . . They found it was a decent plan. I thoroughly approve. I believe that moderation, decency, education has got to go hand in hand with any kind of just sheer application of law in this case."

Troop Use Elsewhere

The President was asked if Federal troops might be used in some place other than Little Rock.

"I don't want to be imitating the Supreme Court," he said, "but I don't think it is wise to try and answer hypothetical questions.

"Each one of these cases is different. The National Guard, or the State Guard at the moment, was called out and given orders to do certain things which were a definite direct defiance of a Federal Court's order.

"That put the issue squarely up to the Executive part of the Government, and I would not, as I told you once before in this meeting—I couldn't conceive that anyone would so forget common sense and our common obligations of loyalty to the Constitution of America that force of this kind would ever have to be used for any purpose.

"But I just say this: The Courts must be sustained or it's not America."

The President was asked what advice he would give to an American traveling overseas who is asked by Europeans on either side of the Iron Curtain how the Little Rock thing could happen in America

The President noted that the overwhelming majority of Americans believes that the courts must be sustained. Those who are defying the courts, he said, are doing so under a very mistaken notion, for if people can defy the courts with impunity in one instance, they can do it in others.

"Consequently," he went on, "if a case comes up where your right to print the news as you see it is challenged by the government, and the courts find that you are innocent, and the Government says, 'We will do nothing that the court says,' what is going to be the result except choas and anarchy."

Racial Issue Division

The President said there is a very great division in this country on the racial problem. But he said that this, like other problems in our history, will be settled, and will be settled because most Americans have respect for law.

What did he intend to do to give leadership that will settle the integration problem.

"I don't know really much more that can be done," the President said.

He told the reporters that he had written to a number of church leaders, and had conferred with educators. Asked if he thought that Little Rock represented a failure of religious leadership, he avoided a direct answer but said:

"I believe that all forms of free government are based, either knowingly or unknowingly, on deeply held religious convictions, and that religious conviction is the equality of man—that all men are the sons of a common Creator.

"Now that, in my mind, gives validity to our form of government; and, if we don't believe that, then we had better ttake another look and see why we are trying to do these things, because that is the only place I know of that it is claimed that all men are equal (with) a common Fatherhood . . ."

He said he thought this gave religious leaders a special responsibility for supporting the institutions of free government.

In the midst of the news conference discussion of the Little Rock crisis, a girl reporter asked the President if he though the Navy's football team should play in the Oyster Bowl game with Georgia on Oct. 19, considering that segregation will be enforced there.

"Well," said the President, smiling, "I think you had better go ask the . . . Naval Academy. I have got enough responsibilities . . . without taking this, too."

This question and questions about the budget, Syria and the Teamsters were the only ones that did not have to do with the integration crisis.

As President Eisenhower was leaving the room, he chuckled and said: "Well, we had at least one question that was not Little Rock."

Daniel Says Use Of Troops Like Reconstruction

AUSTIN, Texas. Sept. 24.—(UP)—Gov. Price Daniel Tuesday wired President Eisenhower that his ~~order to use~~ Federal forces at Little Rock, was "reminiscent of the tactics of reconstruction days," and asked if he intends to "occupy with troops every non-integrated school in the South."

Commercial Appeal P. 14

Wed. 9-25-57

In a telegram to the President, Governor Daniel said he was "shocked" by President Eisenhower's order Federalizing the Arkansas National Guard and authorizing use of regular troops in the Little Rock integration controversy.

Memphis

The Governor said that "Federal force, troops, guns and bayonets are reminiscent of the tactics of reconstruction days which even President Lincoln opposed."

Press

"Does this mean," Governor Daniel demanded, "you will occupy with troops every non-integrated school in the South?"

"If so, your action will destroy the public school systems and good will among the races which most of us in the South have labored so hard to preserve," the Governor continued.

In his telegram, Governor Daniel said:

"In view of your numerous previous statements against the use of force and Federal troops in integration controversies and your requests for congressional approval before using troops even in foreign lands, I am shocked at your action in Arkansas."

"Mr. President, Federal force, troops, guns and bayonets are reminiscent of the tactics of reconstruction days which even President Lincoln opposed. It was not until force and Federal troops were removed that peace, order and respect for the law returned to the South and so will it be this time.

"Does this mean you will occupy with troops every non-integrated school in the South? If so, your action will destroy the public school systems and good will among the races which most of us in the South have labored so hard to preserve."

"Even the Supreme Court said we should be given reasonable time to solve this problem and I know of no one who has advocated a solution by force of arms. I respectfully urge that you reconsider your action in the light of your previous advocacy of patience and good will."

The President Firmly Takes His Stand

Surely the nation deeply deplores a condition in which the President of the United States had no other option than calling out federal troops, incident to rioting and otherwise defiance of the orders of a federal judge in the Little Rock, Arkansas Central High School affair. In so doing, a long siege of normality was broken and the world and the nation looked on a situation which calmer minds and more serious and genuine moods could have averted. Worcester P. G.

Like a storm rumbling in the distance afar off, this trouble has been in the cloud-making stage. We have heard its echoes threading through campaign speeches on political stumps, and have seen states in the act of openly in their admitted strategy, pass circumventive laws to defeat the essence of certain provisions in the cardinal law of the nation. 9-25-57

The tragedy lies in the fact that the FBI and other reliable sources did not sustain Governor Faubus in his contention that he had serious information as to what would happen, that his calling out the National Guard intensified the trouble; that he had ulterior motives in the tragic drama he pulled and therefore his usefulness as a public official comes to an abrupt end.

The fact is clearer through the swift action of the President in federalizing Faubus' troops that no state is above the Union, that no law can supersede the Federal Constitution and the Supreme Court of the United States must be always SUPREME.

Again, it is regretted that the President had no other alternative to upholding the Constitution and the carrying out of his solemn oath than the position he took in this case.

In the face of preserving the prestige of this nation, there should not have been a matter of surprise in the action he took on this memorable occasion. Atlanta, Ga.

He is indeed a friendly, patient and brave man; he believes in legal procedures and would be the last to resort to the drastic measures of the military when any other honorable means was in the offing. He tried to be of service in Arkansas settling its own internal affairs; he counseled with its governor and in the end was forced to show a preference in the upholding of the law and thereby preventing anarchy.

The high prestige of the nation was at stake. President Eisenhower fully measured up with other great presidents of this nation in its crucial periods of unrest and tension.

Our people should reaffirm their faith in the type of leadership the President is exhitbiting.

We sympathize with both the President and the people of Arkansas in this hour of crisis, but the President deserves the support of all in the step the situation required him to take.

The Gallup Poll

Public Feels Faubus Stirred Up Trouble

PRINCETON, N. J. — The American public is inclined to feel that Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus caused more trouble than he prevented by placing the National Guard around Little Rock's Central High School.

A survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion finds the weight of sentiment Nation-wide holds that there would not have been as much trouble in the Arkansas capital if the Governor had not put the Guard there in the first place.

Even in the South, a large number believe Gov. Faubus' action precipitated rather than blocked trouble — although the weight of Southern sentiment is that the move did not cause more trouble.

The events in Little Rock, however, have done little to change the attitude of the typical American toward the principle of school integration, a special survey finds.

These questions were put to a Nation-wide sample of adults which included the correct proportion of persons from each major population group:

"Some people say that there would not have been as much trouble in Little Rock if Gov. Faubus had not put the National Guard there in the first place. Do you agree or disagree with this point of view?"

Agree	46%
Disagree	28
No opinion	26

In today's survey, a clear majority of Northerners agree that there would have been less trouble without the Guardsmen. In the South today, the vote is as follows:

Agree, would not have been as much trouble	34%
Disagree, would have been as much	38
No opinion	28

The second question:

"It has been suggested that Gov. Faubus and President Eisenhower try to work out an agreement whereby the troops will be removed if Faubus will enforce the law in Arkansas with local and state police. Does this sound like a good idea or a poor idea?"

Good idea	69%
Poor idea	18
No opinion	13

Although a majority in all sections of the country believe that such an effort would be a good idea, the greatest opposition to the plan comes from the 13 Southern states.

AS PART OF its study on the impact of Little Rock, the Institute assigned its field staff to ask a carefully drawn cross-section of American adults from all segments of the population and in all parts of the Nation the same question they have asked at periodic intervals since May, 1954:

"The Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Here is the vote Nation-wide at three different times

AUGUST, 1957
Approve	58%
Disapprove	36
No opinion	6
SEPTEMBER, 1957 (Before Federal Troops)
Approve	56%
Disapprove	38
No opinion	6
OCTOBER, 1957 (After Federal Troops)
Approve	59%
Disapprove	35
No opinion	6

As the following trend of sentiment in the South shows, the number of Southerners who disapproved of the Court's decision reached its high point during the days when the National Guard was guarding the Little Rock High School on Gov. Faubus' orders.

	Approve	Disapprove	No Opin.
July, '54	24%	71%	5%
May, '55	20	73	7
Feb., '56	22	72	6
Jan., '57	27	67	6
Aug., '57	20	75	5
Sept., '57	16	78	6
Oct., '57	23	72	5

Although a majority in the North have consistently supported the principle of school integration, studies since the Court's 1954 decision have found that those who approve of the principle adopt the attitude of "gradualism" when it comes to putting integration into effect.

The Gallup Poll

Majority Approves Use of Troops At Little Rock, But Dixie Dissents

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 3 — President Eisenhower has the support of a majority of the American people for his action in sending 1000 men of the 101st Airborne Division into Little Rock.

Gallup

In the first scientific "pulse-taking" at the grass-roots level since Mr. Eisenhower's historic action sending troops into the Arkansas capital, the American Institute of Public Opinion finds that about three out of four people in the Northern States feel the President made the right move.

Although a majority of the people in the 13 Southern States who expressed an opinion believe the President's decision was wrong, it is interesting to note that a sizable number of Southerners endorse Mr. Eisenhower's action in sending the troops.

On one point, people in all sections of the country, including the South, see eye-to-eye. They do not feel that the President should have sent troops to Little Rock any sooner than he did.

Experienced opinion reporters from the Institute's field staff put two questions to a carefully selected cross-section of adults from coast to coast. The sample includes the correct proportion of persons from each major population group.

"Do you think President Eisenhower did the right thing or the wrong thing in calling out the troops to guard the high school in Little Rock?"

Here are the results Nation-wide:

Nationwide
Right thing	64%
Wrong thing	26
Undecided	10

Here is the vote in the South only:

South Only
Right thing	36%
Wrong thing	53
Undecided	11

The vote in the 35 states in the North:

North Only
Right thing	74%
Wrong thing	16
Undecided	10

The next question:

"Some people say that Mr. Eisenhower should have sent the troops into Little Rock sooner than he did. Do you agree or disagree with this point of view?"

The results Nation-wide:

Agree	19%
Disagree	64
Undecided	17

The most frequently volunteered comment—both in the North and the South—was that the events in Little Rock were "terrible," "awful" and "something that shouldn't have happened."

In the South, this reaction is often accompanied with an "I told you so" attitude. Many people there feel that such trouble was inevitable when the races were mixed in the schools.

The comment of a 32-year-old wife of a rural mail carrier in Nickelsville, Va., is typical:

"I think it's a disgrace. Why do those colored children want to go to an all-white school now—they never have before. Each school should be allowed to protect itself."

Many people in the North sympathize with the Southerners. At the same time, there is the feeling that everyone "should be treated equally" and that the integration of the public schools must proceed as ordered by the courts.

Other findings in the poll on the Little Rock situation will appear in the Outlook Section of the Sunday Washington Post.

THE FACE OF DEMOCRACY

What is "the true face of democracy in America"?

A Moscow newspaper says that it is disclosed in Little Rock, where the brutal forces of racism have held the town in turmoil for three weeks. The Communist press throughout the world, and even some of the non-Communist press, has seized upon the disgraceful incidents in Arkansas to defame and ridicule the image of American democracy. Our professions of freedom and equality are a sham and a mockery, they say, and they flaunt pictures of savage attacks by white bullies on defenseless Negroes to prove it.

But what really is the face of democracy in America? In Louisville and Nashville, in Baltimore and Washington, in hundreds of Southern communities from Delaware to Texas, Negro students are peacefully attending schools that until a few days or a few months or a few years ago had been exclusively reserved for whites. Is there any mention of this by our detractors abroad? These schools are wholly integrated, or partially integrated, or just beginning to be integrated—but they operate daily and without interference.

They will continue so to operate, and in increasing numbers; and before long the Central High School in Little Rock will join them, without need of an encircling cordon of Army troops to insure that nine Negro students may enjoy their constitutional rights. What happened in Little Rock has indeed been a setback to democracy in America; but it is no more "the true face of democracy" than is the front put up by Governor Faubus the true face of the modern South. Rather, the true face of democracy in Arkansas is represented by the thousands of good citizens who respect the law, much as they may disagree with it, who will observe its mandates and who will faithfully carry out the orders of the court.

These are the people who must and will get the upper hand in Little Rock now that the ultimate recourse to the armed power of the United States has resulted in a restoration of order. These are the people who will have to see to it that the local authorities are more effective than they have been in the past, so that when the Federal troops are removed there will be no reversion to the jungle law that prevailed a few days ago. These are the people who will have to reassert themselves in Little Rock and throughout the South to restore the good name of democratic government which a howling, hysterical, ignorant rabble has done its best to destroy.

50 Little Rock Criminal Cases Delayed By Court

Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 10-9-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 8 (AP)—Some 50 criminal cases growing out of last month's integration disorders at Central High School were postponed today until late November.

"Stay away from the school," Municipal Judge Harry Robinson admonished five defendants before him today. All the cases involve such charges as disturbing the peace, unlawful assembly and resisting arrest.

Robinson, an appointee of Gov. Orval Faubus, granted a delay in the five cases at the request of defense lawyers. He set hearings for Nov. 26 and 27 and said he would do the same as other defendants come before him.

The FBI, meanwhile, continued to dig into the background of the Sept. 23 riot by white adults outside Central High. There have been no federal indictments in this probe.

Announcement was made that a defense fund is being set up to "raise money for the legal defense of those who have been arrested and who may be arrested in connection with the Little Rock Central High School situation."

The "Freedom Fund for Little Rock" identified itself as an offshoot of the Freedom Fund Inc of Nashville, Tenn. The latter was set up to aid defendants in the Clinton, Tenn., school integration case.

Promoters of the Little Rock fund said the only crime of those thus far arrested was that they were spectators outside the school when trouble arose.

The disorders outside Central High led President Eisenhower to send in regular Army paratroopers and federalized National Guardsmen. They moved in two weeks ago today to enforce the integration of nine Negro students into Central High as ordered by the federal courts.

As the federal forces began their third week of integration patrol duty, the Central High campus was as outwardly serene as though the bitter dispute had never existed.

The six Negro girls and three boys were escorted across the campus by six federalized guardsmen. About 100 white students looked on quietly.

Montgomery, Ala.

There were 207 white students absent from Central today. At the peak of the integration deadlock, 750 of the 2,000 white students stayed away from classes.

Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) said in New York he believes the dispute is rapidly reaching the point where Eisenhower would be justified in withdrawing the troops.

"The people of America—and Little Rock is America—are of moderate temperament," Hays said during an NBC television interview.

"I mean they want to do what is right and what is reasonable. For a little while the extremists on both sides had their day. I hope that it will be shortlived and that we can move into that period in which reasonable men discussing their differences with each other can approach a sane solution."

Hays has served in the role of a peacemaker between his home state and the federal government.

Witnesses Being Called For Gov. Faubus Hearing

Merchants, School Officials Ordered To Injunction Session on Friday

By WILLIAM HINES
Star Staff Correspondent

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 18.—Federal marshals were dealing out subpoenas right and left today as efforts continued to settle the 15-day-old integration crisis at Little Rock Central High School.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom, members of the Little Rock School Board and a number of small shopkeepers were among the first of an estimated 225 persons who would be called to testify at a hearing on an injunction to stop Gov. Orval E. Faubus from continuing to bar Negroes from the school. The hearing is scheduled for Friday noon (EDT).

The merchants subpoenaed are expected to be asked whether any unusual demand for guns and knives was noted in the period immediately before the school year began at Central High September 3. It has been Gov. Faubus' contention that information to this effect and other factors caused him to call out the National Guard to preserve peace.

Hays Pressed for Accord

Representative Brooks Hays, Democrat of Arkansas, meanwhile pressed for a solution. After three meetings with Gov. Faubus, he still was unable last night to report anything concrete. But Mr. Hays indicated he was continuing his efforts and expressed optimism.

The feeling persisted in this Arkansas capital that today would be the day of decision. There is much speculation that sometime before midnight tonight troops would be withdrawn from Central High for the first time since they were stationed there on the night of Labor Day.

Gov. Faubus is widely reported as extremely anxious to avoid the Federal Court hearing scheduled for Friday. His advisers believe he might avoid such a session before Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies by doing in advance what the Federal Government asks: Withdrawing the guard. Sources close to the Government, however, represent Attorney General Brownell's men as anxious to close with Gov. Faubus in a courtroom battle.

The Governor had before him two demands from the mayor of Little Rock, Woodrow W. Mann. The first called for Gov. Faubus to give 24 hours notice on withdrawal of troops and the second demanded that he withdraw the guard "immediately."

It was obvious that Gov. Faubus could not comply with both demands, and sources close to the executive mansion indicated he would comply with neither, at least as far as Mayor Mann was concerned.

The stage was being set for the Federal Court injunction hearing. United States Marshal B. Beal Kidd has virtually his entire staff of deputies out with subpoenas and court clerks got on with the job of typing out summons forms.

Judge Davies to Return

Judge Davies, absent since September 10 to attend his daughter's wedding in his home town of Fargo, N. D., was due back at his hotel today.

One item tentatively on the calendar of the court is a remoteely possible appearance by Gov. Faubus tomorrow in another case.

U. Simpson Tate of Dallas, regional attorneey for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, filed a request for a subpoena on Gov. Faubus in a suit designed to test four new State laws aimed at preserving segregated schools. There was some doubt that the Governor would be required to appear personally in this case.

Government Going Ahead Preparing For Fight In Court Friday

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 17.—Little progress was reported Tuesday in the settlement of the Little Rock integration problem, but Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) said he is hopeful something will be "worked out soon to cause removal of Guardsmen at Central High School and perhaps end the stalemate there."

Memphis

Mr. Hays is acting as an voluntary mediator in the controversy.

There is an "obvious necessity for further conversations" before a possible compromise of Federal-state powers would shape up, Representative Hays said.

Two Conferences

He made the statement after having two conferences with Governor Orval Faubus, one in the morning and another in the afternoon.

Representative Hays pointed out:

Wed. 9-18-57

"Even the most hopeful person often gets his bruises and his setbacks."

Asked if there appeared any chance of a possible settlement before Friday's scheduled hearing on the injunction in Federal Court, Representative Hays said he wasn't authorized to answer the question.

His manner, however, indicated there had been none. "I feel I have completed my contribution to resolving the integration impasse at Central High School," he said.

He said he planned to visit Tuesday night in Russellville, his boyhood home, before continuing on a speaking tour in Oklahoma City. He will go to Kansas City for dinner with former President Harry Truman Saturday night, to discuss "Baptist matters."

Papers Being Served

Meanwhile, the Justice Department through Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb was going ahead preparing for an all-out court fight here Friday when a hearing is scheduled before Judge Ronald N. Davies on the question of a Federal injunction against the Governor and National Guard officials.

Mr. Cobb said about 200 witnesses were being subpenaed for possible use in Friday's hearing. United States marshals were serving them late Tuesday.

Mr. Cobb said the large number of witnesses were being called so that the Government will be prepared "on every conceivable thing of material interest to the court."

The Justice Department, acting on directions from Judge Davies, has asked for an order restraining the Governor and top officials of the National Guard from interfering with integrated classes here. The Governor called out the Guard on Sept. 2 with orders to maintain order, and in the process to maintain segregated classes.

The Government isn't contending the Governor violated any laws simply by calling out the Guard, Mr. Cobb said Tuesday morning. However, it does contend he acted illegally when he used the Guard to keep nine Negro children from entering Central High School.

The Government will contend that was a violation of the Negro students' constitutional rights, Mr. Cobb said.

The calling of that many witnesses indicated the Justice Department at least was prepared for an all-out court fight Friday, whether or not it actually materializes.

Commercial Appeal

There had been prior speculation that some sort of compromise move might be in the making to avoid a showdown on the injunction. But if any such move was coming from the Governor, he still wasn't talking.

For the third day, Governor Faubus refused to hold a press conference. Guardsmen at the Mansion wouldn't let newsmen enter the grounds.

Wed. 9-18-57

Guardsmen also continued their patrol duty at Central High, where classes otherwise were proceeding normally. Negro students earlier refused entry made no further attempts at trying to attend classes at the all-white school.

Mr. Hays, who helped arrange Saturday's meeting between President Eisenhower and Governor Faubus, said he had advised both sides in the controversy, but denied he was acting as an emissary for the President.

Judge Expected Today

He said he merely was trying to help end a situation which he felt many people in Little Rock wanted resolved as soon as possible. Little Rock is in the congressional district which Mr. Hays represents.

Judge Davies hadn't arrived from his home in Fargo, N.D., but was expected to be here sometime Wednesday. He left for Fargo late last week to take care of some litigation in his own district, and to attend the wedding of one of his daughters.

Judge Davies will serve as one of the jurists in a three-judge hearing coming up a day ahead of the injunctive proceedings. That hearing, Thursday, will test constitutionality of the state's newly enacted segregation laws.

Governor Faubus was named in a subpena action Tuesday morning in connection with that case. The subpena was drawn up by U. Simpson Tate, Dallas Negro attorney representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Staff Not Told

The NAACP has instituted the suit involving the segregation acts, one of which created the State Sovereignty Commission of which the Governor is ex-officio chairman. Whether the Governor also was being subpenaed for his actual presence in Friday's scheduled hearing on the injunction wasn't learned.

The Governor plans to try to attend the Southern Governor's Conference this week end at Sea Island, Ga., but court action here may conflict with those plans.

Asked whether Guardsmen still would be on duty Wednesday, one of the Governor's aides said he didn't know. He said the Governor wasn't even letting his own staff know what his future actions would be in the controversy.

Justice Agency Acts After Request by Judge Davies —Contempt Action Seen

New York

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4—The Justice Department set in motion today an official investigation of the events that have blocked public school integration at Little Rock, Ark.

The inquiry was requested by the Federal judge sitting in the case, Ronald N. Davies. Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. announced tonight that members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and of the United States Attorney's and United States Marshal's offices would carry out the investigation under Judge Davies' direction. They will report directly to the judge.

All indications were that Judge Davies' request was a preliminary step toward one or more contempt citations in the case.

Unless Gov. Orval E. Faubus withdraws the National Guard troops that have prevented Negro children from entering the Little Rock high school, the feeling here is that he may eventually be cited for contempt himself. But a number of legal steps may stand in the way.

Legal Barriers Noted

For one thing, a person can be held in contempt of a court order only upon proof that he knew the order was directed at him. Some lawyers here are of the opinion that before proceeding against Governor Faubus, it would be necessary for Judge Davies to issue an injunction naming him and specifically forbidding him to interfere with the scheduled school integration.

Representative Kenneth B. Keating, Republican of upstate New York, said in a statement today that if Governor Faubus has "deliberately flouted" a court order, "he should be held in contempt just as any other citizen until the order is obeyed."

In any case, it remains the fervent hope of Justice Department officials that there will be no such showdown with Governor Faubus. The fear is that a contempt action against him would only stir new resentment in the South.

Through the day Mr. Brownell, Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney 3d, and others at the department wrestled with the Little Rock dilemma. They talked by telephone with Osro Cobb, the United States Attorney there. Mr. Brownell telephoned President Eisenhower in Newport, R. I., to bring him up to date.

Issue in Judge's Hands

The United States is not a party to the law suit in Little Rock. The general view at the Justice Department is that the issue must be left for the moment in the hands of Judge Davies and of the official parties to the Little Rock law suit, a group of Negro parents and the school board.

Should the impasse remain and Governor Faubus defy an injunction directed against him, there are a number of steps the Justice Department could take. But they are all of such an extreme nature that their use is difficult to imagine.

First, the Governor could in theory be prosecuted for a Federal crime.

Section 242 of Title 18 in the United States code makes it a crime for a state official willfully to subject any person to "the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution * * *" The calculated exclusion of Negroes from a school in defiance of a court order would fit this statute.

Second, the Federal Government could withhold from the Arkansas National Guard the substantial monetary aid supplied to all the state Guard units But, again, no such step is being seriously considered at this time.

Action Open to President

Third, the President could use Federal troops or the National Guard units of any state to enforce the court order. A Civil War statute still on the books —50 U. S. C. Section 202—says:

"Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable, in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any state or territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the states, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws. . ."

No one in the Administration believes, of course, that the progress of school integration in the South would be eased by the use of Federal troops.

President Gets Report

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 4—President Eisenhower kept in touch by telephone today with Mr. Brownell over the tense school integration situation in Little Rock.

James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said the President had not yet directed Mr. Brownell to take any specific action to enforce compliance with a federal court order requiring integration of Negroes and whites in the high school.

Mr. Hagerty said the Attorney General had reported to the President that "the National Guard, apparently under orders of the Governor [Oral E. Faubus], stopped seven to nine Negro children from going to school."

The President talked with Mr. Brownell after reaching his vacation spot here at the Newport naval base on Coasters Harbor Island. He directed the Attorney General to keep "in close touch" with the Little Rock situation and to advise him by telephoning of future developments.

To students—

General's talk in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 25—(AP)—Here is the text of the speech made by Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker to the students of Little Rock Central High School this morning:

YOUNG LADIES and gentlemen of Central High School. Mr. Blossom, your superintendent of schools, has asked me to come to your school this morning and discuss with you the situation in Little Rock and what it means to you students. I welcome this opportunity to do so.

As you know, the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees to all citizens the equal protection of the laws. Since the adoption of this amendment, many states have provided separate schools for their children on the basis of color. The laws establishing such schools have, however, been challenged in the courts; and about three years ago, the Supreme Court of the United States determined that such laws are contrary to the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment and consequently invalid. This decision by the highest court in the land is, of course, an authoritative interpretation of our Constitution, is binding on all citizens and government officers, both state and federal, and may not, under our law, be changed except by an amendment to the Constitution.

Because of the Supreme Court's decision, it became necessary for those states maintaining separate schools to revise their systems to eliminate distinction on the basis of color. The nature of these plans was left to the states and local communities, subject to approval by the local federal district courts. The Little Rock school district prepared such a plan which was approved by both the District Court and Circuit Court of Appeals. This plan provides for a very gradual abandonment of the separate school system starting this year.

SUBSEQUENT to the approval of this plan, attempts were made in the courts to prevent the school authorities from putting it into effect.

I need not go into the details of this litigation; sufficient to say, it was unsuccessful, and that the plan as originally approved remains unchanged and in full force and effect.

During the past few weeks, as you are well aware, the situation in Little Rock has been such as to prevent the entrance of a few students into your high school. Therefore, to see that the laws of the land be faithfully executed, the president has found it necessary to call the National Guard of Arkansas into the federal service and has directed that this force and such other armed forces as may be made available be used to enforce the orders of the court. As an officer of the United States Army, I have been chosen to command these forces and to execute the president's orders.

WHAT DOES all this mean to you students? You have often heard it said, no doubt, that the United States is a nation under law and not under men. This means that we are governed by laws, properly decided upon by duly constituted authority, and not by the decrees of one man or one class of men. Since this is true, it means that we are all subject to all the laws, whether we approve of them personally or not, and as law-abiding citizens, have an obligation in conscience to obey them. There can be no exceptions; if it were otherwise, we would not be a strong nation but a mere unruly mob.

I believe that you are well-intentioned, law-abiding citizens, who understand the necessity of obeying the law, and are determined to do so. You have nothing to fear from my soldiers, and no one will interfere with your coming, going or your peaceful pursuit of your studies. However, I would be less than honest if I failed to tell you that I intend to use all means necessary to prevent any interference with the execution of your school board's plan. This is what I have been ordered to do, and I intend to carry out my orders. Those who interfere or disrupt the proper administration of the school will be removed by the soldiers on duty and turned over to the local police for disposition in accordance with the laws of your community.

ONE LAST WORD about my soldiers. They are here because they have been ordered to be here. They are seasoned, well-trained soldiers, many of them combat veterans. Being soldiers, they are as determined as I to carry out their orders. However, as I stated before, the law-abiding people have nothing to fear from them. They have been carefully instructed not to molest any law-abiding citizen in his person or property, and they will obey these orders. Since a peaceful atmosphere must be maintained in the school and its vicinity, it may be necessary for them to issue instructions concerning such things as loitering, assembling in large groups, and otherwise making it difficult for them to perform their duties. I earnestly ask that you cooperate, for your own benefit and ours.

I wish you all success in your school year and Mr. Matthews, I thank you for the opportunity to talk to the student body.

Criticism Leaves Ike Unruffled

By Marquis Childs

NEWPORT, R. I.—Just two years ago President Eisenhower suffered a coronary thrombosis that seemed at the time to remove him from active life and thereby to alter profoundly the politics of America and the world.

Childs

At the time, he was in the midst of a long vacation in Colorado much like the holiday here which occasionally is broken by a few hours in Washington. Before the attack the President had begun to be subjected to sharp criticism, rare in his charmed career, on the ground that he was neglecting the duties of his office. Post and Herald

But his illness and long convalescence erased this in a new wave of sympathy and admiration for Ike the man and the hero of World War II. As he slowly recovered, with his staff carefully presenting an appearance of business as usual, the pressure on him to run for a second term grew until it was made to seem that he no longer had a choice.

His position today is much like that of two years ago. Again the chorus of criticism is becoming louder. He is accused of defaulting on his responsibility as leader of the country in the crisis over integration of the schools and of permitting a slow drift of neglect and indifference in other fields.

IF THE MAN on the golf course is aware of the criticism and the grave questions raised about the economy and the threat to peace in such troubled areas as the Middle East, he shows no signs of it. Looking younger than his nearly 67 years, his face tanned and comparatively unlined, he moves with the brisk, cheerful snap of one who all his life has loved nothing more than physical exercise.

It is a necessity both in relation to bodily well-being and temperament. One of the reasons his doctor, Gen. Howard McC. Snyder, and others close to him were so anxious to get away from Washington just as soon as Congress adjourned was because he had grown more and more edgy and restive. The well-known Eisenhower temper was bursting out with greater frequency. Since the heart attack, of course, that kind of strain is more serious.

In the brilliant Indian summer weather prevailing during most of his stay, the President starts his golf about 9 in the morning.

This is not leisurely golf. In the brisk precision with which the President and his companions play, there is almost a military efficiency. He moves rapidly down the fairway in a bright blue golf cart that looks on the distant landscape like a child's toy. It is a beautiful course, with gently rolling hills, the sea in the distance and the wild asters and goldenrod filling the small valleys with soft color.

AT THE FOUR greens close to the clubhouse a small gallery gathers—the press, people who have come out from town to see the President and a few tourists with small children.

The exclamations from the gallery are typical of those he has always drawn. "What a wonderful man he is, no matter what political party you belong to." "He looks as though he were having such a good time." A mother to her small son, "Now just think, you've seen Ike."

Returning to the naval base in the yacht, the Barbara Anne, he lunches with his wife, naps and then he may pay a second visit to his office where in the mornings he usually spends half an hour to an hour.

Twice at press conferences in Washington he has been asked whether he regretted running for a second term. Each time he replied that if you did what you believed to be your duty, you should have no regret and, moreover, regret was a form of self-pity in which he did not indulge.

When he announced he would run for a second term and in the debate prior to that announcement, he several times said that he could never again be as active in the Presidency as he had before his heart attack. But in the campaign, when every effort was made to refute the "part-time President" charge, this proved to be like the small print in an insurance policy. The public either ignored the warning or believed it to be unimportant. Today, with so many grave problems confronting the Nation and the world, it is very much to the fore.

Quiet Is the Prelude to Excitement Outside Little Rock Federal Building

Post and Times Herald Sat. 9-21-57

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20—There is little at 8 a. m. outside this hulking block-sized Federal building that foretokens the excitement that is to prevail within the hour.

Little Rock is robustly awake, but it is about its workaday business. Only the expectant attitude of a hesitant passerby or two betrays this five-story catch-all of everything Federal in this capital city of Arkansas as the seething integration question's target for today.

Only Building Supt. Lester Hubbard is about any business at all inside the building. He emerges smiling wryly from Room 436—smallest of two 4th-floor courtrooms—to announce that he has just checked the rooom's air-conditioning. Jokingly he tells a reporter that he has set the thermostat for the coldest temperature "because I reckon there's going to be a lot of heat in there today.

MacGuineas Appears

By 8:30 a. m. camera crews had strung their bright lights along the narrow hallway outside the courtroom and Donald B. MacGuineas, chief o fthe Justice Departments General Litigation Section, Civil Division, emerges from the United States Attorney's office and strolls leisurely down the hall to the court clerk's office.

Without so much as a sidelong glance, he filed the Justice Department's answer to Gov. Orval Faubus's request that Judge Ronald Davies disqualify himself from the fast-approaching hearing. The legal fat, so to speak is in a fire which begins now to flicker.

Ten minutes later Arthur J. Bickle, Little Rock's fireworks distributor, eases his rotund frame amiably through fast-gathering newsmen to get a seat in the courtroom. Bickle has been getting up early since the National Guard soldiers first appeared around Central High School Sept. 2 and each morning has found him on the segregationist firing line. He is accompanied by Hilda Thevenet, who customarily joins him daily on the same line, driving her black Cadillac.

At 8:45 a. m. United States Marshall Beal Kidd opens the courtroom door and about 60 spectators file into the courtroom. About half of them—Negroes—sidle into the pews on the right. The other half—white—take up their vantage points on the left. At 9:10 a. m. the last spectator seat is taken and five minutes later this includes the 37 special chairs provided in the jury box for newsmen.

Negro Pupils Arrive

At 9:25 the group of Negro teen-aged students involved in the proceedings filed into their reserved section. They are trimly-clad and somber-faced with a single exception—Minnie Jean Brown smothers quick laughs repeatedly as she chats at random with those around her. By this time 100 persons, some 75 per cent of them Negroes are jamming the hallway, jockeying for up-front listening posts against the doors.

Twenty minutes later Leroy Christophe, principal of the Horace Mann School for Negroes, strolls down the aisle and pats each of the Negro children on the shoulder. They acknowledge his solicitude sheepishly.

At 9:55 the entrance of Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, evokes a muffled stir on both sides of the aisle. He is followed to the counsel table by the battery of legal lights of both sides.

At 10 a. m. sharp Judge Davies enters and quickly takes his seat. From that point on an eerie stillness pervades, giving way only to the voices of various counsel which seem at times to become a part of it.

Recess Ignored

A stranger may determine immediately which side is making a point by listening carefully to which side of the aisle murmurs its muffled approval.

At 11:11 Judge Davies orders a 15-minute recess, but few leave their seats out of a very reasonable fear they'll not be able to reclaim them.

Only at the hearing's dramatic high spot (11:44 a. m.) is there anything approaching a demonstration. As Gov. Faubus' legal group take its dramatic leave from the proceedings, the spectators erupt noisily.

"Please have order!" Judge Davies declares quickly in a voice which booms easily above the babble—and immediately the tense silence so characteristic of the session sets in again.

It is broken once in a ripple of hesitant laughter inspired by the court itself.

Dr. William J. Cooper Jr., president of Little Rock's school board is on the stand. He is asked by United States Attorney Osro Cobb if he had seen the peaceful desegregation of Little Rock's busses. Before the physician can reply, Judge Davies asks merrily of no one in particular:

"Did you ever see a doctor riding in a bus?"

Matter of Fact . . .

Post and Times Herald

Little Rock and the President

WILL THERE BE violence in Little Rock? This is now the central question, on which the issue of the grave constitutional crisis which faces the Nation may well rest.

Stewart Alsop

Gov. Orval Faubus, in his Friday night radio speech, spoke many fine words about the need to "preserve the peace."

But he was also at pains to make it very clear that, if the peace were not preserved, it would not be his fault: "Now that my authority to preserve and maintain the peace and good order of this community has been so curtailed . . . I can only offer a fervent prayer that the same thing will not happen here that has happened in other states in recent days."

However fervent Gov. Faubus' prayers may be, one fact is entirely clear. There is just one way in which his original order to the Arkansas National Guard to prevent integration can appear to be justified. That is by serious disorder in Little Rock.

Another fact is just as clear. If there is violence in Little Rock, and if as a result the Negro children are prevented, by whatever means, from entering the school, the cause of the all-out segregationists will have scored a major victory. The so-called Mansfield Plan, named after the Texas town in which integration was presented by the threat of violence, will then in all likelihood form the pattern of segregationist strategy in the South.

THE MANSFIELD Plan is very simple. Violence or the threat of violence is generated in a town in which schools are due to be integrated. The local or state police authority is designated to preserve order. Order is preserved by returning the children to Negro schools and keeping them there.

But the Mansfield Plan is not only simple but very dangerous. Unlike other Southern plans to resist integration by various legal devices, the Mansfield Plan is based on violence or the threat of violence to resist the Supreme Court decision and the Federal authority. A widespread segregationist strategy based on violence, and continued for years, is about as ugly a prospect as can be imagined.

That is why most responsible Southerners (who are, Northerners are apt to forget, most sincerely convinced that integration is profoundly wrong) prefer legal means to resist integration. But if violence works in Little Rock, there will be a strong impulse throughout the South to accept a strategy based on violence.

Thus a great deal depends on what happens in the next few days in Little Rock. Among other things, the political power and prestige of the President of the United States may be at stake in Little Rock.

THE PRESIDENT'S prestige has already been hurt by his handling of the crisis. For the public image which has emerged, of the President enjoying a golfing vacation amid the decaying splendors of Newport during the gravest constitutional crisis in many decades, has not been a happy one.

This public image has unquestionably done the President and his party a lot of harm at home, especially among Negro voters, and it has done the United States no good abroad.

Yet, although it is hard to see any good justification for the President's remaining in Newport during the crisis, in fairness it must be said that his reaction to the crisis has been neither indifferent nor irrational.

He gave the Justice Department free rein to use all the power of the Federal Government to support Federal Judge Ronald Davies in his battle with Faubus, and the Justice Department has done an efficient and effective job. At the same time, the President himself deliberately adopted a mild and consiliatory tone. His purpose has been to avoid a showdown which would have terribly damaging consequences. The President had excellent reason, until a few days ago, to believe that Faubus would accept a face-saving settlement.

Instead, Faubus chose the role of Samson in the temple, and at this writing there is thought to be a real danger of violence in Little Rock. The President was no doubt right to seek to avoid a showdown. But in the situation which has now developed it is essential, both in terms of his own prestige and the prestige of the Federal Government, that the President shed the role of amiable vacationist, and assume the role of resolute national leader in time of crisis. For if the worst comes to worst in Little Rock, resolute national leadership may be badly needed to avert the ugly prospect of widespread violence throughout the South for years to come.

Nation Is Facing A Grave Crisis

President Eisenhower has issued a proclamation ordering the people of Little Rock to cease interference with Federal court directives on school integration.

On Monday a mob of about 1,000 persons prevented school attendance by eight Negro children. The mob was described as "frenzied." The fight was bloody. Many persons were injured.

Dwight D. Eisenhower has sought to lead the nation along a moderate, middle-of-the-road path. He is a good and kindly man. Under his oath to uphold the Constitution, which millions of Americans saw on their television screens last January, the President had no choice but to take the action he did.

The proclamation clears the way for use of troops if requested by those charged with upholding the law—the mayor and the police. No troops have been ordered into Little Rock. But they will be available if needed to uphold the law.

This is the gravest hour in the nation's domestic affairs which this generation has known. Our country and its integrity under the law must come first. If law and order are not superior to lawlessness and defiance then anarchy replaces government.

But every American of sensitive heart and mind will pray that order may be restored and maintained without resort to troops.

Not since 1914 when Woodrow Wilson issued such a proclamation, and found it necessary to send troops into an Arkansas mine dispute, has such a document been issued.

There is yet time for reason and law to prevail in Little Rock. The President earnestly hopes troops will not be needed. But he also wishes the people to understand that law must be supreme.

We join millions of Americans in the prayer that the available troops never will be needed in Arkansas—or any other state.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Faubus Win Laid To Negroes' Vote

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON—Gov. Orval Faubus, who blew up the segregation storm in Arkansas, was helped into office by Negroes who sold their vote.

An overwhelming majority of the 65,000 Negroes who voted in the 1954 Arkansas primary cast their ballots for Faubus. This gave him more than the 5,000-vote margin by which he defeated ex-Gov. Francis Cherry.

Evidence has now come to light that the Faubus forces paid cash on the barrelhead for Negro votes. This has stirred the head of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, to preach repentence to her people.

"It is unforunate that Negroes put Faubus in office," she told this column. "We hope the Negro won't be so quick to sell his vote in the future. We believe the Negro has been convinced his constitutional rights are more valuable than a few tainted dollars. It is time for Negro voters to stop being misled by professional exploiters. The day of vote selling has passed."

She said she knew several Negroes who were paid to vote for Faubus and Negro leaders who took money to campaign for him. This was confirmed by I. S. McClinton, president of the Arkansas Democratic Voters Assn., and other responsible Negro leaders. This column also talked to Negroes who acknowledged they had accepted "expense money" from the Faubus forces.

The Rev. W. H. Hall, who directed Faubus' campaign among the colored people, denied receiving more than a "nominal sum."

"No more than $500 passed through my hands, counting what I got," he told this column. Most of the money went to car owners to haul voters to the polls, he said.

Queen Needn't Stretch

On secret State Department orders, Chrysler engineers are altering the limousines Queen Elizabeth will use in America. The problem is to jack up the back seats without hoisting her feet off the floor.

It will take two parade limousines to keep up with the Queen. These will be identical, fawn-colored Chryslers. While one is delivering her to her plane, the other will be waiting at the next airport for her arrival.

So that the Queen and public can get a better view of each other, the State Department ordered the back seats raised four inches. This caused consternation, however, over whether her royal highness' legs might be left dangling.

Chrysler engineers, who are working on such precision projects as the Jupiter guided missile, got out their slide rules and calculated Queen Elizabeth's measurements from her pictures. Then they hunted up a girl with the same specifications.

The model tried out the accentuated seats, couldn't touch the floor. Result: engineers are now elevating the floor.

Note: Every move the Queen is expected to make in America has been carefully rehearsed with stopwatches. Her cavalcade will slow down for crowds, speed up as the spectators thin out. This should take her through cities, the timekeepers figure, at about the same rate as the average driver who obeys the traffic laws.

Weary But Wise

Dress-shop diplomat Max Gluck, new ambassador to Ceylon who couldn't name that country's prime minister, took such a cram course on Ceylon that he left for his post last week in a state of "extreme exhaustion."

He even carried a doctor's certificate to prove it. However, its purpose wasn't to impress the Ceylonese with how hard he'd studied but to ward off attorneys who wanted his deposition in a $185,000 lawsuit.

The suit was filed by M. J. Spiegel, Chicago businessman, who charged that Gluck had neglected to make the final payment on a chainstore purchase.

The doctor declared Gluck was so worn out from State Department briefings that it would be "dangerous" for him to testify. Spiegel's attorneys offered to postpone the deposition and keep Gluck in this country by court order until his health improved. Thereupon the harassed ambassador decided he felt well enough to answer a few questions.

He spent the morning under cross-examination, but failed to show up for the afternoon session. He sent word to Judge Saul Street of the New York County Supreme Court that he was too ill to continue.

The judge finally let Gluck, presumably still exhausted, take off for Ceylon without completing his deposition.

Hoffa Polls Teamsters

Jimmy Hoffa, embattled crown prince of the Teamsters Union, made 60 long-distance phone calls last week to Teamster leaders around the country.

In the words of the marriage covenant, he asked whether they would take him for better or worse. Would they stand by him, he asked, no matter what Congress or the AFL-CIO said about him? Could he count on their support, he demanded, even if the AFL-CIO should expel the teamsters Union?

Every last one took a loyalty oath to support Hoffa down to the last ballot at the forthcoming Teamsters convention. Insiders claim the 60 leaders control enough delegates to sew up the presidency for him.

Note: No matter what the newspapers say about him, Hoffa is a hero to a little band of Cheyenne Indians at Lame Deer, Mont. He contributes quietly, but regularly, to a small factory that provides jobs for the Cheyennes.

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

Two Sovereignties At Little Rock

"Arms I sing, and the man."

Post Herald

The Star-spangled Banner will wave over two sovereignties at Little Rock this morning. And the Constitution of the United States will preside over two. May Federal Judge Davies of uncomprehending North Dakota remember it well.

Has Gov. Faubus assumed a a leadership for which he wasn't qualified either in ability or in principles and on which he has already fallen down?

Editor Grover Hall, of The Montgomery Advertiser, who seems to think so, may learn today, if his pre-judgment is correct, even though that will not excuse pre-judgment.

* * *

THE FACT of not being ardently a segregationist or a states righter is in Gov. Faubus' favor for this leadership.

The South can't win without the constitutional liberals.

And the constitutional liberals can be won. They were among that "motley" Lyndon Johnson put together to pass the jury trial amendment for the Civil Rights Bill.

That majority has been forgotten because the impatient and exasperated passage of the bill a few days later with the amendment emasculated.

There is liberal support for the Southern cause—such as Borah gave it once, and Taft, constitutional liberals both.

If Faubus wins in any degree today, nothing may succeed like his success—because it will be the success not of a Southerner alone but of a constitutional liberal.

He may turn out to be as sorry a figure as Time Editor Ashmore of The Arkansas Gazette, and — erractically — Grover Hall make him out to be—but not yet.

* * *

True, he "surrendered" to a Federal summons as Gov. Dewey in New York refused to do in 1953 and as Gov. Byrnes in South Carolina refused, of course to do.

But in Gov. Faubus' case the issue is not a casual one as in the others but a world-wide, emotion-charged one.

He could be biding his time for a more useful and meaningful stand-taking in the Federal course. Certainly he has steadfastly maintained to this writing, his position as regards the National Guard at the school, and that is the big issue in the public's eye.

We shall see what we shall see.

* * *

A GREAT AND GOOD friend of the South has come to Birmingham. It is The Wall Street Journal, second only to David Lawrence's United States News in often agreement with and grave championing of our points of view.

The Journal has opened an office in the Comer Building, with pleasant-voiced Mrs. Elizabeth Goodner in command.

Many messages to this column agree that a new type of Negro leadership is not only necessary but available, and that it can count on a local following.

What could be more helpful than wide enlistment of such leadership with white leaders now to tell the world that (1) there is no reign of terror in Birmingham in spite of conscienceless representations to the contrary, (2) that the threat of one is in our minds, (3) that our officers of the law are alert in every respect, (4) that we are equally determined to put down violence on the part of misguided white and agitation-for-agitation's sake on the part of misguided Negroes, denying no one his cause, whether it be for integration or against, but denying all a right to disturb our peace, menace our safety or foul our nest.

ATTORNEY GENERAL Patterson has found an excellent way to run for governor. He is doing it by compounding services to his state and people—as the loan sharks and the professional integrationists are learning to their sorrow.

WE SEE OURSELVES as others see us when Senator Langer's committee picks Alabama for especial attention in the matter of small loan insurance practices and explains that ours is one of the worst states.

The bitter truth seems to be that the very situation which cries to heaven for loan shark legislation makes it hellishly hard to get any.

These people seemed to be grained-in-our wood.

SOME PEOPLE get to be statesmen by studying public affairs and being educated. But Satchmo Armstrong has learned it seems by playing the trumpet. Not an American statesman but a Russian.

As such he has successfully fouled America now with more of the conventional falsehood about the South. That should win him a red, red ribbon.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GOVERNOR FAUBUS
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

Faubus Ignores Court Summons

Historic Hearing Opens In Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The history-making hearings on a requested injunction against Gov. Orval Faubus opened in U. S. District Court today — without Faubus.

Memphis P. 1

The governor was under summons to appear in the case in which the government is seeking to enjoin him from further interference with integration at Little Rock Central High School.

Jackson, Miss.

It was the second consecutive day on which he declined to come into court.

Am. 9-20-57

Yesterday, he refused a federal court subpoena for another civil rights lawsuit.

LITTLE ROCK (UP) — The Justice Department ordered Gov. Orval E. Faubus into federal court today in an effort to get an injunction commanding him to stop defying the U. S. government by preventing integration of Central High School.

He showed no sign of retreating in the face of a federal campaign that could eventually end in the unprecedented spectacle of a governor being arrested and fined or sent to prison for defying a U.S. district court.

A source close to Faubus said he doubted that Faubus would order the National Guard away from Central High or tell it to let Negroes register even if he were not under injunction.

Faubus, who accused U.S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies Thursday of being biased and asked him to disqualify himself in today's hearing, refused to say what he will do. He wouldn't even say whether he will attend the hearing.

"I have no specific plan, but rather a series of alternate plans depending upon the developments," he said.

The government ordered Faubus to court amid these developments on the segregation scene.

Newport: President Eisenhower said he was "deeply disappointed" because his meeting with Faubus in Newport last Saturday failed to solve the Little Rock controversy.

Washington: Vice President Richard M. Nixon met Thursday with former Brooklyn baseball star Jackie Robinson and other Negroes on Eisenhower's proposed conference with Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.). They sent the President a suggestion that he meet with a group of Negro leaders rather than with Powell only.

Dallas: Segregationist James D. Johnson charged last Thursday night the federal district court in Little Rock has "absolutely no jurisdiction" in the integration dispute in Arkansas. He said under the doctrine of interposition even the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction in such a constitutional impasse.

An official source said he understood the government's plan is to call just enough witnesses and get just enough testimony for Davies to put Faubus under temporary injunction.

This source said the government then plans to drop the whole thing, because once a temporary injunction breaks the stalemate and gets integration sarted, there will be no need of a permanent injunction.

SAYS JUDGE BIASED

Faubus contends that he is not opposed to desegregaton in itself, but he called out the National Guard at Central High School because he was convinced that if Negroes ever got through its doors, a bloody riot would break out.

Sources obviously with access to FBI files said flatly that Faubus has "no evidence" of any threat to peace and order in Little Rock.

The government will try to prove, and the burden of proof is on it, that there is no danger of bloodshed and that Faubus is merely using his fears as a means of preventing integration from starting in Little Rock.

In asking Davies to disqualify himself, Faubus cited seven points which he said showed Davies was biased for the plaintiff.

Among them were charges that members of Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's staff had been "in touch" with Davies, that U.S. Atty. Osro Cobb has been giving Davies daily FBI reports on Faubus and that a secret FBI report was based on "hearsay."

Donald C. MacQuineas, chief of the Justice Department's civil division general litigation section, and Carl Eardley of the same department, talked late Thursday with Mann and three of the Negroes. MacQuineas and Eardley were sent from Washington to "assist" Cobb.

Plot Against Integration?—Arkansas' Governor Orval E. Faubus, left, and his guests at the Executive Mansion in Little Rock, Ark., last Aug. 22, seem very pleased over whatever it is they are talking about. It could have been the "Georgia Plan" to thwart school integration, for the guests are Georgia's Governor Marvin Griffin, center, and arch-segregation strategist Roy V. Harris, right, of Augusta, Ga. But Governor Faubus told The Courier "It wasn't mentioned." The Georgians had spoken in Little Rock the night before and spent the night in the Faubus mansion at Faubus' invitation.—Democrat Photo by Moon.

SOUTHERN GOVERNORS CAUTIOUS ON FAUBUS

P. 12 Section 3

Some Admit Relief Arkansan Called Off Troops

M'KELDIN CONDEMNS HIM

By KENNETH TOLER
Staff Writer

ATLANTA, Sept. 21.—Southern Governors, meeting here Saturday in advance of their annual conference at Sea Island, were cautious in comments on the Arkansas public school-National Guard controversy.

However, they appeared—and some admitted — relieved that Gov. Orval Faubus had called off the troops to leave a state's police power in a Federally-related issue to the courts for determination.

Only one Governor, Republican Theodore F. McKeldin of Maryland, who nominated President Eisenhower at the 1952 convention, spoke out. The others, six Democrats and two other Republicans, assumed a "no comment" attitude in view of a feeling that one Governor, without full facts, should not criticize or comment on the actions of another.

'Serious Mistake' Seen

Governor McKeldin pulled no punches in asserting that Governor Faubus' useof the troops was a "serious mistake."

"Governor Faubus, by his mistake, has done a vast disservice to the great state of Arkansas, arresting the progress of decades and reflecting unfavorably on the known tolerance and good will of Arkansas," Governor McKeldin said.

"It has perhaps delayed the industrial development in which the state was making such rapid strides."

The Maryland Republican also asserted that "it will be far more difficult to correct the harm which has been inflicted on our international relations by the Arkansas affair."

Governor McKeldin said if Governor Faubus "actually had any evidence or any reason to believe that violence was in the making at Little Rock, he should have presented it to the mayor and police authorities of that city."

"I have been around long enough, as a mayor and a Governor, to know that such situations usually can be handled by city police procedures without any display of military power," he said.

"If local authorities felt outside help was necessary, the Governor should have assigned state police—not soldiers to do police work."

Governor McKeldin said "regardless of what force was assigned to the job, the action should not have been in opposition to those against whom the violence might have been threatened."

"Certainly," he added, "the Negro children who sought the right, under the law, to register in the Little oRck school were not bent on violence. You don't keep a law-abiding merchant from opening his store in order to prevent a burglary."

Governor McKeldin said if Governor Faubus had "no sound evidence of prospective violence, as many seem to suspect, his sensational act would defy all logic from the standpoint of public good and would have to be attributed to personal purpose or personal prejudice."

Asserting full accord with President Eisenhower's attitudes and procedures in the case, the Maryland Governor said, "The Little Rock incident should be used neither for political advantage nor an unwarranted demonstration against a state of the unquestioned greater force of the Federal Government."

Case 'Not Political'

He said the questions involved "are legal and moral—not political—and certainly not military."

"They must be resolved with patience and due process of the law," he added.

Governor A. B. Chandler of Kentucky, who has been here campaigning for the Democratic Presidential nomination, said removal of the troops "was the best thing that could happen."

In speeches to Atlanta civic clubs during the past few days, Governor Chandler has said "integration is coming."

Governor Frank Clement of Tennessee, said states rights to the extent of one Governor not telling another what he should do in involved and for that reason he has no comment.

"Governor Faubus is the Governor of Arkansas and I don't know what his constitution provides in this relation," the Tennessean said. "In Tennessee however, it is a violation of the law to call out troops before law and order has broken down."

Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, said the Arkansas issue has "national significance" but he declined to comment further. He indicated that tension over the use of troops in exercise of a state's police power has been temporarily eased as a result of Governor Faubus' action.

Other governors here to attend ground-breaking ceremonies for a $250,000 building for their sponsored Southern Regional Education Program, declined to comment on the Arkansas situation were:

Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia, who stood on his earlier statement endorsing Governor Faubus' action; Republican Gov. Caleb Boggs of Delaware; Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina; Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia, and Republican Gov. Cecil Underwood of West Virginia.

Governor Hodges, chairman of the Southern Governor's Conference, said he does not expect

GOV. FAUBUS SAYS MILITIA WILL STAY AT SCHOOL TODAY

Commander of Guard Says Orders to Bar Negroes Stand

Mon. 9-16-57

New York

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 15—The Governor of Arkansas said today that National Guard troops would still be on duty in front of the all-white Central High School tomorrow.

He refused to say whether they would block the entry of Negro pupils, despite a United States District Court order for integration, as they have since the school opened Sept. 3.

Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, who as State Adjutant General is commander of the Guard, said there had been "no change" in his orders to bar Negro pupils.

Thus, despite the conference at Newport, R. I., yesterday between President Eisenhower and Arkansas' Gov. Orval E. Faubus, the integration impasse appeared to be unresolved.

After the conference, the President said in a statement that the Governor had stated his intention of respecting the decisions of the United States District Court. The Governor also said he would cooperate fully in carrying out his responsibilities in respect to these decisions, the President added.

The Governor, in his Newport statement, yesterday, promised his support to the "law-abiding" citizens of Little Rock in the observance of court decrees.

Appeals for Understanding

But the Arkansas Governor appealed to the Federal judiciary and the Justice Department to act "with understanding and patience" in implementing integration programs. He emphasized his own responsibility to preserve law and order and to protect the residents of his state from "violence in any form."

On arriving from Newport late last night, the Governor said he would hold a news conference this afternoon.

Today the conference was canceled, and Governor Faubus spent the day in the Executive Mansion.

An aide said "the Governor feels he has nothing new to add to the statements he has already made."

The aide was asked to take to Governor Faubus the question: "Will the Guard be on duty as usual tomorrow morning, when school reopens?"

A half hour later the answer came:

"As far as I know at the present time, the Guards will be there."

Another question was relayed:

"Will these troops be used to keep the Negro students out?"

"No comment," was the answer.

Governor Faubus conferred throughout the day with advisers and close personal friends.

While the Governor refused to reveal his plans, he has made it plan that he feels he has local enemies who are out to trip him on the school controversy.

Times

He has identified these hostile forces as being led by Harry Scott Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock's morning paper, and former Gov. Sidney S. McMath, who first brought Mr. Faubus to state office.

Meanwhile, Little Rock was tense and uneasy. Leaders of both sides waited to see what the Governor would do.

All through the day the various forces working towards a solution of the impasse sought clarification of the Governor's position.

One local official said:

"There'll be trouble unless the Governor clarifies his stand soon."

Although the Governor kept his own counsel, local persons and groups involved had much to say.

Those who pushed him into the use of troops to block integration adopted a "hopeful" attitude.

Sergregationists Confident

"The Governor just can't back down now," is the way one segregationist put it.

Those who favor the school board's policy of gradual integration are hopeful the Governor will remove the troops and stop blocking the Federal Court directive.

"Everyone is waiting to see what the Governor is going to do," said the Rev. Dunbar Ogden, president of the Greater Little Rock Ministerial Association, a foremost group for moderation in this community.

Mr. Ogden was one of four white clergymen who escorted the nine Negroes to the Central High School on Sept. 4. They defied the boos and jeers of angry demonstrators.

Mr. Ogden added: "Integration should take place at Central, as the courts have ordered. It must not stop or be postponed."

From a reliable source, meanwhile it was learned that the Governor had gone to President Eisenhower with a compromise plan that would have solved the Governor's dilemma. Governor Faubus, this source said, urged the President to agree to give Little Rock a one-year "cooling off" period.

There was no agreement to this propsal, the informant declared. The Federal Government, it was said, took the attitude that if the guard were no removed by Friday, the day of a scheduled hearing in Federal Court on the Governor's action, the Governor would face an injunction.

Unless the troops are removed, or unless they are instructed to protect the Negro pupils, the Negroes will not attempt to enter Central High tomorrow morning, Mrs. L. C. Bates, Arkansas State President of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said.

The association has prepared a complaint similar to that of the United States Attorney. It will be presented to United States District Judge Ronald N. Davies on Tuesday.

It is expected that the two complaints will be heard jointly Friday.

Virgil T. Blossom, Superintendent of Schools, said, "The schools will be open tomorrow to the Negro students. We don't know what the Governor will do, however. This is the watchful waiting time. But we intend to obey the court order as given to us by Judge Davies."

Meanwhile, the National Guardsmen held a lonely vigil in front of Central High in the sunshine. All was quiet, as the ccity of Little Rock experienced its second Sunday of conflict over the integration issue.

If any of the men and women strolling slowly down Main Street, or sitting on park benches had any thoughts of violence, they certainly did not express them outwardly.

The most excitement in town was furnished by a convention of the Veterans of the Spanish American War.

The sidewalk in front of the school was almost deserted, except for the troops.

"I guess the men are getting tired by this time," said Capt. Bernie Hargis, in charge of the unit.

To make their stint less exacting, the guardsmen, some of them young enough to be in high school themselves, had borrowed the chairs from the classrooms and "stood" guard sitting underneath the shady maple trees on the school lawn.

Could Bar Funds, Uniforms and Equipment if State Used Militia Improperly

Thurs. 9-5-57

By JOHN W. FINNEY

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4—The use of National Guard troops in the school integration controversy at Little Rock, Ark., demonstrates the split personality of the nation's oldest military organization.

The guardsmen—descendants of the militiamen and minute men of colonial days—wear, in effect, two hats—state and Federal.

New York

In patrolling the grounds of the Central High School in Little Rock, the guardsmen are acting as state militiamen responding to orders of their Governor, Orval E. Faubus.

But in carrying out the Governor's orders, the guardsmen are using equipment—guns, uniforms, and vehicles—furnished them by the Federal Government as members of the reserve of the national military establishment.

No Official Study Yet

Defense Department officials were watching the use of the Arkansas National Guard troops with close but nonofficial interest. Thus far the Defense Department's legal and manpower sections have begun no official study of the implications of the guard's use in a controversy between state officials and a Federal judge.

The immediate reaction of defense officials was that Governor Faubus was for the present within his rights in employing the guardsmen. It was pointed out that the Governor's announced intent in ordering up the guardsmen was to "keep order"—a traditional role assumed by the guard in event of civilian disturbances within a state.

Defense officials theorized that a Federal vs. state conflict in use of the guard might not become clear cut unless District Judge Ronald N. Davies should rule that the Governor's actions were in contempt of his order for immediate integration in the Little Rock high school.

What steps the Defense Department could take then could only be speculated upon, since there are no clear-cut precedents. Defense officials are reluctant to drop threats into an already explosive situation. The Defense Department, however, is not without weapons and authority over the militiamen of the Governor.

The Defense Department, for instance, could withdraw Federal recognition of teh Arkansas National Guard as a member of the national military reserve.

As other steps, it could stop Federal contributions to the Arkansas National Guard and recall the equipment and uniforms allocated to the state's units. Or the officers of the Arkansas National Guard could be accused of violating the oaths they took as members of the national reserve to uphold the Constitution of the United States.

Neuberger Asks Action

Senator Richard L. Neuberger, Democrat of Oregon, urged that the Defense Department "review immediately" the possibility of cutting off Federal contributions to the Arkansas National Guard. In a telegram to Charles E. Wilson, Secretary of Defense, and his successor, Neil H. McElroy, Senator Neuberger asked:

"Is it either advisable from the standpoint of public policy or within the law for such contributions to continue if the Arkansas National Guard is to be an instrument used for avoidance of complying with an order of the Federal District Court?"

The Arkansas National Guard, like the guard units of other states, receives contributions from the Federal Government so the guardsmen can train and qualify as members of the national military reserve. The contributions go for equipment, armory construction and pay of the guardsmen in the forty-eight weekly reserve drills and two weeks of active duty training.

In the twelve months ending last June 30, the Federal contribution to the Arkansas National Guard amounted to $5,508,290.

In their duties patrolling the Little Rock high school, the guardsmen will not be paid by the Federal Government since they are acting on behalf of the state.

The guardsmen actually belong to two organizations—the National Guard and the National Guard of the United States. The distinction is important and reflects the controversy since the earliest days of the nation over the proper role of the militia in the national defense establishment.

The National Guard is the historic state militia. It is responsible directly to the state Governor, with general training standards established by the Federal Government.

The National Guard of the United States is the reserve component of the national military establishment. Members of the National Guard of the United States can be called or ordered to active duty by the President in time of national emergency.

The concept of the National Guard goes back to the protective military organizations of colonial days, although the historic state militias did not formally acquire the name by law until 1913. The concept was embodied in the Constitution, which recognizes the militia of the states and provides that "the Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions."

There have been instances in the past when the guard, as the state militia, was used to defy the Federal Government. One of the earliest was in the Olmstead case at the start of the Nineteenth Century, when the Governor of Pennsylvania called out the militia to resist a decision by the Supreme Court. The ruling rejected Pennsylvania's claims arising out of the seizure of a British ship of war by an armed vessel belonging to the State of Pennsylvania.

Text of Faubus Interview on Use of Troops

Times P.18-C

Following is the text of a television interview of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas last night, as recorded by The New York Times: 9-9-57

New York

HINES—Governor Faubus, let's get right to the heart of this matter. Do you dispute the authority of a Federal Court to order integration in the schools of Little Rock!

FAUBUS—I do not.

Q.—Now, sir, may I ask you this? Former Governor Adlai Stevenson, on a television program earlier today which you may have seen, was asked what he thought about your action in this matter. And here are his words:

"I was both distressed and surprised by Governor Faubus' action because it appeared to me he called out the National Guard not to bring about compliance with the law but to prevent compliance with the law. It was done apparently largely to create tension which didn't exist."

What have you to say about Governor Stevenson's comment?

A—In the first place Mr. Stevenson was a long way from the scene of activity. In the second place Governor Stevenson, or anyone else outside the state, cannot know in detail of the circumstances and conditions that exist here as I do. In the third place you will note that he said that it "appeared" to him. It is true that it has been made to appear over the nation in some quarters that the Guard was called to prevent integration. That is not true. The public peace and safety of a community and of a state is paramount to all other issues and the Guard was called to keep and to maintain the peace.

Q.—I see. Now, as a result of your action in calling out the Guard this situation here has been described as close to a state of insurrection against the Federal Government. By your use of troops to defy a Federal Court order, are you by any chance practicing or advocating violent overthrow of the Federal Government?

A.—Certainly not. I spent four and a half years in the armed forces defending my country: the Federal Government, the State Government, all its people and their rights. I would be the last to consider any such eventuality.

FULLER—Back to the situation at hand, Governor. Will you have the Guardsmen at Central High School tomorrow under the same orders as they operated last week?

A.—There are no changes at this present moment.

Q.—You've called this a legal checker game, believe. Whose move is it?

A.—Well it's a little bit hard to tell at times.

Mr. SECONDARI — Mr. Johnson.

Mr. JOHNSON — Getting back to something raised down here just now, Governor. In your wire to the President the other day you pointed out that you had served as a soldier under the President. I mean when the President, of course, was a general. Were you perhaps that if Southerners can serve, be required to serve in the Federal Army that perhaps they also should have something to say in setting the policies of the Federal Government?

A.—Well, President Eisenhower in his address to the Governors of the conference at Williamsburg made this statement in substance, which I cannot quote exactly, but he said that the Federal Government was a creation and a child of the state governments, and that it should not become a Frankenstein that would engulf and destroy the separate state governments as set up. Certainly, there are certain inalienable rights of states which has been perhaps the bulwark and the strength of the Union. Because the law of each state feels that it has the right and has the faith in the laws that it can have something to do with the management of its own affairs. Then by just such feelings the strength of the Union is made greater.

Says U. S. Should Bend

Mr. Johnson—Well, in other words, Governor, do you think there are times when perhaps the Federal Government should, say, bend a little in its policies or its principles or even laws?

A.—Well, the implication of President Eisenhower's address to the Governors Conference was that the Federal Governorment—perhaps it was more expedient or more compulsory for them to bend than for the states. And he made a very, very strong speech for the rights of the individual states.

MR. CONSIDINE — Governor, a couple questions please. You said a moment ago there would be no change in the issue of orders to the National Guardsmen, "At this present moment." You used those words. Does that indicate there might be something later on tonight? A change between now and school time tomorrow?

A.—Mr. Considine, there is always that possibility in this situation, which has moved so rapidly.

Q.—Now, sir, you say that you called out the National Guardsmen to avert violence, I believe. A Federal Judge and others say there is no violence around. On what acts did you act yourself? What acts constituted what you define as violence?

A.—Well, the Constitution and the laws of the state lodges in the Chief Executive not only the power and the prerogative but the responsibility for maintaining the peace. And the peace is paramount. That has been an inherent obligation of each ruler of each nation down through the ages. It was the right before the Declaration of Independence or before the Constitution was written, or before the states were admitted to the Union, and I have acted on the responsibilities which I feel that I could not evade and on information which has convinced me beyond a reasonable doubt that my actions were proper and prudent under the circumstances that existed.

Tells of Circumstances

Q.—What were some of the circumstances, Governor?

A.—Well the over-all situation is a culmination of many things, Mr. Considine. The emotion, the building up of this thing for months, the attendant publicity which it has had, which has been somewhat nation-wide even before this time, even the Negro press which here, previous to school opening, in its headlines here in Little Rock said anger and threats mar school opening, police protection asked against possible violence.

Q.—What date is that, Governor?

A.—Friday, Aug. 30.

Q.—Governor, if an F. B. I. agent took one of these kids by the arm tomorrow and attempted to escort him through the lines, what exactly would happen? Would he be shot, or would they be shot?

A.—Bob, I sincerely hope that no one is shot, or that violence or harm comes to no one. Those are eventualities and possibilities with which we must meet as they come. I don't think it would be proper for me to comment as to what could or what should be done.

MR. HINES—Well, Governor, I have a question here that I would like to as you, feeding back to you two statements you have made. In the first place you had told me that you did not dispute the authority of the court to order integration. You have said just now to Mr. Considine that you sincerely hope that no violence will be done. If this is your feeling, then why don't you, as Governor, conduct some kind of an educational campaign designed to quiet down this trouble which you claim exists around here?

A.—We've been doing that, and I've done it for months. If you will look at the inflammatory circulars which been put out in this community by the hundreds and throughout the state, you will find me most heartily condemned by the extreme segregationists for my moderation in this respect.

Q.—Well now, sir, in that connection one of the most extreme segregationists it's my pleasure to know, John Kasper, said he didn't think he was going to bother to come to Little Rock because you were handling the situation so admirably here. He said this only last week. He said that he thought any real American ought to be very proud of what was happening in Little Rock. Would you comment on that?

A.—Mr. Hines, I cannot be responsible for irresponsible statements of irresponsible individuals. And his views and opinions or activities will have no bearing upon my decisions to maintain the peace and order for the people of Arkansas. In fact I have already issued statements to the press which have been widely circulated that he was not welcome to Arkansas and that his visit here would be definitely detrimental.

Sees Progress in State

MR. FULLER — Governor, hasn't Arkansas been considerably less vocal on the subject than some of the othe r Southern states?

A. — We have been less vocal and we have made more progress in this particular field than any state of the South.

Q. — Well, what then in your opinion triggered this situation that we find confronting us now? Was it something overnight, something that you discovered?

A. — No, it has been building for some time. And for ing for some time. And of course I watched it closely but no decision was made until almost the final hour. As I mentioned before the publicity in the newspapers and over the television and radio systems—and of course they have every right in the world to carry the news as it is made whether it is good or bad, I recognize that as a newspaperman myself — public meetings attended by hundreds of people in this area, widespread sale of weapons which have been reported to me and which have been verified, the organization of caravans to converge upon Little Rock on the school opening day.

All of these things have resulted in the culmination and made the situation such that I had no alternative, but to act to preserve the peace.

MR. HINES — Governor Faubus, in connection with these overt incidents that you are talking about, a great many of us newspaper men have been trying for the best part of the week to find out something specific about them. You said in the telegram to the President on last Friday, Sept. 6, that you have two people who are available to discuss "certain evidence upon which I acted to preserve the public peace." Offered to discuss this with the F. B. I. and the U. S. Attorney. Now how about getting really specific about these instances of build-up of tension?

A.—Well, Mr. Hines, you know as well as I do that we have no time here to try a lawsuit and all of this evidence runs iinto multitudes, items by the hundreds.

Q.—I'm not attempting to try a lawsuit, but where are these caravans that you learned about that the sheriff of Belasky County didn't know anything about, or that the Chief of Police of Little Rock didn't know anything about?

A.—Well let me remind you of something which perhaps you haven't yet discovered—that Arkansas people don't talk to strangers too freely. [laughter]

MR. SECONDARI—Governor, I'd like to ask you a question, Sir. Why did you bar yourself from the press since Wednesday? I've been told that since Wednesday—I just got here—but I've been told that since Wednesday it's been almost impossible to see you.

Won't Give Reason

A.—That is quite true and I am not at the moment ready to divulge the reason.

MR. HINES—Could it possibly be, Governod, that Arkansas people don't talk to strangers very freely?

A.—No.

MR. FULLER — Well, in your opinion, getting back to the Guardsmen at Central High, is there any authority in your opinion besides your own that can remove those guardsmen from Central High?

A.—None that I know of.

Q.—In other words the alk—the talk of federalizing the troops, calling them into the Federal service—you don't think would be legal as far as far as taking them out from under your specific command?

A.—That, perhaps, might be legal but if such is being considered, they will find, of course, that it is not the answer or the solution to this problem with which we are faced.

Use of State Police

MR. FULLER—Would you thn use state police for the same purpose?

A—The Constitution of the United States provides specifically that each state that it is necessary to its domestic peace and trainquillity that it maintain an armed militia. It doesn't have to necessarily be the National Guard.

MR. HINES—You have another source of troops if the National Guard is Federalized out from under you?

A.—Well, sir, if you would like to look through this immense stack of telegrams which you will find that I have received, you'll find offers to volunteer from half the states in the Union.

MR. CONSIDINE—Governor, why are we now surrounded by National Guardsmen? Why are the Guardsmen on the grounds?

A.—Well I think your question has the same motive and purpose that Mr. Secondari asked and I stated that I was not yet ready to divulge.

MR. JOHNSON—Governor, one thing that has been raised about your, about the question of violence. You had been a relatively, you had taken a relatively mild stand on the question of integration that is as compared to other Southern Governors. And suddenly you've come up saying that e have these threats and yet you had given no advance indication that there was trouble brewing. Why didn't you, in other words, why did you wait until the final hour as you just said.

A.—Ken, I had hoped that they might dissipate, that such developments would not occur. Also, it is well known that a number of cases are now in court in Little Rock in both the state and the Federal courts. If time had been given to litigate these matters to a conclusion, so that the people could realize what is the law of the land in relation to the matters of integration as to methods and how rapid it must be and so forth, I think it would have had definitely a settling influence upon the people of the community. But no such opportunity was given. Now, in relation to the integration problem, Arkansas has integrated all its public transportation systems. At least seven districts of the public schools are integrated. I notice in the press where it mentioned that progress had been made in North Carolina. Last week, while all of this was going on, more Negro children were integrated into one school in Arkansas—Van Buren—than that outnumber the total number that have been integrated in North Carolina.

We have integrated the state colleges. The university has been integrated for some time. And there are many other fields in which we have made progress. And this past week, while all of this was going on here in Little Rock, three more schools integrated. One, the second largest city in Arkansas, Fort Smith. Two, Van Buren. And third, Ozark.

As further evidence, if I may say this, that I'm not opposing integration as such, I think that each of you and the millions of Americans will realize that the dearest things to any individual are his sons and daughters. My son leaves this day to attend tomorrow's classes in an integrated state college in Arkansas. The records will reflect that his enrollment there was made some time before the developments in Little Rock which have come of such nationwide interest.

Says History Will Tell

MR. HINES—Well, Governor, this raises precisely a point that is raised in a great many minds throughout the country. Why is it, if integration can take place in Hoxie, in Van Buren, in Ozark, in Fort Smith, why can't it take place here in Little Rock?

A.—Mr. Hines, those are questions which may be answered in all their clarity only by history itself. I have given you some of the reasons for the building up of events which led to this situation here in Little Rock. I only know beyond any reasonable doubt that it exists. As to why, perhaps no one could give you the reason. All of them in all its details, and certainly there would be divergence of opinions, as there certainly are on this matter.

Q. — Now I would like to ask just one more question. Right across the river from us is the town of North Little Rock, about half the size of Little Rock, that was supposed to start its school term tomorrow. Today the School Board of North Little Rock has suspended, I understand, its integration order. Do you plan to put any National Guard troops around the high school at North Little Rock? Tomorrow!

A.—I have no such plan at the moment and I've received no information as to what the situation might be there tomorrow.

Q. — If a Negro student were to appear at North Little Rock High School and ask for admission in your opinion would he get that—would he be allowed to come in!

A.—Mr. Hines, I wouldn't want ot answer for the school authorities.

MR. JOHNSON—Well, in that connection, Governor, I don't believe it's been asked you, do you have any plans to remove the troops at Central High? Is there anything building up to get those troops away from there?

A.—We hope to remove them just as soon as the situation will warrant.

MR. FULLER—What could break the impasse? What could make you withdraw the troops?

A.—You know, that's the million dollar question right now.

MR. CONSIDINE—Governor, there's been soume suggestion that you are the person chosen by several Southern Governors to make a test case of this. Do you care to comment on that?

A.—No, I don't mind to comment, Mr. Considine, there is no vestige of truth in it whatever. I have not conferred with any other Southern Governors or the members of any organization whatsoever, anywhere in the South, in relation to the problems of Arkansas, or to this problem.

Q.—Just one other question. Would you duck a Federal subpoena if an attempt was made to serve it on you?

A.—That is an eventuality which I must decide if and when it should come. It would depend upon a number of things, of course.

Denies Contempt Action

Q.—In your opinion, Governor, are you in contempt of court now?

A.—No, Sir. I am fulfilling my obligation as the Governor of a state to maintain peace and order, and that is paramount to all other issues. I cannot see hoy that I can be in contempt. The Supreme Court has not said that these children must enter the school on such and such a date. President Eisenhower himself in many instances has recognized the difficulty of the problem and that it may take days, and in some instances weeks in others, and months in others, and even years in other places.

MR. HINES — Governor, going back to a question that Mr. Considine asked, you said, did I understand you correctly, that you had not discussed this topic with any other Southern Governor?

A.—That is right.

Q.—On the twenty-second, I believe, of August, 1957, just a couple of week ago, Governor M. E. Griffin of Georgia was here addressing a Citizens Council meeting, a meeting which you did not attend.

A.—Right.

Q.—After that the Governor of Georgia was the guest of the Governor Arkansas right here in this room.

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—What did you talk about?

A.—Pleasantries. Duck hunting, quail hunting in Georgia, and the subject was not mentioned, as God is my witness.

[Unidentified]—Well, you did credit Governor Griffin with creating some of the feeling that caused you to call out the Guard, did you not?

A.—Yes, I did in my testimony before the Chancery Court where an injunction was granted against the school board based upon the situation which was made manifest to the court and which the Federal judge completely ignored.

Mr. HINES—Then may I ask whether you regard the Governor of Georgia as having done the State of Arkansas a favor by coming in here and making what you must regard as inflammatory remarks?

A—Mr. Hines, I don't want to be critical of a fellow Governor. I have entertained also in this mansion Republican Governors of the nation. I also only a short time ago sent an invitation to Vice President [Richard M.] Nixon for he and his party to be my guest at the mansion early next year while he is attending a certain event in Little Rock. It is a courtesy which is extended to the sovereign Governors of sovereign states and public officials, Federal and others as well.

Q.—Yes, but have any of these other Governors who came in and accepted your hospitality created a situation which you had to call out the National Guard to cope with?

A.—Well we must not conclude or at least I cannot that Governor Griffin created the situation.

Q.—But apparently you told the Chancellor in Chancery Court something to that effect, didn't you?

A.—I certainly did and I am willing to say so now, that he contributed to the situation that developed but when an explosion is imminent it is of small consequence what it is that triggers it.

Q.—May I ask whether the Governor of Georgia would be welcome to come back here again and speak to a White Citizens Council in Little Rock?

A.—I can only say this: that I did not invite him in the first place.

MR. CONSIDINE—Governor, I have but one more question. You said in your wire to Mr. Eisenhower that your phones had been tapped, presumably by the F.B.I. or some Government agency, and he denied this quite vigorously as you know.

A.—Yes.

Q.—Could you give us some specific detail of what evidence you have that they were tapped?

A.—Well, Mr. Considine, during the war I was an undercover agent seeking out subversives within the armed forces and was in the combat intelligence in Europe. And I worked with the C.I.C., the C.I.D. As a Federal official, being a postmaster after the war, I worked very often and very closely with the F.B.I. I know their methods and I know what they do. And I do not have the least doubt that they tapped my telephone wires.

Hopeful for Peace

MR. HINES—Well, what would they do if those wiretaps—

A.—I don't know. Of course, it is well known that it is illegal. But they would like very much to know, I think, what our next move would be.

MR. CONSIDINE—What's your best guess, Governor, on howe long the situation will be at Central High School? Day? Week? Month? Semester?

A.—I'm hoping that it dissipates within the week.

Q.—Within this coming week? Will it dissipate tomorrow? Tonight?

A.—It could if those of the Federal authorities will exercise due prudence in caution and understanding of our situation, and of my inherent powers and obligations to maintain the peace, and help to effectuate in some manner a method whereby this can be resolved, by litigation, by the settling of questions as we've always settled them in America, by peaceful means and in the courts of the land, then it could be resolved very, very simply.

MR. FULLER—Would that mean that the Federal Government would have to recede from its present position that integration must proceed immediately?

A.—I can see no alternative at the moment.

MR. SECONARI—If you would receive a direct appeal from President Eisenhower to comply with the court decision, would you honor it?

A.—Mr. Secondari, how can I comply with the court decision if it means the outbreak of violence and disorder and bodily harm to members of both races in this community! My first and greatest obligation, as I so often said, is to maintain the peace and good order of this community and protect persons and property. And that I must do under the circumstances.

MR. HINES—Isn't it possible, Governor Faubus, that if you stopped talking so much about violence some of the people would stop thinking so much a bout it?

A.—No sir, Mr. Hines. I know whereof I speak. I know as much of this state as anyone. I was born and reared in this state and all my life has been spent here. And simply to ignore something is not going to make it go away.

MR. SECONDARI—Governor, I think we have time for just one question. Sir, you stated in a telegram to President Eisenhower that you had sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Arkansas. It seems possible or plausible that the two Constitutions may find themselves suddenly at loggerheads. In that case, which will you uphold, sir?

A.—I cannot foresee that any such eventuality would come about. We are a law-abiding people in Arkansas and if there should be conflict between the laws at the present time, then the proper way to resolve them is by litigation to a conclusion in the courts and then we in Arkansas will abide by the law.

Q.—Thank you, Governor.

A.—As we always have and as we are now.

Q.—Thank you very much, Governor Faubus!

FAUBUS COMPARES HIS STAND TO LEE'S

Says He Will Remain Loyal to People of Arkansas—All Is Quiet at School

By HOMER BIGART
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 4—Gov. Orval E. Faubus said today that he had made a decision as painfully difficult as the one that had confronted Robert E. Lee at the outset of the Civil War. Times, P.1

"Lee was offered command of the Federal Army in 1861," Governor Faubus recalled. "Lee decided to remain loyal to the people of his state." New York N.Y. Sat. 10-5-57

"The Democratic party of the North wants me to go along with them on the integration issue. I will remain with the people of Arkansas."

Governor Faubus said he had come under no local pressure to change his stand on integration at Little Rock Central High School. It was a stand that forced President Eisenhower to send Federal troops into this city to uphold Federal Court decisions and to safeguard the nine Negro students registered at Central High. Sat. 10-5-57

It was a quiet day in Little Rock. The nine Negro boys and girls attended school without incident. But no early solution to the crisis seemed likely.

There was no break in the impasse reached Tuesday night when a compromise plan for the withdrawal of the Federal forces collapsed. Times

The plan, worked out by a committee of four Southern governors, was conditioned on a statement by Governor Faubus to uphold law and order and to refrain from obstructing Federal Court orders. But Governor Faubus's statement was rejected by President Eisenhower as not sufficiently binding. Yesterday Governor Faubus complained that what the President sought was his "unconditional surrender." Herald N.Y.

REFLECTIVE MOMENT: Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas, left, ponders the words of Representative W. F. Norrell at Little Rock luncheon of Arkansas Press Association.

Governor Faubus was in a relaxed mood. "I'm not a stubborn man," he said. "When I make a decision, I'm firm, but I'm always willing to review it." P.C18. Sat 10-5-57

The Governor said his local critics were "unable so far to get up any steam."

"They tried for weeks to get some one to say that the integration crisis was hurting Arkansas' industrial development," he said.

"The other day they finally found some one, a business consultant, to make such a statement."

Governor Faubus shook his head.

"In the Twelve Apostles there is one Judas," he said.

Governor Faubus apparently was referring to Dr. Charles H. Carpenter of Little Rock, who told reporters Wednesday that the local turmoil was a "terrible misfortune for the state." Dr. Carpenter, who described himself as a consultant for several firms considering plant locations in the South, feared that the integration riots had scared off industries and had "cost Arkansas thousands of new jobs."

Damage to State Denied

Governor Faubus denied that the state's economy had been adversely affected by the Little Rock episode.

"Three industrialists who moved to this state during the last eighteen months have written letters approving my stand," he said.

He asserted there had been no resignations on the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission headed by Winthrop Rockefeller. The commission is seeking new industries for Arkansas, which has the second lowest per capita income in the United States.

The Governor denied reports that Mr. Rockefeller had threatened to resign.

"Mr. Rockefeller has always been circumspect," the Governor said. "To do a good job in this field you have to be circumspect."

Mr. Rockefeller has described himself as a "gradual integrationist." At a speech before the Greater Little Rock Women's Republican Club in April, 1956, Mr. Rockefeller called the racial segregation issue one of the roadblocks hindering industrial development of the South.

He warned at that time that industry would avoid Southern states that had taken a adamant stand on integration questions until "problems of law and order" were resolved.

Governor Faubus today found comfort in his mail. He said he was "amazed" at the support he said he was getting in letters and telegrams. Sixty per cent of these came from "outside the South," he said, and "90 per cent were favorable."

"A lot of people were unaware until they heard my last TV speech (Sept. 26) that we had made so much progress in race relations in Arkansas," he said.

"We have made more progress than all other seven states of the South," he said.

Says He Sought Delay

Governor Faubus said he was the first Democratic Governor of the South to place Negroes on the Democratic State Central Committee. He said he had never interfered with integration in Arkansas communities were integration was acceptable to the majority of the people.

But in Little Rock most people opposed integration, he said. All he had done was ask for a delay, a "cooling off period" before Negroes were admitted to Central High, he said.

At Central High School this morning fifty white students disobeyed orders of school officials and loitered on the steps of the main entrance when the Negro students arrived. Three youths waved Confederate flags but there was no recurrence of the yelling and taunting of yesterday and the day before.

Sixteen Arkansas National Guard troops deployed around the Negroes and escorted them from an Army station wagon across the school yard to the steps. There the Negroes were met by four paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division who led the Negroes up the ramp and into the school.

Attendance today reached 1,698 with 265 absent. There was no attempt by segregationists to pull another walkout after the admitted failure of yesterday's demonstration.

Barricades Removed

Barricades erected at either end of the street in front of the school after yesterday's walkout were removed. At noon the two-man patrols that had paced the sidewalks around the school since the renewal of disturbances Monday were also removed.

Virgil T. Blossom, Superintendent of Schools, said notices of suspension were being mailed to parents of sixty-nine students. Fifty of these participated in yesterday's walkout. Suspensions usually last three days.

Morale of the nine Negro students remained good, according to Mrs. L. C. Bates, chairman of the Arkansas Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "It was a fine day—no trouble," she told newsmen.

[illegible]a Brown, one of the six Negro girl students, who was absent yesterday because of illness, was back in class today.

Faubus Holds Up Call for Extra Session

Assays Support Before Call to Act On School Issue

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 30 (UP)—Gov. Orval Faubus blew hot and cold today on calling the Arkansas Legislature into special session to consider closing integrated Central High School.

He first said, "it is very likely that there will be a special session." Then he said "there has been no decision yet and it very well could be there will be no special session." Times Herald Post, P.1A

While Faubus sounded out sentiment among legislators on whether to call a special session, the 101st Airborne Division sharply reduced its guard about Central High School. Times 10-1-57

Fewer than 100 troops guarded Central today. They left the bayonets off their rifles and carried them in scabbards at their sides.

The nine Negroes who integrated Central last Wednesday under the protection of the bayonets of 500 paratroopers arrived again in an army station wagon, escorted by two jeeploads of troopers.

They walked across the schoolyard, escorted by one trooper armed with a holstered pistol, and entered the school with white students.

The troops pulled down the perimeter guard of men standing at parade rest 10 feet apart—around the school. This cordon was replaced with patrols of troopers, walking in pairs.

At the same time, the guard was removed from the school's doors. Barricades were removed from Park st., directly in front of the school, and traffic flowed freely past the building for the first time since the troops arrived.

Thousands of farmers and stockmen from rural Arkansas, many of whom feel keenly about integration, poured into town to attend the 18th annual Arkansas Livestock Exposition. Gazette

High Federal sources indirated that the next move of the Government would be to seek criminal indictments against ringleaders of violence at Central last Monday, the day before the troops moved in at President Eisenhower's orders. Gaz. 9-18

The City Council was expected to meet and to take up petitions to impeach Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann, who efforts to keep Central segre- has steadily resisted Faubus' gated. Times. 10-1-57

With paratroopers in firm control of the school, public interest here shifted to the question of whether Faubus will call the legislature into session and try to close Central High.

Faubus said there is a "possibility" it could be done by taking away state tax support. Then it might be reported as a private institution.

He conferred with Glen Walther, speaker of the House; Rep. Paul Van Dalsen, a House leader, and Hal Moody, the House clerk. Walther said he told Faubus it would take at least three days to prepare for a special session.

Faubus said eight northwest Arkansas legislators to whom he talked "had misgivings about whether anything worthwhile could be accomplished."

State Sen. Clarence Ball, who also is superintendent of schools at Parkin, Ark., told Faubus "there should be no consideration of abolishing public schools or any one school. It would cause a "multitude of insurmountable problems."

ARKANSAS

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
NATIONAL GUARD TROOPS
GOVERNOR FAUBUS

White House Is Silent as Faubus Bows

NEWPORT, R.I., Sept. 20 (AP)—The White House refused immediate comment tonight on the withdrawal of National Guard troops from Little Rock where they have prevented Negro children from attending school under orders of Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas.

Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell telephoned press secretary James Hagerty to inform him that Faubus had been ordered by a court injunction to remove the troops and permit integration at Central High School, and that the governor announced tonight he had complied with the order.

Hagerty said he immediately told President Eisenhower, but added:

"There will be no comment tonight for the present."

The President, who had conferred with Faubus last Saturday in an effort to reach an early settlement over the federal-state dispute, conferred by phone with Brownell earlier today after he was told that Faubus' attorneys walked out of the injunction hearing in the federal district court of Judge Ronald Davies.

Demands Ouster Of U. S. Judge

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 19 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus, taking the offensive, struck back at the Federal Government today with two last-minute legal actions before tomorrow's crucial court hearing on his use of the National Guard to bar Negroes from Little Rock high school.

First, he refused to honor a federal subpena summoning him to court as a witness in a suit involving four recently passed Arkansas segregation laws.

A few hours later, his attorneys moved to disqualify U. S. District Judge Ronald Davies—scheduled to hear the National Guard case tomorrow—on grounds that Davies is prejudiced against Faubus.

Davies himself will have to rule on the motion to disqualify.

Reporters asked Faubus if, having flouted one subpena, he will obey the second, summoning him to court tomorrow.

"You just wait and see," the governor replied.

He was smiling, almost casual in his manner. He gave the impression of a man untroubled by the events swirling furiously around his head.

The Arkansas Democrat reported, in a copyrighted story today, that if Davies orders Faubus to withdraw the guardsmen from Central High School in tomorrow's hearing, the governor will obey.

Then, the Democrat said, he will wash his hands of all responsibility for any violence—which he has predicted from the first—that may break out in Little Rock.

He also will carry his fight to a higher court, the newspaper said, by appealing to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

And, if necessary, he will go all the way to the Supreme Court, the report said, in an all-out fight for the rights of the states as against the powers of the Federal government.

The subpena that Faubus defied ordered him to appear before a three-judge panel in a suit brought by 10 Negro ministers. They asked the judges to set aside legislation, passed this year by the state Legislature, to preserve segregation in Arkansas schools.

The judges granted a motion to postpone the hearing on this suit. A somewhat similar suit is due for a hearing in a state court. They put back any further Federal hearing, pending the outcome there.

In refusing to obey the summonds to the hearing on the suit brought by the 10 ministers, Faubus told the court in a letter:

"Almost from the very beginning of our republic, it has been uniformly held that the chief executive is not compelled to comply with a subpena unless he chooses to do so.

"In this particular case, because of the obvious ulterior motive of those who obtained the subpoena, I do not choose to comply with it."

There was no immediate indication in Federal Court as to whether action may be taken to punish Faubus for denying its authority to come to court.

His lawyers then fired a hot "bias and prejudice" blast against Davies and asked him to step down from the bench in the big battle Friday. Their affidavit said:

"The Hon. Ronald N. Davies has a personal bias favorable to the plaintiffs . . . and a personal prejudice against this respondent, and would therefore be unable to conduct a fair and impartial trial and render a decision either of law or fact that would be free of prejudice."

In effect, it accused Davies of working closely with the Department of Justice, the U. S. district attorney, and the superintendent of schools in Little Rock to show that "Orval E. Faubus acted without just cause and in bad faith."

It said Davies took "hearsay" into consideration when he denied a petition to postpone the integration of Central High School. The affidavit quoted Davies as citing the words of Woodrow Wilson Mann, mayor of Little Rock.

"The chief executive of Little Rock has stated that the Little Rock police have not had a single case of inter-racial violence reported to them, and there has been no indication from sources available to him that there would be violence in regard to this situation."

However, the affidavit argued further, the mayor was not in court, a witness under oath, when he made the statement Davies took into consideration.

The much-discussed FBI report on Little Rock also was noted in Faubus' affidavit. This document, reported to run to 400 pages, lists the findings of the agents who ran down the rumors that violence was in the making in Little Rock, timed to erupt when the Negroes tried to enter Central High.

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation," said the governor's motion, "presented a report to the court which has not been made public but which affiant (Faubus) believes contains hearsay statements . . . Said report contains purported facts and conclusions indicating that Orval E. Faubus acted without just cause and in bad faith."

It was reported, on good authority, that Faubus will demand to see the FBI information in tomorrow's hearing.

If Davies grants the motion—as other Federal judges have done in civil rights lawsuits—there could be a delay in further arguments to give Faubus' attorneys time to study the FBI findings and prepare cross-examination.

Nation's Eyes on Little Rock as Troops Leave

By WHITELAW MacBRIDE

(Special to The Courier)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Little Rock is face to face with its conscience following the complete withdrawal of Federal troops from around Central High School.

• The question which Little Rock must now answer for the nation and the world is whether or not the city is equal to the task of dealing with the extremist elements of its population who might incite new trouble and violence.

Perhaps the answer lay in what happened in the Municipal Court chamber presided over by Judge Harry C. Robinson who has handed down his verdict in cases involving both white and Negro participants in the disturbances outside of Central High School and elsewhere in the city.

A TOTAL of 19 whites were arrested during the violence of last September. Of this group, Judge Robinson fined one, dismissed charges against 12, and suspended the sentences of the remaining half dozen defendants.

• Eighteen other arrests were made throughout this city. Of this number, eight people were fined, seven were Negroes. As for the remainder, the judge dismissed charges made against nine and suspended the sentence of a tenth.

Last week, Charles Partlow and H. Y. Turner, two known inciters, appeared before the judge. He fined both men and then suspended the sentences.

• The judge's actions have resulted in criticism from local white policemen. One told a New York Post reporter: "What's the use of complaining. We can expect to have a rougher time if we face the same situation again at the school."

On the other hand there were hopeful signs. For example, Negro parents attended a meeting of the P-TA without incident and the fact remained that the nine Negro students were still attending classes in Central High School, albeit with the resentments and intimidations of a wilfull minority being inflicted on them.

• ON THE DEBIT side of the ledger is the open prediction of Arkansas observers that Orval E. Faubus is a cinch to be reelected as Governor, unless he is faced with the opposition of an even more arch-segregationist candidate.

But a counseling voice has arisen from across the Mississippi river. Gov. Frank Clement, speaking in Charlotte, N. C., called attention to racial incidents in Levittown, Pa. and in San Francisco, where Willie Mays had been denied a home.

The Governor stated: "None of this means you and I have the right to defy the law. If we are going to wash our dirty linen, let's all go to the laundry together . . . North, South, East and West."

FORCED INTEGRATION EXPENSIVE FOR U.S.

Cost Of Federalized Guard Tops Two Million

LITTLE ROCK IS 'CALM'

By KENNETH JOHNSON

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 19.—Four weeks of military-enforced integration at Central High School here have brought a comparative calm to this city.

But it has been an expensive calm dollarwise, and the question also still persists as to what would be the situation after the troops leave.

When classes ended Friday afternoon, Federal troops had been at the school 25 days enforcing President Eisenhower's orders to carry out integration as decreed by Federal court directives.

Guards Federalized

Troops of the 101st Airborne Division arrived here from Fort Campbell, Ky., on the night of Sept. 24. On that same night, the Arkansas National Guard was federalized to take it out from under the control of Gov. Orval Faubus.

Army Secretary Wilbur Brucker Monday ordered the federalized Guard—numbering about 10,000 statewide—reduced to a force of 1,800.

But as of Saturday afternoon, completion of that order still hadn't been carried out. And based on Mr. Brucker's own figures of about two weeks ago, it has been costing about $95,000 a day to keep the Arkansas Guard "federalized."

As a process of multiplication, that adds up to a figure of $2,375,000 as the bill to date for keeping the Guard under Federal control.

The 101st is a Regular Army unit, and its expenses would go on whether it was stationed here or at its home base of Fort Campbell. However, there have been additional expenses of transporting it here.

When reduced to 1,800, the cost of the federalized Guard will be reduced correspondingly. Army spokesmen Saturday said processing of Guardsmen toward carrying out the reduction should be completed "soon."

Hope Situation Quieting

Meanwhile, school officials were hoping that conditions inside the school and in the city as a whole were quieting to the point that the situation might soon be such as to allow the troops to be withdrawn.

One Central High spokesman said efforts were being made to "assimiliate" the nine Negro students involved into the student body without further incident. He said that was one reason a ban on newsmen entering the school to observe integrated classes still hadn't been lifted.

"We try to avoid pointing a finger at the Negro students," the spokesman said.

However, some Central High students have vowed that once the troops are removed, they will try to "force" the Negro students out. But still other students, as well as the student publication, have urged peaceful "acceptance" of the nine Negro students and an orderly compliance with integration.

What Will Happen?

The question of what will happen after the troops leave undoubtedly is the factor which accounts for the soldiers still being here. It's a question which cannot yet be answered.

School officials, though, who are anxious for a return to normalcy, contend that each week has become progressively more "peaceful" within the school.

Some officials, however, were beginning to believe that the troops can be removed without necessity of further negotiations between the Governor and the White House.

Meanwhile, studies are scheduled to resume again Monday for the fifth week of integrated classes—and with troops expected to be on hand as usual.

Baptist Ministers Say Only Solution Is Removal Of Negroes

Gat. 10-12-57

Montgomery

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 11 (AP) —A segregationist Baptist pastor prayed tonight for the removal from Little Rock of federal troops who he said are "surrounding one of our city schools, without authority, and endangering the lives of our citizens."

The Rev. M. L. Moser Jr., made the statement in a prayer prepared for a meeting to which persons of all faiths were invived. He is missionary pastor of the Central Baptist church, the site of the meeting.

The Rev. Mr. Moser did not mention nine Negro students who are attending Central High School in his prepared text. But he and 23 other Baptist ministers said, in issuing a call for the prayer meeting, that the only solution to the city's racial crisis "is for the nine Negro children to return to Horace Mann High School where they legally and morally belong."

PROTECTION OF TROOPS

Horace Mann is a Negro high school. They now are going to Central High classes under the protection of federal troops ordered into Little Rock by President Eisenhower.

Another series of prayer meetings will be held in some 85 city churches of all faiths tomorrow morning. Sponsors say these services are designed only to seek divine guidance for a solution of the situation.

The Rev. M. L. Moser Sr., said in remarks prepared for tonight's meeting that the services tomorrow were called by a group of Jewish, Catholic and Protestant churchmen.

"Jews do not believe in the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ," he said. "Catholics, while believing in the deity of the Lord, pray through the Virgin Mary. Most of the Protestants involved in the call are of the modernistic persuasion.

"Modernists do not believe in the Virgin birth or the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ. We felt, therefore, that since prayer must be made . . . in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that a prayer meeting for those that are conservative in their beliefs about the deity of Christ should hold a separate prayer meeting."

The younger Rev. Moser told newsmen the Baptist ministers sponsoring tonight's meeting "believe that the Bible teachers segregation" of the races. The pastors are affiliated with various branches of the Baptist church.

"We are beginning to lose our freedoms," he said in his prepared text, "and even at this moment we find federal troops surrounding one of our city schools, without authority, and endangering the lives of our citizens.

"We know, Our Father, that force is never the answer. Men's hearts and minds cannot be changed by bayonets, tanks, machine guns, or any other type of weapon.

"Therefore, we pray that our national leaders might follow constitutional law and remove the federal troops rather than follow political expediency. We should be a nation of law, and where federal and state laws are violated by our leaders in Washington, it means that it will not be long until we will be a nation under dictatorship. . .

10-12-57

"We thank Thee for our state leaders, and especially Gov. Orval Faubus. We feel that he has been raised up for just such an hour as this, and we thank Thee for his commendable stand in using the Arkansas National Guard for the preservation of peace in our community, which was preserved until federal troops moved in to disrupt the peace and order of our city."

Faubus has maintained that the only solution to the crisis is the removal of the nine Negro students from Central High.

The Rev. Mr. Moser Jr. mentioned "our colored brethren of this city and of the South."

"Those who are Christians among them are our brothers and sisters in the Lord," he said, "and they too are facing serious difficulties and are in need of Thy help. We know that this trouble is not of their making and we do pray that they might be led even as we need to be led by Thy Holy Spirit.

"This trouble has been bad for all the people of our city and we pray . . . that peace might soon descend upon our city."

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — Jews, Catholics and Protestants bowed their heads in solemn prayer Saturday to beseech the Lord for a speedy solution to the Little Rock school integration crisis.

As church bells and chimes rang out across Arkansas, thousands of people of all faiths flocked to special Columbus Day services or observed a minute of silent prayer in homes and business houses.

ENDORSED BY IKE

The inter-denominational services drew the endorsement of President Eisenhower, Gov. Orval Faubus and the Little Rock school board—all of whom are involved in the integration stalemate which brought Federal troops to protect nine Negro students at embattled Central High School.

Divine guidance was asked for the leaders "of this community, state and nation," and prayers were offered for:

"Forgiveness for having left undone the things we ought to have done, for the support and preservation of law and order, for our youth in the schools of our community, for casting out of rancor and prejudice in favor of understanding and compassion, and for the people's resistance against unthinking agitators."

Three influential Presbyterian ministers pleaded for a "new dedication to the principles" of democracy "guaranteeing liberty and justice for all."

World

They three men — Dr. Marion Boggs, Dr. Hugh B. Hay and the Rev. Dunbar Ogden — told their congregations.

Sun. 10-13-57

NO MOB ACTION

"This means steadfastly refusing to take part in mob action or violence of any kind, to refrain from boycotts or intimidations or slander or evil speaking against any who may differ from you on any matter of public interest.

"Refrain from joining any group whose purpose is to defy the nation's law; commit (yourself) to the way of Christian love and highly resolve to carry no opinion to the point of disrupting Christian fellowship."

2,000 PERSONS

Some 2,000 persons attended services at Little Rock's 11 Roman Catholic Churches. The services included the litiny, rosary and prayer for public officials.

Rabbi Ira Sanders of the Temple B'nai Israel asked his congregation to pray that "sanity and good will sober the passions of men."

He expressed the hope that "out of the conflict that surges in our midst, we may develop a new sense of dedication to those higher values of the spirit, by which man alone can live."

Referring to "this critical moment in the life of our city, state and nation," Rabbi Sanders asked for "brotherly love and harmony" and said:

". . . Now we beseech God Almighty for forgiveness and reconciliation."

Saturday's united services, in which some 85 Little Rock churches took part, did not draw the support of some strongly pro-segregationist religious leaders.

Three fundamentalist - Baptist ministers, flanked by about 35 other pastors, held their own special services before a congregation of nearly 1,000 Friday night and prayed for the removal of the Federal troops.

Rev. M. L. Moser, Sr., said he and his other pastors did not feel they could take part in Saturday's prayer meeting because it was being sponsored by Jews who "do not believe in the Diety" of Jesus Christ, Catholics, who "p r a y through the Virgin Mary" and Protestants who are mostly "of the modernistic persuasion."

The segregationists ministers criticized President Eisenhower, flayed the use of troops and asked God to "help the outside world to understand that our only crime is our convictions." One pastor declared:

"We have the interest of the colored people at heart more than the politicians of this nation."

NEGRO STUDENTS TOOK PART

Among the thousands participating in Saturday's prayer movement, which drew nationwide support from church leaders, were the Negro students who have been attending classes under troop protection at Central High since September 25.

The colored children went to their individual churches accompanied by their parents.

Text Of President Eisenhower's Statement On Little Rock School Violence

NEWPORT, R. I. — (INS) — Here is the text of President Eisenhower's statement on Little Rock School violence as deictated to newsmen Monday by White House News Secretary James Hagerty: Wored Atlanta Const Atlanta, Ga

"I want to make several things very clear in connection with the disgraceful occurrence Monday at Central High School in the city of Little Rock. They are: Tues. 9-24-57

"1. The Federal Law and orders of the United States District Court implementing that law connot be flouted with impunity by any individual or any mob of extremists. P 1

"2. I will use the full power of the United States including whatever force may be necessary to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the Federal Courts.

"3. Of course, every right thinking citizen will hope that the American sense of justice and fair play will prevail in this case. It will be a sad day for this country—both at home and abroad—if school children can safely attend their classes only under the protection of armed guards. Wored

"4. I repeat my expressed confidence that the citizens of Little Rock and of Arkansas will respect the law and will not countenance violations of law and order by extremists."

Text Of Eisenhower's Talk On Situation At Little Rock

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—Following is the text of President Eisenhower's radio-television address from the White House Tuesday night: Commercial Appeal P 10 Wed. 9/25/57 - Memphis Tenn

My fellow citizens:

For a few minutes I want to speak to you about the serious situation that has arisen in Little Rock. For this talk I have come to the President's office in the White House.

I could have spoken from Rhode Island, but I felt that, in speaking from the house of Lincoln, of Jackson and of Wilson, my words would more clearly convey both the sadness I feel in the action I was compelled today to take and the firmness with which I intend to pursue this course until the orders of the Federal Court at Little Rock can be executed without unlawful interference.

Leaders Called 'Extremists'

In that city, under the leadership of demagogic extremists, disorderly mobs have deliberately prevented the carrying out of proper orders from a Federal Court.

Local authorities have not eliminated that violent opposition and, under the law, I yesterday (Monday) issued a proclamation calling upon the mob to disperse.

This morning the mob again gathered in front of the Central High School of Little Rock, obviously for the purpose of again preventing the carrying out of the court's order relating to the admission of Negro children to the school.

Whenever normal agencies prove inadequate to the task and it becomes necessary for the Executive Branch of the Federal Government to use its powers and authority to uphold Federal courts, the President's responsibility is inescapable.

In accordance with that responsibility, I have today issued an executive order directing the use of troops under Federal authority to aid in the execution of Federal law at Little Rock, Ark. This became necessary when my proclamation of yesterday was not observed, and the obstruction of justice still continues.

It is important that the reasons for my action be understood by all citizens.

Cites High Court Ruling

As you know, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that separate public educational facilities for the races are inherently unequal and therefore compulsory school segregation laws and unconstitutional.

Our personal opinions about the decision have no bearing on the matter of enforcement; the responsibility and authority of the Supreme Court to interpret the Constitution are clear. Local Federal Courts were instructed by the Supreme Court to issue such orders and decrees as might be necessary to achieve admission to public schools without regard to race — and with all deliberate speed.

During the past several years, many communities in our Southern states have instituted public school plans for gradual progress in the enrollment and attendance of school children of all races in order to bring themselves into compliance with the law of the land.

They thus demonstrated to the world that we are a nation in which laws, not men, are supreme.

I regret to say that this truth — the cornerstone of our liberties — was not observed in this instance.

Hoped For Local Control

It was my hope that this localized situation would be brought under control by city and state authorities. If the use of local police powers had been sufficient, our traditional method of leaving the problem in those hands would have been pursued.

But when large gatherings of obstructionists made it impossible for the decrees of the court to be carried out, both the law and the national interest demanded that the President take action.

Here is the sequence of events in the development of the Little Rock school case.

In May of 1955, the Little Rock School Board approved a moderate plan for the gradual desegregation of the public schools in that city. It provided that a start toward integration would be made at the present term in the high school, and that the plan would be in full operation by 1963. This plan was challenged in the courts by some who believed that the period of time as proposed was too long.

The United States Court at Little Rock, which has supervision responsibility under the law for the plan of desegregation in the public schools, dismissed the challenge, thus approving a gradual rather than an abrupt change from the existing system. It found that the School Board had acted in good faith in planning for a public school system free from racial discrimination.

Three Separate Orders

Since that time, the court has on three separate occasions issued orders directing that the plan be carried out. All persons were instructed to refrain from interfering with the efforts of the school board to comply with the law.

Proper and sensible observance of the law then demanded the respectful obedience which the nation has a right to expect from all the people. This, unfortunately, has not been the case at Little Rock. Certain misguided persons, many of them imported into Little Rock by agitators, have insisted upon defying the law and have sought to bring it into disrepute. The orders of the court have thus been frustrated.

The very basis of our individual rights and freedoms is the certainty that the President and the Executive Branch of Government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the Federal courts, even, when necessary with all the means at the President's command.

Unless the President did so, anarchy would result.

There would be no security for any except that which each one of us could provide for himself.

Nation Cannot Yield

The interest of the nation in the proper fulfillment of the law's requirements cannot yield to opposition and demonstrations by some few persons.

Mob rule cannot be allowed to override the decisions of the courts.

Let me make it very clear that Federal troops are not being used to relieve local and state authorities of their primary duty to preserve the peace and order of the community. Nor are the troops there for the purpose of taking over the responsibility of the School Board and the other responsible local officials in running Central High School.

In the present case the troops are there, pursuant to law, solely for the purpose of preventing interference with the orders of the court.

The proper use of the powers of the Executive Branch to enforce the orders of a Federal Court is limited to extraordinary and compelling circumstances. Manifestly, such an extreme situation has been created in Little Rock. This challenge must be met with such measures as will preserve to the people as a whole their lawfully - protected rights in a climate permitting their free and fair exercise.

Deplores Call To Violence

The overwhelming majority of our people in every section of the country are united in their respect for observance of the law—even in those cases where they may disagree with that law.

They deplore the call of extremists to violence.

The decision of the Supreme Court concerning school integration affects the South more seriously than it does other sections of the country. In that region I have many warm friends, some of them in the City of Little Rock. I have deemed it a great personal privilege to spend in our Southland tours of duty while in the military service and enjoyable recreational periods since that time.

So from intimate personal knowledge, I know that the overwhelming majority of the people of the South—including those of Arkansas and of Little Rock—are of good will, united in their efforts to preserve and respect the law even when they disagree with it.

They do not sympathize with mob rule. They, like the rest of the nation, have proved in two great wars their readiness to sacrifice for America.

A foundation of our American way of life is our national respect for law.

In the South, as elsewhere, citizens are keenly aware of the tremendous disservice that has been done to the people of Arkansas in the eyes of the nation, and that has been done to the nation in the eyes of the world.

Harm To U. S. Prestige

At a time when we face a grave situation abroad because of the hatred that communism bears toward a system of government based on human rights, it would be difficult to exaggerate the harm that is being done to the prestige and influence, and indeed to the safety, of our nation and the world.

Our enemies are gloating over this incident and using it everywhere to misrepresent our nation. We are portrayed as a violator of those standards of conduct which the peoples of the world united to proclaim in the Charter of the United Nations. There they affirmed "faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity of the human person" and did so "without distinction as to race, set, language or religion."

And so, with confidence, I call upon citizens of the State of Arkansas to assist in bringing to an immediate end all interference with the law and its processes.

If resistance to the Federal Court orders ceases at once, the further presence of Federal troops will be unecessary and the City of iLttle Rock will return to its normal habits of peace and order and a blot upon the fair name and high honor of our nation in the world will be removed.

Thus will betored the image of America and of all its parts as one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Arrests Promised By Mayor If Troublemakers Gather At Little Rock Tomorrow

WON'T BAR NEGROES

Mann Says He's Not Expecting Trouble, But Policemen Will Be On Duty

By DEAN DUNCAN
Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 21. — Troublemakers at Central High School Monday morning will be arrested, Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann said Saturday night as this town prepared for integration of classes at the 2,000-student high school.

Commercial Appeal

"Our policy is one that will permit orderly compliance with the law instead of obstruction. We are not providing an escort service, but we will not prevent integration of the school."

Memphis, Tenn.

Mayor Mann said he was not expecting trouble, but authoritative sources said at least 35 policemen will be on the scene Monday morning.

Negroes Silent

"We are expecting order," Mayor Mann said.

"Law enforcement officers will be on hand to deal firmly with any individual or groups who might try to create trouble."

Earlier Saturday, Little Rock school and police officials had cleared the way for the enrollment of Negro students at the school Monday, despite a plea from Gov. Orval Faubus for a delay because of the threat of violence.

Sun. 9-22-57

Whether the nine Negro children's advisers actually would try to place them in classes remained the big question.

Top city and county police officials met with Mayor Mann Saturday afternoon after school Supt. Virgil T. Blossom announced earlier Central High would be open to the Negro students Monday.

"Whether they come Monday is entirely up to them," Mr. Blossom said following a breakfast meeting of the School Board.

Adults To Be Barred

Mindful of the touchy situation, the superintendent said the board would bar all adults not employed at the school from the inside of the building for the first day or so the Negro children attend the previously all-white institution.

He said this would include newsmen and photographers.

Mayor Mann said after his 90-minute private conference with the law enforcement officers — including Police Chief Marvin Potts and Sheriff Tom Gulley — that officers would be on duty at the school merely "to keep order."

The Mayor's statement was prompted by a charge by a segregation leader that he had advised police to "escort the Negro students into the school Monday morning."

Notice Won't Be Given

Amis Guthridge, legal counsel for the Capital City Citizens Council, also charged he had been told by a city employe that "the white trash will get their heads beaten if they get in the way."

Referring to the possibility of violence, Mr. Guthridge said:

"If the communists and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are to be our overlords and masters under a police state we might as well find out now as a little later."

Commercial Appeal

The question of when the nine Negro children will try to enroll became a matter of speculation after Mrs. Daisy Bates of Little Rock, president of the Arkansas NAACP chapter, said the time of enrollment "has not been decided."

Sun. 9-22-57

She added, however, that no advance notice of the enrollment would be given to newsmen.

"The White Citizens Council would like to know what our plans are, but we aren's saying," she said.

Governor Faubus' plea for delay came in a televised speech he made Friday night, minutes after ordering removal of National Guard Troops from around Central High School in line with an injunction issued by Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies earlier in the day.

Urging a cooling off period before any attempt at integration, the Governor said it was inconceivable to him that parents of the Negro students would want their children in the school "in the situation that prevails."

The Governor, accompanied by Mrs. Faubus, left Little Rock's Municipal Airport at 2:05 p.m. for Sea Island, Ga., where he will attend the Southern Governors Conference starting Monday.

The Chief Executive, who said he had left no instructions with aides regarding the school crisis, said he and his wife would return here Wednesday.

Discussion Chairman

Plans were for the Air National Guard C-47 plane carrying the Governor and his wife to fly non-stop to Atlanta, where the couple were to be guests of Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin at the University of Georgia-University of Texas football game.

At the conference, Governor Faubus will be chairman of a panel discussion on means of attracting more industry to the South. Other panel members will include Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland and Gov. Raymond Gary of Oklahoma.

Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon of Morrilton will be acting governor in Mr. Faubus' absence.

Judge Davies Saturday morning signed the order which followed his ruling of Friday. The four-page preliminary injunction, filed with the Federal Court clerk, was merely a statement in more detail based on his ruling.

It enjoined the Governor and the Guard from "obstructing or interfering in any way" with integration.

'No Other Course'

However, it added that the order should "not be deemed to prevent Orval E. Faubus, as Governor of the State of Arkansas, from taking any and all action he may deem necessary or desirable for the preservation of peace and order."

Discussing the court action his attorneys followed before Judge Davies Friday, Governor Faubus said he and his advisers felt they had taken the only course open to them.

He said that for him to have submitted to testimony and questioning would have been waiving his "constitutional and sovereign powers" on the question of a governor's discretionary powers.

"We would have been in the position of submitting to the Federal Court, and if we had done this we would have jeopardized the constitutional right and independence and sovereignty of any sovereign state."

Would Have 'Enjoyed'

Actually, the Governor added, he would have "enjoyed" taking the stand in the hearing, but that legal advisers even outside Arkansas had advised against it.

He said the big question to be settled in the appeal he has directed his attorneys to take from Judge Davies order was that of whether a District Federal Court had authority to question or pass judgment on the sovereign head of a state acting under discretionary powers allowed him under the state Constitution.

'Ike' Confident Law To Prevail Over Violence

Commercial Appeal

By The Associated Press

NEWPORT, R.I., Sept. 21.—President Eisenhower Saturday expressed confidence "any violence by extremists" will be vigorously opposed by law-abiding people in court-ordered integration at the Little Rock Central High School.

Memphis Press-Scimitar 9-22-57

At his vacation headquarters, the President stressed his conviction that integration can take place without disorder.

He said Little Rock residents "are persons of good will and feel a responsibility to preserve and respect the law—whether or not they personally agree with it." He added:

"I am confident they will vigorously oppose any violence by extremists."

Mr. Eisenhower also emphasized that local authorities in Little Rock have announced they "are prepared to maintain law and order."

Press Secretary James C. Hagerty told reporters the President "has no knowledge of intended violence," adding, "but you know, and I know, there are such stories going around."

Mr. Hagerty commented that the Little Rock situation "is now in the hands of local enforcement authorities." He said he did not know of any plan to have Federal marshals outside the high school Monday.

Mr. Eisenhower indicated he was putting the full prestige of the presidency behind the school integration movement. This was further emphasized by Mr. Hagerty's announcement that the President will confer with Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell on the Little Rock situation when he makes a one-day trip to Washington Monday.

Mrs. Bates Thinks Troops Still Needed At Central

BY ALICE A. DDUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Mrs. Daisy Bates president of the Little Rock branch of NAACP, said last week that she did not think it safe to withdraw troops from Central High School yet. Even though the emotionalism has died down considerably, she still feels that it is not quite time for the soldiers to leave.

Mrs. Bates expressed hope that this thing would soon be settled so she could bring her son home. Her only child, Clyde, age 12, had to be sent away from home for protection while the Bates household was being threatened and fired into. When asked where Clyde was, she hesitated a moment and replied, "somewhere in Arkansas."

Mrs. Bates, who has served as counsel for the children during this bitter fight, said she receives an average of 50 telephone calls a day urging her to pull the children out of school. Some of the callers give their names; others give fictitious names.

When questioned on reported "economic boycotts" in Little Rock, Mrs. Bates said she didn't know whether there was an organized boycott, but she did know that the newspaper - "The Arkansas State Press" of which she served as editor until a month and a half ago had lost over $10,000 worth of business since 1954.

And she didn't thinkk that any boycott had been organized against businesses, but she had heard that people had just automatically stopped patronizing one store.

Mrs. Bates said she didn't think the jailing of John Kasper would have any effect on the thinking of the white segregationists in her section. John Kasper seems so far removed from them, she observed.

Mrs. Bates was presented a citation by the ACHR at the annual dinner Saturday night "in recognition of her competence, courage and constancy during this historic crisis when Little Rock and the nation are confronted with the consequences of the subversive dogma of massive resistance to effecting civil

FULBRIGHT REQUESTS FIB'S SCHOOL REPORT

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn.

Wants To Examine Survey Of Little Rock Violence

P. 19

FOR OWN INFORMATION

Wash. 10-23-57

From The Commercial Appeal
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 22.—Senator J. W. Fulbright (D., Ark.) Tuesday requested permission to examine a report on Little Rock school integration violence which the Federal Bureau of Investigation prepared for Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies.

FBI

In a letter to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr., Senator Fulbright said he wanted to examine the report for his own information. He did not ask that it be released to the press. He asked for a prompt reply.

Just Back From Europe

James Hagerty, White House press secretary, has said the report was prepared at Judge Davies' request and that it's up to the judge to release it.

Judge Davies later told The Commercial Appeal by telephone from his Fargo, N. D., office that he personally has no intention of making the report public.

Senator Fulbright, who returned from Europe Satuday, told Mr. Brownell he wants to familarize himself as much as possible with the facts in the Little Rock integration controversy before he goes to Arkansas.

He left for Europe in mid-September, about 10 days before President Eisenhower ordered Federal troops to Little Rock to enforce school integration. He was a delegate to the Interparliamentary Union meeting in London.

To Visit Over State

"It's regretable and tragic that Federal troops are in Little Rock," Senator Fulbright said. "The people of Little Rock and Arkansas do not deserve this treatment. The citizens of Arkansas are, and have always been, law-abiding people."

An avowed foe of forced integration, Senator Fulbright vigorously opposed the Civil Rights Bill in the recent Congress, as he has similar measures in previous sessions.

He plans to go to his home in Fayetteville next week, after visiting his daughters, Elizabeth, who is in college in Philadelplia, Penn., and Roberta, in college in Boston.

He plans to spend several weeks visiting over the state he arrives in Arkansas

Speaker Asserts Little Rock Could Decide Race Struggle

By JO ANN FLIRT
Advertiser Staff Writer

SELMA, Ala., Oct. 10—An Arkansas segregation leader told a crowd of 1,000 at a Dallas County Citizens Council rally here tonight, "Little Rock is the last battle. If we win at Little Rock, integration is dead."

The speaker, who received a standing ovation after a 90-minute speech, was Little Rock attorney Amis Guthridge.

"If we lose in Little Rock, the Republic of the United States is gone forever," Guthridge declared.

Guthridge, who served as counsel for the Citizens Councils for Arkansas and the capital city Council in Little Rock, said "we haven't had any violence to amount to anything." He said "we think Negroes are employed to go to these schools."

In his tirade against numerous persons, Guthridge assailed the superintendent of Little Rock schools, the executive director of the Little Rock Gazette, the president of the local Parent-Teacher Assn., Mayor Woodrow W. Mann of Little Rock, former Arkansas Gov. Sid McGrath, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and President Eisenhower.

Of the President, Guthridge said "Dwight David Eisenhower will go down in history as the sorriest president who ever disgraced the White House."

The attorney said he had withdrawn two children from Little Rock schools "because they were too good" to go to school under Supt. Virgil Blossom.

Little Rock and the State of Arkansas were chosen by "conspirators because they thought it was the weakest link in the chain of Southern states," Guthridge said. But, he added, the White Citizens Councils stopped "them in their tracks."

Selma Mayor Chris Heinz, who spoke briefly, declared "we will not have integration. Selma and Dallas County will be white as long as there is breath in us."

Also on the program was State Sen. Walter Givhan of Safford, named new chairman, who said, "There's no middle of the road now. It's time for all public officials to either get on our side or get on the other side. It's time for the white man to stand up and be counted."

On the speaker's platform were the Dallas legislative delegation, State Sen. Sam Engelhardt, who is executive secretary of the state council organization, and other local officials.

The meeting was held in the auditorium of the Selma Junior High School.

Little Rock Peace Holds

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 19 (AP)—The controversy over integration at Little Rock Central High School here simmered at a low point today.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who opposes the federal government in its protection of nine Negro children at the school with paratroopers and federalized National Guardsmen, was at Fayetteville, Ark., for the Arkansas-Texas football game.

At Fayetteville, Faubus repeated earlier statements that he "expected" a special session of the Arkansas legislature to deal with the problem.

Only Faubus can call such a session and he gave no indication when he might do so.

Troops were still on duty in the vicinity of the high school today despite the weekend recess.

BOTH SIDES STAND FIRM

Little Rock Racial Crisis Becomes Silent Deadlock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 10 (AP)—The Central High School racial integration crisis subsided today into a silent deadlock.

Gov. Orval Faubus stood firm on his stand that no compromise is in sight unless nine Negro students are withdrawn from integrated Central classrooms.

President Eisenhower has refused to withdraw regular Army troops and federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen from the school until he is satisfied that the court-endorsed Central High integration plan will be enforced by local authorities.

Both of them reaffirmed their positions yesterday. Eisenhower said he is hopeful it will soon be possible to withdraw the troops.

The six Negro girls and three boys were all in class today. As they have been since arrival of the troops, they were escorted on the campus by a detachment of guardsmen.

Eisenhower sent the soldiers in Sept. 24, the day after white adult mobs rioted outside the school. The rioting followed withdrawal of the guardsmen by Faubus, after they had kept the Negroes out of Central High for the better part of a month.

Faubus yesterday showed newsmen photographs which he said depicted soldiers and officers "sauntering through the shorts-clad high school girls during their gym class." He said he regarded this is indiscreet on the part of the troops.

Shorts-clad girls again went through gym classes on the playgrounds back of the school during the day. A few soldiers and officers went about duties in the immediate vicinity, without, however, seeming to draw any attention from the girls.

One of the Negro girls, Carlotta Walls, 14, was the pitcher for one of the two teams engaged in a shrill softball game. The white girls exhorted her by name as she pitched. She, in turn, slapped several of the white girls on their backs in congratulatory fashion for base hits or good fielding plays.

Integrated Classes End With Quiet Week At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 18 (AP)—The fourth week of integrated classes at Central High School ended quietly today with no sign of a break in the deadlock that keeps federal troops in this city.

Five Negro girls and two boys entered and left the building without incident. Terrance Roberts and Elizabeth Eckford, the two other Negro pupils, were reported home with influenza.

A mild ripple of excitement occurred this morning before the Negroes entered when an Arkansas National Guard officer ordered a white student to empty his pockets outside the building.

Out came several rubber bands and paper clips which the boy was suspected of shooting inside. The materials were confiscated.

Principal J. W. Matthews reported that "everything is running real smooth in the school."

An editorial in the semimonthly student newspaper said "The first six weeks have left their mark on many Central students." The editorial said some scholastic standings had been damaged by absence. It urged students to devote full attention to their studies.

Paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division and federalized Guardsmen are sharing the task of protecting the Negro students and maintaining order.

Half of the 1,100 paratroopers were ordered flown back to Ft. Campbell, Ky., this week. The Army simultaneously announced that 8,500 Guardsmen would be returned to Arkansas control while 1,800 would remain federalized, but no Guardsmen have been released yet.

Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger the adjutant general of Arkansas is to be retained on federal duty.

The paratroopers were sent here and the Guard federalized Sept. 24, the day after rioting erupted when the nine Negroes first entered Central High.

Tenth Day Brings Quiet At Central

No Attempt Made To Push Walkout By Young Students

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 4 (AP) —The white student body of Central High School today quietly admitted nine Negroes into their midst for a 10th day of integrated education.

Gone were the outward signs of teen-aged restlessness that built up all week and reached a climax in yesterday's walkout of 75 anti-integrationist white students. The demonstration was an admitted failure and there was no attempt today to push it further.

The demonstrators were suspended for three days. Nevertheless, attendance was reported at 1,725 out of the maximum 2,000, only 58 below Wednesday's peak figure.

There was silence, too, on the political front.

FAUBUS SILENT

Gov. Orval Faubus, storm center of one of the greatest Southern crises since reconstruction days, had nothing to say to reporters who met him on his way to his office.

President Eisenhower apparently stood on his mandate to Faubus issued earlier in the week. The White House demanded that Faubus unequivocally guarantee law and order in Little Rock and pledge no further obstruction to the first integration program in the city's history.

In return, the President said, he will withdraw regular Army troops from Little Rock and turn back to Faubus the federalized Arkansas National Guard.

The crisis began Sept. 2 when Faubus used the National Guard to keep the six Negro girls and three boys out of Central. He withdrew the soldiers Sept. 23 in compliance with a court order against further obstruction of integration.

MOBS RIOTED

Adult white mobs rioted outside the school Sept. 25. The next day Eisenhower federalized the National Guard and sent crack infantrymen of the 101st Airborne Division into Little Rock to open Central High to the Negroes.

Central's campus quieted down for a few days. But earlier this week the Negro students were abused inside the school and two of the boys kicked and struck. Yesterday's abortive white student demonstration was quickly squelched by guardsmen before it reached the riot stage.

Sixteen rifle-carrying guardsmen escorted the nine Negroes half way across the campus this morning. There four paratroop regulars met them and escorted the youngsters through the main entrance.

As usual, about 100 white students lounged on the steps leading to the entrance, awaiting the opening class bell. Yesterday and the day before, they hooted and jeered the Negroes, and even sought mildly to block their entry.

NO HOOTING

Today, although three or four of the white children waved Confederate flags, there was no hooting. The white students moved aside and made no attempt to block the Negroes.

One of the Negro girls, absent yesterday, reportedly because of illness, returned to classes with the others.

A military helicopter circled above the school area occasionally, apparently on the lookout for any concentration of anti-integrationists. But none was apparent in the vicinity.

One of the ringleaders in yesterday's demonstration left Central shortly after the class day began. She has identified herself to reporters only as "Jane."

A brunette, wearing glasses, she said she had gone in to try to arrange a return to classes when her suspension ends. Jane claimed a teacher falsely accused her of taunting the Negroes. She added:

"He told me he'd slap me down the front steps."

She left in a temper. Two other bobby-soxers — a short, stocky brunette and a cute, hazel-eyed blonde—walked out in sympathy with her. Both said they were not involved in yesterday's disorders.

Jane said she intends to try to return to classes next year. She declared:

"No nigger can keep me from my education."

THOSE WHO worked and argued so long and earnestly in behalf of a two-party system in the South are now impaled upon Eisenhower's Little Rock bayonet. For the immediate future, it seems certain that the Republican Party in the South is once again, not a party, but a stigma.

The election of a governor in Virginia Tuesday should provide a convincing measure of how much the occupation of Arkansas has injured the GOP in the South. Virginia was carried both times by Eisenhower and the present candidate of the GOP for governor, Ted Dalton, got about 45% of the vote in his last race and frightened the Byrd machine.

There could be no doubt but that Virginia was becoming a doubtful state, like New York, Michigan and California. In fact, it had got to the fantastic point where the Democratic nominee for President even made a campaign speech in Virginia.

The growth of the GOP was slow but sure throughout the South. Eisenhower got a majority of the votes cast by the Southern people, some GOP congressmen were supplied by the South and Montgomery went Republican.

ALL OF THAT is wiped out for the time. Those who agitated for two-party politics in the South are now left with their rueful reflections.

Their arguments had been powerful. If a one-party system was good for the South, why not for the whole country?

Why should people of conservative bent stick to the left wing Democrats just because grandpap was a Democrat?

Why shouldn't the South be a normal state of the Union, one where presidential candidates came to campaign for favor rather than take for granted?

These arguments were taking hold. And everytime a new generation of voters was enfranchised, the ancient prejudice of the South was that much diminished.

BUT THE Little Rock bayonets have checked this political revolution, or rather evolution. The Democrats, particularly office-holding professional Democrats who oppose two-party politics as something exotic, are now saying "I told you so."

The field is left to them. There is nothing to say. But what will they offer in behalf of the Democratic Party?

THEY talk about the imperative necessity of "keeping our Southern statesmen on the important committees," etc. Did that block enactment of the civil rights bill in the present Democratic Congress?

They really ought to be ashamed of themselves for hornswoggling the people with that argument anyhow. Texas, a two-party state, voted for Eisenhower twice but kept Senator Lyndon Johnson in Congress. Independent presidential voting does not entail sacrifice of Southern Democratic congressmen.

ALL THE leading non-Southern Democrats, individually and collectively, have said that Eisenhower did just right to fix the bayonets in Little Rock. Last week, to take a ready example, E. G. Brown, attorney general of California and candidate for governor, put it this way:

> Win or lose in the next presidential election, there can be no further compromise on civil rights. We made a serious mistake last year trying to appease the South. Those people are unappeaseable.

ALABAMA Democrats are well within their rights to hoot at those who liked Ike. But they hoot at the peril of counter hoot, for the Democrats are prepared to write off the South.

Governor Orders Troops To Little Rock High School

Negro Students Asked to Stay Away by Board

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Tues. 9-3-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3 (AP).—Gov. Orval Faubus threw a cordon of armed National Guardsmen around Little Rock's Central High School last night and the school board called off its planned integration as a result.

The school board, under United States District Court order to proceed with its gradual integration plan, evaluated the Governor's action as designed to block the entry of nine Negro students to the 2,000-pupil high school today.

The board said: "Although the Federal Court has ordered integration to proceed, Gov. Faubus has said that schools should continue as they have in the past and has stationed troops at Central High School to maintain order.

Could Provide Test

"In view of this situation we ask that no Negro students attempt to attend Central or any white high school until this dilemma is legally resolved."

The Governor said he was taking the drastic step "arrived at prayerfully" as the chief executive of the State sworn to preserve peace and protect property. His action could provide the basis for the first clear test of State police power versus Federal law.

The board ordered Negro students "to stay away from white high schools today." It did not, however, instruct them to report to the all-Negro high schools they previously attended.

Gov. Faubus' action appeared to be in direct conflict with the order of United States District Judge Ronald Davies, a Fargo, N. Dak., jurist, temporarily filling a vacant Arkansas bench, who Friday instructed the integration to proceed. Judge Davies also issued a broad injuction forbidding any and all persons from interfering with the peaceful integration.

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Tues. 9-3-57

Intentions Made Clear

The Governor would not say that the armed National Guardsmen were ordered out last night to prevent integration. "That assumption might be correct," he said, adding, "it will be left to the discretion of commanders. There is a very good possibility there will not be any integration tomorrow."

A few minutes later the school board called it off.

Gov. Faubus made clear his intentions, however, in two separate statements in his speech. He first said he sent the guardsmen to the school to preserve peace and order. Then he said it was his conviction that peace and order could not be maintained if forcible integration proceeded.

In support of his action, Gov. Faubus said, "This problem gives every evidence and indication that the attempt to forcibly integrate will bring about wide-spread disorder and violence." He said the sale of guns and knives to Negroes and whites had recently jumped alarmingly.

Says Vote Set Law

He said Arkansans had expresseed themselves on the question of integration by voting for a number of anti-integration resolutions and these measures "are the law of the land at the present time."

The Governor said litigation to determine the validity of the anti-integration measures—pupil assignment law, interposition resolution and others—should have been had before forcible integration was ordered.

"Now that a Federal court has ruled that no further litigation is possible before the forcible integration of Negroes and whites in Central High School tomorrow, the evidence of discord, anger and resentment has come to me from so many sources as to become a deluge.

"One store reported that a gang of Negro youths came as a group and each and all purchased knives while another group waited outside . . . then came in for the same purpose . . ."

He slapped at Little Rock Supt. Virgil Blossom saying Mr. Blossom asked orally for help to quell possible violence but when asked to put it in writing, never responded.

Key Comes at End

The Governor waited until the end of his 30-minute address to give the key to his action. He said, "The mission of the State militia is to maintain or restore order and to protect lives and property. They will not act as segregationists but as soldiers . . . to carry out assigned tasks.

"But I must state here in all sincerity, that is is my opinion—yes, even a conviction, that it will not be possible to restore or to maintain order and protect lives . . . if forcible integration is carried out tomorrow in the schools of this community. The inevitable conclusion, therefore, must be that the schools in Pulaski County (Little Rock), for the time being, must be operated on the same basis as they have been operated in the past. . . . The public peace will be preserved."

The Governor would not say that Negroes would be turned away but the school board interpreted his remarks as meaning just that.

Armed Guardsmen Thrown Around Governor's Home

By Robert E. Baker

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 4—Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies ordered a "full, thorough and complete" investigation today into Gov. Orval E. Faubus' armed rejection of eight Negro pupils who sought to enter white Central High School under the judge's order.

Davies directed U. S. Attorney Osro Cobb to determine the responsibility for the interference with his desegregation order and report "to me with the least practicable delay."

The investigation was launched at the same time the Negro pupils emerged from a two-hour conference with the FBI office here.

Report in Full to FBI

The pupils gave the FBI a complete report on how the National Guard, under orders from the Governor, had refused to let them enter the school this morning. The FBI refused comment, but the Negroes said they would try to enter the school again on Thursday.

Two truckloads of armed National Guardsmen took up stations around the Governor's Mansion in the afternoon. Neither they nor Faubus aides would say why they were placed there. Observers believed they might be used to prevent serving of any court order on the Governor.

Today's events shaped up for a showdown soon between the power of the Federal courts to enforce a school desegregation order and the power of the Governor to prevent integration with state militia.

Faubus, in a press conference earlier today, said he saw no Federal-State conflict and did not think his orders to the National Guard defied the court orders.

He insisted he was acting within his authority to keep peace and order, stating, "it is better to preserve peace than to quell disorder."

He did not directly answer the question of whether he thought he, as Governor of Arkansas, could be cited by the Federal Court for contempt. Said Faubus:

"The Federal authorities are welcome to their opinion on that, and I'll meet that when it comes."

Background of Issue

This momentous situation in Little Rock started softly enough when the Little Rock School Board, shortly after the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision, announced a 10-year desegregation program. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People brought suit, claiming the program was too slow. But the program was upheld by the courts, including the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals last April 26.

Post & Times Herald Thurs. 9-5-57

The School Board assigned some 15 Negroes to the Central High School with its 2000 white students.

Everything seemed to be quiet until Pilaski County Judge Murray O. Reed, at the request of the pro-segregationist Mothers League of Little Rock, issued a temporary injunction against the desegregation program last Thursday. Faubus, in testifying at the hearing, said now was the "worst possible time" for desegregation and had personal knowledge that guns and knives were selling fast at stores.

On Friday, Judge Davies overruled the state court injunction and issued his own order prohibiting any interference with the School Board program.

Troops Called Out

Over the Labor Day week end, the board appealed for public understanding and cooperation when schools opened Tuesday for the full session. But on Monday night, Faubus called the National Guard, which surrounded the school.

On Tuesday, the School Board asked Judge Davies for help, and he again ordered the board to proceed with desegregation. A few minutes later, the Governor instructed the National Guard to admit no Negroes to Central High School.

At 8 a. m. today, 153 armed Guardsmen lined the street in front of the school. At 8:10 a. m. two Negro pupils, Terrence Roberts, 15, and Elizabeth Eckford, 15, were banned from entering the school. A small portion of the crowd of 200 persons heckled the youngsters who turned and left.

At 8:15 a. m. six other Negro pupils gathered at the corner, a block from the school.

Off-Limits to Negroes

"This school is off-limits to Negro pupils," he told them. "I am acting under the Governor's orders."

The pupils left promptly. The crowd merely watched. The Negroes went to the School Board office, told Supt. Virgil Blossom what had happened and then left for the FBI office.

In Washington Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr. announced he had ordered the FBI to investigate the "interference" with the Federal court order.

At 9:30, Faubus held a press conference in his office. He said he issued the orders on Tuesday night because, "in my judgment, there is a very real danger of bodily harm to the citizens of the area."

His attention was called to a story in the morning Arkansas Gazette which stated a check of stores showed no such knife and gun buying as the Governor has reported.

"That is the report of an integrationist newspaper," he replied.

He particularly criticized Judge Davies for the brief hearing he had given Tuesday night before promptly ordering the school board to proceed despite the troops.

Faugus said he does not seek to halt integration in Arkansas and pointed out Fort Smith, Van Buren and Ozark began desegregation on Tuesday, bringing to ten the number of communities now begining integration.

Calls Arkansas City School Board's Appeal 'Anemic' As He Lets Order For Immediate Integration Stand; Governor Faubus Makes No Immediate Comment On Court's Abrupt Action; Clash Between State and Federal Governments Thus Left Unchanged

News + Herald Raleigh, N.C. 9-5-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 7 (AP) —A federal judge tightened the South's racial battle lines today with a sharp-tongued rejection of a plea to postpone integration at Little Rock Central High School where armed troops have kept Negro students away this week.

Judge Ronald N. Davies of North Dakota acidly called the plea of the Little Rock school board to delay integration because of a week of turmoil and strife "anemic" and left his previous order for immediate integration intact.

His dramatic action before a jammed courtroom left the federal government's dispute with Gov. Orval Faubus unchanged. Faubus's office said the governor would not comment immediately.

Gov. Faubus Monday night called out the Arkansas National Guard to keep Negroes away from the 2,000-pupil school, claiming he was preventing violence and disorder.

Possible Actions.

President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell discussed the explosive Little Rock situation in Washington today and later press secretary James Hagerty said it would be fair to say they discussed possible alternative actions depending on the next development in the case.

Wednesday, the Guardsmen stopped nine Negro teen-agers from entering.

Negro leaders today said they could not say what action they would take. They refused to say whether they planned to advise Negroes to enter the school Monday.

National Guardsmen kept watch at Central High and the governor's mansion.

News + Observer

"I have a constitutional duty and obligation from which I shall not shrink," the judge said in clipped and precise tones as he read today's decision. P. 2-1

"In organized society," said Judge Davies, "there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flaunted, whatever the pretext."

Judge Davies scoffed at the governor's claims that violence was near before he called out the guard.

"The chief executive of Little Rock (Mayor Woodrow Mann) has stated that the Little Rock police have not had a single case of interracial violence reported to him and that there has been no indications from sources available to him that there would be violence in regard to this situation."

Mann, who has blasted Faubus' summoning of guardsmen as a hoax and political maneuver, today asked the Arkansas attorney general for an official ruling on the mayor's municipal law enforcement powers.

Mann said that large crowds milling around the high school in the past week have created a powder keg which he said could be set off "by a planned incident."

The mayor obviously was attempting to find a way to regain police control over the area.

School Superintendent Virgil T. Blossom said no new orders would be given the nine Negro students.

"They have their orders from the court," he said.

Federal Troop Condemnation May Be Watered Down

OKLAHOMA CITY, Oct. 17.—(AP) — An Arkansas delegation sought Thursday to shape a resolution on school integration for submission to the National Legislative Conference in session here.

Representing legislatures and legislative councils of 42 states and all the territories, the conference divided its annual meeting into a series of workshop sessions.

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn. 10-17-57

The Arkansas lawmakers arrived late Wednesday with the sign "Refugees from occupied Arkansas."

At first, members said they would ask the conference to condemn use of federal troops against citizens of any state without the request of state authorities.

However, State Representative Paul Van Dalsem of Perryville, Ark., said the resolution probably would be toned down to call for a study of state control of militia.

P. 29

President Eisenhower ordered Federal troops to Little Rock to retain order during integration at Central High School.

Representative Van Dalsem said the resolution was being drawn up "to point out the deplorable situation in Arkansas."

Lawmakers from Georgia, Florida, South Carolina and other Southern states were conferring with the Arkansas group on the resolution.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. —(AP)— The Little Rock School Board, trapped between a federal order to integrate and the jolting reality that troops now surround Central High School, was ordered Tuesday night by a federal judge to "proceed forthwith with integration."

The scheduled attendance by nine Negro students at the 2,000-pupil white school was in effect blocked Monday night when Gov. Orval Faubus called out 250 National Guardsmen to surround the school "to maintain peace and order."

Squeezed by the dilemma, the School Board explained its position before U.S. District Judge Ronald Davies of Fargo, N.D.

Board Attorney Arch House pleaded that the board was "making no deviation or retreat" when it asked Negro students to stay away from the white high school Tuesday.

"The combination of circumstances is drastic," House told the judge. "The board will do whatever your honor thinks fitting."

"Is that the sum and substance of your position?" Davies asked the attorney.

"It is, your honor," House replied.

Davies then reviewed portions of Faubus' televised address in Little Rock Monday night.

He noted that the governor said the troops had been called out to surround the school only to prevent violence and property damage and not as either segregationists or integrationists.

"I am taking the statement of the governor at full face value," Davies said.

He then ordered the board to proceed with racial mixing.

The session lasted only about five minutes. No one spoke except House and Davies.

The new order to proceed with integration — the second issued by Davies in the past week — changed the obscure racial picture here once again.

A showdown appeared in the making when Supt. Virgil Thompson announced, after the decision was handed down, that the high school will be open to Negro students Wednesday morning.

The board, in advising the Negroes earlier to stay away temporarily, did not tell them to attend classes at the Negro high school here.

No Negroes registered at Central Tuesday nor at the new white high school.

Faubus, whose move Monday night gave segregationists their momentary victory, said he needs to study the new integration order before commenting. Herald

A copy of the order was handed to the governor at 8 p.m. (CST) and he retired with advisers to study it.

Wed. 9-4-57

Only a token force of Guardsmen remained around Central Tuesday night. Faubus has said the troops will stay as long as necessary. P. 2-a

The National Guardsmen who are enforcing school segregation in Little Rock are acting on behalf of the state and cannot be paid by the federal government for such duty.

The federal government exercises general supervision over guard units across the nation, but control of the units rests with the states except when they are called into federal service. Each state's National Guard is the state militia, with the governor acting as commander-in-chief.

Several officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were in the federal courtroom. They smiled and posed for a dozen photographers after the decision.

Local segregation leaders, who had appeared last week in the courtroom when Davies first ordered integration to proceed, apparently ignored the hearing.

Registration at Central Tuesday proceeded normally except for the curious crowds outside the building and the hubbub of activity from Guardsmen and their vehicles.

In North Little Rock, a city of about 50,000 across the Arkansas River, the School Board announced it was postponing scheduled high school integration indefinitely.

Board President Byron R. Bogard said the situation in Little Rock will be watched closely by the North Little Rock board.

Meanwhile racial integration began quietly in this West Arkansas city. Twenty-three Negroes began attending classes with hundreds of white students in Van Buren High School.

A few Negro first graders are scheduled to be integrated in nearby Fort Smith, the state's second largest city, Wednesday.

Three Negroes were integrated into white schools at Ozark, in northwest Arkansas, Monday without incident.

IKE AND FAUBUS PUT ON SPOT BY JUDGE'S ACTION

News + Observer Sun. 9-8-57 Raleigh, N.C.

No White House Move Is Expected Until Monday; Brownell Studies Crisis

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7 (AP) — A federal judge, standing firmly by a school integration order, heightened an historic federal-state struggle today and put President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas on terrific spots. P. 1

For the time being, the White House took no action. None was likely before Monday.

But someone was going to have to give way — the chief executive committed to uphold the laws of the nation and the Supreme Court's antisegregation ruling or the governor who defiantly used the Arkansas National Guard to prevent racial integration at a Little Rock high school.

The question was which would move, in which direction, with the least loss of face.

Study Measures.

Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell quickly and inconclusively studied today measures the federal government might take in the Arkansas integration crisis.

That was immediately before U. S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies in Arkansas, rejected a plea of the Little Rock School Board to suspend for an indefinite cooling-off period his decree opening Central High School to Negro students. Faubus had called out the state militia and forcibly prevented Negroes from entering the school, in disregard of Davies' order.

Presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty said it would be fair to say that Eisenhower and Brownell considered alternate steps the government might take, depending on which way Davies decided the school board's bid for a tension-easing truce.

Hagerty said no decisions were reached and none could be until Davies acted. One the judge did Eisenhower was notified at once. But there still was no comment and Hagerty said there probably would be no further statement or announcement over the weekend.

Thus it appeared that the federal government would withhold action until Judge Davies reaches another formal decision — on whether there was deliberate flouting of his integration order through interference or noncompliance. News + Observer

Asks For Report.

Davies has asked for a report on that from the Justice Department and the FBI. Hagerty said Brownell took the matter up with Eisenhower today and that the report probably will be submitted to the judge Monday. P. 2-I

It will be a fact-finding report, without recommendations, Hagerty said, leaving it up to Judge Davies to decide whether there was interference or noncompliance.

Hagerty told newsmen the report will include what FBI agents learned from representatives of Faubus in a conference the governor suggested for the propose of providing "certain evidence upon which I acted" in throwing a cordon of armed guardsmen around the Little Rock school. Faubus has contended he did this to preserve peace and order.

Should Judge Davies declare that his integration order was contemptuously ignored, the federal government would be intrenched in a strengthened legal position from which to maneuver.

While Hagerty was chary with details of the Eisenhower-Brownell session, he appeared to leave the door open for such a possibility as summoning the Arkansas National Guard into federal service in order to snatch it from Gov. Faubus' control. This could open new avenues of legal conflict between the federal and state governments.

Hagerty told newsmen that at the 45-minute conference: "There was a general discussion of the National Guard and the authority the President has that affects the National Guard."

Interrupts Vacation.

Eisenhower interrupted a vacation at Newport, R.I., today to fly back to Washington for conferences on the Arkansas issue, the budget and new Communist threats in the Middle East.

There was no inkling tonight as to what the next move might be toward enforcing Judge Davies' order.

One possibility might be for Davies to issue an injunction ordering Faubus, specifically, to stop impending integration. If the governor refused to obey, the judge could order him into court on contempt charges. But a U.S. marshal might have difficulty serving the necessary papers on Faubus, who also has ringed his official mansion with National Guardsmen.

Should Eisenhower decide to try to take the guardsmen from the governor's control, there undoubtedly would be a dispute over whose authority would prevail.

One federal law applying to the National Guard or its state defense forces within its boundaries in time of peace.

Another section of federal law, revised just last year, says that:

"Whenever the President considers that unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages, or rebellion against the authority of the United States, make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any state or territory by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, he may call into federal service such of the armed forces as he considers necessary to enforce those laws or suppress the rebellion."

Then there is a 1932 Supreme Court decision in a case in which Gov. Ross S. Sterling of Texas proclaimed martial law and used the National Guard to shut down some oil wells. Sterling contended in vain that his action was "a supreme and unchallengeable edict" which no federal court could review.

The Supreme Court handed down a unanimous opinion that, "If his extreme position could be well taken, it is manifest that the fiat of a state governor, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land; that the restrictions of the federal Constitution upon the exercise of state power would be but impotent phrases, the futility of which the state may at any time disclose by the simple process of transferring powers of legislation to the governor to be exercises by him, beyond control, upon his assertion of necessity."

Davies Calls Delay Request 'Anemic'—Faubus Stand Remains Unchanged

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 7.—Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies Saturday bluntly denied a plea that he temporarily postpone integration at Central High School here.

P. 1

In a sharp rejection Judge Davies called the plea of the Little Rock School Board "anemic" and left his order for immediate integration intact.

Judge Davies said he saw no reason for retreating from a ruling he issued last week despite action which Gov. Orval Faubus has taken in defiance of court-upheld integration here.

Open Tomorrow To All

What the next development would be wasn't clear.

But the Little Rock School Board said following the ruling that Central High School will be open Monday to all students.

Dr. William G. Cooper, head of the School Board, was asked if the board might close the school a while if trouble broke out. He said the board "hadn't crossed that bridge" and in fact "had not considered it."

Asked if he thought the board would have authority to do that, he said he thought it would depend on where the trouble broke out.

"We don't anticipate any trouble within the school, and if trouble should break out on the outside that would be a matter involving the state or Federal Government under the present situation," said Dr. Cooper.

Mann Plan Rebuffed

Governor Faubus had no immediate reaction to the ruling. One official source, however, indicated the Governor still intends to stick by his decision to keep Negroes from entering white schools here on grounds that to do so would touch off violence.

Meanwhile Mayor Woodrow Mann, who has denounced Governor Faubus' use of Guardsmen, Saturday night re-entered the controversy when he asked state Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett if he could use the Little Rock police to clear the streets around the school of all persons including the National Guard.

Atty. Gen. Bennett said Governor Faubus was within his rights to send the Guard to Central High School and that Mayor Mann's only recourse was through the courts.

The Governor is his orders to the National Guard earlier in the week also placed Negro schools "off limits" to white students. Judge Davies late last week had issued an injunction directing there be no interference from anyone with racially mixed classes.

Cuts Attorneys Off

Judge Davies issued his order after allowing less than 20 minutes of arguments on the petition filed by the School Board Thursday. He cut attorneys off abruptly at two different points, stalked out of the courtroom and was back some 40 minutes later with his order.

Commercial Appeal

Calling the School Board's arguments and testimony "as anemic as the petition itself," the Federal judge from North Dakota added:

"In an organized society there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flaunted, whatever the pretext."

P. 1

The School Board, which had presented the latest petition after its attorney had conferred Thursday with Dist. Atty. Osro Cobb, had claimed that in the light of tension and trouble at the school, it was impossible to continue with an orderly educational system.

National Guard troops turned nine Negro students away from Central High School Wednesday, on orders from Governor Faubus, and the board's petition clearly had been aimed at dissolving the troops and unruly crowds which had been on hand at the school all week.

The School Board was caught in the middle of an impasse between the Federal order and Governor Faubus' stand. Through its attorney, the board Saturday morning declared that until something was done about the present situation, "teaching is at an end."

Archie F. House, the School Board attorney, emphasized the board had no intention of forsaking permanently its plan of gradual integration. But he said that "every person knows that with the spectacle now going on at Central High School, teaching is at an end."

Difficult to Keep Order

Mr. House said the facts were undisputable that tensions and antagonisms had arisen to make an orderly school system almost impossible, and offered to put school officials on the stand if the judge wanted testimony.

Judge Davies said he would like to have some "affirmative testimony" backing up the School Board's contentions, and Mr. House called School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom to the stand. Mr. House asked a few questions and then Judge Davies himself took over the questioning.

"Was the plan of integration discussed in advance before civic groups," Judge Davies asked.

Mr. Blossom replied he had given perhaps a total of 175 speeches on the plan before it was scheduled to take effect last Tuesday.

Judge Davies then asked the superintendent if he thought the plan had been accepted by the Little Rock public.

"The plan in my opinion was accepted not on the basis of wanting integration, but as the best solution to a difficult problem," Mr. Blossom replied. Earlier, under questioning from Mr. House, the school superintendent said in his opinion "the educational process cannot go on for any child in a normal way, under existing conditions."

Judge Davies then abruptly ended his questioning, and Mr. House asked if opposing attorneys present desired to cross-examine.

"I see no need for cross-examination," Judge Davies interrupted.

NAACP Council On Hand

On hand to oppose the board's petition was Thurgood Marshall, Negro attorney from New York who is chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff Negro lawyer.

Attorney Branton, the only one to speak and who was told impatiently by Judge Davies at one point to refrain from going into the background of the case, contended Governor Faubus was trying to usurp Federal authority.

He argued if Judge Davies backed off from his injunction of last week, "it will be a blow to the dignity of the Federal Constitiution." In his ruling issued some 45 minutes later, Judge Davies used similar language.

"I have a constitutional duty I shall not shrink," he said.

Cobb Present Briefly

The hearing, starting at 10 a.m., was concluded at 10:16, when the judge recessed proceedings until 11 a.m. He returned promptly at 11, quickly read his ruling, and newsmen were able to buy copies of it at 70 cents each almost immediately afterward. The judge's secretary had the coupies, which were typewritten carbons of his order.

Mr. Cobb appeared in the courtroom only briefly, but didn't sit at the lawyer's table. The district attorney received orders earlier this week to conduct an investigation as to why his orders of last week hadn't been complied with.

The Federal judge made no reference to the investigation, or as to whether he had received a report from the district attorney, but he told one of the attorneys he was familiar with the matter and didn't need any background advisories.

Mr. Cobb as well as the judge had been in earlier conference with Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell in Washington, according to earlier disclosures.

Dr. Cooper, the school board head, sitting beside a newsman when the judge read his decision, shook his head wearily and at first declined comment. Asked if he had any statements, Dr. Cooper replied: "Not now, Mr. Newspaperman."

Later, however, the board noted in a brief formal statement that "the Federal Court has again ordered the School Board to proceed with its plan. The plan is still in effect and Little Rock Central High School will be opened Monday for all students."

Does that mean Negro students again would attempt to enter classes Monday.

Assumes They'll Seek Entry

NAACP spokesmen, who apparently are guiding actions of nine Negro children who sought admission earlier, said there was a possibility they would. One spokesman said he assumed the Negroes would seek entry again.

Attorney Marshall said Negro leaders still "hope that the School Board and the people of Little Rock will now follow the mandates of the United States courts."

Daisy Bates, president of the Arkansas chapter of the NAACP, rejoiced at the judge's ruling.

"We knew that we would win ultimately. We are very happy with the decision of the judge," she said.

Woman Who Shielded Negro Girl At Little Rock Battles With Jenner

'Won't Attend' Closed Session

Memphis, Oct. 28 (AP)—A white woman who shielded a Negro schoolgirl during Little Rock's integration uproar refused to testify at a closed session of the Senate internal-security subcommittee hearing Monday.

"Anything I say will be out here in open court," said Mrs. Grace Lorch, Little Rock, in an angry recess exchange with Senator Jenner (R., Ind.). "'I'll see you up a tree before I'll go into any executive session."

Mrs. Lorch said she had no lawyer and had been given no time to hire one. Jenner, presiding in the absence of the chairman, Senator Eastland (D., Miss.), gave her 24 hours to obtain counsel.

Thirty Subpoenaed

Thirty persons, including Mrs. Lorch, have been subpoenaed as witnesses in a Thursday hearing on "reports which indicate Communist activity in Tennessee, Kentucky, and nearby areas."

Others called during the brief afternoon session were Dr. Ralph Franklin, Morehouse, Mo., who testified he was a Communist for 18 months during his student years, and Mrs. Alberta Ahearn, Louisville, a former F.B.I. undercover agent.

When subpoenaed at Little Rock Saturday, Mrs. Lorch said the action must have "some connection" with her recent show of sympathy for a Negro schoolgirl heckled by an angry crowd of whites at Little Rock Central High.

Turned Back by Troops

Mrs. Lorch, a small, gray-haired woman, was alone among whites in comforting 15-year-old Elizabeth Eckford when she was turned back by National Guard troops at the school last September 4.

She sat beside the weeping Negro girl on a bus-stop bench near the school and snapped back at taunting whites.

In his testimony Dr. Franklin said he was recruited to the Communist Party while a student at the University of Tennessee College of Medicine in Memphis.

Franklin said he was signed up early in 1954 by a fellow student, Vincent Myers, and left the party after a series of events convinced him it was not what it was cracked up to be.

Mrs. Ahearn told the subcommittee she was an F.B.I. undercover agent in Louisville from 1948 to 1954 and belonged to at least four separate "cells."

Each cell, she said, had not more than five members, for security purposes. She said she was sure there were other cells in Louisville but could not identify them.

Earlier, two Kentucky legal officials, in nearly 2 hours of testimony, told the subcommittee that recent Supreme Court decisions on State sedition laws left a "void" in the nation's internal security.

The high court ruled that in many cases sedition comes under federal and not State laws.

State Attorney General Jo M. Ferguson, Frankfort, and Commonwealth's Attorney A. Scott Hamilton, Louisville, recommended new legislation to spell out State rights in prosecuting sedition.

Woman Who Comforted Negro Gets Senate Subpoena

Little Rock, Oct. 27.—A white woman who comforted a Negro girl being taunted by a mob at Central High School last month has been ordered to appear before a Senate internal-security subcommittee M onday.

Mrs. Lee Lorch, wife of a white professor of mathematics at Philander Smith College, a Negro institution here, received a subpoena Saturday calling for her appearance at a subcommittee hearing in Memphis, Tenn.

The subcommittee, headed by Senator Eastland (D., Miss.), is investigating alleged Communist activity in the mid-South.

On September 4 Mrs. Lorch was in the crowd at Central High when National Guard troops, acting on orders from Governor Orval E. Faubus, turned away Negro students attempting to enter the school.

One of them was Elizabeth Eckford, 15. A crowd of white students and adults jeered as she was turned away.

Mrs. Lorch comforted the girl and remonstrated with the crowd, saying, "She's only a kid."

After receiving the subpoena, Mrs. Lorch charged that there was "a connection between the subpoena and my helping the Eckford girl."

Memphis Red Official Expected To Testify At Today's Inquiry

Chief Investigator Is Dealt Surprise By Irate Arkansan

By LOUIS SILVER

The most surprised man at yesterday's anti-communist hearings in the Federal Building was the chief investigator.

Frank Schroeder, who's used to producing surprises himself, got the shock just after the morning session recessed for lunch.

It came as he walked to the railing in the third-floor courtroom and quietly asked Mrs. Grace Lorch to meet with committee members in an executive session.

The mild-looking, gray-haired Little Rock woman shot back: "I'm not going in there alone."

Befriended Negro Girl

The Little Rock woman, who befriended a Negro girl at Central High School while the National Guard was on duty to keep out Negroes, said later, "They can just run up a tree before they get me in a secret session. I was subpenaed to appear at 10 this morning and not for an executive session."

Reporters and photographers swarmed to the railing over which the argument raged and followed the participants to Senator William E. Jenner (R., Ind.), who told Mrs. Lorch he would give her 24 hours to get an attorney. His threat to hold her in contempt of the committee calmed her not one bit.

Remaining at her mother's side was 13-year-old Alice Lorch, an eighth grader at Little Rock's East Side Junior High. During the opening of the morning session, she asked reporters the identities of the Senate committee staff and then muttered her dislike over the entire proceedings.

The crowd of about 80 people, including about 20 newspapers and television representatives, attending the morning session swelled to more than 100, forming a standing-room-only audience by mid-afternoon.

Mrs. Lorch was the center of reporters' attention as the hearings got under way. Later, she leaned forward, looking intently through horn-rimmed glasses at the first witness, State Atty. Gen. Jo M. Ferguson of Kentucky.

Senator William Jenner

Cheerful Co-operation

In contrast to Mrs. Lorch's outburst, Mrs. Alberta Ahearn, a tall woman with brunet hair, gladly co-operated with the committee. Fluttering her hands as she talked, she revealed her work in Louisville, Ky., as undercover agent for the FBI from 1948 to 1954.

A record of sorts was chalked up by Donald West, who identified himself as a Douglasville, Ga., farmer. Clad in a light blue suit and a bright red tie, he took the Fifth Amendment more than 20 times.

The audience and press table buzzed with curiosity when Robert Morris, chief counsel for the subcommittee, announced that the "secretary-treasurer of the Communist Party of Memphis" had been given 24 hours to get an attorney before testifying. But Mr. Morris never revealed that person's identity.

In describing his trouble back in 1954-55 in selling "National Guardian" subscriptions in Memphis, Dr. Ralph Franklin of Morehouse, Mo., broke into a grin. The obvious inference from the statement by the recanted communist was that the magazines didn't sell well at all.

Senator Jenner, chatting with reporters before the hearing began, was asked if he had talked to Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.), subcommittee chairman.

Commercial Appeal

"Yes, I talked to him this morning and he told me he'd be here 'this evening.'"

The tall, 49-year-old Republican laughed and added, "If I were in Indiana, I would expect him after 6 p.m., but since I'm down South, I take it would mean anytime in the afternoon or night."

Looking in on the hearings from time to time were Federal Judge Marion S. Boyd; Millsaps Fitzhugh, Federal district attorney here; Federal Marshal John Williams; United States Commissioner Leslie Nicholson; one Navy shore patrolman and several attorneys.

10-30-57

Others included Frank Barber of Hattiesburg, Miss., an aide to Senator Eastland; Ralph Hutto, former Jackson, Miss., newspaperman serving as press representative for the subcommittee.

Out-of-town reporters included Howard 'Slim' Suttle, Washington correspondent for several Southern papers; Charles M. Hill of the Jackson Clarion-Ledger, and Miss Bobbie Forster of the Arkansas Democrat at Little Rock.

U. S. Judge's Authority . . By Richard L. Lyons

Faubus Wrong, Say Law Experts

Constitutional experts here agreed that Arkansas Gov. Orvel E. Faubus was dead wrong yesterday in contending that a Federal District Judge had no authority to question his actions in Little Rock.

This contention was made by Faubus' lawyers as they walked out of Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies' hearing on a request that Faubus be ordered to withdraw National Guard troops and permit racial integration of Little Rock's Central High School. Davies issued the order which Faubus said he would obey but appeal.

There is plenty of precedent for a Federal Court order against a state governor. If the governor ignored a valid order, he could be put in jail. The President could also send in the Army to force compliance. Lawyers researching the situation said they had found no cases of state defiance which reached the point where the governor was locked up.

Faubus' lawyers made two jurisdictional arguments. They said only the Supreme Court had jurisdiction. They also said no Federal authority had jurisdiction.

They argued that only the Supreme Court—not District Judge Davies—could question Faubus' actions because this was a suit by the United States against a state, an area where the highest court alone can act.

The Government's answer was that it was not a suit against a state, but against a state official for allegedly exceeding his authority.

To a layman the difference may seem slight. But lawyers said there is a long string of precedents distinguishing between the two. The gist of them is that a suit against Faubus for acting beyond his authority may be brought in Judge Davies' court.

Technically, the suit against Faubus and his top National Guard officers was brought by the Federal Government. But in fact it was an effort by the court to enforce its previous integration order. The Justice Department filed the petition at Judge Daives' order to get the proceeding under way.

Faubus' lawyers argued on much broader grounds that no Federal authority had the right "i nthis court or anywhere else" to "question his (Faubus) judgment and discretion while acting as chief executive officer of the sovereign state of Arkansas in the performance of his duties . . ."

THEY WERE saying that Fabus could block the court's school integration order by calling out the National Guard and the court could do nothing about it.

Faubus sad said he called out the guard under his police power as state governor to prevent violence and maintain public order.

The court's integration order and itsc action against Fabus was aimed at enforcing right guaranteed by the Federal Constitution — in this case "equal protection of the laws" which the Supreme Court said required an end of segregated schools.

Faubus' challenge spotlights again the old question of Federal-state relationships. Is the state police power bigger than a Federal court order?

Constitutional lawyers here were certain that Judge Davies' power to enjoin Faubus will be upheld by the Supreme Court, if it gets that far. They rely chiefly on an almost identical case decided by a unanimous Supreme Court bench 25 years ago involving then Gov. Ross S. Sterling of Texas.

STERLING HAD CALLED out the National Guard to block enforcement of a federal court order involving oil production. He said there were threats of violence in the East Texas oil fields and called out the militia. A federal district court ordered him to stop interferring. Sterling said the court had no jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court first held that the federal district court had jurisdiction because this was not a suit against a state.

"The applicable principle," it said, "is that where state officials purporting to act under state authority invade rights secured by the federal constitution they are subject to the process of the federal courts. . . . The governor of the state is in no different position from that of other state officials."

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes wrote:

"Appellants assert that the (district) court was powerless thus to intervene and that the governor's order had the quality o a supreme and unchallengeable edict, overriding all conflicting rights. . . . and unreviewable through the judicial power of the Federal government.

"If this extreme position could be deemed to be well taken," said Hughes, "it is manifest that the fiat of a state government, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land. . . . There is no such avenue of escape from the paramount authority of the Federal Constitution."

Gov. Sterling's proper use of his police powers was to attempt to enforce the court's order, not to override it, wrote Hughes.

Lawyers said much of the Court's 1932 opinion could be applied word for word to the 1957 situation in Little Rock.

Law Thwarted By Governor, Davies Rules

BULLETIN

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 (AP) — National Guard troops were pulled away from Central High School at 6:25 p. m. (CST) today just five minutes before Gov. Orval Faubus started a local television speech to clarify his position.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20—Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies issued a preliminary injunction today ordering Arkansas Gov. Orval E. Faubus "and all others" to cease interfering with integration at this city's Central High School.

The jurist's order came about three hours after counsel for the Governor and two top Arkansas National Guard officers had walked out of the courtroom, declaring the Federal Courts had no jurisdiction over the Governor of a "sovereign state."

Faubus' attorneys said their action did not mean the Governor would refuse to abide by court orders "until they are set aside."

Faubus to Appeal

Immediately after his attorneys walked out of the hearing, Faubus, anticipating Judge Davies' actions, said he would appeal a motion to dismiss the suit to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judge Davies issued his order at 3:36 p. m. (CST), stating it was "very clear" that Little Rock's school intergration plan had been "thwarted" by Faubus and the National Guard troops the Governor called out on Sept. 2.

The order came after Justice Department attorneys called but seven of the 200 witnesses the Government had subpenaed for the hearing. The witnesses testified there had been no evidence of racial disorder in Little Rock before Faubus called out the militia.

Named in the order with Faubus were Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Arkansas Adjutant General, and Lt. Col. Marion E. Johnson, commandant of the Guard detachment at Central High.

After Judge Davies recessed the hearing, Clinger was asked if he would remove the Guard troops and permit Negroes to attend school on Monday.

Clinger said he would not "because I still have a commander-in-chief (Faubus)."

Court's Ruling

In his ruling, naming Faubus, Clinger and Johnson specifically for the first time, Judge Davies said:

"It is very clear to this court from the evidence and the testimony adduced upon the hearing today that the plan of integration adopted by the iLttle Rock School Board and approved by this court and the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has been thwarted by the Governor of Arkansas by the use of National Guard troops.

"It is equally demonstrable from the testimony here today that there would have been no violence in carrying out the plan of integration, and that there has been no violence.

"The petition of the United States of America as amicus curiae for a preliminary injunction against Gov. Faubus, Gen. Clinger and Col. Johnson and all others named in the petition is granted; and such injunction shall issue without delay enjoining those respondents from obstructing or preventing by the use of the National Guard or otherwise the attendance of Negro students at Little Rock High School under the plan of integration approved by this court and from otherwise obstructing or interfering with orders of this court in connection with the plan of integration.

"Findings of fact, conclusiions of law, and orders and related instruments will be prepared by the attorneys for the United States."

Start of Hearing

Judge Davies strode into the packed courtroom at 10:02 a. m. (CST) and asked counsel representing all parties to make their appearance.

An unexpected spectator at the lawsuit was Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Sitting with him was Wiley Branton, Pine Bluff, Ark., attorney who is representing the nine Negro students. Marshall told reporters before entering the courtroom he had no statement.

Newsmen noted that Judge Davies' right eye was badly bloodshot. The 5-foot, 1-inch jurist explained a blood vessel had ruptured in his eye and asked photographers not to take his picture from that side.

At 10:04 a. m., Judge Davies called the injunction hearing to order. The first order of business was argument on a motion by Faubus asking Judge Davies to disqualify himself from the hearing because of "bias" and "prejudice" against the Governor.

On the Judge's order to begin arguments, MacGuineas rose to attack a motion filed yesterday by Faubus' attorneys asking Judge Davis' disqualification. The Govern ment answered it before court opener with a court motion saying it was untrue and untimely.

MacGuineas elaborated on these two arguments. Then he referred to a case where a U. S. Court of Appeals labeled an affidavit based on similar charges as "frivolous."

Government Argument

..The Governor's attorneys had argued that Davies was prejudiced against Faubus because, among other things, he conferred with the United States Attorney here and other local authorities on the integration issue.

MacGuineas contended that if it were not possible for a Federal judge to confer with Federal attorneys for enforcement of his court order on integration the Federal judicial process would become a mockery.

The Justice Department attorney said he was surprised that "experienced" counsel would have filed such a request. He argued that Faubus waited nine days until the eve of today's hearing to seek Judge Dives' removal. MacGuineas charged the law requires that such action be filed within 10 days of the beginning of a suit.

Kay Matthews, one of Faubus' three attorneys followed MacGuineas. He said he and Harper had not become counsel for Faubus until last Monday morning and only a "chain of events" led them to seek advantage of the disqualification procedure "in the best of faith."

Disqualification Refused

At 10:31 a. m., Judge Davies, taking just 30 seconds in a single sentence ruling, refused to disqualify himself. He ruled that Faubus' affidavit was "not legally sufficient and was not timely filed."

Immediately after denying the request, Judge Davies permitted a supplementary suit filed by counsel for the hine Negro children denied admission to eCntral High, to be consolidated with the Government's general injunction

Faubus Counsel Quits

One of the rejected motions asked that the current hearing be conducted before a panel of three jurists instead case.

Judge Davies then overruled the petition to quash subpenas served on Faubus' two top National Guard aides, Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, State Adjutant General, and Lt. Col. Marion Johnson, commanding the Guard detachment at the school.

Faubus's counsel contended that under Arkansas law no person engaged in the performance of military duty is subject to civil arrest or subpena.

MacGuineas countered that the Arkansas law dealt strictly with state courts and had no effect where a Federal court was involved.

Attorneys for Faubus, Clinger and Johnson, then filed two motions for dismissal in which they challenged the authority of the Justice Department or the Federal Government to be a plaintiff in the case. These Judge Davies quickly denied.

of Judge Davies alone. Government counsel contended that a 3-judge hearing is required only when a state law or constitution is under question.

A few moments later, Faubus' counsel announced dramatically:

"Obviously we can proceed no further in this action.

Judge Davies excused the Governor's attorneys but warned them:

"You may go, but you must understand that this hearing will continue."

Moments later the Governor counsel left the courtroom, Judge Davies ordered the Justice Department attorneys to continue and called fo rtestimony.

Little Rock School Board President Cooper, the first Government witness, testified that he knew of no reason to believe that the Little Rock integration plan would cause violence and bloodshed in this community. He said it was the Board's opinion that the "great majority of the people approved the plan."

No Racial Incidents

Q. Doctor, during the years that you have lived in Little Rock have you learned of any incidents of racial violence between adult citizens of this community?

A. No.

Q. Have you learned of any racial violence involving children of public schools?

A. No.

Q. Have you heard of any difficulty, violence, etc., that have attended the integration of the general public on the buses of our city?

A. No.

School Supt. Blossom, who formulated Little Rock's plan for gradual integration, testified that he had explained the plan to more than 200 groups.

In answer to a question, he said that he had received no suggestions for improvements.

Asked whether he meant to infer that people in Little Rock favor integration, he replied:

"They do not."

Mayor Mann Testifies

Like Cooper he said that he had received no reports of actual or threatened violence in schol integration. He added that he believed the plan he had devised for gradual integration over a seven-year period would have been accepted by the Little Rock public.

Little Rock's Mayor Mann testified there had been no incidents of racial violence in the city.

Mann said that to his knowledge there had been "no racial incidents in the last quarter century between teenagers or adults.

As court resumed after a luncheon recess, Davies, at the request of U. S. attorneys, dismissed all but 17 of the es timated 200 witnesses who had been summoned at request of the Government. The excused witnesses may be recalled if needed.

Ancient Greek God Was Faubus (The First)

The first Faubus was an ancient Greek god who, according to legend, could—when angered—send pestilence and wolves against the flocks of shepherds who looked to him for protection.

Faubus, the family name of the Governor of Arkansas, itself is German, an adaptation of Phoebus ("bright").

Phoebus Apollo (the full name of the Greek god) was a deity of light, music, poetry, prophecy and pastoral pursuits. According to reference books, he seems to have been originally a god of shepherds, flocks and herds, and beekeepers.

Dumps Integration Problem On Local, Federal Authorities

By UNITED PRESS

Gov. Orval E. Faubus Saturday dumped Little Rock's integration problem into the hands of local and federal authorities and disclaimed responsibility for any violence that may occur Monday when unguarded white schools will be opened to Negores.

Faubus, who pulled National Guardsmen from their posts outside Central High School Friday night in bowing to a federal court order was to leave today with Mrs. Faubus for the southern governors' conference at Sea Island, Ga.

As soon as Faubus leaves, Lt. Gov. Nathan Gordon will take over as Arkansas' chief executive.

DENIES DEFEAT

Faubus said in a television speech Friday night he was calling off the troops that had guarded Central High from the first day of the fall term to prevent Negro students from entering.

But he denied he had been defeated in what he termed a preventive action to preserve the peace.

"I'm not beaten," Faubus told a newsman who had put the de-

of the troops by Gov. Orval E.

Faubus "a necessary step in the right direction."

"I am confident," he said, "that the citizens of the city of Little Rock and the state of Arkansas will welcome this opportunity to demonstrate that in their city and in their state proper orders of a United States court will be executed promptly and without disorder."

Guardsmen left the school only a few hours after Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies enjoined Faubus and two military aides not to interfere with integration.

Negroes on the streets of Little Rock were jubilant over Daives' ruling. Some were openly scornful of Faubus.

Unconfirmed reports circulated that a hard core of segregationists among the 1,800 white students at Central High may start trouble Monday and that 400 to 600 students may boycott the school if the Negroes are admitted.

Little Rock Police Chief Marvin Potts met with his unit commanders late last night to "discuss assignments for the next few days in view of the school situation."

At the request of the school board, he sent 10 policemen to Central High to protect it against vandals, as soon as about 15 National Guardsmen withdrew.

Faubus ordered the National Guardsmen, who have kept Negroes out of the school three weeks, disbanded Friday night 10 minutes before he announced in a television and radio speech that he had surrendered.

BOYCOTT HEARING

Faubus' three lawyers walked out of the courtroom when Davies rejected two motions for dismissing the Justice Department's petition for a temporary injunction.

They boycotted the hearing, while the government called witnesses to testify that there was no threat of violence when Faubus called out troops at Central High Sept. 2.

The injunction is temporary and Faubus said his lawyers will appeal to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Faubus Lifts Guardsmen Following Federal Edict

Injunction Orders End To Race Bar

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 20 (AP) —Gov. Orval Faubus tonight ordered the National Guard troops away from Central High School a few hours after a federal court ordered him to stop interference with the school's integration plan.

The guard left at 6:25 p.m.

Faced with the injunction, Faubus said, "I will comply."

Presumably the nine Negro students who have been barred from the school by the troops since they attempted to enter Sept. 4, will attend classes Monday. Several had said they would go if guardsmen would not bar their way.

The action of the governor apparently closes one chapter of the historic struggle between state and federal power but Faubus said he would exhaust all avenues of appeal to overturn the injunction.

At President Eisenhower's Newport, R.I., vacation headquarters, press secretary James C. Hagerty said there would be no comment on the action tonight. Hagerty said the President was told of the troop withdrawal by Atty. Gen. Brownell, who telephoned from Washington.

SPELLED OUT STAND

Faubus spelled out his stand on a three-station television hookup in Little Rock at 6:30 p.m., given minutes after Lt. Col. Marion Johnson had appeared at the high school and called out the guard.

It was a dramatic climax to a swift-moving chain of events which started with U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies' injunction against Faubus following a five-hour hearing during which the governor's attorneys walked out saying, "We're through."

They had challenged the federal government's right to question Faubus' actions and then left. The hearing continued and at the end the judge ruled that Faubus had thwarted the order of the court for integration by his use of the troops and directed him to stop.

Faubus in his speech said Judge Davies "ignored the law" in refusing some of the motions made by the governor's attorneys today. He did not say specifically which ones.

He said, "I have instructed my attorneys to exhaust every legal remedy to appeal this order. However, so long as this order is in effect and until its certain reversal on appeal, I will comply. . . ."

The governor then said even as he talked the guards were leaving. He appealed for order and peace in Little Rock and said, "Now is the time for the utmost precaution and forbearance on the part of all persons."

He said he hoped the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would "not be so reckless as to push (integration) . . . until a cooling off period has passed."

Faubus said it was his firm belief that integration in Little Rock can be successful only if it is accomplished in a peaceful manner "which means acceptance by a majority of the people.

"To be achieved otherwise is to do untold harm to the members of both races and immeasurable harm to any community where it is forcibly accomplished."

NO COMMENT

Neither state police nor city police would comment on whether officers from their ranks would take up stations at the school Monday to see that peace prevailed.

At the court hearing today Faubus' attorneys laid down a broad legal challenge on the right of the federal government to question Faubus' action.

MOTION DENIED

The governor's challenge to federal authority was dramatically pronounced by his attorneys in court today who then filed out of the courtroom saying, "We're through."

The governor's position was powerfully simple: that the federal government either in this court or any other place could not question his "judgment and discretion" while acting as the head of the sovereign State of Arkansas.

Later Judge Ronald N. Davies, who the governor had asked to remove himself because of his alleged "prejudice and bias," handed down a broad injunction directing the governor and his National Guard commanders by name to desist from further interference in Little Rock's integration plan.

Schools ordered to mix—

Segregation violence threat is sounded in Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 28 —(AP)—The first open threat of segregation violence has been sounded in the swelling resistance to planned racial integration at Little Rock high schools.

An unidentified man at a segregation meeting last night took the floor to ask how many persons would be at Central High School when classes start next Tuesday to "push back" any Negroes who seek entry.

"And I imagine there are a few shotguns in Little Rock, too," he added.

THE THREAT capped a day which saw these developments in the school integration controversy:

1. Members of the segregation-minded Mothers League of Central High School adopted a petition urging Gov. Orval Faubus to prevent "forcible integration" of city high schools.

2. A Little Rock mother filed a suit in Pulaski Chancery Court asking for a Temporary injunction to block high school integration.

3. Gov. Faubus said he anticipated that the pro-segregationist State Sovereignty Commission would intervene in two earlier suits filed at Little Rock in connection with integration of classes.

4. School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said a meeting to discuss possible police protection for Negroes entering previously all-white high schools probably would be held tomorrow.

ABOUT 250 MEN and women last night attended a Mothers League meeting at which the hint of possible violence was given.

The first reaction to the unidentified speaker's remarks was silence and a few scattered moans.

Then Mrs. O. R. Aaron, president of the newly formed group, told the man that the mothers were "trying to keep down violence."

A Texas attorney delivered a sharply worded attack on the proposed integration of Little Rock's high schools during a 30-minute address at the meeting.

W. R. Hughes of Dallas, introduced as chairman of the executive committee of the association of Citizens Councils of Texas, charged that "communism is behind every effort of the NAACP.

"A 'Nigger' in your school is a potential Communist in your school," Hughes declared.

Mrs. Aaron named a committee of five to deliver the mothers league petition to Faubus today. The petition was approved by an almost unanimus standing vote.

The Little Rock School Board is under federal court order to integrate grades 10 through 12 beginning this fall.

Here Is Full Text Of Davies' Decision

Daily News Sun. 9-8-57 Jackson, Miss. P. 1

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 7—(INS)—Following is the Judge Ronald N. Davies' decision in the Little Rock Central High school integration hearing today:

"Gentlemen, in this matter let us first re-examine prior events which have culminated today in the petition of the Little Rock school directors and the school superintendent for an order temporarily suspending enforcement of the plan of integration approved by a judge of this court on August 15, 1956.

"That plan was originated and conceived by the citizens of Little Rock, acting by and through their own school directors. That plan was approved by this court and by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

"That plan is not and never was anything other than the plan of the duly authorized representatives of the People of Little Rock.

BOLD STATEMENTS

"What did the testimony this morning disclose? Beyond the bald and unsupported statements in the petition, only the testimony of the Little Rock Superintendent of Schools was offered, and that bore upon the desirability of the proper education of children in the Little Rock schools with which sentiments we all must agree.

"The testimony and arguments this morning were, in my judgment, as anemic as the petition itself; and the position taken by the school directors does violence to my concept of the duty of the petitioners to adhere with resolution to its own approved plan of gradual integration in the Little Rock public schools.

"It must never be thought that this court has not given careful consideration to this problem and all that it entails, but it must never be forgotten that I have a constitutional duty and obligation from which I shall not shrink. This court is not persuaded that upon the tenuous showing made by the petitioners this morning that it should suspend enforcement of the petitioners' plan of integration.

NO VIOLENCE

"The Chief Executive of Little Rock has stated that the Little Rock police have not had a single case of inter-racial violence reported to them and there has been no indication from sources available to him that there would be violence in regard to this situation.

"In an organized society, there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flaunted, whatever the pretext.

"That we, and each of us, has the duty to conform to the law of the land and the decrees of its duly constituted tribunals is too elementary to require elaboration.

"The petition of the Little Rock school district directors and of the superintendent of the Little Rock public schools for an order temporarily suspending enforcement of its plan of integration heretofore approved by this court is in all things denied.

"Court is dismissed."

Federal Judge Rejects Integration Postponement

Daily News P. 1 Sun. 9-8-57 Jackson, Miss.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 7 (AP) —A federal judge tightened the South's racial battle lines today with a sharp-tongued rejection of a plea to postpone integration at Little Rock Central High School where armed troops have kept Negro students away this week.

Judge Ronald N. Davies of North Dakota acidly called the plea of the Little Rock school board to delay integration because of a week of turmoil and strife "anemic" and left his previous order for immediate integration intact.

jammed courtroom left the federal government's dispute with Gov. Orval Faubus unchanged. Faubus's office said the governor would not comment immediately.

Gov. Faubus Monday night called out the Arkansas National Guard to keep Negroes away from the 2,000-pupil school, claiming he was preventing violence and disorder.

DISCUSS SITUATION

President Eisenhower and Atty. Gen. Brownell discussed the explosive Little Rock situation in Washington today and later press secretary James Hagerty said it would be fair to say they discussed possible alternative actions depending on the next development in the case.

Wednesday, the Guardsmen stopped nine Negro teen-agers from entering.

Negro leaders today said they could not say what action they would take. They refused to say whether they planned to advise Negroes to enter the school Monday.

National Guardsmen kept watch at Central High and the governor's mansion.

HAS DUTY

"I have a constitutional duty and obligation from which I shall not shrink," the judge said in clipped and precise tones as he read today's decision.

"In organized society," said Judge Davies, "there can be nothing but ultimate confusion and chaos if court decrees are flaunted, whatever the pretext."

Judge Davies scoffed at the governor's claims that violence was near before he called out the guard.

LITTLE ROCK CRUSADERS - Eight of the nine Negro students denied admission to the Little Rock (Ark.) Central High school, leave the Federal Building after signing statements of their denial of Constitutional rights by National Guardsmen, under orders from Orval Faubus, governor of the state. They will stay away from the all-white school, pending action on the Government's injunction against Faubus.

Defiance To Force Action By U.S. Judge

BULLETIN

At late deadline time Tuesday, the Weekly learned of an appeal plan designed to block any federal intervention in the thorny integration dispute, that was being sought by a Little Rock lawyer. The appeal could block and forstall any federal action to force Faubus to remove National Guardsmen from Central High until the court hears the newly filed appeal and renders a decision.

Little Rock, Ark. (Special) - Amid presistent rumors that the National Guard would be withdrawn from around Central High school soon, Arkansas' Governor Orval Faubus was urged late Monday by Little Rock's Mayor Woodrow W. Mann to restore the "dignity and honor" to the people of Arkansas.

Earlier, Mann showed his resentment to Faubus' action in calling out troops to prevent Negroes from enrolling at the school, by publicly denouncing the action.

The situation in Little Rock has prompted much speculation since Faubus met with President Eisenhower last Saturday. Statements released by both Faubus and the President were evasive and have been attacked repeatedly by both sides in the thorny integration problem.

Mann sent a police officer to deliver a letter to Faubus but Guardsmen stationed at the Governor's mansion would not let the officer enter. Instead they instructed him to deliver the letter to Faubus' office at the state capitol.

The letter, released to newsmen, asked that the Governor notify him at least 24 hours before the Guardsmen were evacuated from the high school so that he can make "proper preparations for the general welfare of the public."

Last Sunday, Mann arrived at Barton Collseum prepared to speak to the United Spanish War Veterans Association at a convention but did not deliver his address.

Mann told newsmen that there was a change in plans and that he would deliver his address later in the week. However, Chester Lauck, master of ceremonies at the program, said he understood that the Mayor had been asked not to speak because "he is such a controversial figure."

Meanwhile, with Faubus remaining mum, speculation continues to run rampant. Representative Brooks Hays, Democrat of Arkansas, expressed the belief that the situation is reaching the action stage and that "this thing cannot be postponed much longer." Hays said he saw Faubus late Monday but declined to make a statement on what he and Faubus spoke about.

Most well informed people in Little Rock believe that Faubus will order the troops to withdraw before Friday, rather than wait for the court hearing. If the troops aren't withdrawn by Friday, it is believed that Davies will issue an injunction forbidding any further interference with the enrolling of Negro students.

Many questions are being posed by the peoples of the world that have been eyeing the Little Rock situation as the indication of the stand the Federal Government will take in the future on the integration problem.

Elsewhere on the integration front, the following late developments were noted:

* The validity of four new Arkansas segregation laws has been challenged by ten Negro Ministers in Little Rock. The ministers Monday asked the U. S. District Court to prevent enforcement of the laws.

Temporary and permanent injunctions have been requested.

The laws created a State Sovereignty Commission with almost unlimited investigative powers; removed the requirement for school attendance if a school became integrated, and provided that school boards could use public funds to defend themselves in integration suits.

* The couragerous 15 year old Negro girl who was the center of the integration controversy will definitely be withdrawn from all white Harding high school in Charlotte, N.C.

The Rev. H.L. Counts told newsmen that his daughter, Dorothy Counts, will enroll at some school in a week or two, not Harding.

Dorothy, one of five Negro students admitted to the school, was struck with sticks and stones and spat upon at the school.

* At another school in North Carolina, Greensboro Senior High, the student body was lectured by Principal A.P. Routh after an egg was thrown at the desk of Josephine Boyd, the only Negro at the school.

The principal said that the egg, the third thrown at the girl, did not strike the girl or the desk.

The students were told that they have a responsibility to their school and themselves and were urged "to conduct themselves in a manner not to bring shame on others."

Jeering Little Rock Crowd's Behavior Contrasts With Negro Pupil's Dignity

Editor The Herald: The Associated Press photographer who took the picture of Elizabeth Eckford, as published on The Herald front page recently, should be awarded a Pulitzer Prize.

No one can dispute that the dignity expressed by Miss Eckford, compared to her hecklers, proved without any doubt that our so-called "superior white race" has many ignoramuses and "White trash."

How can one walk the streets of a country — which calls itself a democracy — with head high, when individuals of our own race display such bad breeding and disgraceful conduct?

SCHOOL INTEGRATION NEAR IN TWIN CITIES

Calm, Official Caution Mark Arkansas Move

TESTS OF COMPLIANCE

By PAT J. McDONNELL
International News Service Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 17.—The twin cities of Little Rock and North Little Rock are moving toward partial school integration with an outward calm, but with great official caution.

Negro students in two weeks will begin attending some classes with white students in the state's two major cities. It is a simultaneous test of two avenues of compliance with the United States decision in the South.

In Little Rock, Negroes will be admitted to all high school grades under Federal Court orders. Across the Arkansas River, North Little Rock will begin gradual integration, without direct Federal Court compulsion, in the senior high school class.

Extremely Cautious

Public officials have been extremely cautious in dealing with the controversial topic. There is no outspoken official state leadership either in behalf or in opposition to integration. The official caution mirrors public opinion, which seems sharply divided.

"I feel the thinking people of the state are convinced that, as long as the Supreme Court decision stands, integration will be inevitable," one veteran, highly-placed state official said.

"I do not think integration could be accomplished throughout the state overnight," he said, adding frankly: "Our people are not yet ready to fully accept it."

In private conversations, public officials admit they do not know exactly how the white population will react to integration once it is underway.

Claim Public Support

There is considerable opposition to integration, in any form. White Citizens' Councils claim considerable public support. They have not, however, had the vocal and often vociferous support from public officials around which hard-core, all-out resistance has been built in some other Southern states.

Another elected state official, refusing to be publicly identified, put it this way:

"Undoubtedly, a majority of the white people are opposed to integration. But I believe most of the citizens of Arkansas earnestly desire to see order under law maintained. If we have no outside agitators stirring up trouble, there will likely be none."

Official state position is lawful resistance to the Supreme Court decision of 1954. Arkansas citizens, in November, authorized the Legislature to oppose encroachments on states rights by a vote of 185,374 to 146,064.

Many Were Surprised

Opposition to his declaration of states rights principles surprised many and may well account for what all-out segregation leaders call "luke warm" endorsement of segregation from top state officials.

In the Little Rock area, "lawful opposition" to integration won out by less than 2,000 votes. There were 22,774 votes for an amendment directing legislative opposition, 20,918 votes against.

It is among these voters—more of whom voted on whether or not to prohibit horse and dog racing—that the integration tests will be made next month.

Most observers think geography will determine which areas of Arkansas will integrate their schools first. There is only token opposition to integration in Northwest Arkansas, for instance, where there are very few Negroes. In the plantation country—the eastern half of the state, notably—opposition to integration is virtually as firm as in any part of the South.

White House Attacks Report Governor Is Capitulating by Seeking Parley

MEETING DUE AT 9 A. M.

Adams and Brownell Will Fly to Newport for Conference on Little Rock School

By W. H. LAWRENCE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 12—President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas arranged today to confer at 9 o'clock Saturday morning on Little Rock school integration problems.

The Governor so far has blocked by National Guard troops enforcement of a Federal court order requiring admission of ten Negroes to Little Rock's previously all-white Central High School. The President has pledged use of all legal means at his command to uphold the Constitution and back up the court order.

But the White House went out of its way today to refute suggestions that the fact that Governor Faubus had asked for a conference with the President necessarily mean that the Arkansas Governor was "throwing in the sponge" and surrendering in the Little Rock case.

First Word Came From Hays

The press secretary also disclosed that the White House kne wof Governor Faubus' selection of a Saturday meeting date even before it received a telegram from him.

The first word, he said, came from Representative Brooks Hays, Arkansas Democrat whose district includes Little Rock. Representative Hay telephoned to Sherman Adams, the President's principal deputy in Washington, and told him the telegram would be sent later in the day.

The White House announced that Mr. Adams and Herbert Brownell Jr., the Attorney General, would fly from Washington to Newport early Saturday morning in connection with the President's meeting with Governor Faubus.

Hays May Accompany Faubus

There were reports tonight that Representative Hays would accompany Governor Faubus to the session here. James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, said, however, that any announcement of the delegation coming from Little Rock properly should originate with the Governor.

The press secretary would not discuss the reported big role Representative Hays played as the intermediary in arranging the first exchange of telegrams between the President and the Governor yesterday. Mr. Hagerty said he knew of no previous contact between the White House and Representative Hays before the call to Mr. Adams this morning. Times

There was no definite word tonight just when the Arkansas Governor would reach this area. Mr. Hagerty said a Marine helicopter would be sent to bring him from the airfield, presumably the Quonset Point Naval Air Station, to the President's headquarters on Coasters Harbor Island just off Newport.

With the President's express approval, Mr. Hagerty angrily denounced radio and television reports quoting White House aides as saying Governor Faubus "was throwing in the sponge." Mr. Hagerty said that none of the three White House aides had "made any such statement like that."

"We have deliberately refrained from any such remarks and any such reports are completely untrue," Mr. Hagerty said. "There is no one in the White House staff in Newport talking that way, and I think all of you gentlemen and ladies know it. * * *

"And I would appreciate, and so would the President that you carry these remarks of mine in full."

Mr. Hagerty's statement came when the Arkansas Governor had not replied fixing a time for the conference. When the Governor asked for the meeting yesterday, the President offered to meet him at 3 P. M. Friday or 9 A. M. Saturday.

Mr. Hagerty was asked whether he had reacted so sharply to the radio broadcasts because he feared the reaction of surrender talk on Governor Faubus in advance of his arrival here. Mr. Hagerty replied that the White House statement spoke for itself, and was not due to any word of unfavorable reaction in Little Rock.

Press Conference Asked

One reporter formally requested of Mr. Hagerty that a joint news conference be arranged with the President and Governor Faubus at the conclusion of their talks. Mr. Hagerty smiled, then responded that any such considerations would have to await the arrival of the Arkansas Governor.

The White House atmosphere was one of cautious optimism that the meeting with Governor Faubus would produce a settlement of the Little Rock case, although Mr. Hagerty carefully refrained from saying so publicly.

The Governor has been made a defendant in an injunction action brought by Attorney General Brownell and set for Federal court hearing on Sept. 20 to enforce the court decree. The Governor said yesterday that he hoped to be able to comply with the court's order, consistent with his duties under the Arkansas and United States Constitutions.

On another civil rights front, Mr. Hagerty said he expected the President to name soon the six-member Civil Rights Commissio nauthorized by the law he signed Monday. The press secretary said he did not know how soon the President would name a new Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, also authorized by the measure.

Commentator Is Firm

Charles Von Fremd, news commentator for the Columbia Broadcasting System, said yesterday that he "still stands by "his original report that the White House felt that Governor Faubus was "throwing in the sponge."

The White House correspondent for C. B. S. news said that his phrasing may have been injudicious. But he insisted in telecasts subsequent to the one he made originally that a Presidential aide gave him to understand the White House expected the Arkansas Governor to "capitulate" on the integration issue in Little Rock.

"This reporter was given this White House assessment by a staff aide in much longer and intricate language and perhaps was remiss in summing up the White House belief with the phrase of 'throwing in the sponge,'" Mr. Von Fremd said and continued:

"Since the aide wasn't talking for quotation and perhaps did not realize the interpretation placed on his remarks, the official White House anger this morning probably is understandable. However, this correspondent still stands behind his original report.

"The White House feeling, as I understand it, is that it is expected Arkansas Governor Faubus will agree after his expected meeting with the President to follow the order of District Court Judge [Ronald N.] Davis that segregation in the Little Rock high school will be ended."

Top Aides Flying to Newport for Integration Parley—White House Hopeful

Sat. 9-14-57

By W. H. LAWRENCE

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 13—A Narragansett Bay seaport that berthed many of the early slave trading ships will be the site tomorrow of a possibly momentous conference between President Eisenhower and Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas on the tense issue of racial integration.

For the President, this is one of the most important and potentially most explosive domestic crises he has confronted in his four and three-quarters years in the White House.

He meets at 9 A. M. with a state Governor who has called out the Arkansas National Guard to maintain order in Little Rock, Ark. The result has been to prevent enforcement of a Federal court decree for admission of ten Negro students to the previously all-white Central High School of Little Rock. This, by itself, constitutes one of the most serious challenges of state versus Federal power since the Civil War.

Governor Fears Violence

The stakes on both sides are high. The Governor has said the only solution is withdrawal of the Federal court order because violence surely will follow removal of the National Guard and entry of the Negro students to the school. The President has pledged he will use every legal means at his command to uphold the Federal Constitution and support the court order.

Governor Faubus left Little Rock today saying he was "hopeful" of a settlement. No Administration source would speculate on the prospects for success. But an atmosphere of restrained optimism was evident.

On the surface there seemed these three possibilities:

¶Retreat by the Governor, whose aides have said he was coming to Newport to "confer, not capitulate."

¶Retreat by the Federal Government, which would be tantamount to an admission that every Southern state can resist the end of segregation, declared unconstitutional by a unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court.

¶A compromise of unspecified charter, which might "save face" on both sides.

Top Aides To Join Parley

The administration assembled its strongest team for the meeting. Flying here tonight were Sherman Adams, the former Governor of New Hampshire who is the President's principal deputy; Herbert Brownell Jr., the Attorney General; and Gerald D. Morgan, White House counsel. Mr. Adams and Mr. Brownell are regarded as least likely to advocate compromise on the ground such action would greatly weaken the Federal Union and diminish the prestige of both the White House and the Federal courts.

The President, here on holiday, has spoken out only through telegrams to Governor Fabus and in press statements issued through his secretary, James C. Hagerty.

The White House said tonight it had received a considerable volume of mail, including some from members of the House and Senate, urging that the President take the racial integration issue directly to the people by means of a radio and television report.

"Of course, we would not do that at this time with the conference with the Governors [of Arkansas] coming up," Mr. Hagerty said this afternoon.

Whether a speech might be considered after the meeting tomorrow was an unanswered question tonight.

The crisis has not so far interfered with the President's vacation plans. He played golf today, as he has every day that he has been in Newport, teeing off in a fog that was so heavy that the greens on the short holes were not visible from the tees. His strokes were punctuated by the growl of fog horns warning ships in the bay.

And he told his playing companions that he hoped to get in another round tomorrow afternoon if the conference with Governor Faubus was concluded in time.

The Arkansas Governor was scheduled to spend the night in near-by Providence and to be ferried here by helicopter to the President's headquarters on Coasters Harbor Island if the weather permits. If there is fog or rain tomorrow morning, the Governor and his party will be driven over in White House automobiles.

The automobile trip takes slightly more than an hour; the journey by helicopter can be made in about twelve minutes.

Capt. E. P. Aurand, the President's naval aide, will go to Providence to greet Governor Faubus and escort him to the naval base.

Traveling with the Governor are Representative Brooks Hays, Arkansas Democrat and behind-the-scenes intermediary in arranging this conference, and Arnold Sikes, the Governor's administrative assistant.

Building Overlooks Bay

The meeting will be held in the President's office on the second floor of the naval base heaquarters building. It looks out over the bay down which in the early days of the republic sailed ships loaded with rum for sale or barter in the purchase of Negroes in West Africa who were brought back to slavery in the South. The descendants of these slaves are involved in the Little Rock case commanding the President's attention tomorrow.

There was no estimate tonight how long the conference might last, other than the President's expressed "hope" he would get in another round of golf tomorrow afternoon. But Mr. Hagerty commented sharply that "there is no terminal time on hope" when reporters asked if the President's desire to play tomorrow afternoon indicated he did not expect the meeting to last beyond noon.

Requests have been made for a news conference with Governor Faubus, with the President, or with both of them together—but Mr. Hagerty has been unwilling to say whether either principal will meet with reporters.

Arrives in Providence With Representative Hays for Talks on Integration

FLIES FROM LITTLE ROCK

Governor Denies He Yields —Expects Parley to Solve Impasse Over Troops

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 13—Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas arrived by plane this evening for a conference with President Eisenhower on the Little Rock, Ark., school integration dispute.

When he left Little Rock this morning, the Governor said he was "hopeful" of the outcome of the talks.

The Governor, appearing somewhat fatigued after his flight of nearly eleven hours, refused to discuss the issue with newsmen in advance of the talks scheduled for tomorrow morning at the President's vacation retreat at Newport.

The twin-engine chartered plane landed at the Rhode Island State Airport in Warwick at 6:07 P. M. Governor Faubus was accompanied by Representative Brooks Hays, Arkansas Democrat who was instrumental in arranging the White House conference, and by his executive secretary, Arnold Sikes.

Mr. Hays said he would join in the conference "if they want me." He said he had sent his own report on the Little Rock situation to the White House, but declined to say what officials he had dealt with.

Gets Police Escort

No White House or state officials were at the airport to greet the Governor's party. The three made the seven-mile trip to downtown Providence by taxicab with a police escort.

The Governor is spending the night at the Sheraton-Biltmore Hotel. He is to go by automobile at 8:30 A. M. tomorrow to the Quonset Point Naval Air Station. A Marine Corps helicopter is scheduled to fly him across Narragansett Bay to the President's vacation headquarters on Coasters Harbor Island.

His talk with President Eisenhower is scheduled to begin at 9 A. M.

About fifty newsmen were at the airport when Governor Faubus landed. He treated the reporters affably, but said, "It would be improper for me to discuss the conference in advance."

The Governor's plane was a seven-seat Aero Commander of the type frequently used by President Eisenhower between Washington and his Gettysburg, Pa., farm. The pilot was W. C. White and the co-pilot Ed Moore, both of Dallas, Tex.

The plane stopped briefly at Roanoke, Va., en route here.

Gov. Dennis J. Roberts of Rhode Island said he had had other engagements during the afternoon, and so could not greet Governor Faubus. Governor Roberts maintains a suite at the Sheraton-Biltmore in which he lives about half the time. Governor Roberts added that he had not been notified that the Arkansas Governor would be staying in Providence.

Governor Is Optimistic

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 13—The Governor of Arkansas is optimistic that a solution will be found to the integration crisis here.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus left this morning for Newport to meet President Eisenhower. He said he left on a "hopeful" note.

In a thirty-minute informal interview with reporters at the municipal airfield, he said that the session with President Eisenhower might solve the impasse that has pitted the state of Arkansas against the Government of the United States.

Governor Faubus joked with reporters and photographers while waiting for his chartered Texas twin-motored plane to get ready. He is scheduled to meet President Eisenhower at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Accompanying the Governor on this trip were Representative Brooks Hays and the Governor's administrative aide, Arnold Sikes. Mr. Hays served as the intermediary who brought the Govenor and President together for tomorrow's meeting.

Mrs. Faubus, appearing in a neat black dress, and looking as cheerful as her husband, came to the airport with the party. She waited until the plane was in the air before leaving the field.

Mr. Hays came to the field at 8:30 o'clock, ten minutes before the Governor arrived. He reiterated that the conference might develop a blueprint for further action to solve the integration issue not only at Little Rock but throughout the country.

"What do you mean by a blueprint?" he was asked.

"Well," he answered, "we must not pin all our hopes in a final solution through one conference. I'm trying to avoid a letdown if we don't come back with a package solution."

Beginning of Solution Seen

Then he added: "This might be just the beginning of the solution of the South's problems." He quickly corrected that to: "I mean, the nation's problems."

More than a legal approach is needed, the Congressman said. "Legalisms will not solve this problem, although both sides will be guided by law," he added.

At 8:40 o'clock the Governor and his small party arrived. He shook hands with a dozen or more reporters who were waiting for him.

"When do you plan to come back?" he was asked.

"Either Saturday afternoon or Sunday morning," he replied. "It depends on the length of time it takes for our conference."

The Governor said he would be willing to meet with the press on his return, and report on the results of the meeting.

Smiling throughout the half-hour that he waited at the airfield, Governor Faubus exuded confidence.

"Congressman Hays is hopeful that something good will come of your meeting with the President," the Governor was told. "How do you feel about it?"

"I feel the same way," he said. "I too am hopeful."

Governor Faubus was reminded that one interpretation of his meeting with the President was that he, the Governor, had capitulated, and had "thrown in the sponge."

"Have you thrown in the sponge, Governor?" he was asked.

The Governor smiled in his characteristic easy manner, and looked about him, as though seeking a sponge. And then he pointed to his hat, which he carried in his hand, and laughed:

"I'm not taking a sponge with me, am I?"

He said he did not think that talk of capitulation had hurt the chance of success of the conference. He added that the President's aide had given an effective repudiation of any talk of throwing in the sponge or of capitulation.

Whether the integration issue can be settled in one meeting cannot be determined in advance, Governor Faubus said. Mr. Hays has suggested that other conferences on other levels might be needed. The Governor, though, is more hopeful than the Congressman.

"There is a possibility," he said, "that this might be the first, last and only conference. You can't tell."

When asked whether he would express his opinion of Judge Ronald N. Davis to President Eisenhower, Governor Faubus merely grinned and looked away. Judge Davies has ordered the Central High School here to be integrated immediately. Governor Faubus has used national guards to block integration. The governor called out the troops after the court ordered Negro students to enter. Thereupon Judge Davies ordered the United States Attorney General to bring court action against the Governor.

ARKANSAS

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE RONALD NORWOOD DAVIES

Uncompromising Judge

Times Thurs. 9-5-57 p.20-C

Ronald Norwood Davies

New York

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 4—When Judge Ronald Norwood Davies was an undergraduate at the University of North Dakota, he tried out for the varsity track team. The coach shook his head dubiously. How could this slight, timid-looking lad, only 5 feet 1 inch tall, compete on the track field?

Man in the News

Young Davies knew that he would have to give an extra "push" to make up for his lack of footage. So during the months of January and February he ran along the snow-covered railroad tracks to build up strength and stamina.

"I knew I'd need the extra strength to compete," he said. "I ran the hundred yards in ten seconds and won my varsity letter."

That extra strength is coming in handy now. Judge Davies faces the greatest judicial decision of his career. He has locked horns with Gov. Orval E. Faubus in an issue that may become a landmark in Southern integration.

The Federal District Court has ordered the Little Rock school bard to integrate its schools. The Governor, acting in his role as chief executive, called out the state militia and state police. Nine Negroes who tried to get in this morning were turned away by the troops.

The judge did not hesitate. He immediately conferred with the United States Marshal an dthe Assistant United States Attorney to find out why his orders had been flouted.

Judge Davies is not a man who scares easily. Tough problems do not faze him. He is known among his colleagues for his courage and his willingness to tackle any kind of a difficult problem.

Likes a Quiet Evening

As a district judge at Fargo, N. D., Judge Davies does not usually have many controversial issues to resolve. He lives quietly with his wife and children—he has three boys and two girls—in a medium-size home in Fargo. There is nothing that he likes better than to spend an evening at home, listening to music, watching television or reading a historical novel.

But on Aug. 26 his peaceful way of life was temporarily shattered. He was asked to come to Little Rock and sit in as temporary judge in the Arkansas Federal District. The calendar here is crowded and a Federal vacancy remains unfilled.

Judge Davies packed his small trunk and came to this Southern city. His assignment cals for duty here until February. But no sooner had he put on his judicial robe than he came face to face with serious issues.

Associated Press

Not one who scares easily

"I guess I must have a lightening rod that attracts trouble," he says, smiling.

First, a county judge overruled a Federal order that integration begin this fall. He disposed of that one fact. In sharp, short sentences, Judge Davies said that the court would not "hesitate nor equivocate" in placing Federal decisions above that of the state.

Then, yesterday, the school board called off integration. Again, the judge told the board that it could not ignore the court's order.

Judge Davies has a good judicial temperament. Perhaps his early background has something to do with it. Born in Crookston, Minn., a small town near Grand Forks, N. D., fifty-two years ago, young Davies spent his early life doing odd chores, mowing grass, and absorbing printer's ink. His father was editor of The Crookston Daily Times, a respected weekly.

When he graduated from the University of North Dakota thirty years ago, he entered Georgetown University, where he earned his law degree. He practiced law at Grand Forks, and soon earned a reputation as being quick, persuasive and completely

Served as Municipal Judge

He served two terms as municipal judge, joined several local groups—the Elks and Knights of Columbus among others—and continued to practice law. He served in the Army for four years, entering as first lieutenant and leaving as lieutenant colonel.

In August, 1955, President Eisenhower appointed him United States District Judge for the District of North Dakota.

Governor Faubus Defies Subpoena, Moves to Disqualify Judge Davies

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 19 (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus, taking the offensive, struck back at the federal government today with two last-mumute legal actions before Friday's crucial court hearing on his use of the National Guard to bar Negroes from a Little Rock high school.

First, he refused to honor a federal subpoena summing him to court as a defendant in a suit involving four recently passed Akkansas segregation laws.

A few hours later, his attorneys moved to disqualify U.S. Dist. Judge Ronald Davies—scheduled to hear the National Guard case tomorrow — on grounds that Davies is prejudiced against Faubus.

Judge Must Rule.

Davies himself will have to rule on the motion to disqualify.

Reporters asked Faubus if, having flouted one subpoena, he will obey the second, summoning him to court tomorrow.

"You just wait and see," the governor replied.

He was smiling, almost causal in his manner. He gave the impression of a man untroubled by the events swirling furiously around his head.

The Arkansas Democrat reported, in a copyrighted story today, that if Davies orders Faubus to withdraw the guardsmen from Central High School in tomorrow's hearing, the governor will obey.

Then, the Democrat said, he will wash his hands of all responsibility for any violence—which he has predicted from the first—that may break out in Little Rock.

He will also carry his fight to a higher court, the newspaper said, by appealing to the 8th Circuit Clurt of Appeals in St. Louis.

And if necessary, he will go all the way to the Supreme Court, the report said, in an all-out fight for the rights of the states as against the powers of the federal government.

Defies Subpoena.

The subpoena that Faubus defied ordered him to appear before a three-judge panel in a suit brought by 10 Negro ministers. They asked the judges to set aside legislation, passed this year by the state Legislature, to preserve segregation in Arkansas schools.

The judges granted a motion to postpone the hearing on this suit. A somewhat similar suit is due for a hearing in a state court. They put back any further federal hearing, pending the outcome there.

In refusing to obey the summons to the hearing on the suit brought by the 10 ministers, Faubus told the court in a letter:

"Almost from the very beginning of our Republic, it has been uniformly held that the chief executive is not compelled to comply with a subpoena unless he chooses to do so.

"In this particular case, because of the obvious ulterior motive of those who obtained the subpoena, I do not choose to comply with it."

There was no immediate indication in federal court as to whether action may be taken to punish Faubus for denying its authority to come to court.

His lawyers then fired a hot "bias and prejudice" blast against Davies and asked him to step down from the bench in the big battle Friday.

Their affidavit said: "The Hon. Ronald N. Davies has a personal bias favorable to the plaintiffs . . . and a personal prejudice against this respondent, and would therefore be unable to conduct a fair and impartial trial and render a decision either of law or fact that would be free of prejudice."

In effect, it accused Davies of working closely with the Department of Justice, the U.S. district attorney, and the superintendent of schools in Little Rock to show that "Orval E. Faubus acted without just cause and in bad faith."

It said Davies took "hearsay" into consideration when he denied a petition to postpone the integration of Central High School. The affidavit quoted Davies as citing the words of Woodrow Wilson Mann, mayor of Little Rock—

"The chief executive of Little Rock has stated that the Little Rock police have not had a single case of inter-racial violence reported to them, and there has been no indication from sources available to him that there would be violence in regard to this situation."

However, the affidavit argued further, the mayor was not in court, a witness under oath, when he made the statement Davies took into consideration.

The much-discussed FBI report on Little Rock also was noted in Faubus' affidavit. This document, reported to run to 400 pages, lists the findings of the agents who ran down the rumors that violence was in the making in Little Rock, timed to erupt when the Negroes tried to enter Central High.

Reporters asked Faubus whether he will remove the National Guard by Monday, when classes resume in Central High after the weekend.

Doesn't Know.

"I don't know at this time," he said.

"Can't you replace the guard with state troopers?" they asked.

"I don't have enough state troopers," he replied.

Apprised of the possibility that Faubus might buck responsibility for maintaining order into the hands of other law - enforcing bodies, Mayor Mann said: "I don't anticipate any degree of trouble, but you can't prophesy what's going to happen.

"I feel confident that the people of Little Rock are law-abiding Christians and are willing to abide by the law of the land."

He said he could not disclose his plans to take over, with police, from the guardsmen.

Fabus' various legal maneuvers appeared to remove all possibility of an eleventh-hour compromise with the federal government before tomorrow's pivotal battle in court.

But he said today that he will keep in touch with the governor "due to a change in the situation."

United States not united in reaction to Ike act—

South is boiling mad, North pleased

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most Southern officials hit hard at President Eisenhower's decision to use federal troops to enforce school integration in Little Rock while Northerners backed his action as necessary to preserve law and order.

"Federal force must be used in this situation to put down force," said Adlai Stevenson, twice beaten by Eisenhower for the presidency. Stevenson termed the Little Rock situation a national disaster, but he said the President had no choice. He said Gov. Orval Faubus behaved irresponsibly in using the Arkansas National Guard to thwart integration.

SEN. OLIN JOHNSTON (D., S. C.) talked of armed resistance.

"If I were governor and he (the President) came in, I'd give him a fight such as he has never seen before.

"I'd proclaim a state of insurrection and I'd call out the National Guard and then we'd find out who's going to run things in my state."

GOV. AVERELL HARRIMAN of New York said the President had "contributed to the making of the present situation" in Little Rock by not taking strong action at the outset of the school crisis.

SEN. RUSSELL (D., Ga.) termed the action illegal and accused the President of slapping totalitarian rule on the people of Arkansas.

"This sort of totalitarian rule may put Negro children into the white schools of Little Rock, but it will have a calamitous effect on race relations and the cause of national unity," Russell declared.

AT SEA ISLAND, Ga., where Southern governors are in conference, Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee proposed a committee of seven governors from the conference to confer immediately with Eisenhower to seek a solution to the school problem without recourse to federal troops. Some of his colleagues welcomed the suggestion, but Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland said he was opposed to the idea.

McKELDIN DEFENDED Eisenhower's action as necessary and he was joined by Gov. Cecil Underwood of West Virginia. Both are Republicans.

GOV. LUTHER HODGES of North Carolina, conference chairman, proposed a compromise under which the president would not use federal force "so long as state and local authorities are able properly to perform this function."

Faubus, who returned yesterday to Little Rock from Sea Island, said state authority would have settled the integration problem in the Arkansas capital without violence if the President had left "law and order to us."

SEN. McCLELLAN (D., Ark.) agreed with Russell that the action was "without authority of law." He said "it may participate more trouble than it will prevent."

GOVS. MARVIN GRIFFIN of Georgia and JAMES FOLSOM of Alabama called the action political. Griffin charged that Eisenhower "is a captive of the Republican political strategists, who are more interested in the minority Negro vote than the welfare of the people."

Folsom saw the move as reflecting a desire by the president "and other big brass in Washington" to take over the National Guard and run it from Washington. He said he would forestall any move to federalize the Alabama National Guard by discharging every member.

REP. BOB SYKES (D., Fla.) said Faubus should close the schools "in protest at this invasion of states' rights."

Gov. Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut and Sen. Precott Bush (R., Con.) agreed that the president did the right thing.

ATTY. GEN. JOHN PATTERSON of Alabama, who is expected to be a candidate for governor next year, said this in a telegram to the president:

"Your action in sending the federal troops into Little Rock is shocking and cannot be supported by either fact or law. What you have done may well destroy the foundation of our nation.

"You are apparently willing to turn federal bayonets on the people of the South to appease the NAACP and its followers. I urge you to allow Arkansas to handle its own affairs."

Newspaper editorial comment generally followed the same north-south division.

TALMADGE SAYS FAUBUS IS RIGHT

Governor in Best Spot to Weigh Issue--Solon

SAVANNAH, Ga., Sept. 10 (AP) —Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus is within his rights in calling out the National Guard to stop integration in Little Rock schools, according to Georgia Sen. Herman Talmadge (D-Ga).

"Our national administration is attempting to make a hollow shell out of state and national governments. This has been accomplished by judicial decrees which clearly violate the constitution and by legislative enactments that clearly violate the constitution," Talmadge said in a statement here.

"It is vitally necessary that they be strongly resisted on the federal, state and local level. The governor of Arkansas as conservator of the peace is in much better position to know what will break the peace than an imported federal judge from North Dakota.

"The governor of each of the 48 states is under a duty to take action as may be necessary to maintain the peace and tranquility of the state," the senator said.

Asked if he believed President Eisenhower might call the National Guard into federal duty in an attempt to solve the Arkansas situation, Talmadge replied it is a possibility.

"But Arkansas probably has emergency clauses in the state constitution which would allow him to immediately establish a state guard," the senator said.

"I know that Georgia has such provisions and if I were governor and a situation such as that arose I would organize the state troops," Talmadge added.

The senator was in Savannah to address a meeting of a civic club.

FAUBUS IS FEARFUL

Governor Hopes Parents Of Negro Children Won't Force Issue

Mon. 9-23-57

By KENNETH TOLER
Staff Writer

SEA ISLAND, Ga., Sept. 22.—Gov. Orval Faubus said here Sunday he is "apprehensive of disorder and violence" in Little Rock Monday if Negro children try to enter Central High School now that National Guardsmen have been removed.

The Governor added, "It is always possible that the Guard might be called out again."

Troops were removed Friday after Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies issued an injunction against interference with integration of the school. Governor Faubus had called out the Guard to maintain law and order after he said he had evidence violence would result if there was an effort made to integrate the school.

Calls For Patience

Arriving here for the Southern Governors Conference Mr. Faubus said he hopes parents of the Negro children and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will not force the issue at this time but will "exercise some patience during a cooling off period."

Mr. Faubus said he hopes nothing will develop to force him to cut short his plans to stay until the conference adjourns Wednesday.

He was appreciative of the ovation given him in Atlanta Saturday night by the tremendous crowd attending the Georgia-Texas football game. He was roundly applauded when introduced at half-time by Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia.

"The demonstration showed that the people of the South as a whole feel far more deeply about the situation than some suspect," he said. "I mean by that the effort to compel. It has never been possible to compel the American people to do anything."

When Governor Faubus stepped from his Arkansas National Guard plane at the Atlanta airport, he was applauded by several hundred persons who showed up to welcome him.

Caution Is Ordered

Mrs. W. F. Wimberly, wife of an Atlanta attorney and one of the host officials, walked up to the Governor and said, "We bow to you."

Governor Faubus told newsmen responsibility for order in the Little Rock situation "now lies first with the local authorities and the School Board.

"One aspect of the situation at Little Rock not generally understood is that the NAACP and integrationists set up the integration effort as a great example to other Southern states in the face of the fact that a majority of the people are opposed to integration," he said.

Acceptance Is Cited

Governor Faubus insisted he has a "great deal of information there would have been violence" had he not called out the National Guard.

He said integration in other areas of Arkansas, as well as at the University of Arkansas, has followed without disorders because it was done through general acceptance of the people rather than compulsion.

Governor Faubus said the seg is not involved in his appeal of Judge Davies' order.

"The question on appeal is whether the Federal Court can substitute its judgment for the sovereign right of the governor of a state. This question could have been raised in some other sort of issue, such as a labor dispute.

Governor Faubus said he has received numerous calls from other governors expressing "sympathy but saying it was my problem to settle." He also said 50 per cent of his mail and telegrams as a result of the situation came from outside the South," and 98 per cent of them were favorable."

No Pledges To 'Ike'

The Governor, whose state has inaugurated a strong effort to attract new industries, said there has been "no indication that it is hurting that program."

Governor Theodors McKeldin, Republican of Maryland, said the controversy would have a serious impact on the state's industrial program.

Governor Faubus said there were "no promises or decisions" in his conference with President Eisenhower. He said he merely explained the difference between the Little Rock situation and in other cities where integration was orderly.

SEGREGATIONIST: Roy V. Harris, who said that he and Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia did their utmost to block integration in the Little Rock schools.

GEORGIAN LINKED TO FAUBUS STAND

Times 9.18-C

Roy Harris, Political Boss Visited Arkansas—But He Denies Being Mastermind

Mon. 9-9-57

By RICHARD AMPER

One of the men whom Gov. Orval E. Faubus named as the decisive force that brought about his state's stand against integration said yesterday that the Arkansas Governor, had exceeded the highest segregationist hopes.

Sixty-one-year-old Roy Harris, Georgia political kingmaker and one of the South's leading segregationists, indicated in a telephone interview that he and Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia had done their utmost to block the integration of Negro students in Little Rock's schools.

He said that he and Governor Griffin had gone to Arkansas lastm onth to fight for the segregationist cause. Governor Faubus has said that the two men tipped the scale in favor or resistance to the Supreme Court mandate on integration.

Reached at his home in Augusta, Ga., Mr. Harris insisted, however, that neither he nor the Georgia Governor had made any effort to persuade Governor Faubus personally to resist integration.

Says Move Was Surprising

"We were surprised," he said, "when he took the action he did."

Mr. Harris denied that he and Governor Griffin had masterminded the strategy of having Governor Faubus call out the the National Guard. But he acknowledged having said, during his visit, that "if this happened in Georgia, we'd call out the National Guard."

The remark, he said, was made last Aug. 22 at a $10-a-plate dinner to raise funds for the Capital Citizens Council, a segregationist organization in Little Rock.

The following morning, Mr. Harris said, he and Governor Griffin visited Governor Faubus at the executive mansion for breakfast. But Mr. Harris said that he was so convinced that the Arkansas Governor was a so-called liberal Democrat in favor of integration that it would be pointless to discuss it.

'Didn't Speak About It'

"We thought he was so far on the others ide that we didn't even speak about it," Mr. Harris said.

What he regraded as Governor Faubus's surprising action he attributed to the force of public opinion in the state.

"I don't think he'd listen to anybody in Georgia," Mr. Harris declared. He said that for elementary political considerations the Governor would "listen only to the folks in his own state."

But even if the Georgians did not attempt to put pressure directly on the Arkansas Governor, the end was achieved indirecty through the climate and mood that Mr. Faubus said the two men had succeeded in creating.

FAUBUS RETAINS GUARD AT SCHOOL; TALKS WITH HAYS

New York

Governor and Congressman Confer While Truce Hope Rises in Little Rock

10 NEGROES REMAIN OUT

Await Final Court Decision —Removal of the Troops Is Believed at Hand

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 16 — National Guardsmen remained on duty today in front of the all-white Central High School.

They had instructions from Gov. Orval E. Faubus to continue to bar ten Negro students whose admission had been ordered by a Federal court. The Governor said on a national television show last night that the Guardsmen might be pulled out later this week.

Today all was peaceful at the school and throughout the city. the city.

The Governor has not talked to reporters since returning from a conference with President Eisenhower at Newport, R. I., Saturday, when he said he would respect court orders for school integration.

Representative Brooks Hays, Democrat of Arkansas, who had arranged the meeting, arrived this afternoon.

Hays Goes to Mansion

Representative Hays went immediately to the Governor's mansion to confer with Mr. Faubus.

Soon after his arrival, Representative Hays said he hoped that a solution would soon be found to the integration conflict and that "much good" had come from the meeting at Newport between President Eisenhower and Governor Fabus.

"The hopes of the people of the country, with the build-up they have had, simply can't be frustrated," Mr. Hays commented.

The general opinion here is that Governor Faubus will not delay a troop withdrawal until he appears Friday before Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies in a hearing of an integration suit brought by the Attorney General. Many expect that the Governor will "throw in the sponge" before then, that the troops will be removed before Friday, possibly on Wednesday. Governor Faubus said Sunday that the troops might be withdrawn this week "under a condition of tranquillity."

Negroes Remain Out

None of the ten Negro students tried to enter Central High School today.

The Negroes were barred by the National Guard Sept. 4 when they attempted to enter the school through a jeering crowd of 400, mostly adults. In announcing that he had ordered the guards to take up their positions, Governor Faubus said the Guard's mission was simply "to maintain order."

It was indicated today that the Negro students would remain away from Central High until the issue is resolved in the courts.

Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the Arkansas National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that no further attempt would be made until the troops were removed and the children assured that they would be admitted.

Times 9-20-C

Those aware of the contents of the 400-page report by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, submitted by the United States Government as part of its evidence against Governor Faubus, said that it was "devastating" in its analysis of the Governor's position. Little evidence is presented by the Governor, these sources say, to suggest that the National Guardsmen were needed to preserve peace or avoid bloodshed.

Back on the Rice Farm

At Central High School today a reduced unit of thirty National Guardsmen formed under the direction of Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson. The soon broke up into clusters of three or four each. They talked among themselves or stood idly about the school grounds.

"I'd sure like to get out of here," an 18-year-old Guardsman said unhappily.

He said he worked on a rice farm with his parents. "They need me there," he continued. "No one seems to need us here anymore."

He was right. Less than a dozen men and women, the "hard core" among the earlier demonstrators, gathered quietly here this morning.

"I'm sure the Governor is not going to let us down," they said loudly.

"He won't," said Mrs. Allen Thevenet, a founder of the Mrothers Club of Central High School, a strong segregationist group. "He's on our side for keeps."

Rights Statement Scored

"Maybe the troops will be withdrawn, but the niggers will not get in," said Arthur J. Bickle, a former teacher, with a master's degree from the University of Arkansas. Mr. Bickle now operates a fireworks factory here.

The Arkansas Gazette received today a copy of The Augusta Courier, a strong segregationist publication issued in Augusta, Ga. The publication, dated Sept. 16, 1957, has a statement on civil rights that was read by Governor Faubus last night on the "Mike Wallace Interview" television show over the American Broadcasting Company system.

The Gazette, in an editorial to be published tomorrow, notes a peculiar "coincidence" in the fact that this paper came out at this time and that the Governor had used a quotation from it.

"It shows the tie-in between Governor Faubus and the segregationists of Georgia," a highly placed official said.

There was much discussion here, also, on a scientific poll to which Governor Faubus referred last night. The Governor said that a scientific poll, taken by the Mid-South Surveys early last week, had found that 82 per cent of the people of Little Rock agreed with him that "disorder and violence would have occurred had I not taken the action which I did."

No one in authority here seemed to know when the study was undertaken, who sponsored it, what questions were asked or how it was conducted. Efforts to reach the officers of this organization proved fruitless. The Governor or his aides would shed no light on it.

The schools opened their third week uneventfully. The attorney for the Board of Education, A. F. House, said that the school system was trying to obey the court's order to proceed with integration "forthwith." The next move, he said, is up to the Governor.

The ten Negro students do not intend to go to the all-Negro Horace Mann High School, even on a temporary basis.

"We're going to get a tutor and try to keep up with our studies," one of the students said.

McClellan Doubtful of Truce

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (AP) —Senator John L. McC[illegible] said today that he has some doubt that the current school integration controversy in Arkansas would be settled peacefully.

The Arkansas Democrat, in his first comment on the school integration dispute in his state, declined to say whether he ap proved the use of the national guard.

Senator McClellan said that what he knew of the situation was only hearsay and that he did not want to express any opinion on the Governor's stand.

The Senator has just returned from a short rest at Hot Springs, Ark. He said he saw Governor Faubus while there but declined to say what they discussed.

Asked whether the reputation of Arkansas had suffered as a result of the Governor's action, Senator McClellan replied:

"Well, I don't know. Until this thing has developed farther I'd rather not say."

'Outrageous Action' Scored

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 (UP) —Representative Frank Thompson Jr., Democrat of New Jersey, said today the "outrageous action" of Governor Faubus "is more than a national disgrace."

"It is, indeed, a gift to the Communist propaganda machine," Mr. Thompson said in a statement.

Asks Davies to remove self—

Faubus balks at appearing in U. S. court

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 19—(AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus defied a subpoena for a hearing in an anti-segregation lawsuit today and asked U. S. District Judge Ronald N. Davies to disqualify himself as "biased and prejudiced."

GOV ORVAL FAUBUS
. . . Refuses subpoena

The suit is not directly related to tomorrow's hearing, in which Faubus also is under subpoena. The second case grows out of his use of the National Guard to keep Negroes out of Central High School in Little Rock.

Faubus told reporters he does not know whether he will honor the summons for the Friday court action.

Davies is on the bench in both cases.

HE WAS ONE of three federal judges before whom Negro ministers brought a petition today, challenging the validity of Arkansas laws, passed by the Legislature this year, which are aimed at preserving segregation in the state's schools.

Davies will sit alone in tomorrow's hearing.

In rejecting the subpoena for today's hearing, and in demanding that Davies be disqualified, Faubus may have given a clue as to what he will do about tomorrow's suit.

But the governor would not say.

"You just wait and see," he replied when reporters asked if he will go into court Friday.

THE ARKANSAS Democrat said, in a copyrighted story, that if Davies hands down an injunction tomorrow against Faubus, the governor will withdraw National Guardsmen from around Central High School, and drop all responsibility for any violence that may ensue in Little Rock.

In his affidavit relating to Davies' fitness to be one of the judges on the hearing about the anti-segregation laws, Faubus attorneys asserted:

"Judge Davies is unable to conduct a fair and impartial trial and render a decision, either in law or fact, that would be free of prejudice."

The affidavit asked that Davies "proceed no further in the hearing," and that another judge be assigned to the case.

There was no immediate action from the court on the affidavit.

WHILE THE BATTLE in Little Rock, touched off when Faubus put Guardsmen around Central High School, is not directly related to the hearing today, Faubus' attorneys referred to it in support of the affidavit.

In effect, Faubus' attorneys argued that Davies is prejudiced against the governor on all counts.

As proof, they said, he took the word of Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann and Chief of Police Marvin Potts as saying there was no threat of violence in Little Rock.

The attorneys noted that neither the mayor nor the chief of police were called into court at that time.

Faubus linked the events in Little Rock, and what he charged were Davies reaction to them, to their claim that he is unfit to hear the lawsuit brought by the 10 Negro ministers against the segregation laws.

Further, the attorneys contended, the fact that Davies himself asked the Department of Justice to file the petition for the hearing tomorrow, is another evidence of Davies' bias in the case.

FAUBUS, WHEN asked if he will remove the National Guard Monday, replied "I don't know at this time."

"Can't you replace the Guard with state troopers?" a newsman asked.

"I don't have enough state troopers," the governor replied.

Mayor Mann, informed of these developments, said, "I don't anticipate any degree of trouble, but you can't prophesy what's going to happen.

"I feel confident that the people of Little Rock are law abiding Christians and are willing to abide by the law of the land," the mayor said.

He declined to disclose how he plans to use the Little Rock police force if the National Guard is withdrawn from the high school, and Negroes attempt to enroll in the school.

The affidavit, filed by Thomas Harper, Fort Smith attorney who is also chairman of the state Democratic Party, was handed to the court after Faubus himself refused to appear in answer to the subpoena.

Davies has twice ruled that Little Rock Central High School must integrate immediately.

When the court went inito session, Richard B. McCulloch of Forrest City, Ark., attorney for the State Sovereignty Commission, asked for an indefinite postponement on the suit by Negro ministers to have the segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

FABUS AND Rep. Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) came out of the mansion this morning after another in the series of talks they have been holding.

Hays had indicated earlier that he thought his usefulness, in trying to bring Fabus position nto line with that of the federal government, was at an end.

Last night, an informed source said, "it looks as though negotiations with Washington have broken down completely."

Hays said this morning that "due to a change in the situation," he will keep in touch with the governor.

Neither the governor nor Hays would elaborate on the statement.

He said "no comment" to another report that his attorneys will move to be snown the 400-page report on the Little Rock situation prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Faubus said a look at it would be "very interesting," and he added, "of course, our evidence may consist of thousands of pages."

Faubus has long insisted that information came to him, before the night of Sept. 2, that there would be serious violence in Little Rock when Central High School reopened Sept. 3, and the Negroes tried to enroll.

Whether his information will coincide with that compiled by the FBI is one of the critical points in the hearing scheduled before Judge Davies tomorrow.

Hays said he would continue to make himself available to Faubus today, but hopes to leave tonight for Oklahoma City where he is scheduled to attend a Baptist meeting.

Both men were smiling and appeared in good spirits.

The governor's attorneys indicate that they will take the fight —the clash between federal and state authority—all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

IN A FILMED address released Sept. 9, Faubus made some statements which may represent the core of his position now. He said then:

"I cannot abdicate my office and let a federal judge substitute his judgment for mine on this issue. If he has a right to substitute his judgment for mine on this issue, then he has the right to substitute his judgment on all issues involving the duties imposed upon me as governor of Arkansas.

"If the federal government moves into Arkansas by force, or in any other manner, and takes from the people of the state the right to elect a governor, then we will have lost our last right of local self government.

"If blood is then shed, my conscience will be clear, but I will weep for my people."

Gradual Desegregation

Events Said to Disprove Benefits of Token Changes

The writer of the following letter is the author of a monograph "Desegregation: An Appraisal of the Evidence" (Journal of Social Issues) and Associate Professor of Psychology at The City College.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Aside from the obvious and important constitutional issues raised by Governor Faubus' defiance of the Federal judicial and Executive authority, his action raises for reexamination and eventual solution the presently obscured problem of determining the most appropriate methods and procedures for bringing about an effective transition from segregated to nonsegregated schools.

It will be recalled that the United States Supreme Court after establishing the constitutional issue in its May 17, 1954, decision remained concerned with the problem of implementation. It posed the question of whether Negro children should be admitted to schools of their choice "forthwith" or whether there should be "an effective gradual adjustment."

A year later, in its May 31, 1955, implementation decree, the court permitted the Federal district courts to accept from local school districts plans for the desegregation of their schools with "all deliberate speed." Although this in effect permitted the acceptance of "gradual" desegregation plans, the court was quite specific in stating the conditions under which such "gradualism" should be granted by the district courts.

Basis for Concession

One may assume that the court in making this concession in the granting of immediate relief to the Negro plaintiffs who were being denied their adjudicated constitutional rights, which are personal and present, did so in the exercise of its equity powers and thereby indicated its belief that a "gradual" and "reasonable" approach to the desegregation of the public schools would be generally effective and more conducive to social stability.

Incidents of violent opposition to school desegregation confirm previous systematic studies and analyses of many cases of desegregation which revealed that there is no convincing evidence that "gradual" and "token" desegregation is more effective than "forthwith" and "complete" desegregation. There is considerable evidence that a forthright and direct approach to the solution of the administrative and procedural problems executed in the minimum time necessary is less likely to result in intense or prolonged violent resistance.

A "gradual" approach to desegregation is generally seen by those who intensely oppose desegregation as apologetic and a sign of weakness or vacillation by those in authority. It is sometimes interpreted as an indication that desegregation should not be undertaken at all or, at best, circumvented.

Aid to Opposition

Furthermore a gradual approach to desegregation grants those who are opposed sufficient time to mobilize, organize and intensify their opposition. An apologetic, grudging approach to desegregation, implicit in the interpretation or nature of gradualism, invites opposition.

Additional support for these observations comes from the fact that all of the recent cases of violence associated with the desegregation of the public schools involved plans for desegregation which were the ultimate in "gradualism" and "moderation."

It may be of special psychological significance also that these incidents involved very small numbers of Negro children. It is conceivable that the type of personality that is capable of expressing its racial prejudices in acts of violence is more likely to do so when its victims are clearly in a defenseless minority.

If this is true, then the procedure whereby small numbers of Negro children are offered as tokens of a "gradual" desegregation must be reconsidered.

It may be necessary for our Federal courts in the near future to direct their attention more specifically to this previously ignored problem of the appropriate method for effective desegregation of our public schools. When this is done, the chances of reducing or eliminating these incidents of racial violence will be increased.

KENNETH B. CLARK,
New York, Sept. 9, 1957.

Gov. Faubus' Face

The time for face-saving in Little Rock is just about over. Mediators between Governor Faubus and the Federal Government have gone a very long way to help the Governor retreat gracefully. Mr. Faubus cannot be unaware of the damage his use of National Guard troops to prevent school desegregation has done to the good name of Arkansas and to the reputation of the United States as well. He cannot really think, either, that he will win. But each time that the Governor appears on the verge of reasonableness, the white citizens' councils seem to renew their grip on him. If he has proved nothing else, he has proved that despite his public pose he is a slippery and elusive man.

There is a considerable danger in this sort of situation that too many attempts at peacemaking may have the effect of protecting Mr. Faubus' face at the expense of the Federal Government's. It is possible, indeed, that Mr. Faubus thrives on the publicity he has been receiving and that every peace overture results only in raising his price. If this is the case, too much of an effort to buy peace in Little Rock might prompt a rash of similar situations elsewhere in the South.

In any event, the surest way to convince Mr. Faubus, and to uphold the prestige of the Federal Government, is to prepare fully and without hesitation for the Federal Court hearing tomorrow. Happily the Department of Justice has been doing this through the subpenas issued by the District Attorney. Surely the Governor cannot relish the thought that the evidence gathered by the FBI—evidence reportedly showing that there was no real threat of violence until he manufactured it—may be laid before the people of Arkansas.

Whether there is to be even a temporary delay in carrying out desegregation in the Central High School is for Judge Davies to determine. Governor Faubus has said that he accepts the jurisdiction of the court, which presumably means that he will not attempt to defy it (in any case the court could require compliance pending an appeal). If the court rules that desegregation must proceed immediately in accordance with the School Board plan, the question will be whether the Governor will cooperate actively and end the interference by the National Guard or will encourage passively the resistance he has helped to whet.

Obviously the first responsibility for protecting law and order in Little Rock belongs to local authorities, particularly the Little Rock police. Governor Faubus can, if he wishes, backstop local authorities with the state police. A worse situation was handled competently in such fashion in Nashville. But the Administration in Washington ought to be ready, if Mr. Faubus drags his feet, to federalize the National Guard if necessary and issue it new orders to carry out the intent of the court. Mr. Faubus ought to know that such plans are in readiness. Then if he wants to tangle with the Federal Government there will have to be a tangle.

LITTLE ROCK STORY

Television's Treatment of Major News Developments Found Superficial

By JACK GOULD

TELEVISION'S coverage of the Little Rock racial integration story has not been all it could and should have been. The challenge to Federal authority by Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas certainly ranks as one of the most important domestic developments in a great many years, yet the networks have not unduly exerted themselves to probe the legal, political and emotional factors in the crisis.

In their nightly newscasts the three chains—the American Broadcasting Company, Columbia Broadcasting System and National Broadcasting Company—have kept up ably with the major headlines. Last Sunday the A. B. C. chain scored a good scoop in presenting the first live interview with Governor Faubus and a few hours earlier N. B. C. presented some illuminating interviews with students at the Central High School, where the presence of Arkansas National Guardsmen has prevented Negro youngsters from enrolling.

For a time the networks admittedly labored under a handicap which they could not correct by themselves: there were no facilities for transmitting live pictures from Little Rock to the rest of the country. But last week-end this technical difficulty was corrected and TV had an opportunity to demonstrate its resourcefulness in digging beneath the surface of events and coming up with a penetrating summary of the swiftly moving course of history in the South.

PICASSO—The artist will appear on "Elder Wise Men," resuming over N. B. C.-TV at 2:30 this afternoon.

In reporting the difficulties in Arkansas it was only natural that the more spectacular developments should receive priority on the screen; the spot news necessarily must come first. But at the same time events must be kept in perspective if the enormous educational usefulness of TV is to be realized.

As of this writing, for example, TV has not yet offered a single extended discussion of the newest phase of the segregation problem by a panel of outstanding and representative Southerners.

From looking at TV it might be concluded rather readily that violence and defiance were predominant in the South. Yet the fact is, of course, that there are many sensitive, cultured and educated Southerners who deplore what has happened in recent days, even while they may continue to object to integration.

Last Sunday, for example, N. B. C. touched on the Little Rock story in its program called "Comment," which featured four of the network's staff commentators. In many ways it was a most interesting presentation. But in this instance think how far more fruitful and different it would have been to have a quartet of leading Southern editors or commentators discuss the problems with which they must live from day to day.

New York Times

Solution

It is no secret that many responsible Southerners feel that some elements of the Northern press and television go below the Mason-Dixon line with ready-made conclusions and prejudices of their own. But one way to alleviate this belief is to let responsible Southerners tell their own story in their own way. Where television is concerned they have not had an adequate opportunity to do so in recent days.

As a medium of communications that preempts the attention of millions night in and night out, television clearly has distinct obligations in the current integration crisis. It is not enough merely for TV to hit the highspots within the limited time afforded in regular fifteen-minute news broadcasts. The TV industry must recognize that there are some stories which cannot be competently and sensibly covered and still fall within a predetermined format. Similarly, it is not sufficient to return to a subject weeks later in the form of a documentary, valuable as such a program may be.

The time for TV to employ all its magnificent capabilities is at the moment when it may constructively influence the course of events, which is when the news is happening. The agitators, unruly mobs and impetuous individuals whose provocative steps invite hysteria must be part of TV's running account. But in an anxious hour for the nation the medium of television can also play a helpful role in affording a calm, thoughtful and comprehensive picture of what is going on in the South.

Exchange

The news is not all bad; in many sections real progress has been made. It does not entail any compromise in support of the essential decency and justice of the Supreme Court decision on desegregation to listen with understanding and compassion to the viewpoints of Southerners who find it hard to accept. It is partly through mutual exchange of Northern and Southern opinions, which TV is so splendidly equipped to further, that reason rather than rashness can be made to prevail.

The news departments of the networks have both the manpower and the know-how to do a thoroughly commendable job in this respect. But it is the duty of the policy-making heads of the networks to give their news departments the green light for more extensive coverage, which is essential if the medium is to discharge its social responsibility with maturity and meaning. In cases of this kind there always is a great deal of convenient rationalization of why TV cannot do this or that; the cry of business as usual, however, can only fall on deaf ears when the country's unity is involved.

Arkansas' Faubus Comes From Deep in Ozarks

Herald

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (AP) — The man who ordered the National Guard to stand watch over Little Rock's Central High School comes from deep in the Ozark hills — a far removed land where a man might spend a lifetime without ever seeing a Negro.

Miami, Fla.

A touch of the twang of the mountains remains in the speech of Gov. Orval Faubus, but he is far different from the average hill farmer (a term he loves to use in describing himself), and he has undergone a startling metamorphosis since he opened his first gubernatorial campaign in 1954.

Fri. 9-6-57

A school teacher, weekly newspaper publisher and former highway director, Faubus seldom indulges in a grammatical slip but some metropolitan folk cringe at a few of his pronunciations — the same sounds that endear him to the common man in the Ozarks. He called the National Guard "the me-lish-ee" in his television speech Monday night.

His action in calling out the Guard to prevent racial integration at Central High was somewhat startling to political observers since the governor seldom goes all-out in any direction. For three years, he has been parrying direct questions from newsmen with increasing skill. He has developed from a sometimes fumbling speech-reader in his 1954 darkhorse days to a pretty fair orator.

Gov. Orval Faubus
. . . a changed man

Faubus is 47, under average height with a plain face and an engaging grin that convinces voters of his sincerity. He has a reputation of retribution for his political enemies and fulfilled promises for his supporters.

He numbers among his friends influential east Arkansas businessmen and planters who are strong segregationists, but he appointed Winthrop Rockefeller to head an effective new program of industrialization — a Yankee who votes the Republican ticket and has a Negro farm manager.

The soft-spoken Democratic governor went against an old policial axiom early this year when he pushed a huge new tax program through the Legislature. Faubus, who as a boy walked five mountainous miles to school, insisted that the money was needed for education and welfare.

During the 1956 campaign, he remained a middle-of-the roader with this stock statement:

"There will be no enforced integration in the public schools of Arkanasas as long as I am your governor."

Faubus again seemed to have a hands-off attitude toward segregation when four anti-integration bills came up in the 1957 Legislature, but he signed them and said that they were more moderate than those passed by other Southern states.

Faubus has increased in stature by degrees ever since he first decided — while he was president of the Greasy Creek 4-H Club — that he would like to be governor. He has paid for his own education and the lure that drew him to Commonwealth 27 years ago was a promise that he could work for his tuition.

Faubus may try to kick over another tradition: The third term. It has been attained by only one governor since Reconstruction days.

In ordering out the Guardsmen, Faubus might have envisioned a 1958 campaign in which he would carry three burdens: The third term, a reputation for increased taxes — and segregation.

Charges Faubus With Creating Tensions In City

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 9-6-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The Mayor of Little Rock, voicing the opinions of many white students in the largest city in the "Land Of Opportunity," has charged Gov. Orval E. Faubus with "creating tensions where none existed" when he called out the National Guard to prevent integration.

Mayor Woodrow Mann lambasted the governor shortly after he wired vacationing President Eisenhower relating that he had been "reliably informed that federal authorities in Little Rock have this day been discussing plans to take into custody by force the head of a sovereign state."

Faubus, referring to himself in the telegram, immediately surrounded his home with National Guardsmen. President Eisenhower has announced that there was no truth in the governor's allegations.

Local sentiments over the integration issue at Central High School here rang throughout the city Thursday, mostly among the 1,500 white persons milling around the school which is still ringed with guardsmen.

At least a half dozen white students feel they could handle the integration dispute a lot more sensibly than the grownups.

Amid Thursday's crisis over National Guardsmen cordoning the school yard to turn back any Negro who approaches, six white teen-agers blamed Gov. Faubus — and the "old folks" in general — for the whole situation.

Craig Rains asserted there will be violence only "if some older people keep egging the situation on," he said.

"If the older people would accept integration, Little Rock would be ready to integrate."

"Let the kids handle the situation," Harper Thomason urged. "If the Negroes had come the first day, all there would have been would be a few whistles and catcalls."

He referred to the first day of school yesterday when nine Negro students were prevented from entering the school yard by guardsmen.

Gov. Faubus' calling in the guard was scorned by Carolyn Garner who said:

"I don't like the idea of what Faubus is doing. I think that if we have to integrate, we might as well do it. I don't believe there would have been any trouble if the Negroes had entered the school. The students at Central aren't worrying about it. The parents are causing all the trouble."

This view was seconded by Maretta Myer who believes Faubus "made a big fool of himself." She said:

"I feel sorry for those nine Negroes. What are nine Negroes going to do in the way of violence against 2,000 white students."

Steve Swafford declared:

"If the Negroes do come to school, it won't be long until the trouble settles down. It's got to be. You can't fight the federal court."

A girl who asked not to be identified threw the blame on parents, saying:

"If the parents left everything alone and let the Negroes gradually come in, everything would be okay. If there was a brawl, it would be between the parents and the Negroes, not the white students and the Negroes."

Herald Miami, Fla.

Mr. Winston-Salem, the third North Carolina city to enroll Negro students in previously all-white schools, a 15-year-old Negro girl used a rear entrance to Reynolds High School Thursday to avoid a crowd of about 500 gathered outside. She entered the school's auditorium and her classroom without incident.

It's Happened Before, Madison Said President Must Back Court

Herald Miami, Fla. Fri. 9-6-57 P. 8-A

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (AP) — Legal research indicated Thursday Gov. Orval Faubus's appeal to President Eisenhower may well bring forth a statement which will be decisive in the state-federal strength test in Arkansas.

When 2,000 deputy U. S. marshals were drawn up across the street from the Pennsylvania Militia in 1809, President Madison's statement backing up the federal courts carried the day against the militia.

When Georgia defied the U. S. Supreme Court in 1828 and 1830 over control of Cherokee Indian lands, the state courts had their way while President Andrew Jackson took their side, saying, "John Marshall has made his decision, now let him enforce it."

These cases were included in items gleaned from old law books and records by Prof. Paul H. Sanders of Vanderbilt University Law School in his work as director of the Race Relations Law Reporter.

Noting there was "a striking parallel" between the Pennsylvania case and the showdown in the making between state troops and a federal judge in Arkansas, Sanders went back for a deeper search on the background of the old Pennsylvania case.

It started as a state court prize action on a privateer's capture of a British sloop in 1778, 11 years before the Constitution was drawn.

It dragged on for 31 years as a stalemate between the state courts and the Continental Congress and then between the entire state government and the infant federal courts.

Finally U. S. Chief Justice John Marshall waved aside the Pennsylvania Legislature's interposition resolution and ordered a circuit judge to enforce his judgment against the state-appointed stakeholder in the case.

The resulting tableau at the residence of a former state treasurer named Rittenhouse was subsequently tabbed, "The Battle of Rittenhouse Square."

The state militia, commanded by Gen. Michael Bright, was thrown around the residence by Gov. Simon Snyder. U. S. Marshal John Smith summoned a posse of 2,000 and arrayed it across the street.

But these forces did not fight and they did not decide the issue. Gov. Snyder threw in his hand and withdrew the troops after his appeal to President Madison brought this reply from the man who had helped write both the Constitution and the first interposition resolutions:

"The executive is not only unauthorized to prevent the execution of a decree sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the United States, but is expressly enjoined by statute, to carry into effect any such decree."

Then Gen. Bright and eight other militia officers were indicted, tried by a jury and convicted of resisting the law of the United States and were sentenced to a fine and prison term by Judge Bushrod Washington, the first president's nephew.

The legal principal established, however, Madison pardoned them within a month.

Arkansas Governor's Action Described As "Incredible"

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 9-7-57 P. 1

By ARTHUR KRANISH

WASHINGTON — (INS) — A top government legal authority Friday described as "incredible" attempts by Arkansas National Guard officers to restrict news gathering activities in Little Rock.

Newsmen have been warned by State Adjutant General Sherman T. Clinger that they could be arrested for "inciting violence" and would be curbed in gathering interviews in the area of Central High School.

NO LEGAL BASIS

The government expert said that "even under martial law" there would be no legal basis for such restrictions, and he pointed out that the situation in Little Rock is "far from martial law."

Newsmen, it was suggested, could easily file for an injunction which would bar National Guard officials from interfering with the freedom of the press.

The source, who declined use of his name, said any judge would issue such an order stemming from the guarantees of press freedom in the Constitution.

The Federal Government has been watching the situation with evident concern, but can take no legal action of its own.

It was pointed out, however, that National Guard officers are plainly subject to a court's injunction powers, and are also liable to damage suits, even when following orders.

Gen. Clinger told reporters at Little Rock:

Daily World

"We think you have been granted every reasonable request. We have overlooked two or three incidents we should not have overlooked . . ."

Sat. 9-7-57

TROOP COMMANDER

"Any member of the press will be barred and arrested if it seems in the judgment of the troop commander or myself that he is inciting violence."

P. 5

Mr. Benjamin Fine, reporter for the New York Times, was also told he could conduct no interviews if a crowd gathered, and then only in the school building with permission of the principal.

RARE INDEED

A standard manual written for the use of state militia, warns guard officers that "it will be rare indeed that any suppression of the press can be justified except in time of war, and then the offense should be brought to the attention of the appropriate agencies of the Federal Government."

The official pointed out that it is clearly stated that "members of military forces may be held liable in the civil courts to pay damages . . ."

"For example," the manual points out, "if a person stopped for questioning gives fair and reasonable answers and nothing develops or is known from other sources to indicate that he is not a law-abiding citizen, an officer who orders his continued detention might be adjudged by the civil courts to be liable in damages for false imprisonment . . ."

It was also pointed out that commanding officers may never, "even under absolute martial rule", suspend the constitutional guarantee of habeas corpus — or freedom from imprisonment — pending legal proceedings.

The government source said the same principle must be observed by guard officers in dealing with questions of freedom of the press.

Has Faubus 'Lost His Marbles'?

Arkansas Editorials Call for U.S. Action

Herald Miami, Fla. Fri. 9-6-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (AP) — The state's largest newspaper, The Arkansas Gazette, in a front page editorial Thursday entitled "The Crisis Mr. Faubus Made" called the integration dilemma, "one he must live with and the rest of us must suffer with."

P. 10-A

The editorial said the Little Rock situation "is no longer segregation vs. integration. The question now becomes the supremacy of the government of the U.S. in all matters of law. And clearly the federal government cannot let this issue remain unresolved no matter what the cost to this community."

The first small paper editorial noted was The Russellville, Ark., Courier, circulation about 3,000. Editor Craig Lovesy in a signed front-page editorial said he saw only three possible answers for Gov. Faubus' action in calling out the guard to halt integration.

They were: "1—He wants to make the public gesture of holding off integration as long as he can—however futile that may be—for his own political gain.

"2—He is concealing a trick or two which when finally revealed may help confound the federal move toward integration of public schools.

"Or 3—He has lost his marbles and is trying to secede from the U.S."

Of the three possibilities, Lovesy said the first was most likely "although there has been considerable speculation about No. 2 and extensive comment concerning No. 3."

IKE HOLDS FAST TO NO FEDERAL TROOPS PLAN

Times-Picayune

No Change in Position, Hagerty Replies

Sat. 9-7-57

By ED CREAGH

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 6 (AP)—President Eisenhower is holding fast to his stand against using federal troops to enforce anti-integration laws, the White House said today.

New Orleans, La.

James C. Hagerty, the President's press secretary, replied with a flat "no" when asked if there has been any change in the chief executive's position as a result of the Little Rock, Ark., integration crisis.

The question arose at a Newport White House news conference in the light of widespread speculation over steps the federal government might take to enforce a U.S. district court integration order which Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus has defied.

COMPLY, IKE URGES

Eisenhower has urged Faubus, who called out National Guard troops to block integration, to comply with the court decision. The President also told Faubus he himself would use every legal means at his command to uphold the law.

Hagerty was reminded today of a statement Eisenhower made during Senate debate on the civil rights bill, when Southern opponents of the measure were contending it opened the way for the use of federal troops to force racial intermingling.

The President replied at the time: "I can't imagine any set of circumstances that would ever induce me to send federal troops . . . into any area to enforce the orders of a federal court, because I believe that the common sense of America will never require it."

STILL AGAINST FORCE

Hagerty, asked if Eisenhower still is against the use of force, said: "Yes."

He said it looks to him as if the situation is the exact opposite of what civil rights bill opponents feared—that it is a state government, not the federal government, which has resorted to force in an integration dispute.

The troop controversy in the Senate led to Congress' striking out of the civil rights bill a reference to post-civil war statutes which allowed the use of federal forces.

MEETS BROWNELL TODAY

Eisenhower is flying back to Washington tomorrow for a meeting with Atty. Gen. Brownell on the Little Rock crisis.

Hagerty declined, meanwhile, to comment on Faubus' latest telegram to the President and added he didn't know whether the President would respond to it.

Faubus offered to tell the FBI certain information which, he said, led him to call out National Guardsmen with the announced purpose of preventing disorder. Brownell told the FBI to receive any information the governor cared to offer.

Besides meeting Brownell, Eisenhower will hold conferences on the Syrian situation and also on budget matters before flying back here to continue his vacation tomorrow evening. He may make a side trip to Baltimore for the coming-out party of his niece, Ruth Eisenhower.

The President put in a happy three hours on the golf course today while Mrs. Eisenhower took it easy in the temporary White House at the Newport Naval Training Station.

IKE ENJOYS GOLF

It also was announced the President will attend services Sunday at the base's red brick chapel.

The President gave every indication of leaving all cares of state behind for the time being as he played 18 holes on the tricky Newport Country Club overlooking the blue waters of Narragansett Bay.

Whether his shots were good or bad—and he had some of each—Eisenhower kept up a running fire of jokes with his companions, posed happily for some tourist snapshots and patted the heads of children who joined his gallery of 25 or 30.

Times-Picayune

He gave a special salute to 6-year-old Alexander Toland of Wynnewood, Pa., who informed him firmly as the President wound up his round: "Mr. Eisenhower, I am the guy that sent you the silver dollar."

P. 10

CHATS WITH BOY

When Alec's grandmother, Mrs. Owen J. Toland, explained that the boy had contributed the dollar to the President's 1956 re-election campaign, Eisenhower laughingly told the youngster:

"Well, I guess that's what did it."

Eisenhower and the club pro, Norman Palmer, beat presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty and the club president, Howard Cushing, 1-up, thanks to Palmer's birdie three on the 18th hole.

Palmer's 74 was the only score announced. Eisenhower, driving well for the most part but having some trouble with his irons, was in no mood to care whether he broke 90 or not—he was having that much fun.

"Well, I won't be here tomorrow," he said ruefully to Cushing as they finished the match.

CONFERENCES TODAY

Eisenhower is leaving in early morning for White House conferences with Brownell on the Little Rock, Ark., integration issue; with Secretary of State Dulles and Middle East expert Loy Henderson on the Syrian situation; and with Budget Bureau officials on future spending.

He plans to stop at Baltimore and look in on the dubutante party of his niece, Ruth Eisenhower, before flying back here, where he and Mrs. Eisenhower are spending an extended vacation at the naval station on offshore Coaster's Harbor Island.

Today he spent an hour in his office before leaving for the golf course.

In his morning session at the office, the President, among other things, chatted briefly with Minneapolis Mayor Kenneth Peterson, who had stopped on his way home from a Maine vacation. Eisenhower also approved four recess appointments.

OFF TO THE LINKS

Then he was off, in mild, clear weather, to the links.

He had forgotten to take with him a golf cap Palmer had given him yesterday. Palmer had said jokingly the cap was free but that a second one would cost money.

Palmer presented him, however, with another. Offered his choice of colors, the President chose gray in preference to red. Clapping the cap onto his head, Eisenhower declared — without looking in any mirrors—that it looked fine, and headed for the first tee.

The knot of spectators applauded his first drive—some 220 yards straight down the middle—and Eisenhower bowed in grinning acknowledgment. Newsmen got a closeup on his performance on the 1st, 9th, 13th and 18th holes. No news pictures were permitted, but various visitors snapped away at the President from time to time.

Text Of Ike's Telegram To Faubus

Daily World

NEWPORT, R. I. — (INS) — Following is the text of President Eisenhower's telegram to Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas:

Little Rock, Ark.

"Your telegram received requesting my assurance of understanding of and cooperation in the course of action you have taken on school integration recommended by the Little Rock school board and ordered by the United States District Court pursuant to the mandate of the United States Supreme Court.

"When I became President, I took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. The only assurance I can give you is that the Federal Constitution will be upheld by me by every legal means at my command. 9-6-57

"There is no basis of fact to the statements you make in your telegram that federal authorities have been considering taking you into custody or that telephone lines to your executive mansion have been tapped by any agency of the federal government.

"At the request of Judge Davies, the department of justice is presently collecting facts as to interference with or failure to comply with the district court's order. You and other state officials — as well as the National Guard — which is of course uniformed, armed and partially sustained by the federal government — will I am sure give full cooperation to the United States District court."

(Signed) DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

Group Asks Ike to Act In Arkansas

Post-Times Herald P. 2-b

Fri. 9-6-57

DETROIT, Sept. 5 (AP)—The National Urban League viewed with "grave distress" today the use of National Guardsmen to prevent school desegregation in Little Rock, Ark., and expressed confidence that President Eisenhower promptly will bring all the Federal Government's authority "into play."

Washington, D.C.

The 600 delegates at the League's 1957 convention directed that their sentiments be communicated to the President.

The League is an inter-racial organization. It operates in 32 states. Its membership is predominantly Negro.

"We recognize," the convention said in a statement to the President, "that the issue emerging from the defiance of the Federal court by the Governor of Arkansas has now become far larger than one of school desegregation, important as that is.

"What now is involved is the question as to whether a state's chief executive can use his state's armed force or other authority to defy the Federal Government and the laws protecting the security and freedom of the American people."

The League also voiced concern over what it said was an effort to "curtail and suppress the freedom of assembly" in some states when matters of race relations are at issue.

It said a case in point is a ban in several Southern cities against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

On juvenile delinquency the League said social studies show a relationship between economic and social insecurity, adding that, "It is inevitable that there be a disproportionately large representation of minority group youth among those exhibiting anti-social characteristics."

President's Position In Case Is Reaffirmed By Hagerty

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 9-7-57 p. 1

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Eisenhower arrives in the Nation's Capital today to discuss the Little Rock school integration case and view the trouble brewing in the Middle East.

The President who warned Gov. Orval Faubus in interfering with the school integration there, is keeping a close watch on the Little Rock case.

FBI AGENTS

Meanwhile, Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., disclosed Friday that FBI agents will meet with representatives of the Arkansas governor in connection with the school integration crisis.

The Attorney General said the governor asked for the meeting in order to present certain information in his posession."

There was no immediate indication of the nature of the information but it presumably was related to Faubus' reasons for using the Arkansas National Guard to block execution of a federal court order requiring integration of Little Rock's Central High school.

The Attorney General said in a brief statement that as a result of Faubus' request, "I have instructed representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to meet with his representatives and receive such information."

INTEGRATION ORDER

The Cabinet member said the information would be incorporated into the report the Justice Department is making to Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies, the jurist whose integration order was blocked by Faubus' action.

The possibility that Mr. Eisenhower might have to resort to the use of force in some form -- such as calling in army troops to enforce rulings of a U. S. Court -- was not ruled out, however.

Presidential news secretary James C. Hagerty reaffirmed the position taken by the President in discussing the integration issue at a news conference earlier this year.

Mr. Eisenhower said at that time he did not believe in using force to solve the problem. Asked Friday whether the Chief Executive still was against using force, Hagerty replied yes.

A reporter noted that Mr. Eisenhower said in a telegram to Faubus Thursday that he would uphold the Constitution with "every legal means at my command" and asked whether this could include force.

Hagerty said he did not know.

Asked whether it would be legal for the President to use army troops in Little Roock the press secretary replied: "I'm not a lawyer."

Mr. Eisenhower was flying back to Washington today for a 9:15 a. m. conference with Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., on the powder keg situation in Little Rock.

Hagerty had no comment on Friday's telegram to the President from Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas promising cooperation in "up-holding the constitution of Arkansas and the nation."

He noted that the wire was a reply to the President's telegram of Thursday and said he did not know whether the governor would get another answer from Mr. Eisenhower.

Judge Wallace praises Faubus school stand

News P. 6
Birmingham Ala.

Circuit Judge George Wallace, probable candidate for governor in 1958, yesterday declared he would take action similar to that taken by Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus in a similar situation.

Times 9-5-57

FAUBUS IS currently under federal fire for calling out National Guardesmen to prevent racial integration of Little Rock schools.

Wallace spoke twice in Birmingham yesterday, to the Birmingham. Lions Club and to the Mountain Brook Lions Club.

He said Faubus' action in the Little Rock school racial integration dispute would be those of his own if he were governor of Alabama.

The Clayton, Ala., jurist declared yesterday: "The chief executive of a sovereign state is exempt from citation and arrest for contempt when such alleged contempt action arises out of the performance of his duties as chief executive."

"Any attempt to arrest me as a governor for such action in protecting constitutional government and maintaining peace and tranquility among our people would be resisted," he said.

THE JUDGE, an outspoken segregationist, said he based his opinion that the chief executive is exempt from citation and arrest for contempt on the theory of separation of powers of government.

"I would never surrender to an illegal arrest by federal authority for such submission would sound the death knell of state government in this country," he said.

"If the peace is lost, all is lost. The governor of a sovereign state is charged with protecting the safety of the citizens of his state in maintaining the peace and Gov. Orval acted within the law.

"No other action could be taken in view of the indiscriminate issuance of decrees by federal judges that bring nothing but chaos and confusion.

"It is my hope and the hope of Alabamians that he does not let the federal government intimidate him to the point of breaking down," Wallace continued.

"If I were governor of this state, I would take such action under similar circumstances. After taking such action, I would never be intimidated by the threat of the attorney general seeking contempt action," he said.

Adlai Says Arkansas Governor Aiding Communist Propaganda

News & Observer Mon. 9-9-57 P. 1
Raleigh N.C.

CHICAGO, Sept. 8 (AP) — Adlai Stevenson said today Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus, by stationing National Guardsmen to bar Negro students from Little Rock's Central High School, has supplied "grist for the Communist propaganda mill."

The twice-defeated presidential candidate, and former Illinois governor said "my friend, Gov. Faubus' action" will have a "serious and sad impact" on the colored nations of the world.

On the nationally televised CBS "Face the Nation" panel news show, Stevenson said, however, he does not advocate the use of force to bring about compliance with the Supreme Court's school integration order.

"Applauds Eisenhower."

But he said he "applauded and congratulated" President Eisenhower, who whipped Stevenson twice for the presidency, for Eisenhower's statement that he would do everything in his power to see that the Constitution is upheld.

Stevenson said Faubus' action balking the enrollment of Negro students at Little Rock in a previously all-white high school will be fashioned into effective Communist propaganda — especially in racially-taut South Africa.

Stevenson recently spent a week in South Africa and five weeks touring Europe.

"Communists have by no means infiltrated Africa but they are active everywhere," he said.

The unsuccessful Democratic nominee for the presidency in 1952 and 1956 said he is surprised that there is tension over integration in Little Rock.

"Recalls Little Rock."

He recalled that a Little Rock crowd of 10,000 cheered a 1956 campaign speech in which Stevenson said that the South must accept the Supreme Court's integration decree as "law-abiding citizens and reject the use of force."

He termed "inexplicable" Faubus' calling out the National Guard to bar nine Negroes from entering Central High School. He said this only aggravated the racial tension.

Asked what he would do if he were president of the United States to enforce the Supreme Court decision for integrated schools, Stevenson said: "At this point the President doesn't have much that he can do."

Despite the Little Rock incident and incidents blocking integration elsewhere, Stevenson said, "We are making progress in Kentucky, North Carolina and several other states."

Faubus Gets Klan Praise In Wauchula

Times-Union Mon. 9-9-57

WAUCHULA, Sept. 8 (AP)—A Ku Klux Klan rally speaker drew shouts, horn-toots and handclapping last night when he praised the action of Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus in calling out militia to avert integrating a Little Rock high school.

P. 29

"We all should give Gov. Faubus a hand and all the support we can," the robed, hooded, unidentified speaker said.

"I feel that if Faubus holds his ground, in the long run he will win out."

The rally, complete with burning of a 20-foot-high cross, drew 200 klansmen and about 300 spectators to the cucumber exposition grounds in the climax of a motorcade that started in Lake Wales and passed through Bartow, Fort Meade, Frostproof, Avon Park and Sebring.

Klansmen and women wore robes but not hoods while riding in more than 60 cars. Most of the vehicles flew United States, Confederate and Klan flags.

No disorderly incidents were reported. In Wauchula, police escorted the motorcade and cleared traffic from its path.

Gallion Endorses Move By Faubus

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 8 (U.P.)—The chief assistant attorney general of Alabama endorsed Gov. Orval E. Faubus' action in calling out the National Guard "if it is necessary to prevent violence and preserve peace and order."

P. 2

MacDonald Gallion and Robert P. Bradley, assistant attorney general, were here as observers in the Arkansas governor's clash with the federal government.

"If it is necessary for the governor to call out the National Guard to prevent violence and preserve peace and order in Arkansas, I certainly endorse his actions, and I do not see how any thinking American could take a contrary position," Gallion said.

"We of the South realize while the federal judge is thinking in terms of law books and theory, Governor Faubus is thinking in terms of human beings and the prevention of bloodshed," he added.

Gallion said his state does not have a similar situation "that is imminent at the present time." He added, however, that he wanted to have a full background of information and legal knowledge to meet any situation that should arise in Alabama.

Gallion said he and Bradley had conferred at length with Arkansas Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett and other state officials.

Talmadge declares Gov. Faubus right in use of Guard

ATLANTA, Sept. 6—(AP)—Sen. Herman Talmadge (D., Ga.) said today the action of Gov. Orval E. Faubus in using the National Guard in the Little Rock school integration dispute in an effort to "preserve peace and tranquility" is within the prerogative of the governors of the 48 states.

His office issued the following statement:

"The national administration by abuse and usurpation of federal power is trying to make hollow shells of state and local governments. This usurpation of power on the part of our national government must be strongly resisted on the federal, state and local levels.

"We have gone a long way toward a police state in our nation. The Constitution has been clearly violated and continues to be violated by judicial decrees and legislative enactment.

"The action of the governor of Arkansas in attempting to preserve the peace and tranquility is clearly within the prerogative of the governors of the 48 sovereign states."

Rights Defeat Protects Faubus, Says Russell

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5—If part three had not been stricken from the civil rights bill, Atty. Gen. Brownell probably would have moved already to use federal troops to enforce school integration in Little Rock, Ark., Sen. Russell (D-Ga) said today.

Russell also stoutly upheld Gov. Orval Faubus' right to use Arkansas National Guardsmen to preserve peace and order in the Little Rock school crisis.

Part three, which Russell and other Southern senators managed to get eliminated from the recently enacted civil rights bill, would have authorized the federal government to enforce racial integration as well as voting rights.

KAYOED TROOP CLAUSE

Still another provision of the bill, which President Eisenhower has not yet signed into law, specifically would have authorized the use of federal troops to enforce U.S. judicial decrees. That section, too, was struck from the civil rights measure when Russell pointed out its dangers to the Senate.

Commenting on the Little Rock developments today, Russell said:

"This situation clearly illustrates the importance of the victory we gained in striking part three from the civil rights bill. The attorney general probably would have already brought some troops into this situation by now, if that provision of the bill had become law."

AVOIDS CHAOS

On the Arkansas governor's action in calling out National Guardsmen, Russell said:

"Gov. Faubus is on high ground in his insistence upon the unfettered right to exercise the police power of the state to preserve peace and prevent violence.

"The police power of the state is the one power on which the federal government has not encroached. Without that right, chaos and confusion would result in any state of the Union where the federal government undertook to impose its views."

Russell, who has been so busy in Washington since Congress adjourned that he hasn't had time to get a physical checkup he wants, finally decided to return to Georgia for a rest and left this afternoon.

In a statement praising Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus for "acting courageously," the author of "Black Monday" said Faubus exercised "the police powers . . . granted to each state of the union by the federal Constitution.

"Itt is not believed that even the present U. S. Supreme Court will presume to proclaim that its decrees supercede the sacred police powers vested in the state under our Constitution.

"If it does, however, then the fact is that the states as such have been destroyed and are now satellites of an all-powerful federal judiciary and the people of the South are its vassals."

Gov. Faubus' states rights stand is praised by Birmingham groups

News Fri. 9-6-57 B'ham, Ala. P. 1

Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus does not stand alone.

A group of Birmingham citizens who called themselves the "Birmingham for Gov. Faubus Club" sent the following telegram to the man who used the Arkansas National Guard to retain segregation in a Little Rock high school:

CONGRATULATIONS, Honorable Gov. Orval Faubus, State of Arkansas; congratulations to the champion crusader for States Rights. It is our hope and the hope of all true Southerners that our governors will accept your views and ideals. May God bless you and give you courage to continue this magnificent fight for our cherished Southern way of life."

And from the Eastern Section Citizens Council of Birmingham Gov. Faubus received this support via telegram:

"Two thousand years of Christian civilization was not created just to be destroyed by the gradual demoralization which history has shown integration brings about. Stand fast. God is with you and you cannot fail. Your brave and courageous stand has the full support of all patriotic and true Americans. If we of Alabama can help, please let us know. Our prayers are with you."

THIS PRAISE for the Arkansas governor's stand came from Earle J. Ellis, chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, of Jefferson County:

"Thank God for your courageous stand against those who would destroy the Constitution of the U. S., the rights of the state authorities, the right of freedom of choice and the will of the great majority of the people of the South."

Governor Offers Evidence On Why He Called Guard; Crowd at School Smaller

From Wire Dispatches

President Eisenhower and Attorney General Brownell will confer in Washington today on Arkansas' school racial troubles, and a federal judge about the same time will hear a plea in Little Rock for a delay in integrating Central High School there.

Out of the two sessions could come a solution to the segregation strife. Or they could result in continued conflict in Little Rock, a city of 110,000 where the National guard still patrols the school grounds and guards the Governor's mansion.

Governor Orval Faubus yesterday offered to have his representatives lay before federal authorities the specific evidence he says caused him to call out the guard. The Governor always has said he acted to prevent violence. Brownell immediately accepted the offer.

Six Hustled Away

The guard was stationed at 2,000-pupil Central High Monday night. Wednesday it turned away nine Negro teen-agers who sought to enroll. No Negroes have sought entrance since.

The guard and State police yesterday hustled six young white University of Minneapolis students away from the Central High campus after guardsmen discovered one wore a sheath knife. The knife had a 4-or-5-inch blade.

Sturgis seemingly has quit its struggle against integration of the high school there. Story on Page 4.

A State-police spokesman said the men convinced officers they were not in Little Rock to make trouble. One of them, Murray Gallinson, 20, said the six were en route to New Orleans on a vacation.

'Actually Relieved'

Guardsmen spotted the out-of-town men, rushed them away from the campus area, and turned them over to State police.

Gallinson told The Minneapolis Star by telephone; "We were actually relieved when the State police came along and escorted us to headquarters. People in the crowd shouted, 'Damyankee,' and, 'Communists,' as we were being taken away." Gallinson said he turned his knife over to the police.

The other five were Robert Milavetz, 21; Harris Levine, Mike Goldman, Stephen Lange, 19, and Marvin Segal, 20.

President Eisenhower plans to interrupt his Newport, R. I., vacation to return to Washington for the conference with Brownell. He received an all-quiet report from Brownell on the integration controversy yesterday.

The court session will be in Little Rock before Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies. Twice in two weeks Davies ordered Central High integrated immediately.

Courier-Journal

The petition for the hearing came from the Little Rock School Board, which had favored carrying out Davies' integration order.

p.12

The board asked for a postponement of integration because, it said, pupils are divided on the question, creating tensions that might disrupt education.

The board did not say how long it thought integration should be delayed, but there were reports it sought a delay of only a few weeks.

Cross Burned In Yard

Little Rock Mayor Woodrow Mann, who split with Governor Faubus over integration, said he found a cross burning on his front lawn early yesterday.

A burning cross is the symbol of the Ku Klux Klan, a once-powerful white-supremacy group. More recently it has been a symbol of protest against integration.

Mann said the cross-burning "in itself was nothing, but it clearly shows the effect of mob psychology, which could grow worse."

Mann again charged the Governor with inciting what the Mayor termed "mob rule, terrorism, and violence" by calling out the guard.

Says He'll Co-operate

Faubus said in his telegram to Eisenhower yesterday that he has notified United States District Attorney Osro Cobb and the F.B.I. that his personal attorney, William J. Smith, and the director of the Arkansas State police, Herman Lindsey, "are available to discuss certain evidence upon which I acted to preserve the public peace."

Brownell replied to the Governor's offer by saying he had instructed representatives of the F.B.I. to meet with Faubus' representatives "and receive such information so that we may incorporate it in the report we are making to Federal Judge Davies."

Faubus ended his telegram to Eisenhower with: "I shall cooperate in upholding the Constitution of Arkansas and the nation."

Hasn't Changed Stand

The White House said yesterday that President Eisenhower has not changed his stand against the use of feedral troops to enforce antisegregation laws.

The crowd of white demonstrators across the street from Central High was considerably smaller yesterday than Thursday, when about 700 were present at one time.

Faubus' aide, Claude Carpenter, exhibited what he said were about 1,000 telegrams to the Governor. He said "97 or 98 per cent" favored the Governor's action in calling the National Guard.

Some Praise Him

"I would like to lend my encouragement and express my appreciation to the Governor of the great State of Arkansas," said Georgia's Governor Marvin Griffin, who said he would do exactly as Faubus has done should a similar crisis develop in Georgia.

Alabama sent observers to Little Rock, and South Carolina Governor George Bell Timmerman, Jr., commended the Arkansas leader.

"We need 47 more governors like you," said a wire from Alabama.

Another telegram, signed by 10 Presbyterian ministers of Fayetteville, Ark., condemned Faubus, saying, "We deplore your shameful conduct, which undermines the integrity of the constitutional processes."

TV Networks Offer Time to Faubus

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 6 (UP)—Two national television networks Friday offered Governor Orval Faubus the chance to tell the nation his side of the Little Rock integration crisis.

State publicity director Clovis Copland said representatives of N.B.C. and C.B.S. said the Governor would be interviewed from his office if he chose to accept the offer.

Faubus had no comment on the offer.

PRESIDENT IS SILENT

Commercial Appeal

Policy Of 'Wait-And-See' Is Indicated After Meeting With Brownell

Sun. 9-8-57

By MORRIS CUNNINGHAM

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

Memphis, Tenn.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—President Eisenhower and his aides showed only interested silence Saturday in Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies' refusal to grant a "cooling off" period in Little Rock's heated integration dispute.

p.1

It was indicated the President is clinging to his press conference statement last Tuesday that "the next decision will have to be by the lawyers and jurists."

Aware Of New Ruling

James Hagerty, White House press secretary, told newsmen the President was aware of the new ruling. But he said the President had no comment and had not discussed it with Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr.

Earlier Saturday the President closeted himself with Mr. Brownell and others for a 45-minute review of the Little Rock situation and its various ramifications.

Mr. Hagerty said an FBI report on interferences with Judge Davies' integration orders "probably" will be presented to the judge in Little Rock Monday.

He said the report will contain no recommendations but hinted it may spark new actions by Judge Davies.

Await Judge's Action

"There are still undoubtedly court actions pending," he said, "particularly because Judge Davies has asked for this report."

He noted that the judge requested the FBI investigation "to determine if his orders had been interferred with."

Indicating the Administration will maintain a "wait-and-see" policy, at least until Judge Davies has had an opportunity to act upon the FBI report, the White House spokesman said:

"I would doubt very much there would be any announcements or any statements from the Federal Government until the report has been presented to the Federal judge and he has had a chance to study it."

At the morning session Mr. Hagerty said Mr. Brownell outlined the overall situation in Little Rock "including various aspects of the law."

Interrupts Vacation

He said this included a "theoretical discussion of steps that may be taken in the future as well as the talks in Little Rock Friday between FBI agents and representatives of Arkansas' Gov. Orval Faubus.

The President flew here early Saturday from his Newport, R. I., vacation spot for the conference with Mr. Brownell. He left in mid-afternoon and motored to Baltimore for the debut of his niece, Miss Ruth Eisenhower, daughter of his brother, Milton Eisenhower.

He left Baltimore by plane, arriving at Newport to resume his vacation shortly after 5 p.m.

Ordinarily when Eisenhower goes on vacation the public seldom sees him. When he visits Augusta, Ga., for example, the seclusion is so great at the golf course, that newsmen who accompany him from Washington sometimes don't lay eyes on him for a week or 10 days.

Herald

Here it's an entirely different story.

THE NEWPORT Country Club is one of the oldest and most exclusive in the United States. But the public is permitted to play the course some of the time.

And anybody—just anybody—can wander onto the course or into the clubhouse anytime and stand almost under Eisenhower's nose as he golfs. Everyone who does, of course, is under the careful scrutiny of secret service agents assignde to guard the president.

If Eisenhower minds the folks moving in the way they have been, he gives no indication. Actually, he seems to enjoy it. Yesterday the spectators gave him a big hand for a couple of fine putts, and a grin spread all over his face.

He had finished an 18-hole round and was leaving the clubhouse after changing his shoes when he got a big surprise. From the crowd of onlookers stepped Mrs. Edna Flint of Providence, R. I., and Mrs. George Guthro, Cranston, R. I.

IN A TWINKLING both women — both 40ish — had soundly kissed the amazed president.

'He was flabbergasted but he said, 'well, thank you very much'," the pleased Mrs. Flint reported. She and Mrs. Guthro were in Newport for a business convention.

The Philadelphia millionaire Eisenhower visited with briefly was George F. Widener, a member of the Newport Club. The president walked to Widener's limousine at the edge of the 18th green to say hello to the Philadelphian's wife, recovering from a hip injury.

Keeps posted on Little Rock school crisis

News P. 1
Mon. 9-9-57
Birm. Ala.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 9 —(AP)—President Eisenhower today signed into law the history-making civil rights bill empowering the federal governement to enforce the right to vote with court injunctions.

The president put his signature to the bill—the first such legislation in 80 years—at his desk at his vacation headquarters here this morning.

Only a group of photographers and James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, witnessed the signing. Eisenhower used six pens. He issued no statement.

THE QUIET SIGNING came against the background of the tense school integration crisis at Little Rock, Ark. However, the civil rights measure is primarily a right-to-vote measure which has no direct bearing on that crisis.

Eisenhower, wearing casual clothes, signed the bill shortly before crossing Narragansett Bay in a navy cabin cruiser for another round of golf at the Newport Country Club.

At his desk in his small office he wore a gray sports coat and a light blue shirt.

ACROSS THE BOTTOM of the bill he wrote:

"Approved. Dwight D. Eisenhower, 9 September, 1957. U. S. Naval Base, Newport, R. I."

Wayne Hawks, chief of White House records, presented the bill to the president for signing.

Before Eisenhower went to the golf course he got a fresh report from Hagerty on the school picture in Little Rock. Hagerty relayed the report after talking by telephone with Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers, who was in Washington.

THE PRESIDENT himself talked to Secretary of State Dulles, also in Washington, regarding the situation in Syria and the Middle East generally. Hagerty provided no detail on that conference.

The new civil rights law repeals a post-Civil War era law authorizing the president to use troops to enforce court orders in civil rights cases. But administration officials obviously feel Eisenhower has other powers for the handling of that situation.

The president, however, instructed aids to keep him carefully posted on any developments in the integration case.

AND HAGERTY told a news conference the Justice Department plans to submit to Federal District Judge Ronald Davies in Little Rock the report he asked on the integration crisis there. Hagerty said the report would be handed to Davies later in the day.

The bill was passed by Congress a day before it adjourned Aug. 30, after an historic struggle lasting through the 1957 session. No other civil rights bill had been passed since Reconstruction days.

PASSAGE OF THE measure was the major action of the session. It also was a significant victory for the president even though his original proposals were rewritten by the Democratic-controlled Congress to remove or soften some of the far-ranging provisions.

The long congressional debate and victory for the bill are certain to have political repercussions for a long time.

Republicans made it clear they expected to profit at the polls in areas where minority groups are an important factor. GOP lawmakers emphasiezd that they provided the bulk of the votes for the bill.

U.S. Studies Powers for Integration

Constitution
Fri. 9-6-57
Atlanta Ga.

By ANTHONY LEWIS

(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5—What powers does the federal government have to enforce a court order against the opposition of a state governor? P. 1

This was the urgent legal question raised tonight by President Eisenhower's statement that he will enforce the Constitution with "every legal means at my command" in the Little Rock, Ark., integration dispute.

The answer given by the statute books and court cases is that broad enforcement powers do exist. But Justice Department officials continue to hope that there will be no final showdown in Little Rock requiring use of those powers.

The officials believe it is up to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas to avoid that showdown by withdrawing the National Guard troops which have kept Negro children out of Little Rock High School. They make clear that if he persists in forcing a test of strength, the United States cannot and will not give way.

Enforcing the school integration order against Faubus' continued opposition would actually involve two separate legal steps.

The first step would be for the federal district judge sitting in the case, Ronald N. Davies, to issue an injunction naming the governor and specifically forbidding him to obstruct the integration decree.

If the governor ignored such an injunction and resisted any effort to cite him for contempt of it, the second and graver step would follow—use of the President's military power to overcome the resistance.

Constitution

Each of these moves would involve difficult legal problems.

As to the first, the question is whether a federal court can enjoin the governor of a state from using state troops when he says he is doing so to preserve order.

In the leading case on this issue the Supreme Court firmly upheld the power of the federal judiciary thus to control a governor's use of military force. The case, entitled Sterling V. Constantin, was decided in 1932. It bears strikingly on the issues at stake in Little Rock.

The governor of Texas, R. S. Sterling, had invoked martial law in an effort to override a federal court decision. He said troops were needed to deal with "a state of insurrection, tumult, riot and a breach of the peace."

TROOPS FORBIDDEN

The Supreme Court unanimously affirmed a federal district court order enjoining Gov. Sterling from such use of troops. A strongly-worded opinion by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes concluded:

"If it be assumed that the governor was entitled to . . . bring military force to the aid of civil authority, the proper use of that power in this instance was to maintain the federal court in the exercise of its jurisdiction and not to attempt to override it; to aid in making its process effective and not to nullify it; to remove, and not to create, obstructions to the exercise by the complainants of their rights judicially declared."

The case involved Texas regulations limiting the production of oil by all well-owners in the state. A group of owners filed suit in a federal district court challenging the regulations as unconstitutional.

BUCKED OIL MEN

The district court dicided in favor of the oil men and enjoined Texas officials from enforcing the production limits. At this point Sterling declared martial law in the affected areas and instructed the commander of the militia to enforce the production limit despite the court order.

Further hearings were held in the federal court, which then ruled that there was in fact no emergency or threat of violence justifying a declaratio nof matial law. Sterling was enjoined from any military enforcement of the oil regulations.

The governor's appeal to the Supreme Court argued basically that the federal courts had no power to review his action and that the facts of alleged violence on which he had based the declaration of martial law could not be re-examined in a court.

Chief Justice Hughes' opinion said that a governor has wide discretion in ordering the use of troops to meet an emergency.

But it does not follow, the chief justice said, "that every sort of action the governor may take . . . is conclusively supported by mere executive fiat . . . what are the allowable limits of military discretion, and whether or not they have been overstepped in a particular case, are judicial questions."

This holding in the Sterling case could be crucial in the developing Little Rock situation. It means that the federal judge there, Ronald N. Davies, has power to examine the asserted gun purchases and other portents of violence on which Gov. Faubus has said he based his use of the National Guard to keep Negroes out of school.

But Chief Justice Hughes went farther in the Sterling opinion. He held that even if there had been a genuine threat of violence, it was the governor's duty to oppose the threat by supporting the federal court order, not obstructing it.

And the case would further be precedent for an injunction directing Faubus to prevent any violence by protecting the Negro children, not excluding them from school.

If the governor were to ignore such an injunction, he could be cited for contempt.

Will Use Every Means At Command President Asserts

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 9-6-57

By ROBERT E. CLARK

NEWPORT, R. I. — (INS) — President Eisenhower told Gov. Orval Faubus in a sharply worded telegram Thursday he will use every legal means at his command to uphold the federal constitution in the Little Rock integration dispute. P. 1

He noted pointedly that the Arkansas National Guard which the governor has used to block attendance of Negro students at Little Rock's Central High School is uniformed and "partially sustained" by the Federal Government.

WILL INTERRUPT VACATION

It was announced simultaneously that Mr. Eisenhower will interrupt his Newport vacation Saturday to fly to Washington for a conference on the tense Little Rock situation with Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr.

While in the Capital, the President will also meet with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and Deputy Undersecretary Loy Henderson to discuss the serious developments.

The President's reference to the Federal contribution to the National Guard seemed to carry an implication that this support could be with drawn from the Arkansas forces called out by Faubus.

Mr. Eisenhower told the governor he was sure that he and Arkansas state officials woudl give "full cooperation" to the U. S. District Court which has ordered compliance with a school board integration plan in Little Rock.

This also seemed to carry the stronger implication that Mr. Eisenhower would see to it, as best he can, that the integration order is carried out.

NO BASIS OF FACT

The President told Faubus there is "na basis of fact" in his statement that Federal authorities were reportedly considering taking him into custody.

The President also denied that telephone lines into the governor's mansion in Little Rock have been tapped by the FBI.

Daily World

He said in his wire, sent from Newport, at about 4:30 p. m. EDT:

"When I became President I took an oath to support and defend the constitution of the United States. The only assurance I can give you is that the Federal Constitution will be upheld by me by every legal means at my command."

Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Eisenhower discussed latest developments in Little Rock with Brownell by long-distance telephone this afternoon. He also held a telephone conference with Dulles.

Fri. 9-6-57

The President pointed out in his telegram to Faubus that the Justice Department is presently collecting facts as to the "interference or failure to comply with" the District court's integration order.

FULL COOPERATION P. 6

He added: "You and other state officials, as well as national guard —which is of course uniformed, armed and partially sustained by the Federal Government will I am sure give full cooperation to the United States District Court."

Presidential News Secretary Jas. C. Hagerty, queried about one rumor circulating, said that as far as he knew Mr. Eisenhower had no intension of ordering the Arkansas National Guard into the Regular Army.

He noted that normally the National Guard is taken into the Army only in time of war or a National emergency.

As to the President's reference to the Federal role in maintaining the National Guard, Hagerty would only say "That is a statement of fact and that is all I can say."

Mr. Eisenhower plans to leave his Newport vacation headquarters at about 7 a. m. Saturday, arriving in Washington at about 9 a. m. for his conference with Brownell.

Smashing a Conspiracy

Courier p. 8

IN ORDERING the U. S. Army into Little Rock and taking over the Arkansas National Guard, President Eisenhower did the only thing he could do except abdicate his authority and responsibility as the Chief Executive of this nation.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

When mobs flout court decrees and the constituted forces of law and order, there can be only one effective response as well stated once by President Woodrow Wilson: "Force. Force to the utmost. Force without stint or limit!"

Sat. 10-5-57

Make no mistake about it, all of the Little Rock troubles have been the inevitable result of a deep-dyed conspiracy of which Governor Orval Faubus was the spearhead, egged on and counseled all of the way by sinister and powerful forces which preferred to stay in the background.

This conspiracy began as soon as the United States Supreme Court handed down its desegregation decision in 1954, and it has grown in numbers and effectiveness almost daily ever since.

The Kaspers, the Englehardts, the Ace Carters, the Griffins, the Roy Harrises, the spreading White Citizens Councils, the resurgent Ku Klux Klans and the top flight propagandists for white supremacy like David Lawrence (magazine publisher and columnist) are all part of the conspiracy as active instruments.

Behind them, however, are the little-known monied and political interests who flourish on the status quo and look upon the "stable" South to bulwark their deep scheme for the suppression of democracy and the ultimate institution of dictatorial or oligarchical government.

Now the conspiracy has been smashed but let no one delude himself that this nefarious ambition has been entirely destroyed or that the mere mobilizing of troops to patrol a school will prevent its revival.

The hard core of conspirators residing in many parts of the country (not only in the South) is vulnerable to court action because there is ample evidence that they have acted in collusion to thwart local, state and Federal governments in obeying the Supreme Court's desegregation ruling.

They have conspired to overthrow the laws and Government of the United States and for so doing they could and should be indicted under the same Smith Act that has been used against Communist and Fascist conspirators in the past.

It is now evident to the discerning that the great majority of Southern white people were and are prepared to obey the law of the land, distasteful though it may be to many, and what little active opposition that has developed has been solely due to the hard core of racists who fear and disdain the democratic dogma.

There must no longer be any temporizing with this traitorous tribe or the whole structure of free government will be undermined and destroyed.

The President has seen the handwriting on the wall, has acted forthrightly if reluctantly, and for this deserves the thanks and gratitude of the nation.

Four Firecrackers in Little Rock

Courier Sat. 10-5-57

FOUR NEGRO newspapermen touched off the spark in Little Rock last week that kept newspapers remaking their front pages. James (Jimmie) L. Hicks, one of the country's outstanding journalists and managing editor of the New York Amsterdam News, was one of the four and here's his blow by blow account of what happened:

Pittsburgh, Pa.

"The appearance of four of us Negro newspapermen helped the Negro students get into Central High School Monday—but we honestly didn't plan it that way.

"When I got to Little Rock from New York Sunday night I went straight to the home of Mrs. L. C. Bates, state president of the NAACP.

"I met Alex Wilson of the Memphis Tri-State Defender and Moses Newsom of the Afro-American papers from Baltimore. We hired Earl Davy, a Little Rock commercial photographer, to make pictures for us.

ALEX WILSON
. . . threatened by mobster

"It was agreed that the children would assemble at Mrs. Bates' house at 8 o'clock Monday morning and go to school together.

"Monday morning we showed up and intended to accompany the kids to the school, but Mrs. Bates wouldn't agree to it saying it would cause too much attraction for the four of us to be with them.

"We said. 'Well let us get there first.'

"In Wilson's car we drove to within two blocks of the school. It was about 8:30 A. M. by this time. The four of us started to walk up the hill to the school. On the way up there we met quite a few groups of people but no one said anything, just looked at us, hard.

"The big mob at the corner of the school ground caught sight of us approaching. They rushed at us. We stopped and a man told us 'go back. You're not coming in here.'

"I told him we were not trying to get into school, that we were newsmen. One man said, 'They're n——rs. Let's kill 'em.'

"A man with a rock in his hand swung at Wilson. Another clouted me behind the ear. We started backing up. Then Wilson was knocked down and got kicked. We started to run. The mob yelled to those we had passed to catch us.

"Davy was tripped and his camera smashed. He tried to crawl up a bank away from the men hitting him but two dragged him back. I ran on and saw Newsom and we both ran two more blocks and saw a cop come along on a motorcycle. We headed for him. A white man kicked Newsom in the back in sight of the policeman and the cop told him, 'Let that boy alone.'

"A one-armed man was in front of the mob and kept urging them after us. When we rounded a corner the mob stopped but the one-armed man kept coming. We stopped and started back toward him. He yelled for help and then retreated.

"Later we heard that while this was going on the kids slipped into the school safely."

Ike tells newsmen—

U.S. 'looking' into Little Rock crisis

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3—(AP)—President Eisenhower said today Atty. Gen. Brownell is looking into the situation at Little Rock, Ark., where Gov. Orval Faubus headed off school integration with National Guardsmen.

At the same time Eisenhower told his news conference he is confident the American people will lick the problem of school integration by being true to themselves and not by laws.

Faubus last night stationed Guardsmen around a high school which had been ordered by a federal court to accept Negro pupils today. A short time later the school board told prospective Negro pupils to stay away from white schools. They did.

THE GOVERNOR did not say his aim was to block integration but he said that might be a result.

Faubus did say peace and order could not be maintained along with integration by force.

Without going into detail Eisenhower said Brownell is attempting to find out what happened in the way of a roadblock against integration in the Arkansas City.

Presumably Eisenhower meant the attorney general is trying to find out if any violation of federal law has occurred.

After Eisenhower's statement, a Justice Department spokesman told reporters that "We are looking into the Little Rock situation."

He said the department is "getting the facts," and probably will get in touch with the federal judge who last week overturned a state court order against integration of the high school.

EISENHOWER, asked about integration problems in general with the reopening of schools, said he has contended time and time again that it is impossible to change people's hearts by law.

And yet, he said, when laws are enacted they must be enforced in a gradual spirit. He said the problem will be solved in the long run by Americans being true to themselves and not by laws.

HE COMMENTED that the compromise civil rights bill which Congress finally adopted expresses the reaction of the American people toward the idea of equal rights, even though the bill does not go as far as he proposed.

Congress limited the legislation to voting rights, as far as Justice Department enforcement is concerned, and provided for limited jury trials for persons accused of violating court orders in that field.

EISENHOWER, commenting on Russia's intercontinental missile claims, said mere testing of such weapons is a long way from actual production.

Eisenhower made the statement when asked whether he could give the American people any information on the status of this country's efforts to develop an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM).

The questioner asked for comment in the light of the Soviet Union's announcement last week that it had successfully tested such a weapon.

Eisenhower replied that anything he said had to be within the framework of national security. He went on to say that careful reading of the Russian announcement marked it more for what it did not say than what it actually did say.

THE PRESIDENT called the Soviet announcement most evasive. The Russians always have been known for statements which serve only their own purpose, he said.

As for this country's progress in that field, the president actually said nothing about the status of work. He did say many millions of dollars have been spent within the capacity of available scientific knowledge and what he called the whole arrangement.

The missile program has the highest priority, he said, but added that it will be a long time before a long range missile is the best means of delivering explosive power.

Eisenhower, leaving tomorrow for an extended vacation at Newport, R. I., dealt with these other matters:

CONGRESS—Eisenhower replied "not much" when asked whether anything had happened to change his assertion two weeks ago that he was tremendously disappointed in the performance of the 85th Congress, which adjourned its first session last Friday.

TAXES—Discounting claims in Congress regarding economy, Eisenhower said the savings actually achieved do not justify a tax reduction at this time. But he said he was not foreclosing the possibility of a tax cut later. Such a resolution, he added, would loosen the economy and generally be a good thing.

The president estimated that Congress cut his budget between $900 million and one billion.

LIVING COSTS—Inflation is this country's major internal problem today, Eisenhower said. He added he is not advocating a buyer's strike, but did urge the public to purchase selectively in an effort to control prices.

Eisenhower's remarks were prompted by a reporter's statement that all grocery store prices seem to be going up.

Eisenhower said the administration is not considering what he called legislative inflation controls, such a curbs on prices and wages. Those controls in time of peace, he went on, are self-defeating and would lead to an entirely different form of government than Americans know at present.

Eisenhower did say the government does attempt to exert every influence to control inflation, through meetings with private groups and through Treasury Department and Federal Reserve Board actions.

DEFENSE — Holding defense spending to about $38 billion during the current fiscal year should give the U. S. a very fine defense program, Eisenhower said. He made that remark when asked whether it would be held to such a level in the light of Russia's attitude regarding disarmament, and in view of the inflationary trend at home.

WISCONSIN—Commenting on the upset victory of Democratic William Proxmire over Republican Walter Kohler in Wisconsin's U. S. senatorial election, Eisenhower said it is dangerous to take any single phenomenon and come to too wide a conclusion.

Court Voids Writ Against Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 31 (AP)—A Federal judge late yesterday instructed the Little Rock School Board to proceed with its gradual integration plan and issued an order forbidding interference.

Judge Ronald N. Davies, assigned here temporarily from his own bench at Fargo, N. D., took less than an hour to untangle the conflict between Federal and state courts.

Davies, filling a vacancy caused by the retirement of an Arkansas jurist, set aside a state court injunction forbidding the School Board to proceed with its planned integration of Central High School. Fewer than 25 Negroes appear eligible to attend the 2000-pupil high school Tuesday when classes begin.

The School Board, whose plan for gradual integration beginning at the high school level had been approved by Federal District Court and the Eighth U. S. Court of Appeals, found itself under Federal orders to proceed and a state court order to desist.

Davies set aside the state court injunction and then enjoined Mrs. Clyde Thomason, head of a group of anti-integrationists known as the Mothers League of Central High, and all others from interfering with the integration.

He warned that interference would be in contempt of his court.

Yesterday the Chancery Court—equivalent to a state civil tribunal—took judicial notice of Gov. Orval Faubus' testimony that the attitude of the people of Little Rock had changed toward integration and ordered the School Board not to integrate because of the threat of violence.

Faubus warned that there was a threat of violence but did not specify the nature or quarter from which violence might stem. He said the recent speech of Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia before a segregation rally here had triggered a crescendo of anti-integration feeling.

Governor Who Used Guard To Prevent Desegregation Doesn't Know His Next Step

From Wire Dispatches

Little Rock, Sept. 3.—United States District Judge Ronald N. Davies Tuesday night ordered immediate integration of Central High School here, disregarding a cordon of National Guard troops thrown around the school by Arkansas Governor Orval E. Faubus.

The judge's order was handed down in a brief hearing requested by the Little Rock School Board to clarify the explosive situation.

The scheduled attendance by nine negro students at the 2,000-pupil white school was in effect blocked Monday night when Faubus called out 250 National Guard members to surround the school "to maintain peace and order."

Squeezed by the dilemma, the School Board explained its position to Judge Davies, of Fargo, N. D.

'Combination . . . Drastic'

Board attorney Arch House pleaded that the board was "making no deviation or retreat" from its plan to integrate schools when it asked Negro students to stay away from the white high school Tuesday.

"The combination of circumstances is drastic," House told the judge. "The board will do whatever your honor thinks fitting."

Davies then reviewed portions of Faubus' televised address in Little Rock Monday night.

He noted that the Governor said the troops had been called out to surround the school only to prevent violence and property damage and not as either segregationists or integrationists.

"I am taking the statement of the Governor at full face value," Davies said.

He then ordered the board to "proceed forthwith with integration."

The new order to proceed with integration — the second issued by Davies in the past week — changed the racial picture here once again.

Faubus said he did not know what his next step would be until he had a chance to study the court order and talk to his advisers.

But he said he believed the order would result in a "greater likelihood of violence now than ever before."

Decision Yet To Make

Asked if he would leave the troops around the high school to protect any Negro children attempting to enter the school, he said that was the decision he would have to make.

Superintendent Virgil Blossom said he would have no comment on the decision until he had read it.

The board, in advising the Negroes to stay away temporarily, did not tell them to attend classes at the Negro high school here.

No Negroes registered at Central Tuesday, or at the new white high school.

Justice Department Watches

At President Eisenhower's direction the Justice Department in Washington kept in close touch with the school-integration dispute, but there were no plans for its intervention.

Officials took the position that it was neither legally possible nor politically desirable for the executive branch of the Government to step in at this stage.

"This particular incident came to my attention the first thing this morning," Eisenhower told his news conference. "I have been in contact with the Attorney General's office. They are taking a look at it.

"They are going to find out exactly what has happened, and discuss this with the federal judge."

'Not Open Defiance'

Faubus contended that he had called out troops only to maintain "peace and order"; that his action was not interposition, nor was it "open defiance" to the Federal Court order under which the School Board was proceeding with its plan for gradual integration.

Only a token force of guardsmen remained around Central High Tuesday night. Faubus has said the troops will stay as long as necessary.

Registration at Central proceeded normally Tuesday except for the curious crowds outside the building and the hubbub of activity from guardsmen and their vehicles.

The crowd stood quietly most of the time. Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Arkansas adjutant general, said he was pleased to see everything so orderly.

To Watch Situation

In North Little Rock, a city of about 50,000 across the Arkansas River, the School Board announced it was postponing scheduled high-school integration indefinitely.

Board President Bryon R. Bogard said the situation in Little Rock will be watched closely by the North Little Rock Board.

At dawn Tuesday a crowd of whites began to form on the school grounds and at its height numbered approximately 500.

By noon the crowd had dwindled to less than 50.

Guardsmen and State troopers began taking their positions late Monday night. By daylight, a long line of military vehicles, armored half-tracks and trucks, lined the street in front of the 2-block-long school building.

Traffic Routed Away

State police routed motor traffic away from the area, but permitted persons on foot to enter.

At one time there were 270 guardsmen and 48 State troopers on duty, in addition to an undisclosed number of plain-clothes men. 9-4-57

Faubus told a news conference Tuesday "there is a possibility that this action could develop into a test of authority of the Federal Government to force its decisions on an unwilling people." But he said he had not intended to initiate such a test.

The Governor said he thought the next step "should be a judicious action by the Federal Court modifying its integration order to allow time to litigate these questions."

'Case Is Different'

"We have State laws opposing integration in school districts where it is violently opposed by the people in that district—we even have a constitutional amendment on it," he asserted. "If the time comes when the people of Little Rock will accept integration, then that is the time to let the Negroes into the white schools.

"The only reason for my action is that I want to preserve the peace of the community and protect its citizens. That is my responsibility as head of the State.

"Ozark (a little town in northwest Arkansas) integrated several Negro students today. There has been no action or reaction. I certainly have not attempted to block it. The Little Rock case is different.

'Very Strong Emotions'

"Here I feel there would be violence if the Negro students tried and 98 per cent of Little Rock feels the same way."

President Eisenhower at his news conference said the Supreme Court justices pointed out in their 1954 integration order the "emotional difficulties" that would beset Negroes if they were forced to continue to attend segregated schools.

"I think probably their reasoning was correct," Eisenhower said. "At least I have no quarrel with it."

"But," he added, "there are very strong emotions on the other side, people that see a picture of a mongrelization of the race, they call it.

"They are very strong emotions, and we are going to whip this thing in the long run by Americans being true to themselves and not merely by law."

Friend, Foe Call Negro In Little Rock

Courier-Journal Louisville Ky. Thurs 9-5-57

2 Pupils Say Central Is Better School

By ADREN COOPER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 4 (AP)—Two white men got out of a car and entered the modest home of Terrance Roberts, ane of nine Negroes who tried in vain to enter white Central High School Wednesday morning.

About 2 minutes later, the phone rang. oung Roberts spoke in low tones for a moment and then hung up.

The men, an Associated Press newsman and photographer, asked: "Who was that?"

"That was my neighbor," young Roberts said. He grinned. "He was just checking up—to see if I was all right."

Another neighbor called for the same purpose a few minutes later.

'Don't Come Back'

Terrance, 15, said he had received one telephone call a few hours after he tried to enter all-white Little Rock Central and was turned back by armed National Guard troops.

He said that the caller, who sounded like a young white girl, told him: "Don't come back to Central tomorrow; go to Horace Mann. (Negro high school)."

The jeers that came from the segregationists in the crowd that gathered at Little Rock Central apparently were a surprise to both Terrance and 15-year-old Elizabeth Eckford, the latter the first to arrive at the guarded white school.

'Nobody Urged Me'

Both said that they did not expect any trouble as far as violence or threats are concerned.

"I didn't think it would go this far," Terrance said, referring to the boos and insults that came from the crowd.

Why did he try to enter the white school? Prompting, perhaps, from the National Association ffor The Advancement of Colored People?

"Nobody urged me to go," he said.

In answer to a question, he said his parents are not members of the N.A.A.C.P.

Both Terrance and Elizabeth feel that Central is a better school than Horace Mann, and Elizabeth advances a definite argument.

Wants To Be Lawyer

"I want to be a lawyer," said the shy, slightly built girl. "I want to go to Central so that I can take speech. There's no speech course at Horace Mann."

Was she scared when she walked the two blocks in front of Little Rock Central with hundreds of people around her almost all the way?

"Whooo, yes," she said with a grin.

After trying in vain to get in the school and hearing such phrases as "go home, Nigger," Elizabeth sat down on a bus-stop bench and waited quietly. After a while, when other Negro students arrived and she was left alone, she cried for a few minutes. She boarded a bus with an unidentified white woman, who sat beside her.

Little Rock Waits For Crisis Showdown

Birm. Ala.
Mon. 9-9-57

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 8 (AP)— This Southern city watched the Penatgon and the Arkansas governor's mansion warily today for some kind of showdown in the nation's No. 1 racial crisis.

Gov. Orval Faubus today was to face newsmen for the first time since Wednesday morning expect for a brief interview last night, when he said National Guardsmen still had orders to keep Negroes out of 2000-pupil Central High School. It was these orders, originally issued last Monday night, that set off the racial trouble.

About a dozen guardsmen were on duty at the high school today.

Neither side gave any sign of surrender. But it was obvious someone must retreat.

The federal government stuck by its determination that court orders demanding immediate integreation of Central High must be obeyed.

Faubus, behind the high, militia-guarded wall of his mansion, called up more national guardsmen for tomorrow to relieve troops which have been on duty since Monday night at the high school.

The one big chance for a face-saving compromise for both sides was thrown out yesterday when Federal Dist. Judge Ronald N. Davies refused to back down and temporarily delay integration.

One solution, from the federal government's viewpoint, would be to order the Arkansas national guard into federal service. This would take them from under Faubus' control, although such an action might be disputed by the state.

The Arkansas Democrat in a copyrighted story from Washington, said it was learned last night that the Joint Chiefs of Staff issued an opinion that President Eisenhower could call the guard into federal service.

One section of a law concerning the national guard gives the federal government authority to take over the guard when the power of the government is flouted and federal laws cannot be enforced by ordinary court procedure. Post-Herald

Faubus called out the national guard last Monday night on the eve of school opening. He said he wanted to prevent violence. The governor flatly stated that the guard had orders to keep Negroes out of the school.

Nine Negro students sought entry Wednesday to the sprawling, tan structure, but the guard would not let them enter. No Negro students have appeared on the campus since.

This city of 110,000 was enjoying a Sunday lull today. People attended church, walked normally about the streets and children played on sun-drenched sidewalks in moderate temperatures.

No crowds showed up at either the mansion of the high school. A handful of Guardsmen peered out through wrought iron gates leading to the governor's mansion and a state trooper or two lounged within the grounds. Shortly after sunup workmen started watering the governor's lawn.

Little Rock's Mayor Woodrow Mann displayed signs of wanting to throw his city police into the racial trouble.

He asked State Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett a series of legal questions last night, some of which indicated he was considering sending city officers into the tense area around the school.

In one question, Mann asked what legal remedy was available "if the governor's forces should interfere with the city police in the performance of their duties."

Mann has called Faubus' summoning of Guardsmen a political hoax and said no violence had been expected at the school.

Asked by newsmen if his question to the attorney general meant he might use city police to take Negroes through National Guard lines, the mayor answered: "No comment."

Other questions indicated he sought to regain police control of the school area, which the National Guard had blocked to traffic.

Bennett replied that the Guard was operating under proper authority of the governor, and if there was any legal remedy in the event of conflict of authority it lies in the courts.

Observers here also considered the possibility that Davies might issue an injunction against the governor, seeking to stop him from interfering with integration.

Should Davies do so, there still was a question whether federal marshals could get through the National Guard troops surrounding the governor's mansion to serve documents on Faubus.

Gov. Faubus' Chance

Post and Times Herald

President Eisenhower's stern answer to Governor Faubus promising to uphold the Constitution by every legal means at his command is the only proper position for a Chief Executive of the United States. As the situation in Little Rock comes more clearly into focus, it is increasingly plain that Governor Faubus has put himself into an intolerable position from which the task of statesmanship must be to help him extricate himself as speedily and gracefully as possible. P. A 10

It now seems altogether evident that the situation need never have arisen; there was no real threat to public order in Little Rock and no occasion whatever for calling out the National Guard and thwarting an order of a United States court. Numerous persons on the scene and familiar with conditions in Little Rock have said unequivocally that the School Board decision to begin desegregation had general community support and was entirely unlikely to provoke violence or disorder. The School Board's action of yesterday asking Judge Davies to suspend his desegregation order emphasizes that tension developed only after the Governor's intervention. Fri. 9-6-57

The most impressive of the first-hand observers is the Mayor of Little Rock, Woodrow Mann, who directly charged the Governor with creating tension where none had previously existed and with using Little Rock as a "pawn in what clearly is a political design of his own." The Arkansas Gazette has strongly supported the Mayor's view that there was no serious tension in the community prior to the Governor's intervention and no likelihood of violence or disorder. In face of the Governor's inflammatory conduct, the calm statements of these local spokesmen seem as courageous as they are reassuring. Washington D.C.

What ought now to be done in this unhappy situation? The first week of school will be over today—with Negro children firmly barred from attendance by National Guardsmen. Let us hope that the weekend will give tempers a chance to cool and reason an opportunity to prevail. During the weekend every effort ought to be made through respected Southern leaders such as Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson and Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn—through Arkansas' own representatives in the Senate and the House—to persuade Governor Faubus that he has committed a piece of folly from which he must retreat. Fellow-Southerners ought to be able to make the Governor see that he has done a grave disservice to the Southern cause in addition to defying the authority of the Federal Government.

Those who talk to Governor Faubus ought to let him know, however, that, in the end, if he will not yield to reason, he will be obliged to yield to authority. There is plenty of authority which the United States can apply and the President has indicated that he will use all requisite powers. The Federal Government can charge those who are obstructing desegregation with contempt of court—including the Guard commander and if necessary the Governor himself. It can call the National Guard into Federal service and order Mr. Faubus' army to protect Federal law. It can, in the last analysis, use whatever means it must use to maintain its paramountcy. Governor Faubus needs to know this. The nine Negro children kept out of school in Little Rock by the Governor's order will have to be admitted to that school regardless of the School Board's present qualms. They will have to be admitted, whether Governor Faubus approves or not, because a United States court says so—says so in the name of the United States.

Showdown

Post and Times Herald

Governor Faubus of Arkansas has created a situation in which Arkansas must knuckle under to the United States or the United States must knuckle under to Arkansas. The Governor has used armed National Guardsmen to prevent the execution of an order issued by a United States court. It is no longer possible to disguise this defiance by pretending that the Governor acted to preserve "peace and order." Peace and order are not inconsistent with justice and the law. The law has been expounded authoritatively by Federal District Judge Ronald Davies. Governor Faubus has chosen to flout it. The time for a showdown is, therefore, inescapably at hand.

Governor Faubus has taken an oath to uphold the Constitution and laws of the United States as well as the Constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas. There is no conflict between the two—save to the extent that he has put them in conflict. He has chosen to lead a shabby and anachronistic challenge to the law of the land. Whether this is deliberate and Governor Faubus is now serving as the spokesman for a group of recalcitrant Southern Governors or whether he has merely committed an inadvertent folly as a consequence of panic, he cannot be allowed to get away with his defiance. The majesty of the United States must be upheld.

The situation imperatively demands the full attention of the President and the Attorney General of the United States. Governor Faubus, or at any rate the subordinates acting under his instructions, have acted in contempt of a court order. It must be made clear that the full power of the United States lies behind the court and any subsequent injunctions it may issue. Failure of the Administration to act decisively and firmly now could have calamitous consequences. For if Governor Faubus' insurrection should prove successful, and if other Southern Governors should follow his example, the school desegregation mandate of the Supreme Court would become a dead letter. Worse than this, the paramountcy of the United States over its constituent states would have been undermined.

The course taken by Governor Faubus is tragic for the South as well as for the Nation as a whole. It is a course which, if it were abetted and joined, would make moderation in the Federal approach to Southern problems almost impossible. Surely it would undo much of the conciliation sought in the civil rights bill, and it would stimulate new demands for punitive legislation in place of the gradualism permitted by the Supreme Court decision. This woeful prospect ought to concern all conscientious Southerners. If Governor Faubus persists in sowing this wind, he may reap a whirlwind for the South.

Little Rock Crucial Test Moves Toward Climax

Constitution P. 4
Fri. 9-6-57

The school integration crisis in Little Rock, Ark., involving 12 Negro pupils, is moving toward a climax. A crucial test between a state government's resistance to integration orders and the federal government's powers to enforce them is in the offing. Atlanta Ga.

What the ultimate outcome will be no one knows. But it is obvious that Gov. Faubus' action in calling out National Guardsmen to block a court-ordered integration of Central High School is leading to a showdown which could speed all-out effort on the part of the Justice Department to force the issue throughout the South. In the long run the Little Rock case may be the best thing that could have happened because eventually the Supreme Court decision must be resolved.

If those advocating speed and force have their way, the results will be most unfortunate. As President Eisenhower indicated he understood Tuesday, mere laws will not change men's hearts nor change their patterns of life overnight.

Hasty action on the part of the federal government will serve the best interests of nobody. The past is ample proof of the tragic consequences of that to both races. But the fact remains we are up against a test of which is sovereign, a state or the federal government.

Time and common sense among people of good will in both races offers the only avenue for ultimate solution of this problem. Force and hatred will not do it. Local communities always have been able to run their own affairs best without power imposed from above by federal or state authorities.

The present situation plays into the hands of politicians, with the people of the South as pawns. Demagogues of the South, Republicans as well as Northern liberals make it more and more difficult for the voice of reason to be heard.

LITTLE ROCK BALANCE SHEET

Times P. 8-C
Atl. 9-7-57
New York

The nation has lost considerably and gained a little as a result of what has been going on during the last few days in a city in Arkansas. We don't suppose our enemies who accuse us of hypocrisy and of racial prejudice could have asked for any better pictorial evidence than that of an officer of the Arkansas National Guard threatening a reporter of this newspaper for the offense of asking questions, or of another officer, the commanding general of the same militia, attempting to intimidate a group of photographers and reporters.

This isn't what we are used to in the United States. It isn't what we are proud of. It isn't a thing we would long or frequently endure. This newspaper is firm in the faith that the majority of the American people will not tolerate a usurpation of power over members of the press or any other law-abiding citizens by any military organization in any community. Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas and Maj. Gen. Sherman T. Clinger of the Arkansas National Guard may have reflected on this point already. If they have not done so, they had better.

But Governor Faubus plainly does not represent the united opinion of the people of Little Rock or Arkansas. The Mayor of Little Rock, Woodrow W. Mann, has declared that "a free press is central to our way of life," has asserted that he sees "no reason for the Governor's action" and has urged newspaper men in Little Rock to go about their duty "without fear of interference, imprisonment or harassment." Two Little Rock newspapers, The Arkansas Gazette, writing after the fact, and The Arkansas Democrat, published the day before the Governor acted, urged their constituents, whatever their views, to respect the Federal courts. The Arkansas State Press, a Negro weekly, calls upon Negroes not to sell their votes but to join "with the better element of state voters and help to clean house."

This is no day for extremists on either side of the question of integration. But there are no two sides to the question of the sanctity of the Constitution, the courts and the laws. This element in our life must be respected in Little Rock, New York City and everywhere else.

Faubus Above the Law

Governor Faubus' self-righteous attempt at martyrdom must be exposed for the fake it is. His strategy, or the strategy contrived by those who are using the Governor as a front man, is now evident. It is to deny and appeal the jurisdiction of the Federal Court and to seek to place on the Federal Government the blame for any eruption of the violence which Mr. Faubus has so carefully nurtured in Little Rock.

In the process the Governor has proved his bad faith completely. He was given every opportunity to avert a head-on clash. Instead, he broke his word—not once but many times. Only last Saturday in his statement after the meeting with President Eisenhower he said that he accepted the jurisdiction of the Federal Court. He was given his day in court; but he seemingly knew in advance that his case could not stand against the testimony of witnesses.

What the Arkansas Governor's attorneys did yesterday in refusing to acknowledge jurisdiction of the court was, in effect, to challenge the supremacy of the Federal Constitution. The issue goes far beyond that of school desegregation. It goes to the very nature of the Federal Union. If the Constitution could not be made effective among all the constituent parts of the Union, then the Union would fail. Legalisms apart, there can be only one answer to this challenge. No one can walk out on Federal law.

Judge Davies has met the issue in the first instance by issuing an injunction against the Governor and the National Guard commander, following the vigorous presentation by the Department of Justice as a friend of the court. Now Governor Faubus must decide whether he will comply with the court order and withdraw the Guard or will defy the court and invite contempt action. The remarks of his attorneys suggest that he will comply, but in such a way as to leave the situation in Little Rock perilous.

In either event, a resolute stand by President Eisenhower and the Administration in support of the Federal Court is of paramount importance. Federalization of the National Guard, under reliable commanders, is the most obvious and appropriate remedy to cope either with defiance by the Governor or with a vacuum of law enforcement in Little Rock. Mr. Faubus has brought this painful situation upon the people of Arkansas by his own actions, and there must be no hesitation in doing what is necessary to uphold the supremacy of law.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Negroes' Votes For Faubus Sold

(While Drew Pearson is touring the Mediterranean, his column is written by his column associate.)

By Jack Anderson

Gov. Orval Faubus, who blew up the segregation storm in Arkansas, was helped into office by Negroes who sold their votes.

Anderson

An overwhelming majority of the 65,000 Negroes who voted in the 1954 Arkansas primary, cast their ballots for Faubus. This gave him more than the 5000-vote margin by which he defeated ex-Gov. Francis Cherry.

Evidence has now come to light that the Faubus forces paid cash on the barrelhead for Negro votes. This has stirred Mrs. L. C. Bates, who heads the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, to preach repentence to her people.

"It is unfortunate that Negroes put Faubus in office," she told this column. "We hope the Negro won't be so quick to sell his vote in the future. We believe the Negro has been convinced his constitutional rights are more valuable than a few tainted dollars. It is time for Negro voters to stop being misled by professional exploiters. The day of vote selling has passed."

She knew several Negroes who were paid to vote for Faubus and Negro leaders who took money to campaign for him, Mrs. Bates said. This was confirmed by I. S. McClinton, president of the Arkansas Democratic Voters Association, and other responsible Negro leaders. This column also talked to Negroes who acknowledged they had accepted "expense money" from the Faubus forces.

The Rev. W. H. Hall, who directed Faubus' campaign among the Negroes, denied receiving more than a "nominal sum."

"No more than $500 passed through my hands, counting what I got," he told this column. Most of the money went to car owners to haul voters to the polls, he said.

Queen Needn't Stretch

On secret State Department orders, Chrysler engineers are altering the limousines Queen Elizabeth will use in America. The problem is to jack up the back seats without hoisting her feet off the floor.

It will take two parade limousines to keep up with the Queen. These will be identical, fawn-colored Chryslers. While one is delivering her to her plane, the other will be waiting at the next airport for her arrival.

So that the Queen and the public can get a better view of each other, the State Department ordered the back seats raised four inches. This caused consternation, however, over whether her royal highness' legs might be left dangling.

Chrysler engineers, who are working on such precision projects as the Jupiter guided missile, got out their slide rules and calculated Queen Elizabeth's measurements from her pictures. Then they hunted up a girl with the same specifications.

The model tried out the accentuated seats, couldn't touch the floor. Result: Engineers are now elevating the floor.

Weary but Wise

Dress-shop diplomat Max Gluck, new ambassador to Ceylon who couldn't pronounce the name of that country's prime minister, took such a cram course on Ceylon that he left for his post last week in a state of "extreme exhaustion."

He even carried a doctor's certificate to prove it. However, its purpose wasn't to impress the Ceylonese with how hard he'd studied but to ward off attorneys who wanted his deposition in a $185,000 lawsuit.

The suit was filed by M. J. Spiegel, Chicago businessman, who charged that Gluck had neglected to make the final payment on a chainstore purchase.

The doctor declared Gluck was so worn out from State Department briefings that it would be "dangerous" for him to testify. Spiegel's attorneys offered to postpone the deposition and keep Gluck in this country by court order until his health improved. Thereupon the harassed Ambassador decided he felt well enough to answer a few questions.

He spent the morning under cross-examination, but failed to show up for the afternoon session. He sent word to Judge Saul Strert of the New York County Supreme Court that he was too ill to continue.

The judge finally let Gluck, presumably still exhausted, take off for Ceylon without completing his deposition.

Hoffa Polls Teamsters

Jimmy Hoffa, embattled crown prince of the Teamsters Union, made 60 long-distance phone calls last week to teamster leaders around the country.

In the words of the marriage covenant, he asked whether they would take him for better or worse. Would they stand by him, he asked, no matter what Congress or the AFL-CIO said about him?

Every last one took a loyalty oath to support Hoffa down to the last ballot at the forthcoming teamsters convention.

MOB IN LITTLE ROCK

The sickening performance put on in Little Rock yesterday by the forces of hysteria, mob violence and race hatred has now driven President Eisenhower to do the last thing he wanted to do: directly threaten use of "the full power of the United States, including whatever force may be necessary, to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the Federal Court."

The creatures of unreason in and around Central High School in Little Rock had won a temporary victory during the day, culminating in the withdrawal of the handful of Negro students who had dared to enter the school a few hours earlier under protection of an order of the United States District Court and of city and state police. It was obvious, however, that this victory for ignorance and bigotry could only be temporary.

One may question the tactical wisdom of sending those Negro boys and girls to the school on the very first possible morning, when a voluntary delay of another two or three days might have taken the edge off the synthetically stimulated crowd. One may ask why better arrangements for preserving discipline among the white students inside the school had not been made. But one cannot question either the Negroes' right to be there or their courage in making the attempt, or the inevitability of their return.

They must come back, no longer merely for themselves, but now for the good name and lawful government of the United States. The issue is just that important. If this is a government of laws, it cannot be intimidated by a howling mob. Those children must come back to Central High School; they must come back in peace and safety; and they ought to come back under full protection of the authorities of Little Rock and the State of Arkansas alone.

Now the President has made the public threat that, failing all else, he will resort to "force' 'to insure that they do return and to uphold the sanctity of Federal law. Even the threat is a step of gravity, and it might have been avoided if he had taken a firmer position earlier in this crisis. In any event, all Americans worthy of the name will hope and believe with him that the use of such Federal power will not be necessary and that the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Little Rock and of Arkansas "will not countenance violence of law and order by extremists."

In fact, there had been no solid evidence of impending violence or serious disturbance until after Governor Faubus had called out the National Guard to prevent Negro students from entering the high school. When the troops were at last removed, there was left in their wake an explosive atmosphere that had been charged almost daily by the Governor's statements and attitudes. Now he can weep crocodile tears, saying "I told you so." His responsibility for this crisis is a heavy one. More important, however, than the assessment of personal responsibility is the necessity of bringing Little Rock's Central High School back into the Federal Union.

Texts of U. S. Petition and Order Against Faubus

Times 9.24-C

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 10—Following are the texts of the petition filed by the Justice Department today in Federal District Court here and the order issued by Judge Ronald N. Davies:

Wed. 9-11-57 New York

Petition by U. S.

The United States of America, amicus curiae, by Herbert Brownell Jr., Attorney General, and Osro Cobb, United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Arkansas, files this petition pursuant to and in conformity with the purpose and intent of this court's order of Sept. 9, 1957, against Orval E. Faubus, Governor of the State of Arkansas, Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Adjutant General of the State of Arkansas, and Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson, unit commander of the Arkansas National Guard, alleging:

1. On Aug. 28, 1956, this court entered its decree and judgment in this cause, approving the plan of school integration adopted by the defendant Little Rock district on May 24, 1955, and ordered that jurisdiction in this case be retained for the purpose of entering such order and further orders as may be necessary to obtain the effectuation of said plan of school integration. On April 26, 1957, said decree and judgment was affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. 243 F. 2D 361.

2. On Sept. 2, 1957, Governor Faubus and General Clinger caused to be stationed units of the Arkansas National Guard at the Little Rock Central High School, which troops are under command of Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson. On or about Sept. 2, 1957, Governor Faubus issued to General Clinger the following order:

"You are directed to place off limits to white students those schools for colored students and to place off limits to colored students those schools heretofore operated and recently set up for white students. This order will remain in effect until the demobilization of the guard or until further orders."

Negro Students Barred

Pursuant to said order and other orders and instructions unknown to petitioner, said units of the Arkansas National Guard from and since Sept. 2, 1957, have been and still are forcibly preventing and restraining certain Negro students eligible to attend classes in said Little Rock High School in accordance with said plan of school integration from entering said school and attending classes therein. Specifically, on Sept. 4, 1957, the following eligible Negro students were prevented by said units of the Arkansas National Guard from attending classes at said school:

Gloria Ray, Jefferson Thomas, Carlotta Walls, Thelma Mothershed, Terrance Roberts, Minnie Brown, Melba Patillo, Elizabeth Ann Eckford, Jane Hill, Ernest Green.

3. On Sept. 3, 1957, this court, upon consideration of a petition for instruction filed in this cause on Sept. 3, 1957, by the defendants herein, ordered that said defendants integrate, in accordance with the plan of school integration approved by this court, the senior high school grades in the Little Rock School District forthwith.

4. On Sept. 7, 1957, this court denied the application of the Little Rock School District for a stay of the court's order of Sept. 3, 1957.

5. The acts of Governor Faubus, General Clinger, and Lieut. Colonel Johnson, in preventing by means of said units of the Arkansas National Guard Negro students eligible under said plan of school integration to attend said school, from doing so, obstruct and interfere with the carrying out and effectuation of the court's orders of Aug. 28, 1956, and Sept. 3, 1957, contrary to the due and proper administration of justice.

6. In order to protect and preserve the integrity of the judicial process of the courts of the United States and to maintain due and proper administration of justice, it is necessary that Governor Faubus, General Clinger and Lieutenant Colonel Johnson be made additional parties defendant and enjoined from obstructing or interfering with the carrying out and effectuation of said orders.

Wherefore, petitioner prays the court to make said Governor Faubus, General Clinger and Lieutenant Colonel Johnson additional parties defendant and to enter a preliminary injunction and a permanent injunction enjoining and restraining Governor Faubus, General Clinger and Lieutenant Colonel Johnson, their officers, agents, servants, employes, attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participation with them, from obstructing or preventing by means of said units of the Arkansas National Guard or otherwise, Negro students eligible under said plan of school integration to attend the Little Rock Central High School, from doing so, and from otherwise obstructing or interfering in any way with the carrying out and effectuation of said orders of this court.

POLICE ORDER QUIET from students outside the North Little Rock (Ark.) High School. The Negro students who attempted to enter school Monday stayed away yesterday.

Order by Judge

It is appearing from the petition of the United States, as amicus curiae, by Herbert Brownell Jr., Attorney General of the United States, and Osro Cobb, United States Attorne for the Eastern District of Arkansas, filed in conformity with the purpose and intent of this court's order of Sept. 9, 1957, that it is in the interest of the proper administration of justice that Orval E. Faubus, Governor of the State of Arkansas; Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Adjutant General of the State of Arkansas, and Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson, Unit Commander of the Arkansas National Guard, be made additional parties defendant to precent the continued obstruction of, and interference with, the carrying out and effectuation of the orders of this court entered in this cause on Aug. 28, 1956, and Sept. 3, 1957;

Now, Therefore, pursuant to Rules 15 (d) and 21, F. E. P. C.,

It Is Hereby Ordered—

1. Orval E. Faubus, Governor of the the State of Arkansas; Gen. Sherman T. Clinger, Adjutant General of the State of Arkansas, and Lieut. Col. Marion E. Johnson, Unit Commander of the Arkansas National Guard, are hereby added as, and made, parties defendant in this cause;

2. Summons and a copy of said petition and of this order shall be served forthwith upon said Governor Faubus, Gen1 eral Clinger, and Lieutenant Colonel Johnson, and upon the plaintiffs and the other defendants herein;

3. A hearing upon the entry of a preliminary injunction as prayed for in said petition is hereby set for 10 A. M., Se 20, 1957, or as soon th after as may be heard by court, at Room 455, Fede Building, Little Aock, Ar

Club-Wielding Soldier Chases Boy For Following Negro Into School

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 11 (UP)—A paratrooper with a billy club chased a white boy out of Central High School today for singling out a Negro student and trailing him suspiciously close into the building.

As the eight Negroes—the ninth was sick today with flu—reached the three doors at the school's entrance, they split up. Seven went through one door and one went through another.

The white boy, in a black sports shirt and cap, stepped out of a crowd of white students and walked in after the lone Negro boy.

He turned and made a remark to the other white students. Then he disappeared through the door behind the Negro, but stayed in less than a minute. With a trooper behind him, he came rushing back out. He complained to a captain, but the captain walked off and left him.

Otherwise, the Negroes finished their third week in Central High School in peace. Soldiers protected them on the way to school, on the way home and inside and outside the building.

But no end to the crisis was in sight.

"It's his (the President's) responsibility," Gov. Orval E. Faubus said. "He got himself into this mess. Let him get himself out."

The President ordered 1,000 troops of the 101st Airborne Division into Little Rock and federalized the Arkansas National Guard on Sept. 24 to protect the Negroes.

Faubus, with a two-day growth of beard, lounged about in his bedroom in the gubernatorial mansion nursing a case of flu. He specified that it was not Asian flu.

He said he felt better but his doctor had advised him to stay at home through the weekend.

Faubus estimated "roughly" that it will cost the government 24 million dollars to protect the nine Negroes at Central for the rest of the school year.

He said he believed the federalized National Guard would have to remain at Central until it closes for summer vacation.

Copies of a poem called "The Night Before Segregation" were handed out at Central today to both students and soldiers. It said:

" 'Twas the first of September
"And all through the South
"Not a word could be heard
"From nobody's mouth.
"The kiddies were ready
"For school the next day
"When all hell broke loose
"Down Arkansas way.
"Ol' Ike had orders
"To mix up the schools
"But ol' Faubus said 'Hold it,
" 'We ain't no fools.
" 'If you know what's good
" 'You will stand back and listen
" 'Cause we ain't goin to stand
" 'For no nigger mixing.'
"He hollered an order
"Heard round the nation
"He called out the guards
"To hault intergration.
"The guard came a running
"And took up their stand
"An' upheld the right
"Of our good old Southland.
"Ike didn't like this
"So he ran to the phone
"And called up ol' Faubus
"At his Arkansas home.
"He said 'Meet me in Newport
" 'Tomorrow night
" 'Cause the niggers and white folks
" 'Are fixing to fight.'
"Faubus agreed
"And hopped on his plane
"And left in a hurry
"In a drizzling rain.
"Faubus returned
"But stuck to his rule:
"Ain't no nigger coming
"To this here school.
"So on came the troops
"In numbers yet bigger
"To make white folk
"Go to school with the nigger.
"Ol' Faubus was brave
"And made a gallant (sic) stand
"But he had to abide
"By the law of the land.

"Ol' Ike won the battle
"(For the time being)
"But God help the niggers
"When the troops start leaving.'

Twenty-four Baptist churches, mostly of the Missionary Baptist sect, held special services tonight to pray for a solution of the crisis by withdrawal of the nine Negro students.

They refused to have anything to do with special services at 11 a.m. tomorrow in 85 of Little Rock's biggest churches—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, white and Negro—to pray for a solution through support of law and order.

GIs Escort Negroes in Little Rock

Quiet Returns To Torn School

By JACK NELSON
Constitution Staff Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 4—Restless, emotional segregationists stayed away from Central High Friday and the school went through another tense day of integrated classes under heavy Army guard.

There were no incidents. The outburst of Thursday morning—a walkout of 75 students and the burning of a Negro effigy in a spectacular demonstration — has been followed by a quiet day.

Release of FBI report on Little Rock disturbances is left to Judge Davies. Page 2.

Little Rock's people expected quiet over the weekend while school is out but more trouble next week.

STUDENTS JEER

The nine Negro students, again traveling to and from school in an Army station wagon escorted by two jeeps loaded with soldiers, were jeered by students outside the school.

The Army, which Thursday promised the NAACP the Negroes would be protected, took no chances Friday and had a group of 16 soldiers surround the Negro students to escort them between the station wagon and the main front entrance.

Some 30 paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division were stationed inside the school. About 70 members of the federalized Arkansas National Guard were patrolling the school grounds.

265 ABSENT

Little Rock school Supt. Virgil Blossom reported that Friday's absences totaled 265, including "about 50 students" who have been suspended for participating in the walkout. Total enrollment is 1,900.

Meanwhile, the issue of using federal troops in the integration crisis continued to simmer and there were no signs here that Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus will reach an agreement on the removal of the paratroopers and the deactivating of the National Guard.

Faubus has made no comment on the subject since Thursday when he said he "positively" would not surrender his "discretionary powers as governor."

Faubus has contended he used National Guard troops to maintain law and order at Central High and that to perform this task the guard had to keep the Negro students out of the school. This was within his discretion under the law, Faubus declared.

After Faubus bowed to a federal court injunction and removed the guard, the Negroes attended classes and mob violence broke out. Local police said they were unable to handle the mob." President Eisenhower ordered the Army to occupy the school on Sept. 24.

U.S. Rep. Brooks Hays of Little Rock, close friend of the President, predicted Friday that any use of federal troops to force integration in Georgia and other deep South states would lead to "disastrous results."

Hays, who three weeks ago arranged an Eisenhower-Faubus conference that produced no concrete results, said that because of the difficulty in the Little Rock case the federal government may adopt a more "flexible" approach to enforcement of court integration orders.

He said he fears disastrous results would erupt from any forcible integration in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, Virginia and Florida.

Faubus Says Troops Invade Dressing Room While On Patrol Duty

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Oct. 7 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus said today—and met a prompt denial from the White House—that federal troopers have invaded the privacy of girls' dressing rooms while enforcing racial integration at Central High School.

"Completely untrue and also completely vulgar," said James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, of Faubus's assertions.

The governor had said he based his statement on complaints from parents.

School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom said, "The federal troops are not following the girls into the dressing rooms."

Asst. Supt. Fred Graham branded the charge as "ridiculous."

But Faubus, replying to Hagerty, said tonight:

"What does the White House know about it 2,000 miles away? We'll prove it when the time comes."

He called it wholly unwarranted to have federal soldiers accompany the girls when they change clothes for gym or other class activities.

The governor suggested the White House send in a detachment of WACS if it thinks such close surveillance is necessary to integrate nine Negro students into Central High.

OUTLINES COMPLAINT

The governor outlined his complaint in a letter to Maj. Gen. Edwin A Walker, in charge of regular Army paratroopers and federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen who are enforcing integration at the school.

In Washington, Hagerty said Walker returned the letter to Faubus unopened because it was addressed to "The commander of the occupation forces."

Walker himself said in a statement issued here:

"The soldiers on duty at Central High School are precluded by orders from activities which might be subject to criticism and as described by the governor. My information indicates very definitely that the staff and faculty at the high school have received neither complaint nor report on the allegations. This headquarters has received no complaint or reports of criticism from any source."

Secretary of the Army Brucker also issued a statement in Washington saying Faubus's letter "has all the earmarks of desperation and is an unworthy attempt to defame our American soldiers..."

Aslo in Washington, Rep. Brooks Hays (D-Ark) lunched at the White House with Sherman Adams, No. 1 aide to President Eisenhower. Afterwards, Hays said he thinks conditions in Little Rock are rapidly approaching the stage at which troops can be withdrawn.

Faubus, in his complaint about the invasion of privacy, referred to Walker's soldiers as "your troops." He didn't specify whether he was talking about regular Army paratroopers or federalized guardsman, both of whom have shared inside duty at Central High at various times. Paratroopers stood guard inside the school today until the Negroes were escorted out of the building at the end of classes.

LONG OCCUPATION

In his letter to Walker, Faubus predicted a prolonged Army occupancy of Central High. He wrote:

"If it appeared that the occupation of Central High School and Arkansas by federal troops were only temporary, then, perhaps the citizens could endure the presence of your troops and the methods being used until the time of your departure.

"However, if federal troops are to remain as long as forcible integration of the school is necessary, then it is my opinion that you and your troops will be here for a long time."

Central's campus settled back into a near-normal routine today. It was the quietest it has been since the integration rioting of two weeks ago.

Only a small patrol of guardsmen marked the campus outwardly as any different than any other in the nation. Barricades, held in readiness since their removal from the streets several days ago, were dismantled and stacked.

The six Negro girls and three boys were escorted by only six guardsmen as they came to classes today.

Gov. Faubus' Charges Sound a Bit Desperate

Constitution
Atl. 10-11-57

Gov. Orval Faubus, of Arkansas, whose chief claim to fame is the fact that he provided the federal government with a blueprint for forcing integration and the GOP with a device to splinter the Democratic Party, achieved the height of something or other in his charges that paratroopers on guard at Central High School had "invaded" the girls' washrooms.

Atlanta Ga

In the first place, the paratroopers are not in Little Rock of their own choice. They also know they are not wanted. And under the tense situation which exists, no commanding officer would tolerate such behavior without risking his reputation and command. P. 4F

The governor's vague charges and talk about telephone calls which backed them up are confused attempts to hide his own failures in the Little Rock crisis. But even those who have been kept jumping by his somewhat irrational behavior and remarks were surprised at the manufactured "sex angle."

Until the governor proves his charges, thoughtful people can only agree with the White House that they are "untrue and completely vulgar."

THE GREAT CHALLENGE

My Own Story

Afro American p. 7

One of the Little Rock Nine writes for the AFRO her own experiences inside riot-bound Central High School.

Baltimore Md. 14K

By Melba Patillo

Will I complete a full school year at Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas?

This I do not know, but I do know through all the heartaches and unpleasant aspects of this problem, my eight friends and I have tried. We have really tried to our utmost ability to do our best at all times. Sat. 10-19-57

During this last week, many things have happened to me, and as I sit and think of them, I consider that they are experiences which I will remember vividly all my lifetime.

The thought of having to be escorted into school in my home town hurts me deeply. Even greater than the need of having to be escorted.

AS I BEGIN my day each morning with a flag salute, I look about and see the strange faces that all seem to be glaring at me. Some of which show hatred, some potential friendliness, some sympathy and many kindness.

The expressions on the faces I see en route to my classes tell me of the prankish thoughts in the backs of their minds. The thoughts of things which give them great pleasure but break my heart in two.

AS I LOOK into the future, I feel with God by my side, I shall endure whatever is to come, but I shall pray for a great miracle of understanding to sweep over all those who need it, and for those who have been very nice, I pray that some day I may repay them or that they may be repaid.

I am a greater person because of this experience. For the first time in my life I was slapped. This was done by a girl whose looks and actions told me she had no regrettable thoughts about it at all.

I controlled my emotions and continued on to class. In response to other unkind things, I have smiled and let them pass. I always think to myself, "May God have mercy on them."

* * *

IT IS NOT easy to smile and bear the pranks when I really want to become a part of the group, to play and to have a normal day as the other children do.

It hurts enough to know that your fellow classmates don't want you, but it becomes much worse when they constantly show it by calling awful names, when they hurt you, spit on you — it is so hard to believe.

I never shall forget on Friday someone tripped me. When I saw hatred in the eyes of some one I thought had no reason to hate me — someone I thought liked me — my world seemed to crumble beneath me.

Tears came to my eyes but I had to go on. Forgetting seems to heal my wounds these days.

Since I have been at Central High, I am glad to know when all else fails I have my country to depend on. And above all, I depend on my God in Heaven who looks after even the most humble. He is my salvation.

"I have been so nervous that when the phone rings I jump like I have been shot."

This is how a mother feels when her daughter is enrolled in a school where there is objection to her presence.

Mrs. Lois Patillo, a Little Rock teacher, who also has a small son, was telling the AFRO how she feels with her daughter Melba, 15, now enrolled at Central High School.

She is one of the now famous nine youngsters who have amazed the world by "sticking" through riots, attacks and threats which have come upon them since they entered the school on Sept. 21.

MELBA HAS since then captured the hearts of the readers of many world - wide circulated newspapers. She had written articles about her school days which have been published in New York, Baltimore and London papers.

She has appeared on radio and television programs and was featured by Ed Murrow in an at-home series with her mother and brother and with Dave Garroway on his morning show. Sat. 10-19-57

She is a "natural" when it comes to singing, playing and pretending to be an entertainer. That is her ambition, in fact.

"I intend to be a very good and high type actress," she says.

ON THE FIRST day of school Melba was slapped by an irate school girl who resented her presence in the school.

As instructed by authorities who are directing the nine students Melba ignored the assault.

However, she says that it "hurt my heart more than it did my face."

On Friday, Oct. 4, Melba was tripped by a gym classmate and she was kicked also. Her mother found it necessary to take her to the doctor for a tetanus shot.

Said Melba: "I will soon either learn to forget these things or look no the bright side, and they will then all pass out of my experience."

Little Rock School Superintendent Has No Plans For More Students

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (INS) — School Superintendent Virgil Blossom of Little Rock disclosed Wednesday that there are no plans to admit additional Negro students to Central High School in the second semester beginning Jan. 20.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark - (INS) — Blossom said there had been reports that "about 50 Negro students" were scheduled to enter Central High classes next September and added:

"There won't be any more admitted this school year. At least, that's the way I see it right now."

Admission of nine Negro students to classes at the start of school in September in a gradual move toward social integration set off a series of riots which forced President Eisenhower to send Army Paratroopers and National Guardsmen to keep order.

STUDENTS NOW ENROLLED

The nine negro students now are enrolled at the previously all-white high school.

In another disclosure, Blossom confirmed the mother of Minnie Brown, one of the Negro students, and Mrs. Daisy Bates had conferred with Central High School principal Jess Mathews. Mrs. Bates is president of the Arkansas Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

It was reported that Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Bates had protested that Mrs. Brown's daughter had not appeared on any school assembly program.

Matthews said that no Negro students had tried out for the program. He explained that the talent singers were selected by a faculty committee from students appearing for tryouts.

Faubus Plans No Call For Pupil Protection

SHREVEPORT, La., Nov. 19 (AP) —Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas said today he would not order Arkansas State Police or the National Guardsmen to guard anyone in school.

The Army officially announced today all remaining regular Army soldiers would be withdrawn from Little Rock. Officials said integration enforcement at Central High School would be handled by federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen.

He said the planned withdrawal of federal troops from the high school was "very, very unfair" to Arkansas National Guardsmen who will be left with the "distasteful" task of enforcing integration.

INTEGRATION STUDY PROPOSED TO BOARD

No Decision Yet — School Budget Reduced

COLLECTIONS ARE OFF

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Dec. 9.—The State Board of Education took under advisement Monday a suggestion that it appoint a committee to make a study of the Little Rock integration dispute.

The board also ordered a 2.6 per cent reduction in state aid to school districts, based on warnings of state fiscal officers that collections weren't going to come up to appropriation figures voted by this year's General Assembly.

The integration study was suggested by the Arkansas Education Association, the Governor's Advisory Committee on Education (GACE), the Arkansas Congress of Parents and Teachers and the Arkansas School Boards Association.

Guide To Follow

Spokesmen for those groups, appearing before the board Monday afternoon, pointed to "widespread misunderstanding and confusion" over the integration dispute. They said a study by recognized leading citizens might give other school districts a guide to follow and help them avoid mistakes made in handling integration at Central High School.

Acting board Chairman John Rye of Russellville said another meeting probably would be held next month to give the organizations an answer on their request. No opposition was expressed to the study, however. Marvin Bird of Earle, board chairman, was absent because of illness.

Forrest Rozzell, executive secretary of the Arkansas Education Association, said the groups asking for the study already had conferred with "parties having a responsibility" in school problems, including Gov. Orval Faubus and Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.), in whose district the dispute arose.

Mr. Rozzell said laymen and school officials everywhere were looking for an answer to the integration problem. What's needed, he said, is "a plan of action by which we can prevent the recurrence of what happened here."

'Proper Agency'

Don Blackmon, Mississippi County school official and AEA president, said the Board of Education was the proper agency to conduct the study and that it "would be helpful to all districts throughout the state."

Joshua K. Shepherd, Little Rock insurance executive and a spokesman for the GACE, said "suspicion, distrust, misunderstanding and political maneuvering" had invaded the entire nation's thinking on integration. He feels a study might do much to clear thinking on the hot issue.

If it is undertaken, Mr. Rozzell indicated, financing can be arranged, but Mr. Rye questioned whether any funds would be needed.

The state aid cutbacks came after Comptroller Kelly Cornett last week reported to Governor Faubus state agencies should reduce their spending by slightly under three per cent, because collections weren't meeting appropriation figures.

As a result, the Board of Education ordered aid to districts in what is called the "minimum budget aid" be pared from $32,586,000 to $31,589,000. Transportation aid was reduced from $5,035,000 to $4,904,000, and corresponding cuts were made on other smaller items. The revised overall school budget is now $42,891,000, compared to the $44,158,000 voted by the Legislature.

No Pay Cuts Seen

Mr. Rye said he doubted if any teacher salaries or departmental pay would have to be reduced. Another review of the school budget is planned by the board in March.

Among district loans approved was a proposed loan by the Osceola No. 1 School District to borrow $130,000 to add classrooms to an elementary school.

PRINCETON, N.J. — The events in Little Rock have done little to change the attitude of the typical American toward the principle of school integration.

The Gallup Poll

A special survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion — completed since President Eisenhower ordered 1,000 troopers of the 101st Airborne Division into Little Rock — finds that 59 per cent of all adults across the country approve of the Supreme Court's historic decision on school segregation.

In an August survey, before Gov. Orval Faubus stationed the Arkansas National Guard around Little Rock's Central High School at the opening of the school year, 58 per cent of those interviewed nationwide approved of the Supreme Court decision.

There is survey evidence that the approval vote in the South took a downward turn during the early days of the Little Rock dispute before the president dispatched troops to that city.

In a nationwide study completed just prior to Eisenhower's decision, 56 per cent of all adults across the country approved of the decision.

At that time, 16 per cent of those interviewed in the South approved of the decision — an all-time low in the Southern approval vote since the court's decision over three years ago.

Today, 23 per cent of those interviewed in the South say they approve of the Supreme Court ruling.

As part of its study on the impact of Little Rock, the institute assigned its field staff to ask a carefully drawn cross-section of American adults from all segments of the population and in all parts of the nation the same question they have asked at periodic intervals since May, 1954:

"The Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation in the public schools is illegal. This means that all children, no matter what their race, must be allowed to go to the same schools. Do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Here is the vote nationwide at three different points in time — before the Arkansas crisis started, during the early days of the crisis before federal troops moved in, and as it stands today:

AUGUST, 1957

	Per Cent
Approve	58
Disapprove	36
No Opinion	6

SEPTEMBER, 1957 (BEFORE FEDERAL TROOPS)

	Per Cent
Approve	56
Disapprove	38
No Opinion	6

OCT. 1957 (AFTER FEDERAL TROOPS)

	Per Cent
Approve	59
Disapprove	35
No Opinion	6

As the following trend of sentiment in the South shows, the number of Southerners who disapproved of the court's decision reached its high point during the days when the National Guard was guarding the Little Rock high school on Gov. Faubus' orders.

VOTE IN SOUTH ON SUPREME COURT RULING

	Approve %	Disapprove %	No Opin. %
July, '54	24	71	5
May, '55	20	73	7
Feb., '56	22	72	7
Jan., '57	27	67	6
Aug., '57	20	75	5
Sept., '57	16	78	6
Oct., '57	23	72	5

Although a majority of those in the North have consistently supported the principle of school integration, studies since the court's 1954 decision have found that those who approve of the principle adopt the attitude of "gradualism" when it comes to putting integration into effect.

In January, 1957, for example, an institute survey found that approximately seven out of 10 persons who approved of the Supreme Court ruling felt that it was better to make a gradual approach to ending segregation than it was to try and adopt it in the near future.

In its series on the impact of the Little Rock situation, the institute has found that a Southerner's disapproval of integration does not necessarily go hand-in-hand with a condemnation of Eisenhower's action in the Arkansas dispute or support of Faubus for his decision.

For example, although only 23 per cent in the South today approve of the Supreme Court ruling, 36 per cent think the president made the right move in sending troops to Little Rock.

Likewise, 34 per cent of Southerners believe Faubus caused more trouble than he blocked in placing guardsmen around the high school.

Little Background Is Known On Lives Of Negro Students

By RICHARD T. ALLEN
From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 30.—The whole world knows about the Federal-enforced integration of Central High School here, but few people seem to know about the family and educational backgrounds of the nine Negro students attending the previously all-white classes.

Little Rock school officials Monday adamantly refused to release the educational records of the three Negro boys and six Negro girls.

"I will say this," said Virgil Blossom, superintendent of schools, "All nine of those students have been going to Little Rock public schools for the last four or five years. Of that I am sure."

He declined all further information, even the names of their parents.

He said he would not release the information on the Negroes "or on any other students, under the circumstances."

Hand Picked

"I am not going to be a party to anything that would hold those children up to wrath," he told The Commercial Appeal. "While I am sure that is not your purpose, if the information requested by you appeared in your newspaper it would be available for anyone to use."

Longtime Resident

The Little Rock School Board has said the students were hand picked as to educational qualifications. Some of the students themselves have said they wanted to attend Central because it is closer to their homes and they would have an opportunity to take courses not available at Horace Mann High School for Negroes.

A check showed all of the students do live closer to Central than Horace Mann.

Most of the Negroes' parents claim to be longtime residents of Little Rock. But they don't talk too much about the touchy situation which finds their 14-to-17-year-old sons and daughters going to school under the protection of the United States Army.

One of the girls, Gloria Ray is the daughter of H. C. Ray of 2111 Cross.

Her father said he is a retired Agriculture Extension Service employe.

"I've lived in Little Rock more than 40 years," he said. "I'm a colored man and I don't want to say anything that might stir this up more. But I never thought things would get so stirred up. If I had known there would have been this much trouble, I never would have let my girl go.

"I've worked with the University of Arkansas Extension people for years and I've never had any race trouble. My wife is employed by the Pulaski County Health Department."

C. Walls, the father of Carlotta Walls of 1300 Valentine, is a brick mason and has been doing that sort of work in Little Rock for more than 20 years, her mother said.

A. L. Mothershed of 1313 Chester, father of Thelma Mothershed, originally came from Texas many years ago. He is a psychiatric aide at Fort Roots Veterans Hospital. Thelma's mother has lived in Little Rock "all my life."

The father of Jefferson Thomas. The family, which lives at 1219 West 20th, came to Little Rock in 1924. He works at International Harvester Co.

Elizabeth Ekgford is the daughter of Oscar Eckford Jr. of 4405 West 18th. Her father works for the Missouri Pacific Railroad shops in North Little Rock. It was not known how long the family has lived here.

Terrace Roberts is the son of Williams L. Roberts. His father also works at the Fort Roots Veterans Hospital. They live at 2301 Howard.

Ernest Green is the son of E. G. Green of 1224 West 21st, while Melba Pattillo is the daughter of H. G. Pattillo of 1123 Cross.

Minnie Brown of 1117 Ringo, the ninth student, is the daughter of Mrs. Willie Brown.

Arkansas Ends Segregation In High Schools

Defender Louisville Ky. Thurs. 7-18-57

Ozark, Ark. (ANP) — Limited integration will be initiated in the Ozark High School here next fall with the reservation that there "will never be any more than six Negro pupils" in the school at one time.

P. 2

This type integration was announced recently by school superintendent R. L. Graves. He said that the school board decided to integrate from an economic standpoint because "the cost of transportation and tution of Negro pupils to Fort Smith, Ar., had been $400 a year for each pupil."

Ark —

Graves stated that three Negro high school students would attend the previously all-white high school this fall. The school services 475 white students.

The school board declared that no plans were currently underway to end segregation on the elementary school level. Eighteen Negro pupils attend the Carver Elementary school here for Negroes.

Last year five public schools in this state integrated their classrooms. Bentonville, Hoxie, Fayetteville, Charleston, and Hot Springs have been under integrated school operations for some time. Little Rock, North Little Rock, and Fort Smith have set up programs for desegregation this fall.

Segregation Proposals Seen For Annual AML Convention

By WILLIAM R. INGRAM

From The Commercial Appeal West Memphis Bureau

WEST MEMPHIS, Nov. 2.—Arkansas Municipal League members said they expect school segregation proposals to be drawn at the 23rd annual convention Nov. 12-13 at Little Rock.

They said the league would then present the proposed laws at the next state legislative session.

No one predicted what character the proposals would take. Atty. Gen. Bruce Bennett has already sent proposed ordinances to nearly all municipalities. The ordinances are designed to bring into the open activities of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

Price Will Speak

Members of the league said they expected these ordinances would be discussed at the convention. Commercial Appeal

Mayor Howell B. Price of West Memphis, president of the league, said Governor Orval E. Faubus will be the main speaker. Governor Faubus is expected to give a full account of the Little Rock Central High School incident, another league member reported. And he is expected to discuss the Arkansas industrial movement, the source said.

Mayor Price said another top attraction will be the election of officers for next year. Mayor Price said he hasn't decided whom he will pick to serve on the nominations committee. "As a rule, the nominations committee's recommendations for league officers are passed by acclamation," Mayor Price said.

Would Pick Board

The newly elected president would then pick his own executive board, and tradition has been that the out-going president is picked as a board member.

Mayor Price also said he hasn't decided whom he will put on the resolutions committee, which drafts most of the league's legislation that is presented to the state Legislature.

"The thing most important at these conventions is that municipal officials have the opportunity to become acquainted with each other and learn of each other's problems," Mayor Price said.

City officials said the laying of a sidewalk on the north side of Barton from Maddux School to Rich Eastern Street has been finished. Mayor Price said the sidewalk was laid so children at Maddux "could walk home without having to get in the street."

The laying of the sewer line on Polk Street from Avalon to Rhodes is coming along nicely, city officials said. The sewer line is being laid before work in the Second Improvement District begins.

Crittenden County directors of the St. Francis Levee District are unopposed for re-election. They are Oliver S. Woolard of Clarkedale, director for District One; T. J. Cloar of Earle, District Two; C. H. Bond of Marion, District Three, and Hugh Brinkley of Bruins, District Four.

Leonard Warden, president-elect of the Arkansas LP Gas Association, will give a preview of next year's plans Tuesday at the District LP-Gas Dealers meeting at Jonesboro. Mr. Warden is also president of the West Memphis Industrial Development Corporation.

Crittenden County Clerk A. B. Carter said Crittenden Quorum Court will convene Nov. 18 at the courthouse at Marion to levy tax rates for the coming year.

Troops In Little Rock Will Be Cut Again, Army Says

Atlanta, Ga. P.

Atlanta Ga. 11-7-57

WASHINGTON —(INS)— The Army Wednesday ordered another sharp reduction in the number of Federal and National Guard troops on duty to enforce school integration in Little Rock.

The order will cut the 101st Airborne group from approximately 500 to approximately 225 men, and will reduce the 153rd National Guard Regiment unit from 1,300 to about 900.

Army secretary Wilber M. Brucker who ordered the first troop cut on Oct. 14, said the further reduction is "in consonance with the steady improvement in community stability noted currently in the Little Rock Area."

Brucker's first order cut the Airborne unit from 1,000 to 500 and released 8,700 of the 10,500 Arkansas National Guardsmen who were federalized when the troops moved on Central High School September 24.

The Army Secretary said the additional reductions will be made "forthwith," and that guardsmen retained in Federal Service "will be selected on an individual basis."

Ruse Helps Get 9 Into School

By L. ALEX WILSON

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — I ran into a second career this morning in attempting to give coverage to the nine students who successfully entered Central High school, here. Daily Defender, Chicago Ill. p.8.

Three newspapermen and one photographer were attacked by a shabby crowd of po' whites Monday morning as the newsmen served as decoys for the Negro students to enter the school.

Attacked were James Hicks, Amsterdam News, New York; Moses J. Newsom, Afro-American newspapers; Earl Davy, free lance photographer of Little Rock, and myself. Dues, 9-24-57.

SHALL NOT PASS

The incident occurred about 8:40 a. m. near the 16th and Park entrance to the school. With Wilson and Newsom walking in front, the newsmen approached the corner. A crowd of about 100 whites were facing the school.

Suddenly the pack turned about and shouted, "You shall not pass."

Hooligans in the front of the mob extended their arms to prevent our getting through. We attempted to go around them and were turned back. As we returned to our cars, we were struck from the rear by several members of the mob.

One policeman advanced toward me and asked what were we doing, and what was our business in the area? I showed him my credentials and he suggested that I return to my car.

REFUSED TO RUN

I followed his instructions and several other whites followed me threatening and yelling. They tried to make me run by kicking, shouting and screaming at me, but I refused to give them the satisfaction of running.

One fellow jumped upon my back, but I shook him off. Meanwhile, the mob snatched Davy's camera and smashed it. He was struck several times and fell bruising his right leg.

Newsom and Hicks also were attacked as they moved out of the way of the mob. During the melee only one city policeman moved to protect us, and that was the one who spoke to me.

Meanwhile, the nine students escorted by Mrs. L. C. Bates, head of the local NAACP; Frank W. Smith, Rev. J. C. Crenshaw, all of the NAACP; and Dr. Lee Lorch, white, entered the school.

ALEX WILSON

'BRING 'EM OUT'

When the crowd learned that the students had entered the school, a ringing yell went up: "Bring the niggers out."

The newsmen and photographer were still in the vicinity and heard and saw this demonstration. We waited about 20 minutes about a block from the school. During that time state troopers arrived at 16th and Park where we had been.

Gene Smith, assistant chief of police, working in cooperation with Mrs. Bates, arranged for the successful entry of the nine students.

Detail plans had been made Sunday.

The pupils met at the Bates' home at 8 a. m. Monday and waited for the signal to move.

A call came through from Chief Smith at 8:30 a. m. to Mrs. Bates telling her the police were prepared and to get the students to an entrance near 16th and Park within five minutes.

LOADED ON CARS

The youngsters were loaded into two cars with escorts, driven to the school and entered without incident.

It was considered unwise for Negro newsmen to arrive at the point before the students, and it was suggested that we attempt to arrive at the same time, but not in the same party.

The students were driven in another direction. Meanwhile, the newsmen never reached the school after they distracted the attention of the mob.

Soon after the Negro students entered the building, white youths began to walk out.

However, thorough preparation had been made for the acceptance of the students by faculty members.

Homeroom teachers were prepared to greet them when they entered the class rooms. They were to be escorted to their respective classes.

Easy to Catch Negroes—

Although Little Rock, Ark. police had lots of trouble holding back a mob of whites intent on keeping Negroes out of Central High School, they apparently had no difficulty or compunction about shooting at these Negro youths. Officers stand over the prostrate bodies of Clarence R. Sander, 29, an airman at the Little Rock Air Force Base, at the rear in the white coat, and Ernest Patrick, 22, of Little Rock. One policeman on the left still has his hand on his gun in the event either of the youths might move. The two victims and three Negro women were said to have been in a car which struck a policeman on the leg in downtown Little Rock and then fled. Police fired three shots at the car. All five passengers were injured when the driver lost control of the car as it was being chased, and it crashed into a backyard in the residential section of the city.—Wide World Photo.

Segregation Of Sexes Proposed For Schools

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Jan. 17 1957

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17 (AP) — Separate classrooms for boys and girls in junior and ~~senior high~~ schools were proposed today by Rep. Chelf (D-Ky) in an effort to solve integration disputes.

He said he made the suggestion "in the hope of helping to remove the existing roadblock between Northern liberals and Southern school integration."

Chelf said he hoped that discussion of his bill "might lead the way to at least a partial solution of the problem now being encountered — most especially south of the Mason-Dixon Line."

Area's High Schools to Graduate a Record 10,639

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. 6-10-57 p. 20-A

A record-breaking 10,639 high school seniors will be graduated from public and parochial high schools in the Washington metropolitan area this month.

The number of graduating students is about 1000 higher than the 1956 total.

The largest number of graduates, 3725, will get their diplomas from schools in suburban Maryland. District high schools will graduate 3111, northern Virginia schools, 2368, and parochial high schools in all three areas, 1435 students.

One new high school will graduate its first senior class and two others have no seniors. McLean High School in Fairfax County will graduate 140 seniors. Alexandria's Hammond High School and Fairfax County's Groveton will have no graduation until next year.

A number of parochial schools in the area have already held commencement exercises.

In District high schools, 24 board of education members and school officials will begin speaking engagements June 10.

In most suburban schools, students with the highest scholastic averages will speak. In Arlington's Wakefield High School, five students have been chosen to speak because they all have perfect high school records.

Following is the list of school commencements with date, time and number of graduates. Graduations will be held in the school auditorium or on the grounds unless otherwise stated:

Spingarn, Newest High School, Mirrors Changing Community

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Sun. 5-19-57 p. 15-A

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

At Spingarn High School, the city's newest, at 14th st. and Benning rd. ne., the classroom walls already are plastered with "certificates of honor" and other awards for scholastic achievement.

The school, which has an all-Negro enrollment of 1500, was dedicated in 1953. It incorporates all the latest in school facilities: electric dish-washers, for example, and a grilled-floor room where hot air dries school laundry.

Principal Purvis J. Williams says Spingarn was the forerunner of the experimental four-track set of course offerings which the school system successfully started in all city tenth grades last fall.

This program offers a basic course (primarily remedial), a general course for students likely to take jobs after graduation, a pre-college course, and a course designed to help bright students in pursuit of a specific professional college training.

The school is unaccredited, simply because of its youth. The visiting team of evaluators from the Middle States Association usually tours secondary schools and colleges about every seven years. The schools pay the cost of the survey, primarily transportation and living costs.

A sum of $1000 for the accreditation cost of Spingarn has been cut out of the school budget requests for the last 2 years. The local school PTA has been trying to raise this amount through private contributions. The District Congress of PTAs recently stated that this expense should rightfully be paid by the city.

Spingarn, which overlooks Langston Golf Course and Kingsman Lake, is the only Washington general high school that is part of a "community of schools," Williams observed.

On the hill next to Spingarn are Young Elementary School, Browne Junior High and Phelps Vocational High. (Roosevelt High originally was planned to serve such a community of school levels, but the neighborhood grew up too fast for this plan to develop.)

"This community of buildings," said Williams, "makes it possible to interchange students in cases where it still will advance their education." For example, students can take an hour or so of vocational work at Phelps, without disrupting their daily schedules.

The Spingarn community has changed. It is now drawing upper middle-class Negro families who are moving closer and closer to the periphery of Maryland. They are the people who are moving into the new housing developments in Northeast and Southeast Washington.

And as School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning recently was told by a group of out-of-town visitors: "The school look as new as the day it opened."

Principal Williams, a native of Norfolk, Va., is a graduate of Howard and Wisconsin universities. He began his teaching career here in 1933. His interest was in biology and science. He taught at Dunbar, Armstrong, Browne and Cardoza.

In 1947 he was appointed assistant principal at Dunbar High. His next post was principal at Spingarn.

School Builds Student Growth

By Suzanne McBee
United Press

There's a sign on the wide oak desk of William H. Pitts, principal of Parker-Gray High School in Alexandria, with a saying which he says sums up his attitude about education.

The quotation reads: "The child who plants a seed and watches it blossom forth in beauty gains knowledge."

"That's what we try to do here—stimulate pupils to participate more in classroom discussions and to solve practical problems dealing with their assignments," Pitts said.

"In other words, we hope students will dig to the roots of their subjects, whether it's chemistry, carpentry, or band music.

The 54-year-old administrator of Alexandria's Negro high school says the need for his education philosophy was underlined in a 1952 report by the State Evaluation Committee, which criticized.

- Classroom work in which lectures by teachers were too predominant. Pitts said he instructed his teachers to adopt the "problem solving" approach and rely less on lectures.
- The lack of a school auditorium. "We still don't have one, although it's included each year in the building program," Pitts said.
- Lack of adequate art facilities. "We're still using an academic classroom for part-time art instruction."
- An insufficient program for channeling slow-learning children into courses in which they could succeed. Pitts started an "exploratory program" with his eighth grade students.

Parker-Gray High School includes grades from 8 to 12. There is no junior high school in Alexandria. The eighth grade, which "in a way becomes a junior high school set-up," Pitts explained, is taught the usual English, science, math and social studies, and also is exposed to "nine-week doses" of music, shop, business, home economics and art courses.

"This program allows us and the student to determine his abilities," the principal said. "We plan the rest of his high school curriculum toward the end of his eighth-grade year."

About 15 per cent of Parker-Gray's 445 students this year are taking college preparatory courses. Of the remainder, nearly one-fourth concentrate on vocal music courses, 16 per cent are in the bands, some 20 per cent take industrial and vocational arts, and 12 per cent are in home economics. These courses are in addition to the required subjects, such as English and history.

Although the two-story box-shaped brick school was built for 500 students, it is becoming overcrowded because two of its 10 classrooms are used for art and music. Also, its six-room home economics suite and three workshops are used by more than 100 seventh graders from Charles Houston and Lyles-Crouch schools each week.

Pitts, whose problems include "a good number" of students from low economic backgrounds with limited academic experience and a high drop-out rate (about 45 per cent), is nevertheless glad he became a teacher instead of a doctor.

Born in Tappahannock, Va., he took science courses but didn't have the money to study medicine. He received a bachelor of science degree from Virginia Union University and a master's from Hampton (Va.) Institute.

He and his wife, Claudia, supervisor for the Negro schools in Arlington, live at 1026 S. Rolfe st., Arlington. Their son, William H. Jr., 22, is studying at Harvard Medical School.

After being principal of three smaller schools, Pitts became head of Parker-Gray combined elementary and high school in 1938. The 468 enrollment spurted to more than 700 in 1950, "when the need for a separate high school became evident."

The Washington Post

Principal William H. Pitts of Parker-Gray High School, Alexandria, checks on a shop project of one of his students, Michael Johnson, 13.

That fall the new Parker-Gray was built at 1207 Madison st.

The principal, who knows most of his students by their first names, is as proud as they are of the school's spirit, student government, extra-curricular activities, and championship basketball team.

"These kids have potential," he said. "It's our job to get them to realize their value."

Dunbar High Plays a New Role: It's Now a Neighborhood School

Dunbar, the oldest Negro high school in America now is serving its neighborhood, rather than the whole city.

The school at 1st and N sts. nw., prior to integration drew students from all over Washington who were interested in going to college. It was the elite, academic school for Negroes, according to Principal Charles S. Lofton.

Since 1953 when boundaries were set for every city school to serve its immediate community, Dunbar has suffered a drop in the still predominately Negro enrollment and a drop in the caliber of new students admitted. Many students now must find jobs following graduation.

The change in the school—which used to boast every commencement season of, at least, a half dozen top students with a choice of five or six scholarships to leading colleges and universities—is due to several factors.

Lofton said the chief one is the great influx of students from the South who are ill-prepared to keep up with local students. For instance, out of 110 new students admitted last fall, 108 came from other school systems — primarily those of the deep South.

Dunbar has an enrollment of 912 students, 910 of them Negro. Capacity is 1200. Of the total enrollment, 619 are girls and 293 boys.

Sent To Private Schools

"The neighborhood we serve is going commercial," said Lofton. "And parents, mainly Negro professional folk, are pulling their children out of the public schools and sending them to private and Catholic schools."

Currently, Lofton said, Dunbar still has students in the 11th and 12th grades who are from the "old order" of homes, economically and socially. These students, under the District's gradual plan of integration, were allowed to remain in their school until graduation regardless of the new set of boundaries.

"Our new students, those with poorer backgrounds, are soon to pick up the ways of the old students," Lofton said, adding, "young people ape good manners as well as bad ones."

He said his teachers, many of them like himself graduates of Dunbar, are trying to meet the needs of the new young people. "They are loyal and charming when you get to know them," he said.

Traditions Still High

"These children need love and affection, because 9 times out of 10 they aren't getting it at home," the principal said. "Once our faculty realizes these students aren't going on to college or a professional career and recognize the fact they must work after graduation—the biggest hurdle is over and we all pull together," Lofton said.

Traditions and standards are just as high at Dunbar as they ever were, Lofton said. "It's the atmosphere of the building . . . it rubs off," Lofton continued.

"With the new type of student," Lofton said, "I have no added discipline problem . . . but there is one of economics."

For example, this past holiday season, Lofton said, "for the first time we collected baskets (as usual) but some went out to our own students."

Lofton said he tries to make all students feel a part of the school. Take the matter of a class ring, now ranging in price from $12 to $15. "A ring means a lot to a child who isn't going to college," Lofton said. He said Dunbar (thanks to its alumni clubs and adult sororities and fraternities) lends money to the young people not able to purchase jewelry . . . "and they pay it back in dribbles and dabs . . . but they're holding down jobs to do it."

Dunbar, named for the Negro poet, Paul Laurence Dunbar, was founded in 1870. Among its first principals were Miss Mary Patterson, the first American Negro woman college graduate, who completed her work at Oberlin College in 1862, and Richard T. Greener, the first Negro man to be graduated from Harvard University.

Named in 1948

Lofton was appointed principal in 1948, succeeding Harold A. Haynes, current deputy school superintendent. Lofton, a native Washingtonian, was graduated from Howard University in 1933 and did graduate work at Catholic and New York Universities. Before coming to Dunbar, he was the first principal of the Veterans High School Center.

"Our kids, regardless of where they come from, love their school," Lofton said.

"Even at athletic games, when they've had the stuffing licked out of them, you should hear them cheer," he added.

Lofton said, unlike some schools, "ours doesn't prepare the young people for guests . . . they sense that people are there and react in a dignified manner that gives us pride."

"I know there has been a lot of bad publicity since integration," Lofton said, "but in nine years . . . almost 10 here . . . I have never had a knifing case nor a dope case."

But, the principal said, if a boy is caught smoking a cigarette or has his hat on in the building, "believe me" punishment is meted out.

Jeans Forbidden

"Our school is one of the few in the system which forbids the wearing of jeans by boys, and young men wear ties unless they have on a real sport shirt with buttoned collar," Lofton said. "Cleanliness is stressed from the first day on," he added.

Lofton said a great deal of the tradition of Dunbar today is the handiwork of his principal council, made up of top school leaders.

"They advise me and also tell me where the school may have fallen down," Lofton said.

Dunbar High School traditions are high, according to Principal Charles S. Lofton, who believes in getting to know his students and their individual problems.

Schools to Get Study Guide

P. 3
Washington

District junior and senior high schools students may get a Baedecker this month on what they should master in the term, beginning Jan. 28.

This guide sheet of expected pupil achievement is an innovation which School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning expects to propose to the Board of Education in the next few days.

Purpose of the grade prospectus is to give young people an idea of what they have to do to be promoted and to give parents an inkling of what their children are doing in the classroom.

Thurs. 1-10-57

The idea was suggested recently by Walter N. Tobriner board member, who said it might be wise to put out some sort of rough "dope sheet" for elementary school children as a guide-line to their endeavor.

Washington Post

School people favored the proposal, but thought it would be more feasible in the upper grades—as a start.

Cardozo Varies With Populace

Post + Times Herald P. 9-B
Jan. 2-17-57

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

Washington, D.C.

Cardozo High School, 13th and Clifton sts. nw., sits like a large, red brick island in a Washington community fraught by a decade of rapid changes.

In 1950, Cardozo, then a Division II or Negro school, moved from a small, cramped building at 9th st. and Rhode Island ave. nw., to its present central city location.

The school had been conducting three staggered shifts of classes in an attempt to give the more than 2000 students an education.

The move uptown marked the closing of old Central High School, a tradition-steeped Division I institution whose dwindling white enrollment did not warrant its continued operation, school officials contended.

Central High was given a long wake by alumni who went so far as to remove the building's cornerstone, leaving Cardozo with a gaping hole in its side.

Students Exemplary

Cardozo school officials ignored the slight and told the student body to set an example for the neighborhood. They did just that. The building took on a spit and polish appearance. The youths were quiet and orderly as they walked to and from school past old brownstone townhouses that had seen better days.

The many white residents in the community at that time were "pleasantly surprised," recalled Cardozo Principal James N. Saunders.

But, like any school situated in the old central core of a big city, Cardozo today is experiencing the dwindling enrollment that attacked Central.

The Cardozo area now has a predominantly Negro populace but most residents are older folk whose children no longer are of school age.

Just as the young white families moved to the suburbs 10 years ago, the young Negro families today are moving to houses with yards in the outlying sections of the District.

Ever-Changing Enrollment

With the start of integration three years ago, all city high schools were rigidly zoned to serve their neighborhood instead of drawing students from all parts of the city. This zoning left Cardozo with a small enrollment, but one of ever-changing faces. As the older residents left, newcomers from other states, particularly those of the South, moved in behind them.

Said Saunders: "We're a self-contained unit. If the young people go off school grounds . . . they are excused, or sneak off."

The school now has an enrollment of about 1350 and a capacity of 2400. There are two girls to every boy. The student body is predominantly Negro, with six white students registered. The faculty includes one white teacher.

"We try to make up for some unfavorable neighborhood folkways and mores these children bring to us," Saunders said. "We try to create in these young people the desire for a better life."

Tries to Serve All

Saunders said the school, which used to be the city's commercial school, at least in Division II, now tries to fit courses to all youths it serves.

But, he said, "we have so many these days that are leaving high school to take jobs—many before graduation."

Cardozo, Saunders said, "has so much school spirit . . . it nearly blows the top off my head . . . and the building."

No wonder, he added, "we won the Western Division, football, then lost to Anacostia High; won the cross-country track competition and the indoor meet sponsored by the Evening Star."

Saunders, who spent 24 years as teacher and acting assistant principal at Dunbar High before being promoted to Cardozo, said one of the most important programs in the school is the speech training offered all 10th graders.

Speech Important

"We help some of the youngsters overcome colloquialisms they have learned at home and which are almost unintelligible to us," Saunders said. He added that good speech habits are "extremely important" to youngsters who must seek jobs in the community directly following graduation.

Saunders is a Washington native. His grandfather operated a barbershop in Georgetown before the Civil War.

After attending District schools, Saunders received his bachelor's degree from Syracuse University and his master's from Howard. He began his career at Dunbar in 1921 as a teacher of ancient history. He became assistant principal of Cardozo in 1945. With the retirement of Robert N. Mattingly in 1954, Saunders was appointed principal.

'Bold New' Ideas Urged Of Principals

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

More than 3500 high school principals were challenged yesterday to develop "bold new experiments" to find new answers for educational problems.

Henry J. Willett, superintendent of Richmond schools, warned that "deadening conformity to standards is not necessarily an upgrading process in education."

Willett spoke at the opening session of the 41st annual convention of the National Association of Secondary School Principals at the Sheraton Park Hotel. About 5000 principals are expected to attend the 5-day meeting.

"It is possible to sell our birthright for conformity and security," Willett said. "We need nonconformists also who will try out new ideas and do more than just keep school."

Willett suggested a number of ideas and questions. These included:

• "Foreign languages must be studied for purposes of communication—not just for exercises in mental gymnastics."

• Business and industry should play a larger role in vocational education through cooperative training programs.

• Schools should concentrate on general, rather than specific, vocational skills in an age of automation.

• "Should our high schools continue on the false assumption that all pupils will continue to graduation, or do we need terminal programs of varying length—two, four, six years?"

• Any gifted pupils could well be a year or two ahead of the normal program at the time of graduation.

Willett questioned the practice of giving students too much freedom in electing courses.

"There are too many high schools where it's possible for a student to elect himself out of an education," Willett said.

Willett called upon educators to be more publicly self-critical. He criticized men like Rudolph Flesch, author of "Why Johnny Can't Read," and others who have been critical of schools because they spoke of the "depths of ignorance of our public education."

He said the critics have "brought forth some truths and half-truths among their distortions."

"The finality with which they speak," he said, "in the absence of other objective and critical appraisals, often causes well-meaning persons to accept their whole argument."

District Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning welcomed the principals. In his brief speech, he reminded them that the education of today can not be successful if it is geared only to life as it is today. It must be geared to the future, Corning emphasized.

Convention officials described the meeting as a huge workshop session. The educators will meet in 60 discussion groups to talk about everything from educational television to administering athletics.

At a session yesterday afternoon on junior high school leadership, Christian W. Jung, Associate Professor of Education at Indiana University, suggested that the school day and possibly the school year will need to be lengthened. He explained that the typical inflexible school schedule tends to restrict even well-conceived programs.

J. Lloyd Trump, director of a University of Illinois study on utilization of teachers, described experimental programs in some schools. In Evanston, for example, closed circuit television is being used to enable a teacher to teach two typing classes simultaneously, he said.

The teacher's instructions are transmitted from one classroom to the second by television, and she can watch the second room on a monitor screen that transmits a picture from that room.

Today's program will be mainly social and religious. The Rev. Edward L. R. Elson, pastor of the National Presbyterian Church, will speak at an evening session. Monday morning, Harold E. Stassen, Special Assistant to the President, will speak.

Ten High School Seniors Out of 3150 Qualify for Finals

List of finalists, Page D5

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

District public high schools had fewer finalists in the National Merit Scholarship competition on the average than the rest of the metropolitan area and the Nation.

Based on each 1000 eligible 12th graders who could have taken part in the October college aptitude exams, the District had three finalists as compared to a national average of nearly four and 15 finalists chalked up by public high schools in Alexandria, Falls Church, Arlington, Fairfax, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties.

In the Nation, 1,263,000 seniors were eligible for the four-year college scholarship run-off. Out of this number, 7500 qualified as finalists.

In Washington, 3150 seniors were eligible for the exam and 10 placed as finalists.

In the six nearby public school systems, 6401 seniors were eligible for the competition and 96 were named finalists. Out of the entire area public and private school systems, there were 136 finalists.

Here is a breakdown of the county eligible seniors and the number of finalists (in parenthesis):

Alexandria, 390 (11); Arlington 1024 (14); Falls Church, 87 (4); Fairfax County, 1012 (18); Montgomery County, 1876 (33), and Prince Georges County, 2012 (6).

Assistant School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen said the District "has nothing to be embarrassed about in its showing."

Hansen pointed out that only 329 seniors out of the total number enrolled participated in the examination. These students represented all of the city's 12 high schools.

Progress at Roosevelt High

Critic of Integration 'Very Happy' at Gains

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

A Washington high school principal who voiced misgivings a year ago about the results of school desegregation here, yesterday reported substantial academic progress among her students.

Mrs. Wells

Elva C. Wells said achievement tests administered to students at Roosevelt High School last May showed that the school ranked "right up with the three or four best schools in the city." Student behavior has improved too, she noted.

Last September Mrs. Wells told a House District Subcommittee investigating desegregation that "in the third year of integration, my problems are increasing rather than lessening." She complained then of an attitude of "belligerence, sullenness, impertinence and aggression" among many students at the integrated school.

But yesterday Mrs. Wells said she was "very happy" about the achievement test results. About 65 per cent of the 1200 students at Roosevelt last year were Negro.

Cites 10th Grade Gains

She particularly cited the tenth grade, where 150 students were enrolled in the basic course of the District's four-track program. Almost all of the 150 made more than one year of normal progress during the 1956-57 school year, she said, and "there were gains of up to four years in arithmetic and reading."

Actual test scores have not been released by school officials.

The four-track program was launched last year to meet the needs of fast, average and slow learners in District high schools. It includes (1) a tough honors curriculum to prepare for college; (2) a regular college preparatory course; (3) a general course for students who do not intend to go to college, and (4) a basic curriculum including remedial instruction.

There were 225 tenth graders in the college preparatory and general courses at Roosevelt last year, and none in the honors program. This year the four track system is being extended into the eleventh grade.

Teachers Praised

Mrs. Wells attributed the scholastic progress to "teaching by excellent teachers—teaching every minute of every day. That's the whole story."

She said all extra-curricular "frills" have been eliminated at the school to concentrate on the intensive instruction.

Mrs. Well, known as a stickler for discipline, said student behavior has improved and "we have never had a dungaree nor a T-shirt in our school."

Conduct has been stressed at weekly assemblies for boys and girls, and physical education instructors have emphasized deportment in hygiene classes.

"Our approach has proved to be satisfactory, and we intend to follow it," she commented. "We hope that as our students are exposed to better teaching before they get to us, they will continue to improve from year to year."

Negro Enrolling Threat Seen Ended at Pompano

Jacksonville, Fla.

Sat 9-14-57

POMPANO BEACH, Sept. 13 (AP)—An explosive situation appeared to have blown over here today almost as quickly as it developed after police received a report that Negro students would attempt to enroll at Pompano Beach High School in "protest" against their principal and not as an integration move.

Police Chief James Boggs threw a nine-man police force around the school this morning "to keep the peace" but removed it five hours later.

Boggs acted on a tip but removed the police "after we were sure nothing was going to happen."

Negro students from Blanche Ely High School reportedly were going to enroll at Pompano Beach High as a protest against the school board's action yesterday retaining Blanche Ely as the school's principal, a post she has held for many years.

Boggs said barricades were put up a block from the school to prevent disorders and were not intended to keep Negroes out. Children arriving in automobiles had to leave the cars outside the barricade and walk to school.

Larry Walden, principal of the school, said that if Negroes requested entrance "we would follow the state law by taking their names and referring them to the school board."

Richard Lee, member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, told the school board at a meeting last night that Negroes might try to enroll in the white school unless Blanche Ely was removed as principal of the Negro high school.

"If she remains up there, drastic action can be expected," Lee said. "Students may boycott the Negro school and an attempt may be made to enroll some of our children in the white school."

The school board last July found Blanche Ely guilty on three of four specifiations involving the use of an over-age athlete in football last year and removed her as principal.

The State Board of Education, on an appeal, ruled she should remain in her job unless Raymond Maxwell, superintendent of schools, recommended her transfer.

A majority of the Negro population reportedly wants her to remain, but the NAACP has spearheaded a move to oust her. The principal has said publicly she opposes racial integration.

Police Guard White School

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

POMPANO BEACH, Fla., Sept. 13 (AP)—Nine policemen threw barricades around the Pompano Beach High School today after receiving a tip that Negro students would try to enter.

No Negroes showed up during the morning and there were no incidents.

Sat 9-14-57

Richard Lee, a member of the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People, told the school board at a meeting last night that Negroes might try to enroll in the white school unless Mrs. Blanche Ely is removed as principal of the Negro high school.

"If she remains up there, drastic action can be expected," Lee said. "Students may boycott the Negro school and an attempt may be made to enroll some of our children in the white school."

Later in the evening, Police Chief James Boggs received a tip that the Negroes might try to enter the white school this morning. He kept his night patrolmen on duty and sent nine men to the school. Streets leading to the school were barricaded a block away.

White children coming to school in cars were required to leave the cars outside the barricade and walk to the school.

Integration Hoax Stirs Floridians

Post-Herald p. 3

CRESTVIEW, Fla., Oct. 10 (AP) — A telephone caller told officers today that "We are going to integrate Crestview High School." Word got out and an estimated 100 white persons milled around at the school.

No integration attempt was made and officers said the threat was a hoax.

The caller was quoted as saying, "We are going to integrate Crestview High School. We are expecting protection."

Thur 10-11-57

The call came to the police department, and the information was passed on to Sheriff Ray Wilson. Officers said the caller identified himself as a Negro major named Carney stationed at nearby Eglin Air Force Base, but that he hung up before giving any other details.

Col. W. S. Evans, chief public information officer at Eglin, said no Negro officer with that name or a similar name was stationed at Eglin or any of its auxiliary fields.

Salute to Youth

So much has been said about juvenile delinquency that it is refreshing to pay a word of tribute to the brave and dignified Negro children who, in the past few days, have displayed an amazing amount of courage and determination in braving much hostile opposition in their attempt to attend legally integrated schools in some southern states. Call p. 18

Among these are the young persons of Little Rock, Sturgis, Charlotte and other southern towns where on occasions they have been forced to run gantlets of jeering, heckling, spitting crowds of adults and adolescent ruffians who oppose their efforts to enter schools where they have been rightfully assigned.

In view of the threats and danger which they knew awaited them they have shown a kind of moral fortitude which, for all our bravado and loud boasts, few of us possess. Kansas City Mo

It warms the heart to see pictures of two Negro boys facing a menacing crowd of young whites in North Little Rock; it thrills to see the quiet dignity and resolute courage that neat and handsome 15-year-old Elizabeth Eckford displayed as she, alone and puzzled, sought to by-pass the burp-guns of Governor Faubus' State troopers to enter Central High school. At almost the same time in North Carolina, Dorothy Counts was demonstrating to crowds of hate motivated segregationists the real meaning of "superiority" as she took her place in line for registration at Harding high school.

In almost every case, we are told, there have always been a few white persons of goodwill who, ashamed and chagrinned by the display of savage and threatening mobs, have spoken out against these unlawful demonstrations. Sun. 10-4-57

These latter, we applaud. And we hope that from these history-making young students, others of our youth will pattern themselves in other areas where educational opportunities have been more or less taken for granted and where integration has been accepted without mob action, for too many of our youth are deporting themselves in a manner that brings disgrace on themselves, their schools and their race.

When some of these lie, steal, extort, gamble, fight and disrespect their teachers, play hooky from scohol, or disregard the rights of others, they might profitably think of a few of their own race who are bravely facing threats and vilification just for the simple right to attend the schools to which they have been assigned.

So long as we have among youth such brave girls as Elizabeth and Dorothy and scores of others whose names have not yet been revealed, there is hope for a bright future for all of us. We are proud of these courageous children in the South. Indeed, all America should be proud of them, for they have demonstrated such courage as children that is almost certain to make them the kind of persons that can face the future unafraid; can walk with heads up because they know they have faith in the Democratic way of life.

Our Secondary Schools

14k General

In a 1954 report the National Manpower Council called for a reassessment in which the American secondary school will want to distinguish as sharply as possible between the primary responsibilities and "the host of collateral objectives it has accumulated during recent decades.

Defender p. 16

"In a period of serious teacher shortages and vastly expanded enrollments, secondary education must utilize its limited resources to accomplish its primary missions and must beware of dissipating its facilities on peripheral undertakings."

Sat 12-14-57

Over a period of years an increasing number of citizens, with increasing earnestness, have been asking the questions implicit in that call: are our schools, taken in the large, based on real awareness of priorities among goals and subjects to be taught? Do schoolmen and the thinking public agree on the proper ends and means in public education? Are our schools geared for the great and awful tasks that are theirs today? These questions have been asked, with some alarm, in print and in public addresses. Chicago Ill

In each case, the clamor of protest that arose dealt but rarely with issues; it gave evidence rather of a defensive attitude, at times so emotional as to over ride the high ethical considerations to be expected of educators. At the same time all over the country private citizens, parents had been asking questions locally and encountering a response that often seemed highhanded. Had the educators taken a firm and clear public stand in support of the point of view represented by the Manpower Council, our school curricula would not have been so many laps behind the European school system. The truth is we are lagging behind in many areas in which we had been boasting of superiority. The Russian "Moons" have beamed some helpful light on our educational weaknesses. Let's hope it isn't too late to remedy them.

Negroes Do Poorly In Tests, But Catch Up, Study Says

Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.
Tues. 2-12-57

New York, Feb. 11 (AP)—A report of a scholarship project says Southern Negroes from segregated high schools show up poorly on college-aptitude tests, but catch up quickly once they get into college.

The report was based on a two-year project in 45 Southern cities. It also included a follow-up study of 167 out of 523 Negro students who were helped by the project to go to colleges outside the South.

The project was carried out by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students under a $170,000 grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. The fund was set up by the Ford Foundation.

3,000 High-School Seniors Given Tests

More than 3,000 high-school seniors in 78 Negro high schools in the 45 cities were given the scholastic-aptitude tests, the report said. They were chosen by their school officials from the top 10 per cent in high school grades.

Results of the project were made public today in a report by Richard L. Plaut entitled "Blueprint for Talent Searching America's Hidden Man Power."

"In almost all of the schools, this was the first time that students had been asked to take such a test," the report said.

Range of Scores In Tests Is Wide

"Partly as a result of their inexperience with such tests, a large number of the students scored considerably below the national public-school average. . . .

"Within the top 10 per cent of the seniors in the very same schools, the scores ranged tremendously; students scored from below the lowest scores among all public-high-school students taking the regular college-board tests, all the way to the one-tenth ranking highest among the national group.

"This wide range of scores within a group whose actual high-school marks varied little showed that deep motivational and cultural differences were present . . . ," the report said.

Reporting on the one-year survey of the college records of 167 students in the project, the report said:

"ESducationally, almost all of the students studied were successful. And, strangely enough, the students from deprived families did better, on the average, than those from the higher social and economic level. . . . Further data revealed that the grades of students tended to improve between the freshman and sophomore years."

Report 65,000 Negro High School Graduates Yearly Need Ways for Better Job

Bostonian Des Moines, Iowa.
Thurs. 2-14-57
14k General

Washington, D. C. — Cooperative efforts by all elements of the community—and particularly by industry, labor and the schools—are necessary to stimulate more Negro young people to acquire skills for better employment, speakers told a Youth Training-Incentives Conference here February 4.

The one-day conference, sponsored by the President's Committee on Government Contracts with the cooperation of the American Personnel and Guidance Association, was attended by more than 200 leaders of business, labor and education from 16 metropolitan centers.

Vital Contributions

The President's Committee called the conference because it is convinced that the motivation of more youth to seek better training "is an indispensable part of the total effort to free the potential of millions of Americans for useful and, indeed, vital contributions to the growth and progress of the nation," according to Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, Vice Chairman of the Committee.

Lester B. Granger, Executive Secretary of the National Urban League, described the meeting as "the most important national conference on job training of youth in recent years." He pointed out that the rate at which new job opportunities have developed for Negro youth has been more rapid than the rate of preparation for them.

"We are now frequently in the paradoxical position of having effected a break-through on certain job fronts, without having enough 'troops' to hold and expand the field won," he said. Gains in new job fields will be made only when there are qualified Negroes available, he added.

The work experience of most Negro parents "has been unrewarding" and consequently few of the Negro youth receive "any real inspiration or stimulation" from the adults in their own families, he said.

Leadership groups within the Negro community are frequently "so isolated from the 'main stream' of community contacts" that they are unable to give the youth and their parents effective help in learning about new opportunities that are developing, he said.

Real Challenge

"Here, then, is a real challenge to the Negro community," he pointed out. He urged leaders of educational institutions, business and labor to undertake programs which would provide the youth with the knowledge of job opportunities which will give them reason to seek higher training. They should be presented with tangible, visible evidence that such training is worthwhile and will yield rewards in terms of profitable employment and careers, he said.

Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell told the conference that less than 4 percent of all empoyed Negroes are in professiona, technical and kindred work as compared to five times as many white workers. He said the nation must discard the barriers which deprive the country of the potential skills and productivity of millions of citizens.

"If we are to make use of the enormous potential of the Negro, and help him to lift himself from the unskilled to the skilled category, we must first see that he is motivated to take full advantage of his educational opportunities," he said. At present, about 65,000 Negroes graduate from high school each year. It has been estimated that the number could be increased to 158,000.

Strive for Goals

"We must find ways to make them aim higher, for greater achievements than were possible for them ten years ago—or even yesterday. Youth now entering school must strive for goals which, while they may not be widely recognized today, will be well within the reach by the time they are ready for empoyment," he added.

Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, Chairman of Radio Corporation of America, called upon industrial leaders to help in the training of minority groups so that they will be able to take their places on the skilled job front. He said that his firm paces qqualified Negroes in positions of high responsibility, in all divisions of the company.

He said industry must work closely with organizations active in the intergroup relations field and participate in conferences sponsored by Negro churches and other community organizations with a view toward stimulating the interest of high school students in technological careers. His own company sends scouts to many Negro colleges to search for promising young men and women.

Schools Forum Hears Senators

Sun. 3-17-57 Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK, March 16 (U.P.)—The New York Herald Tribune today conducted its eleventh annual high school forum on "The orld We Want." Delegates from 33 countries and more than 2000 American high school students and faculty members heard addresses by Sens. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) and John F. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

Ogden R. Reid, president and editor of the Herald Tribune, opened the program.

The 33 foreign delegates have been in the United States since early January. They have been guests at 81 high schools and in 124 homes. They were flown here by Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines, Inc., which also will provide their return transportation.

This year's high school forum brings to 293 the total number of students, representing 73 foreign lands, brought here by the Herald Tribune for these events.

A Southwide conference on post-high school education will be held in Louisville, Ky. April 23-25. The sponsor of the conference is the President's Committee on Education Beyond the High School, established in 1955 with a grant of $150,000 from Congress Devereux Joseph, Chairman of the Board of the New York Life Insurance Company, is chairman.

Similar regional conferences are being held in the western states, states, and the Middle-Atlantic. The purposes of the Southern Conference are:

1. Increase public awareness and understanding of problems of education beyond the high school and to stimulate action to solve these problems.

2. Supply ideas and recommendations to the President's Committee for specific state regional, and federal action needed to solve the problems identified

3. Provide a basis for planning and conducting state conferences on education beyond the high school.

The governors of the 16 Southern states have been asked to appoint 96 of the 250 participants in the Southern conference, six from each state. The rest will be appointed by the President's Committee on recommendation of the Regional Conference Steering Comittee.

Also, we have enclosed some data relating to the subject of post-high school education which we felt might be of interest to you in case you wanted to develop editorial relating to the conference.

Lack Of College Graduates Crippling South's Economy

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. P.1 3-19-57

The South is losing $8 billion annually because less than half of its high school graduates finish college a prominent Alabama industrial scientist said here yesterday.

Dr. Frank J. Soday, vice president of Decatur's Chemstrand Corp. and president of the Southern AKSSN. OF Science and Indust addressed approximately 250 delegates to the Alabama Assn. of Secondary School Principals during the second day of a three-day conference at Huntingdon College.

"More important than the monetary loss, he said, "is the fact that the South is providing an inadequate supply of scientists and engineers to supply the minimum industrial needs of the area."

"With 25 per cent of the country's industry, its schools supply only 17 per cent of the country's scientific and engineering graduates."

He said that science is today recognized as the "most important factor in maintaining and improving the standard of living of all civilized people."

Russia has discovered that the missing link to world domination is education, he added. "In 1950, Rusia graduated 19,000 scientists and engineers, while we gradutated 53,000. By 1954, Russian graduates in these fields numbered 54,000, while our graduates had declined to 22,000."

He said that Russia is devoting six per cent of its national budget to education, while the U.S. is using only two per cent, and that Russia has 50 per cent more students enrolled in schools and colleges today than has this country.

Half of the Russian student's time is spent on science and math, he added, while half of American students get no science at all.

He gave four reasons for the decline in scienticif interest, quoting Dr. Charles Thomas: a lack of understanding of science's objectives and operation; the cloud of anti-intellectualism which hangs over the country; underpaid teachers resulting in a shortage which hinders educational efforts; and the "bewildering" number of subjects now offered to the student.

He said the basic problem is "provision of more money for school systems."

"We are going to build industry (in the South) faster than anywhere else," he said, and launched into a description of the current and future industrial picture here.

The South has developed six times the industry which the northeastern states have in the past 10 years, he said. "We have 36 per cent of the chemical industry," and should have 60 per cent by 1975. This industry amounts to 20 per cent of all industry of the country, he said. "It's something we can have."

Integration strife in N. C., Kentucky

News 3-28

By The Associated Press

The integration-versus-segregation conflict at Sturgis (Ky.) High School moved today toward what appears to be a wait-and-see attitude on both sides.

The Union County White Citizens Council has indicated a possible white boycott of the school where 17 Negroes enrolled Tuesday.

Police and other state officials say they anticipate no troubles, but add they intend to see the Negro pupils are allowed to attend classes under federal court order.

Another Negro today joined the 17 already attending classes at Sturgis High in the third day of non-violence integration.

There were catcalls and little heckling as the Negroes drove up in private cars. The crowd which numbered about 50 stood quietly across the street when the Negroes walked to the entrance.

The only loud jeer came when state police cleared a path through the jammed entrance way. Many white students refused to move from the steps until prodded by troopers.

FOUR PERSONS in a crowd of 100 yesterday were arrested, but the disturbances were not comparable to those which resulted in National Guardsmen being sent here last year.

A relatively unenthusiastic crowd of about 500 turned out at the American Legion park last night as W. H. Waller jr. head of the County Citizens Council urged them to stand up for their right.

Waller suggested the townspeople "keep them (the children) at home.

Arrested yesterday were Mrs. Madge Lucas, about 45, 18-year-old Ralph Menton and two white juvenile boys. Mrs. Lucas was charged with breach of peace and Menton with using abuvise language to incite riot. They were released in $50 bond each.

The two boys were released in the custody of their parents for a hearing today.

THERE WERE OTHER sore spots in the South. Disturbances occurred at Charlotte and Greensboro, N. C.

At Winston-Salem, a 15-year-old Negro girl, using a rear-entrance approach to Reynolds High School, avoided a crowd of white students awaiting her arrival today and entered the school auditorium without incident.

The girl used a pedestrian tunnel, constructed for students under a street at the rear of the school. She was reportedly accompanied by her mother when she arrived.

An 11th grade student, she and her white schoolmates were given orientation in the auditorium. Afterward she and her mother waited for most of the white students to leave the building, then walked to her classroom. There was no disturbance.

Police Chief James I. Waller had warned unauthorized persons to stay away from the school, where the Negro girl is the only one of her race enrolled.

Two pickets carrying signs and a man who used profane language were arrested as eight Negro children entered two Easton, Md., integrated schools today.

About 30 segregationists gathered at Easton primary school about 30 minutes before classes were to begin. There was no attempt to prevent seven Negroes from entering the school and other than two arrests there was no disturbance in the Eastern Shore community.

The second arrest occurred about a half mile away at the Eastern elementary school where the lone Negro student enrolled there entered the building without incident.

Jeers and taunts greeted three Negroes entering two previously white schools yesterday at Charlotte, N. C. Dorothy Geraldine Counts, 15, ignored a crowd of white persons who jeered her, tossed pebbles and spat on her.

EIGHT NEGRO pupils were turned away from all-white Arlington County, Va., schools today. There was no jeering or indication of trouble.

White pupils stood watcnhig curiously as the Negro applicants walked to the principals' offices at Stratford Junior High, Washington-Lee High and Thomas Jefferson Junior High.

The proposed enrollment of the Negroes had been reported in advance, and the principals had been told they should not be admitted under Virginia's pupil assgnment law. That law has been held unconstitutional by a federal district court but an appeal is pending.

Under the Virginia law placement application forms signed by parents are required when a pupil moves from one school to another even through promotion, or enters a school for the first time.

The Arlington school board sends all such requests to the state pupil placement board for review.
